6. It is contended on the authority of Orange Co. v. Los Angeles Co., 114 Cal. 390, 46 Pac. 173, that, since the commissioners failed to make a division of the taxes for 1886 and 1887 in their report or award, no part of such taxes can be recovered by San Diego county. But all these taxes were properly payable to San Diego county in the first instance, and the portion received by Riverside county was so received only in consequence of a mistake made by the board of equalization and by the state treasurer. If, therefore, the failure of the commissioners to make a division renders a division impossible, the case of Riverside county is so much the worse. The county of San Diego, instead of having about six-sevenths of the tax, should have had it all. If there is any error in the judgment, it is not an error of which the appellant can complain. The judgment is affirmed.

POWELL v. BANK OF LEMOORE et al.
(Sac. 497.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 27, 1899.)

MORTGAGE SALE UNDER TRUST DEED—FINDINGS AS TO OFFER OF REDEMPTION—INJUNCTION RESTRAINING SALE—TRIAL—FINDINGS WHERE NO ISSUE IS RAISED.

1. Where a bill alleges the issuing of an injunction restraining a sale under a trust deed, and the answer does not deny it, a finding as to the existence of the injunction is unnecessary, as no issue on that point is raised by the pleadings.

2. In an action to set aside a sale under a trust deed, complainants alleged an offer to redeem the property by paying the whole amount. The time of the offer was not alleged, but it appeared that it was after the sale. The court found that the title to the property passed to defendant by the sale. Held, that it was not error for the court to fail to find whether or not the offer was made.

3. Where an injunction restraining a sale of property under a trust deed was obtained by false allegations, complainant cannot subsequently attack the sale on the ground that it was in violation of the injunction.

4. In an action to set aside a sale under a trust deed, it appeared that complainants before the sale had obtained an injunction to restrain such sale, but that notice of this injunction had never been served upon the trustee. It further appeared that the injunction was granted upon untruthful allegations by complainants, and was improperly obtained. Held, that these facts do not entitle complainants to have the sale set aside.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kings county.

Bill in equity by F. M. Powell against the Bank of Lemoore and others. From a decree for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Rowen Irwin and Chas. G. Lamberson, for appellant. M. L. Short and Horace L. Smith, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. The action is one to redeem certain real estate situated in Kings county, sold to the defendant bank under a deed of trust. Judgment went for the defendant bank, and the appeal is from the judgment without a bill of exceptions.

The court below found that plaintiff, on January 12, 1897, commenced an action in the superior court of Kings county against the Bank of Lemoore, Henry C. Campbell, Thaddeus B. Kent, and the San Francisco Savings Union, and procured an order from the judge of the superior court directing an injunction to issue to the defendants therein named, enjoining them from selling the land mentioned in the complaint herein; that said injunction was served on the Bank of Lemoore at 11 o'clock a m. of said 12th day of January, 1897, but was never served on Henry C. Campbell and Thaddeus B. Kent, the trustees who had advertised the land for sale in San Francisco; and that they had no notice or knowledge of the said injunction prior to the sale of said land by them; that said trustees sold said land at the appointed time and place, and the same was purchased by the Bank of Lemoore, through its agent, R. E. McKenna, and that upon the same day the said trustees made and delivered to the Bank of Lemoore a deed conveying said land, and that at the time they made and delivered said deed they had no knowledge or notice of the issuance of the injunction, and that said McKenna, as agent of said bank, had no knowledge or notice that a writ of injunction had been issued to prohibit the sale. The court further found that the allegation in the complaint upon which the injunction was issued, to wit, that on or about the 25th day of October, 1896, the San Francisco Savings Union, while it was the owner and legal holder of said note, for valuable consideration, to wit, the payment of one year's interest thereon in advance, made and entered into a contract with plaintiff wherein and by the terms of which the time of payment of the principal of said promissory note was extended for the period of one year therefrom, was untrue, and not founded in fact; and that the further allegation in the said complaint that no part of the principal of said promissory note, or the interest thereon, is now due, was also untrue, and not founded in fact. And because of these untruthful allegations appearing in said complaint the court directed the said writ of injunction to issue in said action above mentioned, and the court now finds that said writ of injunction was improperly obtained by the plaintiff, F. M. Powell, and but for said untruthful allegations would not have issued. As a conclusion of law, deduced from its findings of fact, the court finds that the Bank of Lemoore is the owner of the land, that the plaintiff has no title or interest therein, and that the plaintiff take nothing by his action.

The appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed because the court failed to find upon material issues made by the pleadings. One of these is that the court failed to find that the injunction was issued. This fact was alleged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, and therefore there was no issue upon that point rendering the finding necessary. It is claimed, also, that the court failed to find on the question of the offer to redeem the property by paying the full amount. The allegation of the complaint in this respect is not specific as to the time when such offer was made, but a reading of the whole shows that the offer was made, if at all, after the sale of the land to the bank and the execution of the deed thereon. It is alleged in the complaint that the offer was refused by the bank, because, as it claims, it acquired a valid title to the land through the sale, and was the owner of the property. The finding of the court, however, that the title to the land passed to the defendant bank by the sale on January 12, 1897, by the trustees, was the ultimate and controlling fact in the case, and sufficient to support the judgment. Even if the injunction had been technically violated by the sale, the plaintiff is not in a position to complain. The court finds that, because of the untruthful allegations made by plaintiff, contained in his complaint, the writ was issued. "No one can take advantage of his own wrong" (Civ. Code, § 3517), and "he who comes into a court of equity must come with clean hands," is an old and familiar rule. Mr. Pomeroy, in discussing this rule, aptly says: "It assumes that the suitor asking the aid of a court of equity has himself been guilty of conduct in violation of the fundamental conception of equity jurisprudence, and therefore refuses him all recognition and relief with reference to the subject-matter or transaction in question." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 397. But, if the injunction had been properly obtained, and the writ had been served on all the parties defendant in that proceeding prior to the sale, still the sale would not therefore have been void, but simply voidable. Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121. In such case, upon a proper showing by a party entitled to the consideration of a court of equity, relief may be granted by setting aside such sale; otherwise, it will be allowed to stand. The appeal being upon the judgment roll, the findings are assumed to be supported by the evidence, and such findings not only fail to show that the plaintiff was entitled to relief, but, on the contrary, justify the action of the trial court in awarding judgment for the defendant bank. Judgment affirmed.

SANTA ROSA NAT. BANK v. BARNETT
et al. (S. F. 992.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 21, 1899.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—RENEWAL OF DEBT —MUTUAL ACCOUNTS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. A bank loaned a street-railway company large sums of money at various times, the loans being made in the form of overdrafts, the account being carried in the name of the treasurer of the company, though it was regarded both by the bank and company as the debt of the company. Subsequently the company gave the bank its note covering all the indebtedness. Held, that the note was merely a continuance of the existing indebtedness, and limitation began to run from the time the money was borrowed.

2. Where a depositor borrows money from a bank by means of overdrafts, and occasionally deposits money, which is applied to the overdrafts, the transaction is not a mutual account, and the statute of limitations runs from the date of each loan, notwithstanding the transaction opens with a credit to the depositor.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 359, providing that actions against stockholders of a corporation for corporate debts must be brought within three years, is not in conflict with Const. art. 12, § 3, which provides that each stockholder shall be liable for such proportion of the debts and liabilities as are contracted while he is a stockholder.

4. Code Civ. Proc. § 359, limiting the time within which an action may be brought against stockholders, is not in conflict with Civ. Code, § 309, which provides that there shall be no limitation of action against the directors of a corporation for liabilities incurred under that section, or with Code Civ. Proc. § 348, providing for actions without limitation against persons with whom money has been deposited.

5. Where overdrafts by defendant have become barred by limitations, the failure of the court to find accurately the separate amounts of such overdrafts does not affect the result, as it does not change the nature of the account.

6. In an action on a note the plaintiff moved to amend his complaint by alleging that the note was given in payment of the balance of an open and mutual account, "in order to conform with the proof." The motion was denied, but the case was tried as fully as if it had been granted. Held, the refusal to grant the motion was harmless error.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

Action by the Santa Rosa National Bank against J. D. Barnett and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. Swain and Barham & Miller, for appellant. A. B. Ware, Thomas Rutledge, and W. F. Russell, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to enforce the personal liability of defendants as stockholders in the Central Street Railway Company, a corporation. Defendants pleaded the statute of limitations, and upon that plea had judgment except as to the sum of $392.49, for which plaintiff had judgment against defendants for the proportionate share of each. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying motion for new trial.

The court found: That defendants were stockholders of the railway company. That from and after May 28, 1891, and until December 4, 1892, plaintiff loaned and advanced the company, from time to time, large sums of money, which were used in the construction of its railroad, the purchase of material for equipment, etc. During this time the company made deposits of money, and a balance of account was struck nearly every month, showing the amount due from the company, which balance, on December 4, 1892, was $9,607.51. On December 6, 1892, the company, by resolution, authorized its secretary and president to make and deliver its promissory note to plaintiff for the amount due plaintiff, and this note was executed December 7, 1892, for the sum of $10,000, and delivered to plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon, on December 7th, gave the company credit on plaintiff's books for $325.89, that sum being the difference between the overdraft and the face of the note at the time of the credit. No other or different consideration was given for said note. That $9,607.51 of said indebtedness was created and existed prior to December 4, 1892, and was created at different times between May 14, 1891, and December 4, 1892, and said sum was included in and made part of the sum agreed to be paid by said note of $10,000. It is also found that this note was renewed June 7, 1894, for $9,000, a payment of $1,000 having been previously made by the company; and that the renewal note, which is the note set up in the complaint, included the same sums of money as did the original note of December 7th. As conclusions of law the court found that the sum of $9,607.51, included in said note, is barred by the statute (sections 338, 359, Code Civ. Proc.); that the sum of $392.49 was a debt created by the company at the time of making the note of December 7, 1892; and that defendants are separately liable for their proportionate share of that sum, and no more. The complaint was filed December 5, 1895, one day more than three years after the balance of $9,607.51 was found to be due plaintiff.

1. Appellant claims that the note of December 7th was in accordance with section 456, Civ. Code, "and became an executory contract, and created a debt for which the stockholders became liable,"—citing sections 2, 3, art. 12, Const.; Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 615, 34 Pac. 335; that a new debt was created by the note, which became "dues of a corporation" (see constitution cited), and the statute did not begin to run until December 7th. The evidence is that the account was opened with plaintiff by William Prindle, treasurer of the Central Street Railway Company. The pass book used by Prindle was marked on the inside at top of first page, "Central Street Railway Company, in Account with the Santa Rosa National Bank, 1891," and the first entry in it is dated May 14, 1891. On the outside the book was marked, "Treasurer of Central Street Railway Company, in Account with the Santa Rosa National Bank." It was shown that these indorsements were partly written by the president and partly by the cashier of the bank. It appears that the assessments against stockholders, earnings of the company, and its funds generally, went to the credit of this account, and the checks or drafts against it were generally drawn by Prindle, the treasurer, but the bank paid as checks the warrants drawn by the president and secretary of the company on the treasurer. It is clear from the evidence that the overdraft indebtedness was treated both by the bank and the company as the indebtedness of the latter. The fact that the account was kept in the name of the treasurer did not make it his individual account in any sense, nor was it so in fact. The account shows no transactions except receipts and disbursements of money by the bank. It was an ordinary running account, such as is common with depositors in a bank. There was an implied promise on the part of the company to pay overdrafts whenever and at the time they occurred (Pauly v. Pauly, 107 Cal. 8, 40 Pac. 29); and on the account, as balances accrued against the company, there was a primary liability on the part of the stockholders. Suit could have been brought upon this account upon the daily balances as shown by the account. A liability was incurred as shown by these balances, and, unless suit was brought within three years after the liability was incurred, the action was barred by section 359, Code Civ. Proc. Hyman v. Coleman, 82 Cal. 650, 23 Pac. 62; Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 614, 34 Pac. 335. The note of December 7th was but a renewal or extension of the indebtedness theretofore incurred on the part of the corporation, but it was not a renewal or extension of the stockholders' liability. Hyman v. Coleman, supra. We do not think the claim made by appellant can be sustained that the account was a mutual, open, and current account, within the meaning of section 344, Code Civ. Proc., and that the note, when passed to the credit of the company, must be treated as the last item in the account, drawing with it all preceding items, thus starting the statute December 7th, the date of the note, for the balance appearing December 4th. General deposits, such as these were, made in a bank where the depositor is drawing against the account from time to time by checks and drafts, are to be deemed as payments of any overdraft of the depositor. Payment, whether it be of money or of personal property at a stipulated value, made on an account as a payment, and not as a set-off pro tanto, does not make an account mutual. Norton v. Larco, 30 Cal. 126; Adams v. Patterson, 35 Cal. 122; Rocca v. Klein, 74 Cal. 526, 16 Pac. 323. Where articles of merchandise have been delivered, and there is no evidence as to whether there was in fact a sale or a payment in kind, "the legal presumption is that it was a sale, and not a payment in kind. It is otherwise in the case of a delivery of money. There the presumption is that it was a payment, and not a loan." Sanderson, J., in Norton v. Larco, supra. The evidence shows that the railway company authorized its officers to arrange to borrow money from plaintiff. An account was opened with the bank by a small deposit in April, 1891, for the company. Other deposits of considerable amount were made, but about November, 1891, the account showed an overdraft, which continued to grow until the note of December 7th was given. Balances were struck nearly every month, showing the indebtedness of the company. Deposits, from time to time, of small amounts, were made throughout the entire period, and were credited to the company as payments, and so show on the pass book kept by the company, and in which these monthly balances were entered. The nature of the account we do not think was changed by the fact that it opened with a credit to the company. We can discover no elements of a mutual, open, and current account in the transaction.

2. It is contended that section 359, Code Civ. Proc., is in conflict with section 3, art. 12, of the constitution of this state. It is claimed that the Code section was enacted prior to the adoption of the constitution, and that the latter must prevail. The constitutional provision referred to declares that "each stockholder of a corporation * * * shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder," etc. No limitation of time is prescribed by the constitution within which actions must be brought. Section 1, art. 12, of the constitution continued in force all laws not inconsistent therewith. Section 359 does not attempt to relieve the stockholder from his liability under the constitution. It only limits the time within which the action may be brought, and this is not inconsistent with the constitutional declaration that such liability is imposed upon the stockholder.

3. It is claimed that section 359, Code Civ. Proc., is in conflict with sections 309, Civ. Code, and 348 Code Civ. Proc. Section 309 relates to the liability of directors of corporations, and section 348 has reference only to actions against persons or corporations with whom money has been deposited. Neither of these sections refers to the liability of stockholders. This liability is declared by the constitution and by section 322, Civ. Code. There is no conflict between these sections.

4. It is objected that the evidence does not support findings 8, 9, and 10, for the reason that the evidence shows more money to have been deposited by the company than the findings seem to imply. This may be true, for the evidence shows deposits nearly every month. Still the evidence is that the overdraft increased steadily from about October, 1891, and, even if the court failed to find as to all the deposits, it would not change the nature of the account.

5. After the evidence was closed, and the cause submitted to the court, and was by the court taken under advisement, and before the court had made findings, plaintiff served notice of motion "to amend the complaint to conform to the proofs made upon the trial of the said cause." The proposed amendment was to the effect that the original indebtedness for which the promissory note of December 7th was made was for a balance due upon an open, current, and mutual account. The evidence shows that the cause was tried upon this issue as fully as if it had been pleaded as proposed by the amendment. Even if an abuse of discretion, which we do not think it was, the ruling of the court was without injury. I advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

WRIGHT et al. v. EASTLICK et al. (Sac. 555.)¹

NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—MISCONDUCT OF JURORS.

Where it appears that the foreman of a jury, pending the trial, went to and returned from a dance with one of defendants, and during the night they got drunk together, and were quite intimate, and that after the discharge of the jury the foreman said to the defendant with whom he attended the dance that he had brought in a verdict for him, and that the foreman and another juror during the trial drank with defendants, and went visiting with them, plaintiff is entitled to a new trial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county.

Action by H. D. Wright and others against Lafayette Eastlick and others involving a contest regarding a line dividing mining claims. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Jas. F. Farrarher and J. H. Magoffey, for appellants. Gillis & Tappscott, J. A. Reynolds, and G. D. Butler, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. This action involves a contest regarding a line dividing mining claims in Siskiyou county. The trial was by jury, and the verdict and judgment for the defendants. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order refusing the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial.

Among the grounds of the motion for a new trial is the alleged misconduct of the jury, and this is pressed on the appeal. The misconduct complained of relates principally to the jurors John Neville and John B. Lowden, the former of whom was elected and acted as foreman. The affidavits produced in support of the motion for a new trial show that during the progress of the trial Neville approached the plaintiff H. D. Wright, and stated to him that he (Neville) "was going to do the right thing; that he was pretty well satisfied who the right one was, and that he was a pretty good talker, and could make the jury see things in the right light." This occurred just prior to the departure of Neville from Yreka to Montague. On arriving at Montague, he told James M. Davidson, a witness in the case, and John T. Bradley, that plaintiff Wright had, during the trial of the case, approached him, and commenced to talk with him about the said cause, and that he had told said Wright to stop talking to him about the case, and that, if he did not, he would report him to the court. Said Neville also stated to Charles J. Fry, during the progress of the trial, that appellant Wright had attempted to talk to him about the trial, for the purpose of influencing him in his verdict. The affidavit of Wright contradicts, point-blank, this statement of the juror Neville; and, on the other hand, it is stated in Wright's affidavit that Neville attempted to approach him and talk about the case, and in his denials and affirmative statements Wright is corroborated; and Neville, in his counter affidavit, does not attempt to controvert or impeach Wright's affidavit. It is further shown by the affidavits of several parties that pending the trial, and on New Year's eve, Neville attended a dance at Hawkinsville, some 2½ miles from Yreka, in company with W. W. Eastlick, one of the defendants. They went together in the same conveyance to the dance, and returned in like manner to Yreka. During the night of the dance at Hawkinsville they drank and got drunk together; were "partners"; and frequently walked alone from the dance hall to the saloon, and appeared to be quite intimate. Just prior to attending this dance Neville stated to one of his co-jurors (Elliott R. Taylor) that he (Neville) was broke. On the day after, John Lowden, who, it appears, had been an intimate associate of Neville during the progress of the trial, stated to Juror Taylor that Neville had made "a killing of ninety-seven dollars"; and Neville, on his return from the dance, stated to Juror Taylor that he "blowed in a deal of money." Shortly after the discharge of the jury, Neville, approaching defendant Wallace Eastlick, with whom he went to the Hawkinsville dance, said, "Well, old man, I brought in a verdict for you all right." And Juror Lowden was seen talking to the deendant Lafayette Eastlick in a secret place in the rear of a saloon. Lowden and Neville went buggy riding during the trial, and one Whipple, a nephew of defendants Eastlick, held the team while they took a drink; and they also drank with the defendants Eastlick, and visited their brother together while they were both drunk. The counter affidavits go to show that Juror Neville, aside from his intemperate habits, was considered a good man and citizen, and that the treating and drinking were not all on one side, but were indulged in by both parties to the litigation. The conduct of these two jurors,—principally Foreman Neville,—visiting saloons, and going to dance houses, and drinking and carousing with parties to the action, is not controverted by respondents' counsel, but they seek to extenuate the same. They say: "The parties, the witnesses, and some of the jurors were miners; they were away from home, and the trial lasted over the holidays; and, while these things were not to be encouraged, still all that is shown in this case is the following out of the very general custom throughout the mining districts; and we think that no one who is at all familiar with the custom of miners in this state will say that because one or two jurors happened to be present and joined when the crowd was invited up to take a social drink during the holidays, that the verdict was tainted thereby." It is scarcely to be credited that such misconduct on the part of the jurors as the record in this case discloses is but following out the custom, either general or local, throughout the mining districts of this state. If there were such a custom, surely it "would be more honored in the breach than the observance." It is to be presumed that when jurymen are selected and sworn to try a cause, either in the mining or other districts in this state, they realize the obligation of their oath, and their duty as good citizens towards the community, and act accordingly. In the early '60's a district judge in this state, whose district embraced mining counties, was impeached on the ground, among others, that during the trial of a cause he left the bench and visited a saloon, and there drank and caroused with witnesses and the parties, or one of the parties. If a judge may not do these things, why should the jury, or members of the jury, be allowed to do so? By the constitution, trial by jury is secured to all, and the judge is prohibited from charging the jury with respect to matters of fact; and by the law of the state the jury "are the judges of the effect and weight of evidence." Code Civ. Proc. § 2061. The jury, therefore, while engaged in the trial of a cause, forms a very important part of the tribunal. A wrong verdict, resulting from prejudice or misconduct of the jury, or members thereof, is more detrimental to a party litigant than an error of law committed by the trial judge. An error at law can readily be corrected on appeal, whereas, if the testimony appears to be substantially conflicting, the verdict must be allowed to stand, although resulting from secret or undiscovered prejudice or misconduct. It goes for nothing that the jurymen in this case say that their verdict was uninfluenced by the misconduct complained of. As said in People v. Stokes, 103 Cal. 196, 37 Pac. 209: "A juror is not allowed to say: 'I acknowledge to grave misconduct. I received evidence without the presence of the court, but those matters had no influence upon my mind when casting my vote in the jury room.' The law, in its wisdom, does not allow a juror to purge himself in that way." See, also, People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 632, 39 Pac. 59; Woodward v. Leavitt, 107 Mass. 466. The verdict in this case was by the bare constitutional number required, of nine to three, and the result might have been different if it had not been for the misconduct complained of. However, as said in Palmer v. Railway Co., 13 Pac. 429: "It is not necessary for us to find that this conduct had any effect upon the verdict in order to sustain this motion for a new trial. It is enough to say that it is calculated to do so." Again, it is said in McDaniels v. McDaniels, 40 Vt. 374: "There is no practicable method to so analyze the mental operations of the jurors as to determine whether, in point of fact, the verdict would have been the same if the trial had been conducted, as both parties had the right to expect, according to law, and upon the evidence in court." The court should set aside the verdict in justice to itself as well as to the parties, that the trial may be conducted fairly, so that the verdict, when rendered, may be entitled to the respect of both parties and the confidence of the court." Thomp. Trials, § 2564, states the rule as follows: "Where the jury has been treated, fed, or entertained by the successful party or his counsel, or at the expense of either, a new trial will, in nearly all cases, be granted. This rule is, by most courts, deemed indispensably necessary to preserve the integrity of juries. It being, as already stated, a rule of public policy, it will be enforced without reference to the question whether or not the verdict was right." We cannot be too strict in guarding trials by jury from improper influences. This strictness is necessary to give due confidence to parties in the results of their causes, and every one ought to know that for any, even the least, intermeddling with jurors, a verdict will be set aside. Knight v. Inhabitants of Freeport, 13 Mass. 218. On the showing made in this cause the court below should have granted a new trial. The conclusion we have arrived at renders it unnecessary to consider the other points made by the appellants. Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—DISTRIBUTION TO A MORTGAGEE—INTERVENTION BY AN INTERESTED PARTY—APPEAL BY ONE NOT A PARTY TO THE DISTRIBUTION PROCEEDINGS.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1678, providing that distribution of real estate may be made to the grantees of the original heirs, legatees, or devisees, does not authorize distribution to a mortgagee of the testatrix.

2. A mortgagee of a testatrix cannot intervene in the hearing of a petition for distribution of the estate without filing some pleading or statement as to the grounds upon which he claims right to be heard.

3. A mortgagee of a testatrix, who, without filing pleadings or statement, introduced his mortgage in evidence at the hearing of the petition for distribution, is not entitled to appeal from the decree of distribution in his own name.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

In the matter of the estate of Susan Crooks, deceased. Wemple and Arnold, mortgagees of the testatrix, appeared, and sought to share in the distribution for the purpose of security. From a decree refusing the mortgagees a share in the distribution, they appeal. Motion to dismiss the appeal. Granted.

H. A. Powell, for appellants. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. Susan Crooks died a resident of San Francisco, April 28, 1894, testate, and leaving a large estate. The will was probated, the executors qualified, and administration proceeded until the 28th day of November, 1897, when a petition was filed, showing that the estate was ready for distribution. Notice was given, and April 1, 1898, the matter came on for hearing. At the hearing the appellants, Wemple and Arnold, appeared, and offered in evidence a document which purported to be a mortgage executed by Robert Lee Crooks, one of the devisees mentioned in the will of the testator, and also one of her heirs at law, upon all the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor of, in, and to all the real estate in the two inventories in the estate of Matthew Crooks, and all the real estate in the inventory in the estate of Susan Crooks, and all the other real estate in which Robert Lee Crooks may have any interest as heir at law of Matthew Crooks or Susan Crooks, to secure the payment of a certain promissory note for the sum of $6,000 and interest. The note was then past due. Wemple and Arnold filed no pleading or other appearance in writing. The attorney simply appeared in the court room, offered the mortgage in evidence, and proposed to ask that the share of Robert Lee be distributed to them. In the mortgage it was stated that "the party of the first part authorizes and directs the probate court to distribute, set over, transfer, and deliver to the party of the second part all his right, title, and interest in and to said estate as security for the payment of said promissory note." To this offer Robert Lee Crooks objected, on the ground that the law does not warrant the distribution of an estate to an assignee as security, but only to heirs, devisees, and their grantees. The objection was sustained, the appellants excepting, and the distribution was made regardless of the claim of appellants. The offer of the mortgage in evidence was not accompanied by a statement as to other facts which the appellants undertook to prove, and, as no appearance was made in writing, it does not appear that the debt has not been paid. Motion is now made to dismiss the appeal because it is not made to appear from the record that appellants are aggrieved parties.

The only section of the Code authorizing distribution to the grantees of an heir or a devisee is section 1678 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court correctly held that this section would not warrant the court in distributing the property to appellants. They are not the persons entitled under the will, nor by succession, nor are they grantees to whom distribution could be made. The decree must name the persons entitled under the will or by succession, or their grantees. A mortgage is not a conveyance, but only a contract by which property is hypothecated for the performance of an act. Civ. Code, § 2920. At the most, the court could only distribute the property to Crooks subject to the mortgage. There is no law or practice which requires the court in making distribution of an estate to determine by its decree whether an alleged mortgage upon the interest of an heir is valid, or the debt has not been paid, or whether there is not some defense to it. None of these questions are germane to the subject, nor is their consideration authorized by the statute, or at all. As determined in Chever v. Ching Hong Poy, 82 Cal. 68, 22 Pac. 1081, the decree of distribution is only conclusive upon the matter of succession, or as to rights under a will; at least where the estate is distributed without an actual contest to the heirs, devisees, and legatees. Their title dates back to the death of the testator, or of their ancestor, and a distribution directly to them does not affect rights acquired from them since it accrued. In fact, it seems to me so obvious that an estate should not be distributed to a mortgagee that the question hardly merits discussion. It does not follow, however, that appellants had not a right to be heard in the matter of the distribution. They have interests which may have been affected by the decree. To make the matter obvious, let us suppose that they had a mortgage upon the interest of Robert Lee Crooks in his mother's estate, as an heir at law, as they did. Let us suppose that the entire estate was, by will, given to others. It is in fact contended that it was so given, except a portion in trust for Robert Lee Crooks, so conditioned that it cannot be reached by his creditors. Now, if the mortgagees thought the disposition made by the will was void, and the value of their security depended upon having the court so rule, they ought to be heard, and probably might intervene in some mode which would give them a hearing. The mortgagor might be quite satisfied with a decree which would render the security valueless. But no such intervention should be tolerated unless sustained by some pleading or statement as to the grounds upon which the intervenor claims the right to be heard in a proceeding to which he is not a party. His case does not come under section 1678 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but under the general proposition that one whose rights are being adjudicated upon ought to be heard. Even under the statute, I think, if there is a controversy over the matter, the issues should be made in writing. Appellants say they were prevented from proving that their debt was not paid by the objection which assumed a subsisting mortgage, but that, having such mortgage, they still had no rights. But it is quite plain that they had no rights as distributees, and, such being the case, it was most important that it should appear that they had some interest in the proceeding. This particular claim—that they had a right to be heard because their interests were involved—they did not make. As a rule, one who is not a party to the record cannot appeal in his own name. One not a party to an action or a proceeding may sometimes appeal, but in some way his interest must be made to appear in the record, and he be made a party to the ruling appealed from. According to the terms of the note contained in the mortgage offered, the money was past due, and nowhere in the record does it appear, either by allegation or proof, that it has not been paid, or that appellants had any debt or obligation secured by mortgage. They were not shown to be parties aggrieved, or parties at all to the proceeding. The motion to dismiss the appeal is granted.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. KYSOR. (L. A. 512.)

DEDICATION—EVIDENCE.

Defendant contracted with a railway company to sell it certain land, and the railway company took joint possession of the property under the contract. It divided the land into lots and blocks, and placed them upon the market for sale, and filed a map in the recorder's office showing the subdivisions, and having a tract marked off and labeled as "Central Park." Subsequently defendant and the railroad company contracted to sell the park to one G. in consideration that he would keep it open as a public park for 25 years. This agreement was canceled. Subsequently the railroad company quitclaimed to defendant. Defendant had sold many lots to purchasers with reference to this map. During all this time the park was open to the public. Held, that these facts are sufficient to support a finding that the park was not dedicated and accepted by the public.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by the city of Los Angeles against E. F. Kysor. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. E. Dunn, for appellant. Bicknell, Gibson & Trask, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This action is brought to quiet title, and the city appeals. It is claimed that the tract of land involved is a public park of the city, and made so by dedication. The trial court, after hearing the evidence, made a finding of fact to the effect that there had never been a dedication of the land to public use, and this appeal is mainly directed to an attack upon that finding. The salient facts are, briefly, these: The defendant was the owner of a large tract of land adjoining the city of Los Angeles. He entered into a contract to sell this land to the Vernon Street Railway Company. Under this contract the railway company took a joint possession of the property. This land was to be immediately subdivided into lots and blocks, and placed upon the market for sale. Thereafter the parties filed a map of the tract in the recorder's office, showing a subdivision thereof into blocks and lots and streets. The tract involved in this litigation was marked upon the map as "Central Park." Thereafter the defendant and the railway company entered into a contract with Gillis and others, whereby they agreed to sell to Gillis and others the tract marked "Central Park," in consideration that said Gillis and others should keep "said premises as a public park for a period of not less than twenty-five years." Shortly thereafter this agreement was canceled. Subsequently the railway company quitclaimed to defendant all its interest in and to the tract. Both prior to this deed and subsequent thereto defendant conveyed many lots in said tract to purchasers by reference to the aforesaid map. This tract was located upon the line of the road of the railway company, and during all these times was open to the public. There are various small matters of evidence bearing upon the question of dedication, which we pass by without detailed mention. It is said in City and County of San Francisco v. Grote, 120 Cal. 62, 52 Pac. 128: "It is not a trivial thing to take another's land, and for this reason the courts will not lightly declare a dedication to public use. It is elementary law that an intention to dedicate upon the part of the owner must be plainly manifest." In the face of the rule here declared, we are asked to reverse a finding of fact to the effect that no dedication took place, upon the ground that there is no material evidence to support it. We cannot reverse this finding of "no dedication" if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. We cannot set aside the finding even though the evidence should be found to largely preponderate against it. As said in City of Sacramento v. Clunie, 120 Cal. 32, 52 Pac. 45: "Even conceding this evidence sufficient to support a finding of dedication, still it is not sufficient to reverse a finding of 'no dedication.'" In all those cases where it is claimed that a dedication is created in pais it may be said that there is no amount of evidence which will justify a court in instructing a jury that dedication is conclusively shown. The owner's intention is the all-important element in creating a dedication, and that intention is a question of fact. It never can be a matter of law. Hence, when the person's intention in doing an act is the all-important element involved in the trial of a question of fact, it is peculiarly the province of the jury or the trial court to say what that intention is; and here this court, in view of the test which must be applied, cannot say that the solution made of this question of fact by the trial court was wrong. Dedication is the joint effect of an offer by the owner to dedicate land, and an acceptance of such offer by the public. Only two parties are necessary to a dedication,—the owner, upon the one side, and the public, upon the other. There can be no dedication without the participation of both, and no dedication can be stronger or more binding by the participation or intervention of others. The offer of the owner to dedicate may be manifested in a hundred different ways, and the acceptance of the offer by the public may be manifested in a like number of ways. Again, the fact that the owner sells lots by reference to a map of the tract, duly recorded, is not at all conclusive evidence of a dedication to the public of the streets and parks platted upon the map. It is but some evidence of dedication,—evidence weak or strong, according to the circumstances of each particular case. It is said in Prescott v. Edwards, 117 Cal. 301, 49 Pac. 178: "There is no such thing as a dedication between the owner and individuals. The public must be a party to every dedication. Some of the cases say that platting a tract of land, recording the plat, and selling lots by reference to such plat, constitute a dedication of the streets in favor of the purchasers of these lots, even though the dedication to the public is not perfected and completed. The statement is not correct as a legal principle, as may be seen from what has already been said."

Whatever may be the legal rights of the purchasers from defendant of the lots marked upon the recorded plat, by reference to the plat, is a matter not before us. It is said in City of Sacramento v. Clunie, supra: "In the consideration of the question here presented it must be borne in mind that the litigation is alone between the owner and the city. The question is purely one of dedication. The respective rights of the owners of the blocks who may have purchased from the parties filing the map are not involved. Such sales may be some evidence of intention to dedicate, but nothing more. The respective rights of owners rest upon other and different principles of law." As conclusively demonstrating that the filing of a plat in the recorder's office, exhibiting upon its face blocks, lots, and streets, followed by sales of lots according to the plat, does not necessarily dedicate the street marked upon the plat to public use, we have but to cite cases like Schmitt v. City and County of San Francisco, 100 Cal. 307, 34 Pac. 963, where Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 53, 28 Pac. 841, is quoted with approval to the following effect: "The owner, after selling some of the lots according to such map, might, either with the consent of the purchasers, or if he should himself repurchase all of the lots so sold, withdraw such offer at any time before the public had acquired any interest in the streets, either from formal acceptance or by actual user." Of course, if the aforementioned acts had constituted a dedication of the streets to public use, there could be no such thing as a revocation of that dedication by the owner. Conceding that the acts done by the defendant and the railway company in making and recording the plat constitute an offer of dedication, still there is evidence of revocation of that offer, and also but slight evidence of the acceptance of the offer. As we have heretofore shown, an intention to dedicate must be plainly manifest, or there is no offer. In this case the particular tract of land in dispute is designated upon the plat as "Central Park." If it had been designated thereon as "Private Park" it could not be claimed for a moment that an intention to dedicate it to the public was plainly manifest by the filing of the plat. Again, if it had been designated upon the plat as "Public Park," the intention to dedicate would be quite apparent. Now, in the present case it is designated as "Central Park." Certainly, under such designation, the intention of the owner is not as plainly manifest as in either of the illustrations we have cited. Yet, assuming an offer to dedicate this tract as a public park was made by the owner, still the finding of "no dedication" should be sustained. The act of defendant and the railway company in contracting a sale of this park tract to Gillis and others was evidence strongly tending to show a revocation of the offer to dedicate. No evidence of any act of acceptance by the city of the offer to dedicate can be found in the record anywhere, either prior or subsequent to this contract of sale. A portion of the grounds was used by the public for picnics and other pleasure purposes, and this was all. The city bases an acceptance of the offer largely upon this ground; but such use was entirely consistent with the ownership by the defendant and the railway company. Indeed, all and every kind of ownership was exercised over this tract by defendant, the railway company, and Gillis and others, during all these years; and nothing was ever done by the city to indicate a claim of interest upon its part. While an acceptance of an offer to dedicate may be presumed or implied in many cases, yet a finding of fact that there never was an acceptance would rarely be set aside by an appellate court where such claim of acceptance is based upon presumption or implication alone. There are a few other matters of evidence which we have not stated in detail, some looking favorably to a dedication, and others looking the other way. They do not change the result, and the finding of no dedication to public use by the owner of the tract marked "Central Park" will not be set aside. The evidence is ample to sustain that finding. We have carefully examined the errors of law relied upon by appellant but find nothing suggested therein demanding a new trial of the cause. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 1, 1899.)

LIFE INSURANCE—DECEIT IN COMPROMISE—RESCISSION OF COMPROMISE—TENDER OF BENEFITS UNDER COMPROMISE—ACTIONS FOR RESCISSION OF COMPROMISE.

1. In an action against an insurance company for the difference between the face of a policy and a sum accepted under compromise, the complaint alleged that plaintiffs had repudiated the compromise on the ground of fraud, and demanded the balance due. The case was submitted under a charge that, if the jury believed the averments to be true, they should find for the plaintiff for the difference between the amount received and the face of the policy, with interest. Held, that this was an action based on the policy, not an action in tort for the deceit.

2. Where an insurance company, by fraudulent representations, effects a compromise with a beneficiary, and pays the agreed sum, the beneficiary cannot rescind the contract, and recover on the policy, without giving up what he has received under the compromise.

3. An action by a beneficiary under a life insurance policy for the difference between the face of the policy and a sum accepted in compromise, wherein the complaint does not offer to restore the sum paid in compromise, the court submits the case to a jury, and rescission is not touched on in the judgment, cannot be regarded as a suit for rescission.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Pauline Westerfeld and others against the New York Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

BRITT, C. Plaintiffs sue as executors of the last will of one William Westerfeld, late of the city of San Francisco. Defendant is an insurance corporation of the state of New York. Plaintiffs allege in their complaint, among other things, that on April 19, 1890, the defendant issued to their testator a policy of insurance upon his life in the sum of $10,000, which policy included a provision that at the expiration of five years from its date the insured might surrender the policy, and receive its "then cash value"; that, after Westerfeld had paid four annual premiums thereon, an arrangement was effected between him and the defendant whereby the latter executed to him a new policy, of date February 19, 1894, for the same amount as the former, but on a different plan, and promised that it would compute the surrender value, in cash, of said first-issued policy, and apply the surplus thereof above the fifth premium, to become due the following April, in payment of premiums on said second policy, Westerfeld agreeing on his part to give up the first policy as soon as the company should have determined its value as aforesaid, and given him credit therefor on its books; that Westerfeld died February 18, 1895, having yet in his possession both said policies, and having received from defendant no notice of the cash surrender value of the first policy, which, however, was a sum more than sufficient, after deducting the fifth premium on the first policy, to pay the first premium on the second. Plaintiffs further allege that, as executors aforesaid, they afterwards demanded of defendant the payment of the amount of said second policy; that defendant refused to pay any part thereof, and by false and fraudulent representations (to the general effect that the policy of February, 1894, never was in force, but had been delivered to Westerfeld for examination only; that he never accepted it, nor paid any premium thereon, and had been notified to return it to defendant; also that the first policy had become void by failure of Westerfeld to pay the fifth annual premium) the defendant inveigled plaintiffs into a compromise, whereby they surrendered both said policies, and gave a release of all demands thereunder, in consideration of the sum of $2,666.66, then paid to them by defendant; that, but for the said representations, the falsity of which was then unknown to plaintiffs, they would not have accepted less than the face of the last policy; and that prior to the commencement of this action plaintiffs notified defendant that they "repudiated said settlement upon the ground that it was procured by fraud," and demanded payment of the difference between the sum paid as just mentioned "and the amount due them under the terms of said policy issued February 19, 1894." The prayer of the complaint was for judgment in the sum of $7,333.33, and interest from March 27, 1895, the date of proofs of death. For defense to the action, defendant admitted making the representations alleged by plaintiffs; but denied their falsity, and averred that they were true. It contested its liability on the policy of 1894, and claimed that, if its local agents (with whom alone Westerfeld dealt) made any arrangement looking to the application of a surrender value of the first policy in payment of premiums on the second, they violated the provisions of the first policy, which allowed a surrender value to the same only after it had been in force for five years, and exceeded their powers, and that their acts were never ratified. Defendant also contended that plaintiffs could not maintain the action without rescinding the contract of compromise, and restoring or offering to restore the money they then received as the fruit thereof. The trial was by jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiffs for the sum demanded in their complaint.

The decision of but one of the several questions debated by counsel will suffice for the disposition of the case. Notwithstanding the elaborate and very able argument with which plaintiffs' counsel have supported their contention that no restoration or offer of restoration of the money received by their clients upon the compromise was necessary to the success of this action, we are unable to accept that view. It is said, in the first place, that the action is to be treated, not as founded on the policy, but as in tort for deceit, and to recover damages for the fraud practiced by defendant. The complaint, however, was not drawn upon that theory. It is, of course, true that a party who has been led by fraud into a settlement whereby he accepted less than is justly due him in extinguishment of legal claims may, on discovering the fraud, sue for the damage he has sustained without taking any steps to rescind the settlement. The law allows such an action, although, as has been said here, "even in that case great wrong is sometimes done when rescission is not required" (Bancroft v. Bancroft, 110 Cal. 379, 42 Pac. 897); but it proceeds on the assumption that the plaintiff affirms the contract of compromise,—abandons the cause of action which it superseded,—and claims damage for the fraud which induced the new contract. In the present instance the plaintiffs distinctly aver in their complaint that they "repudiated said settlement upon the ground that it was procured by fraud upon the part of defendant," and demanded payment of the difference between the sum they had received and the "amount due them under the terms of said policy issued February 19, 1894." The frame of the complaint shows that the action is bottomed on the policy itself as a subsisting contract, and that, in consequence of the fraud charged, the release is treated as simply void. This is contrary to the rule of our statute. A consent to a contract procured by fraud "is nevertheless not absolutely void, but may be rescinded by the parties in the manner prescribed by the chapter on rescission." Civ. Code, § 1566. The like view of the plaintiffs' cause of action was submitted to the jury at the trial. The court instructed them, in substance, that, if they believed the averments of the complaint to be true, their verdict should be for plaintiffs; not for such amount of damage as they might find to have been caused by the alleged fraud, but "in the sum of $7,333.33, with interest thereon from March 27, 1895, at seven per cent. per annum," which was the exact amount of the policy less the compromise payment, with interest on the difference. Plaintiffs maintain that this statement of the measure of damages was appropriate to an action sounding in tort for the fraud, but it seems to us to proceed on an unwarranted assumption, viz. that the jury must necessarily find that plaintiffs sustained the same damage by release of the policy, on which defendant denied any liability, and which might have been the subject of possibly doubtful litigation, that they would have sustained if the policy had been wholly undisputed. There was evidence in the case from which the jury might have concluded that, without regard to the false representations, plaintiffs could better afford to accept less than the face of the policy than to sue on it; but the instruction took this question from their consideration, and so was not a correct statement of the law if the case is to be regarded as in tort. This subject has been considered by the court of appeals of New York in an action for obtaining by fraud a compromise of a disputed contractual liability. The court said that the measure of damages "is not the extinguished balance, and cannot be without making the rule as to rescission an idle and useless formality, [but] its measure is indemnity for the real loss sustained, which may very well prove to be less, and even much less, than the contract balance. * * * What the plaintiff sold and what the defendant bought [the court thus describing the effect of the compromise agreement] was not a conceded, but a disputed, claim; worth, therefore, ordinarily, something less than its face for purposes of sale, transfer, or cancellation; how much less depending upon the continuing solvency of the debtor, and the probability of its successful enforcement, and that upon the underlying facts of the case, and depending also upon the probable extent and expense of the expected litigation." Gould v. Bank, 99 N. Y. 333, 2 N. E. 16. Plaintiffs inveigh strongly against the doctrine of that case, but, in our opinion, it is correct.

It is also contended that the case is within the rule that one who seeks to rescind a compromise on the ground of fraud is not required to restore the money or other benefits he has received from his adversary, if, whatever might be the result of his action, he would be entitled to keep what he has obtained. Cases of that nature arise when a party has been led by fraudulent contrivance to accept less money than was due him on an undisputed claim, as in Mining Co. v. Gilson, 47 Cal. 597, and in some other instances not necessary to be illustrated now. But in the present case, assuming, as plaintiffs did, that the bar to the action arising from the compromise settlement and release was avoided by allegations of fraud in the procurement of the same, then, of course, both parties were relegated to their original situation where plaintiffs asserted and defendant contested the liability of the latter on the policy. Kley v. Healy, 149 N. Y. 346, 44 N. E. 150. Suppose plaintiffs should fail to establish such liability, it would then appear that they had $2,666.66 of defendant's money to which—the compromise under which it was paid being void, and the consideration moving to defendant for such payment, viz. immunity from suit on the policy, having failed—they could show no right, and it seems quite elementary to say that in such event they could not lawfully keep what they had obtained. It is no answer to say that plaintiffs did prove to the satisfaction of the jury that the policy they surrendered was an enforceable obligation in their favor; or, what is much the same thing, that the judgment, by which the plaintiffs recover only the difference between the face value of the policy and the sum paid by defendant on the compromise, is a sufficient restoration of such payment. These things were problematical until judgment rendered; and to adopt such a test for determining whether restoration was necessary before suit is to say that the plaintiffs could gain their right of action—to wit, of recovery on the policy, which was barred by the compromise—as the result of the action; whereas the settled rule is that the right must exist when a plaintiff commences his action. As remarked by Mr. Bigelow (1 Bigelow, Fraud, p. 82): "The compromise is a binding contract until rescinded. It is binding then when he brings his suit." And so, Civ. Code, § 1566; Morrison v. Lods, 39 Cal. 381; Bohall v. Diller, 41 Cal. 532; Herman v. Haffenegger, 54 Cal. 161; Wainwright v. Weske, 82 Cal. 193, 23 Pac. 12.

Another contention is that the action may be regarded as one for a rescission of the compromise by judgment of the court, and that in cases of that character no attempt at rescission by the plaintiff himself before suit brought is necessary. Rescission by the court in this case necessarily involved the setting aside of the compromise, and cancellation of the release,—powers exercisable only by the court in equity, and not by a jury. Mesenburg v. Dunn (Cal.; filed June 23, 1899) 57 Pac. 887. Such jurisdiction of the court below was neither invoked nor exerted, and the judgment is wholly silent touching a rescission. It is therefore erroneous in any aspect. But, aside from considerations arising from the practice at the trial, the complaint is insufficient, treated as a bill in equity for rescission. It is the law of this state (except under circumstances which, it is believed, we have sufficiently shown do not attend the present case) that the offer to restore what has been received under the contract impeached is a condition precedent to maintaining an action for a judicial rescission, as well as an action founded on the assumption that rescission has been accomplished by simple act of the party. Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 47 Pac. 369, and 52 Pac. 797, citing most of the previous cases on the subject. Plaintiffs lay stress on Watts v. White, 13 Cal. 321. That was a suit between partners, plaintiff seeking to set aside a deed of his interest in partnership property procured by fraud of defendant, and to enforce an accounting. The court said that plaintiff risked his case on the result of the accounting, and, since he alleged that a greater sum was due him than he had received for the deed, no offer to restore the consideration for the deed was necessary before suit. We may observe that in such a case the money received by the plaintiff becomes part of the subject of the accounting. In any possible event, he has an interest in it, and until the adjustment of the accounts is, it would seem, as much entitled to its possession as the defendant. Other distinctions might be drawn. As pointed out in a recent text-book: "Tender in a case of rescission between parties to the sale of a partner's interest in business stands upon a footing of its own." 1 Bigelow, Fraud, p. 426. Watts v. White does not aid the plaintiffs' case here.

Some other points made by plaintiffs in this connection do not require special notice. We must hold that the compromise was a good contract until rescinded, and, not having been rescinded when plaintiffs sued, it was a bar to the action, not removed by the subsequent verdict of the jury or judgment of the court. Civ. Code, §§ 1566, 1567, 1689, 1691; Dobinson v. McDonald, 92 Cal. 33, 27 Pac. 1098; Jurgens v. Insurance Co., 114 Cal. 161, 45 Pac. 1054, and 46 Pac. 386; Hill v. Den, 121 Cal. 42, 53 Pac. 642; Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 47 Pac. 369, and 52 Pac. 797, and cases cited. See, also, the following, most of which are quite in point: Gould v. Bank, 86 N. Y. 75; Graham v. Meyer, 99 N. Y. 611, 1 N. E. 143; Yeomans v. Bell, 151 N. Y. 230, 45 N. E. 552; Potter v. Insurance Co., 63 Me. 440; Brown v. Insurance Co., 117 Mass. 479; Moore v. Association, 165 Mass. 517, 43 N. E. 298; Ewing v. Shoe Co., 169 Mass. 72, 47 N. E. 241; Insurance Co. v. Howard, 111 Ind. 544, 13 N. E. 103; Harkey v. Insurance Co., 62 Ark. 274, 35 S. W. 230; Och v. Railway Co., 130 Mo. 27, 31 S. W. 962; 1 Bigelow, Fraud, p. 82. The authorities cited by plaintiffs, so far as pertinent to this question, are in the main distinguishable from the case at bar either for the reason that they treated the release as wholly void, which it cannot be under the statute of this state, or that the plaintiffs, suing in disregard of the release, had been fraudulently led to compromise an undisputed demand, and so were in any case entitled to keep what they had received. Admitting that there is some conflict of authority, we are yet satisfied that the conclusion we have reached accords with the strong preponderance of adjudication both in this state and elsewhere. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be reversed.

I concur: CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

BAXTER et al. v. GILBERT et al.

DIVISION OF SURPLUS WATERS—FINDING OF FACTS.

Plaintiffs were entitled to all the water which naturally flowed in a certain creek. The source of this creek was a lake. Defendants, claiming to appropriate the surplus only, took a ditch out of the lake, several feet lower than the natural channel of the creek at the point of outlet, led water through into the creek at a point far enough down the creek to obtain the necessary fall, thereby creating an overflow, and then out by another ditch. There was never any overflow above this latter ditch. Held, that a finding that the act of defendants deprived plaintiffs of water flowing in the natural channel was supported.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Inyo county.

Action by John Baxter and others against A. D. Gilbert and others. From a judgment and decree largely in accordance with plaintiffs' demands, defendants Gilbert and Maiers appeal. Affirmed.

R. S. Miner, for appellants. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This action was brought to test the respective rights of plaintiffs and defendants to the waters of Little Pine and Pinyon creeks, and also the waters of certain lakes situated high up in the mountains, and forming in a great measure the source of supply of Little Pine creek. Judgment was rendered largely in accordance with the claims of plaintiffs, decreeing that defendants Maiers and Gilbert had no rights in such waters, and perpetually restraining them from any interference therewith. Maiers and Gilbert claimed to be appropriators of a certain quantity of the waters, and appeal from the order denying their motion for a new trial. Plaintiffs are riparian owners on Little Pine creek, and also appropriators. The position of appellants is not sharply defined by their briefs, and we are not entirely satisfied whether their main contention here rests upon the claim of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of fact, or upon erroneous conclusions of law made by the trial court, based upon these findings. It appears to be conceded that the plaintiffs and the nonappealing defendants are entitled to all the waters of Little Pine creek and its tributary, Pinyon creek, which naturally flow within the banks of Little Pine creek. But these appellants insist that there is a surplus of water at certain seasons of the year, which arises from the overflow of Little Pine creek, and they claim this surplus. The modus operandi for the creation of this surplus water is as follows: Appellants filed three appropriation notices of location of waters. By their first notice they claimed 5,000 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, of a certain lake (describing it), and stating that said waters would be diverted from said lake "by means of an open cut about three hundred feet long by six feet wide and ten feet deep, and will be thus turned into, and mingled with, the waters of Kersarge creek [Little Pine creek], to be diverted therefrom at a point * * * by a ditch four feet deep by seven feet wide, and about two miles long, into the tract of land hereinbefore named." By their second notice of location they likewise claimed 5,000 inches of water, under the same pressure, of a certain lake (describing it), and stating that said waters would be diverted "by means of an open cut about three hundred feet long by six feet wide and ten feet deep, and will be thus turned into, and mingled with, the waters of Kersarge creek [Little Pine creek], to be diverted therefrom at a point * * * by a ditch. * * *". By their third notice of location they claimed 10,000 inches of surplus water of Little Pine creek, measured under a 4-inch pressure. "Said waters will be diverted from said creek at the point where the notice is posted, by means of a ditch four feet deep and ten feet wide, and about three miles long. * * *". It will be conceded that these two aforesaid lakes largely form the reservoirs from which Little Pine creek is fed. It is also a fact that the point of appropriation upon Little Pine creek, located by appellants, is some distance above the point of plaintiffs' appropriation. There is no overflow of the waters of Little Pine creek above the point where appellants tap the creek with their ditch. The evidence is all one way upon this question. It necessarily follows that it was not the overflow of the creek that appellants sought to appropriate, but a certain amount of water in these two aforesaid described lakes. If such appropriation of waters does not interfere with the usual and ordinary quantity of water flowing down the creek, the right of appellants to appropriate is undoubted; but otherwise, if there be an interference with the quantity of water flowing down the stream. If the tapping of these lakes by appellants reduces the amount of water to which plaintiffs are entitled, or shortens the period of time in which they might otherwise secure water from the creek, then the acts of appellants clearly are a trespass upon plaintiffs' rights,—exactly the same kind of trespass as though the creek was tapped, and that amount of water directly taken therefrom, without any molestation of the lakes. Upon this point the trial court made the following finding of fact: "The defendants A. D. Gilbert, O. I. Maiers, and A. F. Maiers, by making the ditch and openings into East lake as herein in these findings described, have lowered and drained said lakes to such an extent as to prevent the water from flowing into the natural channel in said Little Pine creek, and, by doing the work as in these findings described on said East lake, have allowed the water thereof to escape therefrom, and to divert it from the natural channel in said Little Pine creek." There is an abundance of evidence to support this finding of fact. Indeed, it is substantially conceded that appellants have tapped East lake some feet below the natural channel of Little Pine creek, and under those conditions it is self-evident that such an act would materially affect the amount of water flowing down the natural channel of the creek. Upon a careful examination of the record, we are satisfied the evidence is amply sufficient to support the findings of fact made by the trial court, and we are also satisfied that the conclusions of law based thereon find full support in the evidence.

Appellants rely upon various alleged errors of law committed by the trial court. Many of the questions raised under this head are not material, as the rulings, even if erroneous, do not go to the merits of this appeal. We find no error in the record demanding a reversal of the order. For the foregoing reasons, the order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

HAMILTON v. SMITH. (S. F. 1,023.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 7, 1899.)
ERRONEOUS FINDINGS OF FACT—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where the defense made to an action to recover a balance due on a lease was that the lease had been procured by fraudulent representations, and the amount of damages attempted to be proved by defendant was remitted by plaintiff from his judgment as a condition for refusing a new trial, defendant is not injured by erroneous findings of fact as to some of his allegations in the answer.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by W. H. Hamilton against F. M. Smith to recover a balance due on a lease. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from the refusal of a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, for appellant. John C. Hughes, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought to recover a balance due on a lease. The defense is fraud in procuring the lease. Defendant rented a house from plaintiff's assignors, in Chicago, for one month, during the World's Fair. Defendant was a resident of Oakland, where the lease was entered into. He had never seen the house, as the lessors knew, but relied solely upon their representations. They represented that it contained eight bedrooms. Defendant avers that in fact there were but four bedrooms. He found it difficult or impossible to get other accommodations for his family in Chicago at that time, and so did put up with the house he had rented. Beds were placed in the parlor and diningroom, and, although put to much inconvenience, the house was made to answer his purpose. His lease was in writing, and in it no mention is made of any bedrooms. It is not charged that there was any violation of its terms, but defendant seeks to recoup for damages for the false representations by which he was induced to enter into the contract. The court found that the plaintiff's assignors did represent that there were eight bedrooms, but finds that the representation was not fraudulent. In fact, it was found that there were eight bedrooms; for it is found that all the other allegations of the answer, except as to the representations regarding the number of the bedrooms, were untrue. The appeal is from the judgment, and from the refusal of a new trial.

Appellant contends, and the contention is well founded, that as to some of the allegations the finding is against the evidence. But, if all had been found for the defendant he could not have had judgment allowing a recoupment for more than $75, and, as a condition for refusing a new trial, plaintiff was required to, and did, remit that amount from his judgment. This was all the damages he attempted to prove. He now says he was entitled to the difference in the rental value of such a house as they represented it to be and such as it in fact was. But, conceding that rule, there was no evidence even tending to show the difference. His inconvenience is not shown to have cost him anything, except the $75 which he paid for other rooms. It appears, therefore, that he is not injured by the erroneous findings of fact. Order and judgment affirmed.

DAMAGES—AGREED PENALTY FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—GUARANTY TO PAY SUCH PENALTY—SUFFICIENCY OF PLEADING.

1. Under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, providing that a contract by which the amount of damage to be paid for a breach of obligation is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except where, from the nature of the case, it is impracticable, or extremely difficult, to fix the actual damage, a clause in a lease binding the lessee to pay $1,000 penalty in case of breach of his contract is void.

2. Under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, making void contracts which fix the amount of damages for breach, a contract of guaranty by defendant to pay the penalty prescribed for the breach of a lease is void, and does not bind defendant to pay even the actual damages incurred by such breach.

3. Where defendant contracted to pay a penalty incurred if lessee should be legally evicted for nonpayment of rent during the term of the lease, or if he voluntarily surrendered the premises, a pleading not stating that the lessee voluntarily surrendered the premises, nor that the eviction was during the term of the lease, is not sufficient to show liability on defendant's part.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action to quiet title by R. E. Jack against B. Sinsheimer. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for appellant. W. H. Spencer, for respondent.

COOPER, C. This is an action brought by plaintiff to quiet his title to a certain tract of land described in the complaint. The defendant answered, and in his answer set forth a certain mortgage made by one Cheda, which mortgage was claimed to be a valid lien upon the premises in favor of defendant. The plaintiff demurred to the answer upon the ground that the facts therein stated did not constitute any defense to the action. The demurrer was sustained, and, defendant declining to amend, judgment was rendered against him. This appeal is by defendant from the judgment and for the purpose of reviewing the order sustaining the demurrer. It appears from the answer that on June 19, 1891, one Andrews, as lessor, leased to one Cheda, as lessee, certain premises in San Luis Obispo county for the period of five years from and after October 1, 1891, at an annual rental of $2,000, one-third of the annual rent payable every four months in advance. This lease contained the following covenant: "And the said party of the second part (Cheda) does hereby covenant, promise, and agree to pay to said party of the first part (Andrews) the said rent in the manner hereinbefore specified, * * * and, upon his failure to pay said rent, he shall vacate said premises upon receiving thirty days' notice from the party of the first part, and shall pay to him the sum of one thousand dollars, as settled and liquidated damages." At the time of making the said lease the defendant signed an indorsement thereon in the following language: "In consideration of the making of the foregoing lease or agreement, and for the purpose of securing the penalty of one thousand dollars therein provided for, I hereby guaranty the payment of one thousand dollars unto said Truman Andrews, whenever, at any time during the term therein limited and provided for, the said J. A. Cheda shall be legally evicted from said premises for nonpayment of rent therein provided for, or whenever he voluntarily vacates the same, upon ten days' notice. Dated June 19, 1891. B. Sinsheimer." On January 25, 1894, the said Cheda was the owner in fee of the property described in the complaint in this action, and while such owner, on said last-named day, he made to the defendant a mortgage thereon, which mortgage was duly acknowledged and recorded, and which was given for the purpose of securing defendant "against all cost, damages, and expenses incurred, suffered, or accruing to said mortgagee by reason of a certain written guaranty made by him upon the part of and for said J. A. Cheda upon and about a certain lease this day executed between Truman Andrews and J. A. Cheda, to which lease reference is hereby made." On September 1, 1896, the said Cheda was in default for rent under the terms of said lease, and thereupon proceedings were commenced to evict and eject him from the leased premises. Afterwards judgment was duly given and made against said Cheda, and he was legally evicted from the said premises, and he has never paid the rent so due, or the said $1,000. Notice of the nonpayment of rent and of the default of Cheda was given to defendant, and demand made upon him for the payment thereof. Defendant has not paid the same, but claims that he has a right to the security given by the mortgage until he is fully released from said guaranty.

The principal question in this case is as to whether or not the clause in the lease fixing the sum of $1,000 as liquidated damages in case of the premises being vacated by the lessee is void. The rule that a guarantor is never implicated beyond the strict terms of his contract must be applied to defendant in this case. His guaranty was "for the purpose of securing the penalty of one thousand dollars, * * * whenever, at any time during the term therein limited and provided for, the said J. A. Cheda shall be legally evicted from said premises for nonpayment of rent, or whenever he voluntarily vacates the same." The guaranty was, therefore, by its terms, to secure a penalty of $1,000, which, by the lease, was fixed as liquidated damages in case the lessee should be evicted from the said premises, or voluntarily vacate the same. The provisions of our Code are as follows (Civ. Code, § 1670): "Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid, or other compensation to be made, for a breach of an obligation, is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except as expressly provided in the next section." Section 1671: "The parties to a contract may agree therein upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage."

We think, under the provisions of the Code quoted, that clause of the lease as to the penalty of $1,000 is void. It does not occur to us that upon the failure of a tenant to pay rent, and upon his eviction after notice and demand, the actual damage would be extremely difficult to fix or impracticable of estimation. It is provided in our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1174) that in summary proceedings for obtaining possession of real property after default of the tenant in the payment of rent the judgment or verdict shall find the amount of damages occasioned to the plaintiff, and for the amount of rent due, and shall be rendered against the defendant for three times the amount so found.

If the lessor had brought an action against the lessee under the above section and the preceding sections of the Civil Code of Procedure, the rule laid down in section 1174 would be applicable. We not only have a rule laid down in Code Civ. Proc. § 1174, for the wrongful holding over of a tenant after failure to pay rent, but we have rules laid down in Civ. Code, §§ 3335, 3344, 3345, and finally we have the rule laid down in Civ. Code, § 3334, that, with the exceptions of the rules stated in Code Civ. Proc. § 1173, and Civ. Code, §§ 3335, 3344, 3345, the detriment caused by the wrongful occupation of real property is deemed to be the value of the use of the property for the time of such occupation, and the costs, if any, of recovering the possession. The above sections seem to provide rules for ascertaining the damages in all kinds of actions for the recovery of real estate. When a tenant fails to pay rent as provided in the lease, the amount of damage is not extremely difficult to fix, and it certainly is not impracticable to fix the amount of such damage. In Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 205, 16 Pac. 890, it was held that a stipulation by the contractor in a building contract to pay the owner a specified amount as liquidated damages for each day's delay in completing the building is not sufficient evidence of itself to entitle the owner to recover the amount stipulated for as liquidated damages. In Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 25 Pac. 749, it was held that, where a written agreement was made between a vendor and purchaser for the sale of certain real estate, and $1,000 was paid down by the purchaser, and the contract contained a provision that in case of a breach thereof by the purchaser the $1,000 should be taken by the vendee as liquidated damages, that the provision was void. In the opinion it is said: "It appears, from the nature of the contract under consideration, that it would not be impracticable, or at all difficult, to fix the actual damage in this case, since section 3307 of the Civil Code provides a rule by which the damage in all cases of this kind may be measured, and definitely fixed." In Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, 27 Pac. 36, a contract had been entered into between plaintiff and defendant for the delivery of a large number of grain bags. The contract contained a clause to the effect that the defendant would pay to plaintiff three cents for each bag which he refused or neglected to deliver, and also contained the express agreement that it was understood between the plaintiff and defendant that, owing to the nature of the case, it would be impracticable and extremely difficult to fix the actual damage. It was held that, notwithstanding the provision in the contract that the parties understood that it would be impracticable and extremely difficult to fix the actual damage, the provision was void under sections 1670, 1671, Civ. Code. In Transportation Co. v. O'Neil, 98 Cal. 1, 32

Pac. 705, the contract sued upon contained a provision for the hiring of a lighter, and for the payment of a fixed sum in case of loss or irreparable damage to the lighter. It was held that the stipulation was in the nature of a penalty, and that the plaintiff, in suing upon the contract, should have alleged and proved actual damage. Applying the rule as laid down in the above cases, the stipulation in the lease as to $1,000 penalty was void, and the demurrer properly sustained. It is said by appellant that, even if the penalty is void as to the amount, the stipulation is binding upon the lessee for the actual damage. This would be true without any such provision in the lease. In case the lessee failed to pay rent, or vacated before the end of his lease, he is liable to his lessor for the actual damage sustained, without any covenant to that effect, or any bond or guaranty. That, however, is not this case. The defendant did not guaranty the rent, nor agree that under any circumstances he would be responsible for it. He guarantied the penalty of $1,000 in case the lessee was legally evicted for nonpayment of rent, or voluntarily vacated the premises. The penalty being void, the guarantor is not liable. It is alleged in the answer that Cheda became indebted for rent under said lease, but no statement is made as to whom he so became indebted. It is stated that Cheda was legally evicted from the leased premises for nonpayment of rent, but it is not alleged that by reason of such eviction the lessor, or any one else, suffered any damage. The answer may be true, and yet the lessor may have been greatly benefited by evicting the lessee, as he may have leased the premises immediately for a much greater rent, or otherwise received profit by obtaining possession thereof. In the case of Factor Co. v. Adler, supra, the plaintiff introduced in evidence its contract containing the provision that defendant would pay to plaintiff three cents for each bag which he refused or neglected to deliver under the contract, and, after showing the number of bags which defendant failed to deliver, rested, without any proof of damage. Defendant moved in the court below for nonsuit upon the ground, among others, that no proof of actual damage was offered. The nonsuit was granted, and this court affirmed the judgment. The guaranty as to the penalty only made defendant liable in case, during the term of the lease, the lessee should be legally evicted from the said premises for nonpayment of rent, or should voluntarily vacate the same. There is no allegation in the answer that the lessee ever voluntarily vacated the premises, and no allegation that he was legally evicted during the term of the lease. The rule that a pleading will be construed most strongly against the pleader must be applied to the answer in this case. Tested by the demurrer, the statements of the answer must be taken as true; yet, for the purpose of holding the guaranty of defendant binding, we cannot presume any facts outside of those stated in the answer. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. NEBER. (Cr. 527.)

BURGLARY—CHARGE TO JURY.

In a prosecution for burglary, the court charged that the fact that a person is found in possession of property recently stolen, "if such be the fact, and established by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt," is not sufficient to warrant conviction, but where the evidence establishes the fact, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the person who had recent possession of stolen property gives a false account of how he came by possession, it is a circumstance to be considered, and that the jury should not understand him as expressing any opinion on the facts or the weight of the evidence. Held not objectionable as a charge as to matters of fact.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Napa county.

August Neber was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

Webber & Rutherford, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

BRITT, C. Defendant was convicted in this action of the crime of burglary in the second degree, perpetrated by entering a certain building with intent to commit larceny therein. The charge of the judge to the jury at the trial included the following matter: "The mere fact that a person is found in the possession of property recently stolen, if such be the fact, and established by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, is not, in and of itself, sufficient to warrant a conviction of the party either of larceny or burglary. There must be evidence outside of or beyond or independent of the fact of the possession of the property recently stolen, in order to warrant a jury in convicting a party. But where the evidence establishes the fact beyond a reasonable doubt that the person who had the recent possession of stolen property gives false, contradictory, or inconsistent accounts of how he came by that possession, that is a circumstance that the jury should consider in arriving at a verdict; and they can and should consider the fact that the party has the possession of property recently stolen, in connection with all the other circumstances in the case, in arriving at their verdict." On appeal, defendant does not deny that there was evidence before the jury tending to show that certain personal property was stolen from the building aforesaid at or about the time of the burglary alleged against him, and was found soon afterwards in his possession; but he contends that the effect of said instruction was to say that those things were established as true, and so the court charged the jury as to matter of fact. At the outset of the instruction complained of, the judge stated the condition upon which his remarks were founded to be hypothetical only "if such be the fact, and established beyond a reasonable doubt." It is incredible that the jury, as men of ordinary intelligence, did not understand that the same qualification accompanied the immediately succeeding references to the same circumstance, although the condition was not repeated. Each sentence of the charge is not required to contain "all the conditions and limitations which are to be gathered from the entire text." People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85; People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511, 15 Pac. 102; People v. Worden, 113 Cal. 569, 45 Pac. 844. If a suspicion remain that the jury might have misunderstood the language of the court, it is removed by the part of the charge subsequently occurring, as follows: "Do not understand me as intimating any opinion on any fact in this case. Whether the defendant is guilty or innocent of this offense is for you to determine from the evidence. You must distinctly understand that the court in no manner or form is expressing or intends to express or intimate any opinion upon the weight of the evidence, * * * or that any fact in the case is or is not proven," etc.

Other points made by appellant are without merit, and are not of importance to require separate notice. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CASTRO. (Cr. 511.)

CRIMINAL LAW—CONFESSION—SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTION—ADMISSIBILITY.

1. Where proper objection is made by defendant to evidence of a confession on the ground that defendant was in custody, and that it is incumbent on the state to show that promises had not previously been made to induce such confession, and the objection is overruled, and exception taken, it is not necessary that the same objection should be repeated to evidence of other confessions to entitle defendant to have all such evidence excluded on its subsequently appearing that such inducements were offered.

2. A confession obtained from a prisoner charged with a crime, which he had previously denied, by means of a statement by the sheriff that they had a sure case against him, and a promise by the sheriff to use his influence in the prisoner's behalf if he would admit his guilt, is not admissible in evidence against him, nor are repetitions of such confession, made to other officers, though without further inducement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

Prosecution of Andreas Castro for cattle stealing. Defendant was convicted, and appeals. Reversed.

C. F. Carrier and W. G. Griffith, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

HAYNES, C. Appellant was tried upon an information charging him with having stolen a cow, was found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state's prison for the term of 10 years. Mr. Rice, the owner of the cow, testified that it was in the pasture on the 25th of February, 1898, and on the 26th he found it in the slaughter pen of Metcalf & Gehl, and that it was taken from the pasture and placed in the pen without his permission. Mr. Baker testified that on the morning of the 26th he went to the pasture, and found that the fence had been taken down, his cow taken out, and the fence put up again, and saw the tracks of three cows and two horses, which he followed to said slaughter pen, and there found three cows, one of which was his and one Mr. Rice's. At this stage of the evidence the prosecution called Thomas B. Hicks, who testified that he was the jailer of the county jail; that he had known the defendant two years, and saw him at the jail on February 26th. He was then asked, "Did you hear him make any statement in regard to his guilt or innocence in this matter?" The defendant objected to the question, "and asked leave to introduce testimony to show that the admissions sought to be elicited were made by the defendant under promises of exemption, and that a lesser penalty would be imposed if he pleaded guilty, and that the case was a foregone one against him." The court denied the motion, and the defendant excepted. The witness testified that the conversation was had in the district attorney's office a short time after the defendant's arrest. "There were two conversations at which I was present. There were four of us present the second time,—Andreas Castro, Ed. Burke, and myself and my father. When you [the district attorney] took him to your office, you simply asked him whether he did or not, and you never told him that you would help him, or you never made any threat to him. You asked him two or three times if he did the deed, and he set back in his chair, and kind of studied. There were not any inducements held out to him to answer. Q. Now, what did he say at that time?" The defendant objected to the question upon the ground that there was no sufficient basis for proving a confession; that he was imprisoned, and under duress; and that the state must do something more than show that at this particular conversation no inducements were held out to him. This objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted. The witness then testified: "Mr. Storke then asked him if he knew anything about this cattle stealing, and he hung back. No, he didn't know. And finally he began to get uneasy in his chair, and finally says: 'Yes, I do. My brother and I took the cows, and drove them to the slaughter house.' " Upon cross-examination the witness testified that there was a conversation with the defendant at the jail, at which the witness' father (the sheriff), Mr. Burke, and himself were present; that he could not say positively whether it was within a day or two after his arrest. Mr. Shoup, the deputy sheriff who made the arrest, but who was not present at either of the conversations above narrated, testified that on the day of the arrest the defendant denied the charge; that afterwards he had another conversation with defendant, but did not fix the date, either in relation to the arrest or to the other conversations above referred to, further than that it was a few days after he put him in jail, and was "at the bars of the jail." The witness said: "He commenced talking to me about the matter, and admitted that he and his brother, Frank, took the cows, but said he made his brother take them,—made his brother go with him. He said he took three cows out of Scull's pasture, and put them in Metcalf's slaughter pen;" and that no threats or inducements were made at any time so far as he knew. Mr. Burke, one of the persons present at the conversation in the district attorney's office, and who acted as interpreter on that occasion, was called by the prosecution, and testified that no inducements or threats were used, or any influence exerted, to induce the defendant to make any confession. Upon cross-examination he testified as follows: "This was not the first time that I acted as interpreter with the defendant, but it was the first and only time with the district attorney. Before that I had acted as interpreter for Sheriff Hicks while he talked with him in the office of the jail. The sheriff and Tom Hicks, the jailer, were there. Mr. Hicks, the sheriff, started in by informing the defendant that he had a bad case against him,—had a sure case against him,—and it would be best for him to make a clean breast of the whole affair, and relate all the circumstances in regard to it. Of course, the defendant argued about the matter to some extent. At first he stoutly denied having anything to do with it, and then asked the sheriff to promise him to help him out of the scrape, do all he could for him, if he should make a full confession in regard to it. The sheriff assured him that he would do everything in his power to help him. And in fact the prisoner went to such an extent as to make the sheriff shake hands with him, as pledge of good faith. The promise that the sheriff made to him, though, was in this way: He said, 'I may be able to induce the court or jury to give you a light sentence,—go as easy as possible with you.' That was the substance of it. Of course, some months have elapsed, and I do not remember very well. The defendant made no admission of guilt until after receiving these assurances. The defendant's knowledge of English is very slight." Counsel for defendant then moved "to strike out the evidence that has been introduced of this statement made by the defendant, the evidence of T. B. Hicks and E. M. Burke, on the ground that the statement made by the defendant, as testified to by those witnesses, was involuntary, and induced by hopes of reward." The court ruled that the testimony of the confession made in the district attorney's office be excluded, and added: "If there is any other, it remains in. Mr. Storke: What becomes of the Shoup testimony? The Court: Well, this motion does not extend to that; that remains. Mr. Griffiths: We covered all the evidence as to confessions, I think. The Court: I did not so understand it. If it does extend to that, the only testimony that will be excluded is that of the conversation in the district attorney's office; the other remains. If your motion extends to that portion of it, it is denied. Mr. Carrier: We except to the ruling of the court in so far as it refers to the Hicks testimony and the Shoup testimony."

We have given a very full statement from the record, in view of respondent's contention that proper objections were not seasonably made, and exceptions taken. This contention cannot be sustained. Conceding that defendant's request to be permitted to show that the alleged confessions were secured through promises of influence in his behalf was somewhat premature, it does not appear that it was denied upon that ground, and counsel doubtless understood the ruling as a denial of his right to make such showing; but, be that as it may, when the witness, who was then testifying as to what was said at the district attorney's office, was asked the question, "Now what did he say at that time?" the defendant objected, and, among the grounds of objection, stated "that the state must do something more than show that at this particular conversation no inducements were held out to him." That objection was overruled, and an exception taken. These two objections and exceptions were sufficiently specific to advise the court and the district attorney of the points made by the defendant, and it was not necessary that they should be repeated upon the examination of subsequent witnesses, in order to justify his motion, afterwards made, to strike out the testimony of said confessions. The colloquy between the court and counsel after the ruling upon the motion to strike out said testimony shows that counsel for defendant intended their motion to cover all the testimony as to defendant's confessions, and, after the court had been so informed, the ruling was repeated with the statement by the court that, if the motion extended to other confessions than that made in the district attorney's office, it is denied as to such other confessions, and that ruling was excepted to. I think it does not sufficiently appear that the confession made to Shoup was not induced by prior representations and inducements made by the sheriff to justify the ruling of the court. The time at which these statements were made does not appear, but it does appear from the testimony of Mr. Burke that at the conversation held by the sheriff, the jailer Hicks, and the witness with the defendant, prior to the interview at the district attorney's office, that at first the defendant "stoutly denied having anything to do with it"; and it is not reasonable to suppose that prior to that time he had voluntarily and without solicitation or inducement admitted to another officer that he was guilty. The burden being upon the prosecution to show that the confession was made voluntarily, and without inducement on the part of the officer, the condition imposed by the law as to its reception was not complied with, and it should have been stricken out. The testimony of Mr. Hicks was as to the confession made in the office of the district attorney, and was therefore excluded; but the ruling left with the jury evidence that a confession of guilt was made to the sheriff, the jailer, and Mr. Burke in the sheriff's office, prior to the confession made in the district attorney's office, though the latter confession was excluded because the former was obtained by improper representations, as clearly appears from the testimony of Mr. Burke.

Appellant discusses some instructions requested by the defendant to be given to the jury, but, in view of what has been said, they need not be specially noticed. I advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: GRAY, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

WATSON v. MILLER et al. (S. F. 1,281.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 3, 1899.)

APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. In an action against an administrator, it is not reversible error to overrule a demurrer by plaintiff to the complaint of intervening heirs, when the issues presented are the same as those raised by the answer of the administrator, and judgment must be the same as though the demurrer had been sustained.

2. In a suit for $30,000 against an administrator for services performed for testator, a finding that plaintiff performed work, the value of which did not exceed $500; that the deceased did not promise to pay for the services, but they were understood to be gratuitous; and that plaintiff was paid and received the sum of $500 in full payment,—is sufficient to support a judgment against plaintiff.

3. In an action against an administrator for services performed for deceased, where the complaint alleges that deceased promised to pay for such services, and the answer denies the promise, a finding that deceased did not promise is not outside the issues.

4. In an action against an administrator, a former administrator of the same estate was introduced as a witness. In cross-examination the decree of revocation of his letters of administration was introduced, and objected to as not being proper cross-examination and as irrelevant and immaterial. No part of the evidence in chief was set out, and the bill of exceptions did not set out the decree of revocation. Held, that the appellate court cannot pass upon this exception.

5. In an action against an administrator for compensation for services performed for testator, evidence that testator had expressed himself as not wishing to go away owing any man anything is immaterial.

6. Where, on objection to testimony, counsel introducing it explains that it is part of a conversation introduced by opposing counsel, and the court admits it, and it subsequently turns out to be immaterial, if no motion to strike it out is interposed the prejudiced party cannot complain.

7. In an action against an administrator for compensation for services performed for testator, a partner of plaintiff testified that plaintiff told him that he was attending to testator's affairs. Testator was not present when this statement was made. Defendant's counsel objected to the evidence, and questioned the witness with the object of showing that he was an interested party, following it by an objection to the testimony, which the court sustained. The testimony already given was not stricken out, nor did plaintiff's counsel offer any further testimony by this witness. Held, that the appellate court will not reverse, even though the objection was erroneously sustained, as the evidence of the witness was retained, and it cannot be assumed that any further facts would have been proven by him.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Peter W. Watson against Eliza M. Miller, as administratrix of the estate of A. P. More, deceased. Certain heirs intervened. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Reel B. Terry, for appellant. John B. Mhoon and C. A. Storke, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff brought this action against the administrator of the estate of A. P. More, deceased, to recover the sum of $30,000, claimed to be the reasonable value of work, labor, and services alleged to have been performed by him, for and at the request of said A. P. More, within two years prior to his death. A complaint in intervention was filed by two of the heirs of the deceased, and the plaintiff's demurrer thereto was overruled. Upon the trial of the cause the court rendered judgment against the plaintiff, from which, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, he has appealed.

1. Appellant contends that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the complaint of the interveners; that an heir is not entitled to intervene in an action brought against the administrator to recover a claim against the estate. It is not necessary, however, to determine this question upon the present appeal, since the issues presented by the complaint in intervention were the same as those presented by the answer of the administrator, and the findings of the court against the allegations of the complaint, as well as the judgment thereon, must have been the same had the plaintiff's demurrer to this intervention been sustained. The order overruling his demurrer is not, therefore, a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment.

2. It is next urged as a ground for reversal that the findings of fact are insufficient to support the judgment, in that there is no finding that plaintiff did not perform the services alleged in the complaint to have been rendered, and that it is not found that such services as alleged were not of the value of $30,000. The court found "that the plaintiff, within two years prior to the death of A. P. More, deceased, performed work, labor, and services for and at the request of said A. P. More, which said work, labor, and services did not exceed in value five hundred dollars; that said A. P. More, deceased, at no time promised and agreed to pay the plaintiff for any services mentioned in the complaint any sum whatever, but that all services which plaintiff performed for decedent during said two years were mutually understood and agreed between plaintiff and defendant to be gratuitous, and to be rendered without charge, and were such services as a broker usually renders gratuitously to a customer who is doing other business with him; that, for such services found to be performed as aforesaid, plaintiff was paid and did receive the sum of five hundred dollars in full for such services, and gave his receipt in full therefor." These findings might have been greatly condensed, but they are clearly sufficient to support the judgment. It is said, however, that the finding that More did not promise to pay plaintiff for said services is outside of the issues. The answer denied that More ever promised or agreed to pay plaintiff for said services, thus raising an issue upon the allegation of the complaint that he did so promise and agree. But, if it were otherwise, it would not affect the judgment, since it was found that his services were worth no more than five hundred dollars, and he was paid that sum, and received it in full.

3. It is further contended that the court erred in certain rulings upon the trial. J. F. More, who was the administrator of said estate at the time this action was commenced, was called as a witness for the plaintiff. Upon cross-examination he testified that he did not know whether he was then the administrator of said estate or not; that his letters were revoked, but he could not give the reasons why they were revoked. The defendant offered in evidence the findings and decree revoking the letters of the witness as administrator of said estate, and plaintiff objected that it was not cross-examination, and was irrelevant and immaterial. As no part of the evidence of the witness in chief is set out or stated, we cannot say that it was not proper cross-examination; and as the bill of exceptions neither sets out said findings and decree, nor gives any statement of the facts shown thereby, we cannot say that plaintiff was prejudiced, even if its irrelevancy and immateriality were conceded. Certainly we are not able to say that it tended to discredit the witness.

W. H. Chickering, called by the plaintiff, was asked upon cross-examination, "Did you have any conversation with Mr. More with reference to his indebtedness to anybody?" Plaintiff objected that it was incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant. Counsel for defendant explained that it was part of a conversation put in by the plaintiff. The court thereupon overruled the objection, and the witness answered: "It was a few days before Mr. More went away. I was at his room in the Palace Hotel at his request, and as I went away he asked me whether he owed me anything, and I told him no. And then he said that, if he did, he wished I would send him a bill and let him pay it, as he did not propose to go away owing any man anything." In view of counsel's explanation, the ruling was proper. The evidence given was, however, incompetent for the purpose of proving that More denied any indebtedness to the plaintiff, if it could be so construed, and would doubtless have been stricken out if counsel for plaintiff had requested it. He cannot, therefore, complain, even if he was prejudiced by the answer. But we do not see any reason to suppose that the court gave it any consideration, or that plaintiff was in any way prejudiced.

Henry Marx, called by the plaintiff, testified that he and the plaintiff were partners in the wool business, and that he was in the fur business with his brother; that he knew A. P. More; that he had seen him and Watson together a great deal; that Watson made out his shipping and consignment papers and wrote his letters for him; that was in the spring of 1890; that witness had no interest in this suit; that plaintiff's services to More were rendered for himself. The witness was then asked: "Did you and Mr. Watson ever have any understanding as to his being allowed to attend to this business, and as to what you could be allowed to do in relation to your fur business? If so, state it. A. Well, now, Mr. More was around the office a great deal, and I asked Mr. Watson what business he had with Mr. More, and he told me he was attending to his business." Counsel for defendant objected to the answer "as being a declaration in his own interest not made when Mr. More was present." Counsel for plaintiff repeated that he wished to show that plaintiff and Marx had an understanding that plaintiff was allowed to do this business for More, and the witness Marx could attend to his fur business. Defendant's counsel then asked the witness: "Did the firm of Watson & Marx receive pay for handling and scouring the wool of A. P. More? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you get your share of it? A. Yes, sir. Q. You got your share of all the money paid to paid to Watson & Marx for doing the business and handling the wool of A. P. More, did you not? A. Yes, sir." Counsel for defendant then said: "Now, I think the witness has clearly shown that he is interested in all the business done for A. P. More, and that he ought not to be allowed to testify to anything that happened prior to the death of A. P. More." The court sustained the objection, to which ruling plaintiff's counsel duly excepted. There was no motion to strike out the testimony given by the witness, nor any offer to prove by him any additional fact tending to establish plaintiff's cause of action. The plaintiff therefore had the benefit of the testimony already given, and, in the absence of any offer to prove additional facts, we cannot assume that other facts were within the knowledge of the witness which would have tended to the benefit of the plaintiff. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

NOTICE OF PROCEEDINGS FOR APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—POWER OF COURT AS TO NATURE OF SUCH NOTICE—NOTICE TO FATHER WHEN AN APPLICANT FOR THE POSITION OF GUARDIAN—BURDEN OF SHOWING INVALIDITY OF PROCEEDINGS—NOTICE OF HEARING IN DISTRIBUTION PROCEEDINGS.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, providing that, before making appointment of a guardian, the court must cause such notice as it deems reasonable to be given to the person having care of the minor, and such relatives as the court may deem proper, posting of notice for 10 days in three public places, under direction of the court, is sufficient.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, providing that, before the appointment of a guardian, notice shall be given to such relatives of the minor residing in the county as the court may deem proper, the court has authority to give notice by posting for 10 days in three public places.

3. In proceedings for the appointment of a guardian, where the father has custody of the minor, and asks to be appointed guardian, notice to him of such proceedings is unnecessary.

4. After a decree appointing a guardian, and directing a sale of the minor's land, the burden of proof is on any one attacking the validity of such decree; and the fact that the affidavit of notice does not show the date of posting is not sufficient to establish invalidity.

5. The final account and petition for distribution of an estate were filed on January 2d. The court fixed January 11th as the date for hearing, and ordered 10 days' notice of the hearing to be given by posting. Code Civ. Proc. § 1634, provides that notice of a hearing in proceedings for the distribution of an estate must be given by posting or publication as the court may direct, and for such time as may be ordered. Held, that the notice for the 9 days preceding the hearing was sufficient, and that the mistake of the court in directing an impossible period of notice was immaterial, in view of his discretion under the statute.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county.

Action by J. M. Asher, as administrator of the estate of Frank Stone, deceased, against Vicente Yorba, Mary A. Flinn, and others. From an interlocutory decree in partition, defendant Mary A. Flinn appeals. Affirmed.

Withington & Carter and D. M. Hammack, for appellant Flinn. R. Y. Williams, for respondents Yorba and Botiller. Oscar A. Trippe, for respondent Asher.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal is by Mary A. Flinn from an interlocutory decree in partition. She claims as the successor in interest of Felipe Ames. To support her claim, she first insists that a certain sale of real estate by the guardian of Felipe Ames, minor, was void; and, second, that a decree of distribution rendered in the administration of the estate of the mother of Felipe Ames was also void.

It is insisted that the guardian of Felipe Ames was appointed without any notice as required by statute, and therefore his appointment was void, and his acts in making the sale were also void for that reason. The statute as to the appointment of guardians, among other matters, provides: "Before making such appointment the court must cause such notice as such court deems reasonable to be given to any person having the care of said minor, and to such relatives of the minor residing in the county as the court may deem proper." Code Civ. Proc. § 1747. Upon the filing of the petition for the appointment of a guardian the judge made an order that he deemed a 10-days notice by posting in three public places in the county would be a reasonable notice. Thereafter the clerk, as appears by his affidavit attached to a copy of the notice, posted a notice of the hearing for December 18th in three public places in the county (naming the places). The notice is dated December 8th, and the affidavit fails to state the particular day when the notice was posted. It is claimed that, under the section of law quoted, notice of the hearing must be personally served by citation upon the relatives of the minor residing in the county. We fail to see that the statute makes such a demand. The statute does demand that the relatives living in the county, if the court deem proper, must be given such notice as the court deems reasonable. If the court deems a notice for 10 days, by posting in three public places, a reasonable notice to them, it would seem within the power of the court to so declare. The statute clearly implies that the kind or character of the notice to be given is a matter for the judge to determine, and that a personal notice is not absolutely demanded by the provision quoted. Burroughs v. De Couts, 70 Cal. 373, 11 Pac. 739, was decided at a time when the statute as to notice was similar to that now found on the statute books. In that case it is said, "The manner in which the notice shall be given to the relatives of the minor residing in the county is left to the judgment and reasonable discretion of the probate judge;" citing Gronfier v. Puymirol, 19 Cal. 629. In the case cited it was decided that a publication in a newspaper for 5 days was a sufficient notice under a statute allowing the judge to fix the manner of the notice. Aside from these facts, upon a careful reading of the statute it will be found that it is a matter of discretion upon the part of the court to give any notice whatever to the relatives residing in the county. The statute says the notice is to be given to those relatives of the minor residing in the county, "as the court may deem proper." If the court has the power to say what particular relatives shall be given notice, it has the power to say that notice by posting shall be given those relatives. It will be borne in mind that in this case the father had the custody of the child, and asked to be appointed guardian of her estate. Necessarily a notice to him was not required. Smith v. Biscailuz, 83 Cal. 353, 21 Pac. 15, and 23 Pac. 314.

Many technical objections are made to the validity of the appointment of the guardian; as, for example, that the affidavit of posting does not show when the notices of the hearing were posted. It must be borne in mind that this appellant is here making a collateral attack upon the judgment decreeing a sale of the minor's land, and, consequently all the rules of law hedging about the validity of such decrees are to be invoked against her. The order of sale in this case is presumed to have been a valid one. It behooves her to show to the contrary. The burden is upon her to show a void sale. The absence of evidence in this record showing the jurisdictional facts may be taken as evidence against her. If the posting of these notices was not performed according to the requirements of the statute, it was for her to show that fact. If the evidence does not show how it was done and when it was done, it will be presumed that it was done in the proper manner and at the proper time. Of course, we are not even intimating that appellant would be allowed to go outside of the record of the proceedings, and by extrinsic evidence attack the validity of the guardian's sale.

It is claimed that the decree of distribution in the estate of Christina Ames, deceased, mother of Felipe Ames, predecessor in interest of this appellant, is void by reason of a want of notice of the hearing at the time the decree was made. Upon January 2, 1890, the final account and petition for distribution in the estate were filed, and the court fixed the 11th day of January as the time for hearing the account and petition, and ordered 10 days' notice of the hearing to be given by posting. Section 1634 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "notice of the hearing must be given by posting or publication, as the court may direct, and for such time as may be ordered." Here it was impossible to post the notice of the hearing for 10 days, for only 9 days intervened prior to the date set for the hearing. But in view of the fact that the statute does not require 10 days' notice, and that it rests solely with the court to fix the day for hearing and the time of notice to be given, we see nothing here which renders the decree of distribution void. The date set for the hearing must control when an inconsistency is presented such as we see before us, and, if this notice were posted for every day prior to the time of hearing, there was no lack of jurisdiction in the court to make the decree. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

REED v. SMITH et al. (S. F. 1,388.)

GIFT—DELIVERY OF DEED—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. When defendant, then an unmarried woman, was living with her father, and keeping house for him, he executed a deed to her conveying the home place. She testified that he handed her the deed, telling her it would secure a home for her if anything should happen to him; that she placed it with other papers, both of her father's and her own, and afterwards it could not be found. After her father's death it was found by a third person in a place containing papers of both father and daughter. Held, that such evidence warranted a finding that the deed had been delivered.

2. The fact that a father, after having executed a deed to his daughter of his homestead, continued to occupy the place with her, will not afford ground for a claim that his possession was adverse to the daughter, when he had indicated no intention to repudiate the deed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county.

Action by Ezra Reed, executor of Samuel Piercy, deceased, against Elizabeth I. Smith and J. D. Smith. Judgment for defendants, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry L. Ford and J. A. Cooper, for appellant. T. L. Carothers, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to quiet title to certain lands described in the complaint. The defendant, Elizabeth, is the daughter of the deceased, Piercy, and the other defendant, J. D. Smith, is her husband. Judgment went for the defendants, from which, and from an order denying the motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The court found that in 1887, at which time the decedent was the owner of the premises, he made, executed, and delivered to the defendant Elizabeth a deed conveying to her the property here involved. Such a deed, purporting to convey the property to her, and dated June 21, 1887, was introduced in evidence; and it is not disputed that it was signed by the decedent, or that it was duly acknowledged before a notary public on June 28, 1887. It is denied, however, by appellant, that the deed was ever delivered to Elizabeth; and the main question, and substantially the only one, in the case, is whether the finding of delivery is supported by the evidence. The real question to be determined here is whether or not the evidence of the delivery was so slight as to require us to overturn the finding on the ground that there was no sufficient, material evidence to support it; and we cannot come to that conclusion. Aside from the presumption which arises from the possession of a deed by the grantee, we cannot say that the testimony of the defendant Elizabeth, taken with certain declarations of the decedent, and other matters in evidence, did not warrant the court in finding the fact of delivery. The land in contest contains about 88 acres, and was the "home place," where the decedent and the defendant Elizabeth lived. She did all the housework, and, as one of the witnesses said, did a man's work about the place, taking care of the stock, etc. She testified that her father made the deed to her on July 10, 1887; that he had previously told her that he had made the deed to her; that when he came back (from a certain Fourth of July celebration) "he gave me the deed; that was on the 10th of July, 1887"; that "father handed me the deed, and stated that it would be a home for me if anything happened to him. He never said anything to me contrary until I got to going with Mr. Smith. He did not like Mr. Smith"; and that afterwards the deed became lost and could not be found. She further testified that her papers and those of her father were kept together, and that the deed was first put into a trunk where both of them had papers, and was afterwards put into a valise which belonged to her, but in which her father also had papers, and that afterwards it could not be found. It was discovered after the father's death by the witness Alfred Cyphers in a valise in which were papers of both the defendant and the decedent, and given by the witness to his father, Dan Cyphers, who gave it to the said defendant. Plaintiff's witness, Butler, testifies that the decedent "spoke of a deed that he had made of the place, his home place, to Lizzie," and "said that he had made a deed to Lizzie of the house place because he wanted her to stay there with him"; and plaintiff's witness, Yates, testified: "I heard Mr. Piercy speak of having deeded the land to his daughter, Lizzie. It must have been six years ago." It seems that some time after the father had given the deed to his daughter—probably several years afterwards, although the record throughout is very indefinite as to time—she commenced to receive attentions from the defendant J. D. Smith, who is now her husband, and that then the father, who was much opposed to her marrying Smith, became angry with her and demanded the deed, and would not believe her when she said it could not be found. We cannot say that the above evidence was not sufficient to warrant the court in finding that there had been a delivery. The main objection to its sufficiency is that the deed was kept where there were also some papers of the father; but that was the usual way in which she kept all her papers; and if, as she testified, her father "gave" the deed to her,—“handed” it to her, put her in possession of it,—the manner, as above stated, in which she afterwards kept it is not sufficient to overthrow the finding of delivery. There was little else to contradict defendant's testimony. It is to be observed that the testimony of the plaintiff's witness, Mrs. Butler, is not about anything which Elizabeth said to her, but is composed entirely of what was told her by the decedent. The fact that the defendant did not set up any claim to the property when the will was read is fully explained by her inability at that time to find the deed, and her supposition that without its production it would be useless for her to set up her claim.

Appellant's contention that he showed title by adverse possession during the statutory period of limitation cannot be maintained. Waiving the question whether one claiming title under the statute of limitations must plead it, whether plaintiff or defendant (see Woodward v. Faris, 109 Cal. 12, 41 Pac. 781), there is no evidence that the decedent held the property, claiming it as his own adversely to the defendant, during the statutory period of limitation. After he made the deed to his daughter, the mere fact that he remained on the land, occupying it with her, did not constitute an adverse holding as against her prior to the time when, by act or declaration, he assumed a position hostile to her title; and it nowhere appears in the record when he first assumed that hostile position. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CHattel MORTGAGES — DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT—POWER OF COMMISSIONER APPOINTED TO MAKE SALE.

A deficiency judgment, based on the return of a commissioner appointed to make a sale of mortgaged chattels under a decree of foreclosure that the property was covered by a first mortgage to its full value, is wholly unauthorized, as such commissioner is clothed with executive power only, and cannot judicially determine the value of the property, or that plaintiff is entitled to a deficiency judgment except by a sale of the property.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Action by the Redlands Hotel Association against J. R. Richards and others to foreclose a chattel mortgage. A deficiency judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, and execution issued thereon. From an order quashing the execution and vacating the deficiency judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank C. Prescott, for appellant. L. H. Valentine, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. The Redlands Hotel Association, a corporation, brought an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage made by Richards upon certain hotel furniture to secure a promissory note made by him and one David Weh to the plaintiff, and indorsed before delivery by John M. Jones (both of whom were made defendants), and which, as was alleged in the complaint, was subject to a prior mortgage made by Richards to said Jones upon the same furniture. The court found for the plaintiff, and entered judgment directing a sale of said property to pay the amount found due to the plaintiff, and appointed a commissioner to make such sale, but further found and decreed that all of the mortgaged property was subject to a first and prior chattel mortgage given by defendant Richards to defendant Jones. It was also provided that, if the proceeds should not be sufficient to satisfy the amount found due to the plaintiff, the deficiency should be docketed against all the defendants. An order of sale was issued to the commissioner on November 29, 1897, and on December 1st he made a return thereon to the effect that he made an attempt to levy on the property described in the order of sale for the purpose of selling the same, but found that it was subject to a prior mortgage found in the decree to be a prior lien upon the property directed to be sold; that the amount secured by said prior mortgage exceeded the value of the property, and, if sold, would not pay the first chattel mortgage; that he was unable to take possession of the property, for lack of the necessary money to pay the lien of the first mortgage, and therewith returned said writ wholly unsatisfied, and certified the deficiency to be $870.23. And for said sum a deficiency judgment was thereupon docketed against all the defendants. Afterwards an execution was issued upon said deficiency judgment, and levied upon other property of defendant Richards, who thereupon procured an order against the plaintiff to show cause why said deficiency judgment should not be vacated, and said execution quashed. The application was heard upon affidavits setting out the foregoing and other facts, and upon the files and records in said cause, and upon the hearing an order was made quashing the execution and vacating the deficiency judgment, and from that order the plaintiff appeals.

The affidavits, so far as they relate to the value of the mortgaged property, are conflicting; that of defendant Richards alleging upon information and belief that plaintiff's mortgage is not valueless as a security, but that, if a sale had been made, "some money could have been realized from such sale to apply" upon plaintiff's judgment, while the affidavit on behalf of plaintiff is to the effect that the mortgaged property is not worth $2,000 (the amount of the prior mortgage), and would not bring said sum either at private sale or a sale under execution. The commissioner appointed to make the sale of the mortgaged property under the decree of foreclosure was clothed with executive powers only, and could not judicially determine the value of the property, or that the plaintiff was entitled to a deficiency judgment, otherwise than by a sale of the property as directed. Toby v. Railroad Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 Pac. 550, cited by appellant, is not in point. In that case a receiver was appointed pendente lite, and after trial and order for judgment, upon a showing to the court that the property was deteriorating in value, and large expense in keeping was being incurred, the receiver was ordered by the court to sell the mortgaged vessel as perishable property. It is true it was there said: "The contention of appellant that there can be no deficiency judgment without a sale and formal return by the sheriff seems to me too technical to give effect to the evident intent of the law-makers in many cases. Suppose, in the present case, the steamship mortgaged had been lost by the perils of the sea, pendente lite; would the plaintiff have been without remedy? Or can it be claimed that the court would have been forced to the useless expedient of foreclosing the mortgage, ordering a sale, and awaiting the return of the sheriff, before a deficiency judgment could be docketed? Would it not rather be said that the court, having obtained jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, would, under the rules of equity, proceed under the altered circumstances, and, in view of the fact that the security was exhausted, to do justice by the entry of judgment for what would then become the deficiency, viz.

the full amount due?" Under the equitable construction thus given to the statute, it may be that the court, upon proper proof that plaintiff's mortgage was valueless because the property was insufficient to pay and discharge the prior mortgage, could have found that fact, and directed a deficiency or personal judgment against the defendants, without selling the mortgaged property; but it must be apparent from the reasoning of that case that the commissioner had no such power, and that the deficiency judgment based upon his return was wholly unauthorized, and the writ of execution issued thereon must fall with it. What course the plaintiff should have pursued, or what remedy it may have in the present situation, are moot questions, upon which no opinion is expressed. I advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

In re BELL'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1970.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 8, 1899.)
EXECUTOR'S SALE—CONFIRMATION—APPEAL—
NOTICE TO VENDEE.

Where a vendee in an executor's sale appears in the proceedings upon the sale, as a party adverse to the interests of the heirs, he is entitled to notice of an appeal by one of the heirs from a decree confirming the sale, as his right to the property is threatened by the appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased. From a decree confirming a sale by the executor to H. M. A. Miller, Theresa Bell, an heir, appeals. Motion by Miller to dismiss the appeal. Granted.

R. M. T. Soto (Noble Hamilton, of counsel), for appellant. Sidney V. Smith, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Motion to dismiss the appeal. The superior court for San Francisco made an order in the above-entitled estate confirming a sale by the executor of certain personal property to H. M. A. Miller, and directing the executor to execute to him an assignment and transfer of the interest of the estate therein. From this order Theresa Bell, one of the heirs of the deceased, has appealed, serving the notice of her appeal upon the executor alone. A motion is now made on behalf of Miller to dismiss the appeal for want of the service of this notice upon him. The interest of Miller in the confirmation of the sale was adverse to that of the heirs, and, as this interest is shown in the decree itself, it appears by the record that he was an "adverse party," and the notice of appeal should have been served upon him. By the decree of confirmation he became vested with the right to the property purchased by him, upon the payment of the purchase price, and by such payment he has become entitled to a transfer thereof from the estate of the decedent. As a reversal of the decree would deprive him of this right, it was essential that he should be brought before this court before it could have any jurisdiction to make such reversal, or to entertain the appeal. See Eckstein v. Calderwood, 34 Cal. 658. The motion is granted.

RIGBY v. LOWE. (L. A. 560.)

AGENT—POWER TO TRANSFER CLAIMS FOR COLLECTION.

The power of a local or district manager of a corporation to collect in the ordinary way or by suit, if necessary, in the name of his principal, the demands of the company against debtors in his district, does not include the right to transfer any such demands to a third person, though for the purpose only of qualifying such person to sue on the same.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by W. Rigby, Jr., against T. S. C. Lowe, on a check. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. Rigby and L. R. Hewitt, for appellant. Miller & Brown, for respondent.

BRITT, C. The General Electric Company is a corporation, and had, at the time of the transactions presently to be mentioned, its main office and place of business at Schenectady, in the state of New York. It had also an office at the city of San Francisco, in this state, in charge of one Thomas Addison, who was its "local or district manager" on the Pacific coast. Said corporation sold merchandise of some sort to a certain railroad company at Los Angeles, Cal., of which the defendant, T. S. C. Lowe, was president. The goods thus sold were shipped, and bills for the same were rendered, to Lowe from the said San Francisco office. Thereupon Lowe drew his check for the amount of the bills—$412.16—in favor of said General Electric Company, and (it seems) sent the same to the payee, at Schenectady. Payment of the check was refused for want of funds by the drawee therein named, and, after protest thereof, the Electric Company forwarded it to said Addison at San Francisco for collection. Said company was accustomed to collect through its main office at Schenectady some of its bills for goods sold in California, and others—probably the majority—were collected at the San Francisco office. Addison indorsed the check as follows: "General Electric Company. Thomas Addison, District Manager," and delivered it to Rigby, the plaintiff here, with instructions to sue thereon. Accordingly, plaintiff brought this action to enforce the liability of Lowe as drawer of said check. The court found that the assignment of the check attempted by Addison to plaintiff was in excess of Addison's authority as agent for the electric company, and that plaintiff is not the owner or holder thereof; and on this ground denied a recovery on the check. The complaint in the case contains a second count, setting forth a separate and independent cause of action, on which judgment was for plaintiff, and which is not involved in the appeal.

The foregoing statement comprises the substance of all the evidence at the trial touching the power of Addison to transfer the check to plaintiff, and, consequently, the right of the latter to maintain the action thereon. It does not follow, as matter of law, from the mere circumstance that Addison was the company's "local or district manager," that he possessed the power to assign his principal's chose in action. That designation of his position implies some measure of inferiority to a distant or general authority. Obviously the scope of the powers of such an agent must depend on the character and necessities of the business, and the degree or extent of control over the same committed to him by the principal. See Mechem, Ag. §§ 395, 398. There is here extremely scant evidence of the nature of the business carried on by the General Electric Company. It seems, however, to have consisted in selling tangible chattels of some kind, and we may perhaps conjecture that Addison had the management of such sales in this state; if so, the extent of his implied authority to deal with the proceeds of a sale was "to receive the price." Civ. Code, §§ 2019, 2325. He had also been specially directed to collect on this check. Therefore, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff, it shows no more than that Addison had full power to collect in the ordinary way (by suit, if necessary, in the name of his principal) the demands of the electric company against debtors in his district; but this power did not of itself include the right to transfer any of such demands to a third person, although for the purpose only of qualifying him to sue on the same. That would result in taking the collection from Addison, with whom it was lodged by the company, and placing its control in the hands of a stranger. Dingley v. McDonald (Cal.) 57 Pac. 574. The cases relied on by plaintiff (McKiernan v. Lenzen, 56 Cal. 61; Tuller v. Arnold, 98 Cal. 522, 33 Pac. 445; Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 33 Pac. 913) were instances of an assignment by the general managing agent of a corporation, who was shown expressly or by fair implication to have a control of its affairs virtually co-extensive with its ordinary business. No such authority was proved to reside in Mr. Addison. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

FRENCH v. MCCARTHY et al. (No. 15,551.)
(Supreme Court of California. July 29, 1899.)

CONTRACTS — PLEADING—AMENDMENT—TENDER—EVIDENCE—RELEASE OF ONE DEFENDANT.

1. Where defendant appears and answers in an action on a contract, the terms of which are set forth in the complaint, and there is a want of conformity between the prayer of the complaint and the facts set forth, the court is authorized to permit an amendment at the trial by inserting a larger sum in the prayer.

2. A failure to make an amendment formally on the record does not necessitate a reversal of the judgment, as the record may be corrected to conform with the order permitting such amendment.

3. Under the allegation of defendant, in an action on a contract, that plaintiff had accepted certain stock in payment of defendant's obligations under the contract sued on, an inquiry into the value of such stock is immaterial.

4. Where certain stock is held by plaintiff as collateral security for a contract, he may maintain an action on such contract without any tender of the stock, and may retain the same until the judgment in his favor is satisfied; nor is it necessary that the judgment should contain a provision that the stock should be surrendered on such satisfaction.

5. Under Civ. Code, § 1543, providing that a release of one of two or more joint debtors does not extinguish the obligations of any of the others, unless they are mere guarantors, the release of one of two defendants from the obligations of a contract for a certain sum, under an agreement providing that the release should not operate in any way to discharge the other, does not release such other defendant from the same obligations.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by John D. French against James P. McCarthy and another on a contract. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant McCarthy appeals. Affirmed.

O'Byrne & Peixotto, for appellant. Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The parties to this appeal entered into a contract December 23, 1890, by which the respondent agreed to purchase from the appellant an undivided twentieth of a tract of land in San Francisco for the sum of $20,000, of which he paid $5,000 to the appellant. The appellant was to retain the title to the land and make sales thereof, and the other three-fourths of the purchase price was to be paid out of the proceeds of these sales. On the 30th of December the defendants herein—the appellant and one Joost—made a contract with the respondent, by which, after reciting the aforesaid agreement, and that they "are desirous of obtaining an interest in said contract and the benefits to accrue therefrom," they agreed with him that if he should not, within one year from January 10, 1891, receive back the money paid by him under said contract, they would pay or cause to be paid to him all sums of money that he had already paid, together with the sum of $5,000 in addition thereto. In consideration thereof the plaintiff agreed that the defendants should be entitled to receive all moneys to which he might be entitled by virtue of said contract of December 23d, above the sum of $5,000, that he had already paid. It may be inferred from the record, although there is no direct evidence of that fact, that the land involved in the agreement was conveyed to the Sunnyside Land Company; and on or about January 27, 1891, the respondent, being about to convey his interest in the contract of December 23d to that company, at the request of the defendants, and to receive certain shares of stock in lieu of the contract, or of his interest in the land, the parties to the agreement of December 30th made a supplemental agreement providing that the said transfer should not affect their obligations thereunder, but that the stock should take the place of the contract, and thereupon 100 shares of the capital stock of the company were issued to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, not having received back any of the money that he had paid under the contract of December 23d, brought the present action March 17, 1892, upon the contract of December 30th, to recover from the defendants the amount therein agreed by them to be paid. The appellant, in his answer thereto, alleged that he had fulfilled all the obligations and conditions of the contract of December 23d to be performed by him, and that the plaintiff had received the above-named 100 shares of capital stock for the amount paid by him thereunder, and had accepted said stock in "payment" of all obligations on the part of the defendants, or by virtue of the agreement of December 30th. After the action had been commenced, the plaintiff, under an agreement made by him with Joost, received the sum of $4,500, and released him from the obligations of the agreement of December 30th, but provided in the release that it should not operate or be construed to release or in any way discharge the appellant. At the trial of the cause the court, upon the request of the plaintiff, granted him leave to amend his complaint by inserting therein the sum of $10,000, in the place of $5,000, in the prayer for relief. The trial proceeded without any formal amendment having been made, and at its close the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the appellant for the sum of $5,500.

The instrument of December 30th was an agreement on the part of the defendants to purchase from the plaintiff his interest in the contract of December 23d, by which they agreed to pay him the sum of $5,000, and also whatever portion of the $5,000 which he had paid to the appellant should not be received back by him prior to January 10, 1892. It was evidently in the contemplation of the parties to each of the contracts that large profits were to be received from the sales of the lands described therein, and the defendants agreed to make this payment to the plaintiff in consideration of his agreement therein that they should be entitled to all of these profits. The provision in the agreement for the payment of $5,000 in addition to the amount paid by the plaintiff was in no respect a penalty or liquidated damages. No breach of obligation, or damage sustained thereby, was contemplated or provided for, but the entire transaction was an original contract for the purchase of the plaintiff's interest in the agreement of December 23d, for which he was to receive $10,000,—$5,000 from the defendants in any event, and, in addition thereto, such portion of the $5,000 which he had already paid as should not be returned to him under the terms of his original purchase.

The court did not err in permitting the amendment to the complaint. The action is upon a contract, and its terms are set forth in the complaint. The appellant had appeared and answered, and, if there was any inconsistency or want of conformity between the prayer of the complaint and the facts set forth therein, the court was authorized to permit the amendment. The failure to make it formally upon the record does not necessitate a reversal of the judgment. The record can still be corrected to conform with the order permitting the amendment. Alameda Co. v. Crocker (Cal.) 57 Pac. 766.

There was no issue before the court which authorized an inquiry into the value of the stock of the Sunnyside Land Company. Under the allegation of the appellant that the plaintiff had accepted this stock in "payment" of his obligations under the agreement of December 30th, such inquiry was immaterial. The finding of the court against this defense left the plaintiff's relation to the stock to be determined according to the terms under which he received it. The agreement of January, 1891, that the stock should take the place of the contract of December 23d, was equivalent to an agreement by the defendants to purchase the plaintiff's right to the stock that the Sunnyside Land Company might issue. The record does not show when or under what conditions the plaintiff received the stock; but if, as claimed by the appellant, it is held by the plaintiff as collateral security for the agreement of December 30th, he is entitled to maintain the action without any tender of the stock, and may retain the stock until the judgment in his favor is satisfied. Bank v. Hill, 59 Cal. 107. Nor is it necessary that the judgment should contain a provision that the stock should be surrendered upon such satisfaction. See Allin v. Williams, 97 Cal. 403, 32 Pac. 441.

The release of Joost did not have the effect to release the defendant from the same obligation. Civ. Code, § 1543; Insurance Co. v. Potter, 63 Cal. 157.

The judgment and order are affirmed, with directions to the superior court to cause the complaint to be amended in accordance with its order made at the trial, and as of the date when said order was made.

PEOPLE v. VERENESNECKOCKOCK-HOFF. (Cr. 453.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 1, 1899.)

MURDER—INSTRUCTION ON FORCE OF EVIDENCE—UNINTELLIGIBLE INSTRUCTION—REVIEW OF INSTRUCTION—MOTIVE—RELATIVE VALUE OF DIRECT AND CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

1. An instruction that it is against all experience and reason to suppose that a man will imperil his own life, and inflict on another a brutal crime, without a motive, and in the mere wantonness of depravity, and that the question of motive is of great importance, when the question is as to whether defendant committed the crime, was properly refused, as involving a question as to the probative force of certain evidence.

2. An unintelligible instruction is properly refused.

3. An instruction as to the value and effect of the evidence can be reviewed, though the evidence has not been brought up by a bill of exceptions, as the court will presume that there was evidence of some character to which the instruction would apply; and where the instruction would be erroneous, as applied to all possible evidence to which it would be applicable, error has been shown.

4. In a prosecution for murder, an instruction discussing the importance of the proof of motive, and stating that it may be in many cases impossible to show a motive, for the reason that we cannot fathom the mind of the accused, and, though the prosecution might not be able to prove it, defendant may have had such desire of vengeance or passion to be gratified, is improper, being a charge with respect to matters of fact, and in violation of Const. art. 6, § 19, providing that judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.

5. An instruction as to the relative value of direct and circumstantial evidence, stating that circumstantial evidence had this great advantage: that various circumstances from various sources are not likely to be fabricated, and that this species of evidence is not entitled to an inferior degree of credit, is improper, as the credit to be given to the evidence is to be determined by the jury.

McFarland and Garoutte, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

One Verenesneckockockhoff was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals. Reversed.

Wm. H. Schooler and R. L. Simpson, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and judgment of death was pronounced upon him. He appeals from the judgment, without a bill of exceptions. The rulings complained of all relate to giving or refusing to give instructions.

The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury as to the probative force to be found in the fact that, as was claimed, there was no apparent motive for the commission of the offense. The court was asked to say that "it is against all experience and reason to suppose that a man will imperil his own life, and inflict upon another a brutal crime, without a motive, and in the mere wantonness of depravity," and, further, when the question is as to whether defendant committed the crime, it is of great importance. The instruction was properly refused. It involved no rule of law, but only a question as to the probative force of certain evidence.

Instruction 3 asked by the defendant was properly refused, for the reason given. It was unintelligible. I think counsel meant to ask an instruction to the effect that, if the circumstances were consistent with some theory under which defendant could be innocent, such theory should be preferred to an hypothesis equally consistent with the circumstances proven, but by which guilt would be established. But, it is added, "unless the hypothesis of which the construction of guilt is based upon is proven beyond all reasonable doubt." Waiving the imperfect expression, I do not understand this in connection with what precedes it, and that leads me to doubt whether I have understood any part of it. I think it may be assumed that the jury could not have received enlightenment from it.

But, while the court correctly declined to charge the jury at the request of the defendant as to the value and effect of the evidence, it proceeded to do the same thing of its own motion. The attorney general suggests that the instruction cannot be reviewed, because the evidence has not been brought up, and we cannot know that it could have been injurious. But, even in the absence of a bill of exceptions, we may presume that there was evidence of some character to which the instruction would apply; and where the giving of such instruction would be erroneous, as applied to all possible evidence to which it would be applicable, then error has been made out. Here the court tells the jury that there are two main facts to be made out by the prosecution: First, that a crime has been committed; and, second, that the defendant committed it, —and then proceeds to discuss the importance of the proof of motive. It is recognized that motive is not the ultimate fact to be proven, but the proof or disproof of any motive or inducement to commit the crime is merely evidentiary in its character, but is an important consideration, especially in a case depending upon circumstantial evidence. The only matter of law in all this is that the motive is not the ultimate fact to be proven, and, of course, it would follow from this that, if the commission of the crime by the defendant be sufficiently proven, it does not matter whether there appears to have been a motive or not.

This is certainly true in this class of cases. The presence or absence of motive is matter of corroboration, or, rather, it makes other evidence more or less persuasive. It increases or diminishes the presumption of innocence, and in this case it could have had no other function. And this is recognized in the charge, which nevertheless proceeds to tell the jury how difficult it is to prove motive, and states that: "It may be in many cases impossible to show or establish a motive, for the reason that we cannot fathom the mind of the accused on trial, and ascertain if there is not a hidden desire of vengeance or some passion to be gratified. Besides, there is no rule of law which determines what is or what is not an adequate motive, even if it were necessary to show one." Applying this to the case, the jury were told that, although the prosecution might not be able to prove it, the defendant may have had a "hidden desire of vengeance or some passion to be gratified." This was not the statement of a rule of law, but an argument against the defendant on the facts. And the court proceeded at some length with this argument to the jury, claiming that it is often impossible for the prosecution to prove the motive, though one existed. Now, the court stated to the jury that one issue submitted to them was whether the criminal act was committed by the defendant, and it is assumed that the question of motive bears upon this. The defense doubtless argued that, in the absence of direct proof that the crime was committed by the defendant, the absence of any apparent or imaginable inducement to the crime was a strong circumstance in his favor. The entire charge on this subject had the effect, and no doubt was designed to have the effect, to diminish the force of this argument. Certainly such was its natural effect, and if, as the charge correctly assumed, it is entirely evidentiary,—a circumstance affecting the proof of the ultimate fact, that defendant committed the act,—then it must be held to be a charge with respect to matters of fact, and a violation of section 19, art. 6, of the constitution. In giving the charge the learned judge stated to the jury that the language of this part of the charge had been approved by the supreme court. The case alluded to is the case of People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 Pac. 75, where the charge was given. In that case it is stated in the opinion of the court that the appellant did not make serious complaint that any of the instructions were erroneous in point of law, but only that in some instances the propositions which he sought to have laid before the jury were not adequately presented. An examination of the record in the Durrant Case shows that the point was not made nor argued that by giving the instructions the court invaded the province of the jury. As here, counsel sought to have the court charge in its favor on this point, and did not complain that it exceeded its power. The point would not have been noticed here but for the necessity of reversing the case for the giving of another instruction where an objection is made, and also to decide as soon as possible that such instructions should not be given. Section 19, art. 6, of the constitution, reads as follows: "Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." What are matters of fact referred to in this section? Undoubtedly reference is made to the familiar proposition that it is the province of the jury to determine all matters of fact, and for the court to declare the law. In this case the learned judge, at some length, defined the respective functions of the court and jury. The judge said: "It is my duty to state to you the law applicable to the case, and it is your duty, unaided by any suggestion from me, to pass upon all questions of fact. Neither the judge nor jury may trespass upon the province of the other. Our provinces are entirely distinct and separate. You should receive the law as I state it to be, notwithstanding you should firmly believe I am wrong, and the law is, or should be, otherwise. * * *

With the questions of fact, the weight of the evidence, the credit you should give to any witness sworn in the case, the court has nothing to do. These are matters entirely within your province, and which you, as jurors, must determine for yourselves." This is correct and well expressed. This distinction between the respective functions of the court and jury is an old one, and is plainly recognized in the constitutional provision above quoted. It was and is the practice in the English courts and in the federal courts, and also in many of the states, for the judges to charge the jury as to matters of fact; but it has always been understood that such charge was only in aid of the jury, but that they were not bound by it. The right of the court, however, to declare the law, has always been deemed absolute. A general verdict consists of both law and fact. The jury were bound to find the facts from the evidence which was submitted to them under the supervision of the court. Its competency and relevancy were for the court. But, while formerly the court could aid the jury by discussing the evidence,—that is, could consider it in its charge as to it,—the function of the jury was supreme. The law the court must determine and declare, and the jury was bound absolutely by this determination. The verdict is the application of the law declared by the court to the facts so found. In the constitutional provision this distinction is recognized. The court must not "charge" with respect to matters of fact, but may "declare" the law. If the negative word had been omitted, the use of the different terms would have been significant, and it would have been said that the charge was not as authoritative as the declaration. This adds much force to the inhibition. The court must not even "charge"—that is, advise—with respect to matters of fact. And this is further emphasized when the constitution proceeds to state affirmatively what the court can do in respect to the evidence. It may state the testimony. "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius." The prohibition is plainly co-extensive with the exclusive province of the jury. If there are rules of law to control and guide, then these may be declared authoritatively. Beyond this the court cannot go without violating this plain inhibition. The court cannot argue to the jury the relevant importance of evidence, except as that is settled by some rule of law. For instance, it is for the court to determine the admissibility of evidence, and evidence may be admitted for a limited purpose, and the jury may be limited in their consideration of it. Certain rules have become rules of law for the consideration of circumstantial evidence, and such rules were properly declared by the court in this case. Except so far as may be indicated by these rules, there is no law or legal principle that I am aware of which determines the relative probative force of direct and circumstantial evidence.

These maxims or rules are all founded upon the fact that circumstantial differs from direct evidence in this: that circumstantial evidence tends to prove facts not in issue, but from which the fact in issue may be inferred. The special rules lay down the conditions which will warrant the inference. But the law declares nothing as to the relative probative force. Both are admitted, and the jury are required to render their verdict in accordance with their convictions. We all know that testimony may be unreliable, whether addressed directly to the fact in issue or to proof of circumstances, and that in some cases positive evidence has been overcome by circumstantial evidence. The case of an alibi may be of that character. In such cases it is often simply a question as to the veracity of two sets of witnesses. If both kinds are in the same case, and they conflict, it is wholly for the jury to determine which is most convincing. In fact, I think circumstantial evidence is more often resorted to by the defense than by the people. Besides the case of an alibi, circumstances are often shown by the defense tending to make probable the innocence of the accused, or which tend to raise doubts as to truthfulness of witnesses for the prosecution; but I have never known the court to deliver a long address to the jury in the interest of such defense, to disabuse the minds of the jury of supposed prejudices against such evidence. Now, why did the court in this case deliver a long charge to the jury as to the relative value of direct and circumstantial evidence? The reason is plainly stated. No one saw the act of killing, and the proof that defendant is the guilty party is entirely circumstantial. The court enlarged upon the necessity of a resort to such evidence in order to punish crime and to protect the community, and said: "Providence, the laws of nature, and the relation of things are so linked and combined together that a medium of proof is often furnished leading to conclusions as strong as those arising from direct testimony." And again: "Circumstantial evidence has this great advantage: that various circumstances from various sources are not likely to be fabricated." This is a possible case. Was it so in this case? And, as instructions should be pertinent to the evidence, was it telling the jury that in this case there were various circumstances against the defendant, derived from various sources, which were not likely to be fabricated? That circumstances are not likely to be fabricated may be the opinion of the learned judge, and it may be sound philosophy. It is not, however, a maxim of law, although it has often been said by learned judges, and, in my opinion, it is not generally true. The fact that the circumstances may be exceedingly various and come from unexpected sources, and are generally in themselves trifling affairs that would not impress the minds of observers, makes them easy of fabrication, and renders them difficult to disprove. A community excited by a great and mysterious crime is naturally eager to see the perpetrator punished. Many of its members are soon found with theories, and anxious to show their ability as detectives. The circumstances, when numerous, never constitute a chain in which each is a necessary link, but many may be disbelieved and yet the theory persist. In fact generally there is no hypothesis or theory save that the defendant is guilty; and the case is an assemblage of suspicious circumstances, which may all be true, and yet the defendant be innocent, but which prevail by mere number. The court told the jury that this species of evidence was not entitled to an inferior degree of credit, and to so convince the jury was evidently the purpose of this long charge. Whether it is entitled to such credit or not is a question in each case to be determined by the jury from the evidence. This charge was plainly an argument for the prosecution.

Instructions have undoubtedly been given, and have to some extent been sanctioned by this court, where the question of the limitation upon the right of the judge to charge the jury as to questions of fact was not raised. The case most often referred to as sanctioning discussions of this kind is People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 191. A very able opinion was rendered by Chief Justice Sanderson, who entirely disregarded this provision of the constitution. Probably it was not called to his attention. He expressed the opinion that, in reply to an argument of the defense as to the alleged danger of acting upon circumstantial evidence, "it was competent for the court to caution them against the alleged dangerous tendency of circumstantial evidence claimed by counsel to be demonstrated by these cases." That is, he could answer the argument or counsel for the defense as to the weight and value of evidence, and he gives as authority for the proposition the case of Tom Jones, 2 Wheeler, Cr. Cas. 461, in the circuit court of the United States, where there is no such restriction, showing plainly that the learned justice did not have this restriction in mind. He proceeds expressly to approve of the action of the judge in replying to the persistent attack of counsel for the defense on this class of evidence, directly and expressly declaring that the court may and should charge the jury as to facts, and going so far as to say that the court could properly single out a particular witness and charge the jury as to his credibility. But even Judge Sander-son did not say that as a general rule circumstantial evidence was as satisfactory proof of a fact as positive evidence. He said, on the other hand, that in the nature of things it was not, but that in some cases it was as satisfactory and would produce the same degree of conviction, and might in particular instances be superior. No one ever disputed this last proposition. A case may be completely made out by circumstantial evidence, and positive and direct testimony may be false. But is it proper, under our constitution, for the judge, in his charge to the jury, to answer the argument of counsel for the defense on the facts? Such it admittedly was in the Cronin Case, which is the father of the whole errant brood. The constitutional inhibition is too plain to admit of discussion, and such a charge is necessarily a charge with respect to matters of fact, if the domain of fact was correctly defined by the learned judge in his charge. That distinction is older than the courts of the United States, and, so far as I am aware, has never been criticised. There are a few other cases in which the Cronin Case has been blindly followed, all ignoring this constitutional inhibition. The constitution is too plain to be disregarded on such authority. The cases do not attempt to construe the inhibition or to reconcile it with such instructions, and I think the attempt would necessarily have failed, had it been made. The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HARRISON, J.; HENSHAW, J.

McFARLAND, J., dissented.

GAROUTTE, J. (dissenting). In the past no member of this court has been more zealous than myself in guarding the right of defendants which is granted to them under that provision of the constitution which forbids trial judges from charging jurors upon the facts. See People v. Gordon, 88 Cal. 422, 26 Pac. 502; People v. Choynski, 95 Cal.

640, 30 Pac. 791; People v. Hertz, 105 Cal. 660, 39 Pac. 32. And in the future, whenever error of that kind presents itself in this court, it shall be promptly stamped with my condemnation. But in this case, after careful examination of the record, I fail to see any material error, and must dissent from the conclusion declared by a majority of the court.

As to the instruction upon motive, I find but a single objection to it, and that objection is not one as to the law there stated. My objection is that it is too long. There is too much of it. It is too minute. But this is simply a matter of taste and expediency, and furnishes no ground for a new trial of the cause. The instruction presents no ground for a second trial for many reasons: First, defendant's counsel do not attack it in their brief as being unsound; secondly, it was given in the Durrant Case, and upon appeal affirmed by this court; and, thirdly, upon careful examination, I find no valid legal objection to it.

As to the instruction upon circumstantial evidence, I see nothing therein furnishing legal justification for a new trial of this case. One or two isolated excerpts are taken from the instruction, quoted in the opinion of the court, and declared objectionable. Such a test is hardly a fair one. The instructions should be taken together, and, when so taken and construed, it seems impossible that the jury could have been misguided by them. I deem the charge fair as an instruction of law to the jury, and find in it nothing violative of that constitutional inhibition to which reference has already been made, and which courts should strictly enforce.

In conclusion, I can only reiterate my views of these and similar questions, as expressed in People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 500, 55 Pac. 587: "While the defendant has the constitutional right to appeal, he must show upon his appeal some substantial violation of the law in the trial of his case. Some material right must be taken from him, or his conviction must stand. If judgments of conviction in hotly-contested, complicated criminal trials are to be set aside for every technical violation of the law occurring during the progress of those trials, it might almost be said that no conviction would stand the test of appeal. If, in the multitude of rulings upon the admission and rejection of evidence, and upon the procedure of the trial in general, a judge does not make some mistake, it would be a wonder indeed. Only a few men possess that amount of legal wisdom. The constitutional right of appeal granted a defendant does not contemplate that this court should find grounds for a new trial in any and every mistake the trial court may make." I think the judgment should be affirmed.

APPEAL—FINDINGS OF COURT—STATEMENT MADE IN PRESENCE OF DEFENDANT—CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATION—NEW TRIAL—DISCRETION OF COURT.

1. It is the peculiar province of the lower court to pass on the credibility of testimony, and, where findings are based on substantial testimony, the court on appeal has no power to disturb them.

2. Where the issue in an action on a note is as to the execution of, and consideration for, the note, and it is shown that defendant took the money and walked away without saying anything, a statement made at the time by plaintiff, and in the presence of defendant, that he was loaning defendant the money which he was counting out to him, is admissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, which provides that evidence may be given of an act or declaration of another in the presence and within the observation of a party, and the conduct of the party in relation thereto.

3. Where objection is made to testimony on certain grounds, other grounds cannot be considered on appeal.

4. Where defendant on cross-examination testifies that he did not tell his attorney at the time he was sued of certain facts which he had testified to on direct examination, a question asking when he told his attorney is not objectionable as asking for a confidential communication.

5. A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence rests in the discretion of the trial court, and, unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion, the rulings of the court will not be interfered with.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by George A. Tibbet against Tom Sue and Ham Gee on a note. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant Tom Sue appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. J. Hunsaker, for appellant. R. A. Ling, J. E. Patten, and McKinley & Graff, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Action to recover on a promissory note for $500 and accrued interest. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant Tom Sue appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The appeal comes here on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. Findings were filed by the court below, and it is conceded that the judgment is the legal conclusion from the facts found.

It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision of the court. The argument in appellant's brief is mainly directed to the improbability of the truth of the testimony of the witnesses for respondent. As the witnesses appeared before the learned judge of the court below, where he could view them as the words fell from their lips, it was his peculiar province to pass upon their credibility; and after he has found the facts as stated by them, and indorsed their testimony as true, we have no power to disturb his findings, when based upon substantial testimony.

The real issue between respondent and appellant was as to the execution of, and consideration for, the promissory note described in the complaint. One Bustillos was called as a witness by plaintiff, and testified that he was present in the early part of January, 1896, in the restaurant of one Dock, in Bakersfield, and saw plaintiff come in, and also saw two Chinamen there; that plaintiff had some money, and was counting it out; that one Mefford, who was in company with witness, asked plaintiff what he was doing with the money. The witness was allowed, under the appellant's objection, to testify that the plaintiff said, "I am loaning these Chinamen this money." Appellant's counsel says, "This action of the court constitutes the principal error of law relied upon for a reversal of the judgment." The evidence was objected to upon the ground that it was hearsay and incompetent. After the testimony was in, a motion was made to strike it out, but no grounds of said motion were stated. It is now urged that the ruling was reversible error, for the reasons that the conversation was not with appellant, that it does not appear that he understood what was being said, and that there is no evidence of his conduct in regard to the statement. It is shown by the evidence that appellant was present, that he can speak English imperfectly, and that he took the money and walked away. The objection to this testimony was made solely upon the grounds that it was hearsay and incompetent, and no other grounds can now be considered. We think the court did not err in admitting the testimony. The statement was made in the presence and hearing of defendant, and his silence and taking the money and walking away with it was evidence sufficient as to his conduct. Our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870) provides that, among other things, evidence may be given at the trial of "an act or declaration of another, in the presence and within the observation of a party, and his conduct in relation thereto." It is said in 1 Rice, Ev. p. 468: "Declarations or statements made in the presence of a party are received in evidence, not as evidence in themselves, but to understand what reply the party to be affected by the statement should make to the same. If he is silent when he ought to have spoken, the presumption of acquiescence arises. In this sense, admissions may be implied from conduct." In Corser v. Paul, 41 N. H. 24, a note purporting to be signed by a party was shown to him, with a request to pay it. It was held that his silence was competent evidence as to the genuineness of his signature. The court, in the opinion, said: "No principle is better settled than that a man's silence upon an occasion where he is at liberty to speak, and the circumstances naturally calling upon him to do so, may be properly considered by the jury as tacit admissions of the statements made in his presence, or of the claims there made upon him." In People v. Young, 108 Cal. 13, 41 Pac. 281, it appeared that the defendant, after his arrest, was brought into the presence of the wounded man, and a conversation then occurred between the wounded man and a third party as to the ownership of a certain purse found upon the defendant at the time of his arrest. The conversation was not addressed to defendant, but he was present at the time, and in a position to hear all that occurred, and neither affirmed nor denied the statement of the deceased to the effect that the purse was his property. It was held that his silence under the circumstances was a fact to which the jury were entitled. So, in People v. Mallon, 103 Cal. 514, 37 Pac. 512, two witnesses were allowed to testify to statements made by one Foran in the presence of defendant. It did not appear that the conversation was addressed to defendant, or that he made any reply thereto; but this court held the evidence competent, and in the opinion said: "It is established law that, while a statement made in the presence of the accused is not admissible as being itself evidence of any fact narrated in such statement, it is admissible, primarily, for the purpose of showing that the accused acquiesced in the statement, either by express assent, or by silence, or by such conduct as fairly implied assent." The ruling appears to be within the rule as laid down in the cases cited, and we are not prepared to say that it would be reversible error, even if not within the rule, in view of the other testimony in the case. The declaration of itself was of little importance; and, particularly as the case was being tried before the court without a jury, we cannot see that a different result would have been at all probable if the evidence had been excluded.

The appellant was a witness in his own behalf, and it did not appear, by his testimony or otherwise, that he did not understand the English language. While the appellant was on the stand as a witness, he testified that about the 1st of April, 1896, he was keeping a dry-goods store in Los Angeles; that at that time, while he was eating supper, Bustillos came into appellant's place of business with a letter written in Chinese, and with the sum of $5, and presented the note described in the complaint to appellant, and asked him to sign it, as a receipt for the money; that he thought Bustillos was the agent of Wells, Fargo & Co., and the note a receipt for the $5; and that under this belief he signed it. In cross-examination appellant testified that he never told of the fact of signing the receipt and receiving the $5 to any one until he was sued, and that he did not tell his attorney about it at that time because he did not know what the suit was for. Then he was asked the following question: "Q. When did you tell your attorney?" This question was objected to by appellant's counsel on the ground that it involved a confidential communication. The objection was overruled, and the ruling is now claimed to be error. The appellant, in answer to the question, said that, when he went to employ his lawyer, he imagined the cause, and told his lawyer so. The question related to the time when appellant told his attorney certain facts which he had fully testified to in his examination in his own behalf. He had said of his own volition that he did not tell his attorney at the time he was sued; thus, in effect, stating that he had told his attorney. The question, therefore, as to the time he so told him, was not asking for a confidential communication. But, aside from this, the fact that appellant told his attorney, in preparing his defense, of the facts set up in his answer, and of the facts testified to by him, could not in any degree have injured him. It was to allow appellant to corroborate his evidence upon the trial by showing that he had before stated the same thing to his attorney. If appellant had offered to prove such statement to his attorney, and it had been objected to by plaintiff, no doubt the objection would have been sustained; but as he was allowed to state the declaration to his attorney in reply to plaintiff's question, and as the declaration was in his own favor, and in corroboration of his evidence upon the stand, it could not possibly have injured him.

One of the grounds of appellant's motion for a new trial was newly-discovered evidence, but he has not seen fit to argue the point in his brief. The record shows that appellant, in support of his motion upon said ground, read some 9 affidavits, and the respondent, in opposition thereto, read some 19. The greater portion of the affidavits was directed to the credibility of the witnesses for plaintiff. Motions of this kind rest much in the discretion of the trial court. The moving party must make a clear case showing due diligence on his part, and the truth and materiality of such evidence. Newly-discovered evidence after defeat is looked upon with suspicion, and this court is always reluctant to interfere with the ruling of the trial court on a motion for a new trial on that ground, and will not do so unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion. Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 607, 34 Pac. 342. There was no such abuse of discretion in this case. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

LASAR et al. v. JOHNSON et al. (L. A. 497.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 10, 1899.)

SUBSCRIPTIONS—CONSIDERATION — NONJOIN-DER OF PARTIES—DEMURRER—MEAN-ING OF "ENTERTAINMENT."

1. Where defendants in an action on a subscription to a social and benevolent organization requested the subscription committee to regard their subscription as cash, and to go on and make arrangements, and obligations were incurred by the committee on the faith of such request, there was a sufficient consideration to make defendants liable on their subscription, though such request was not made at the time of the subscription.

2. Where defendants in an action on a subscription to a charitable purpose, being proprietors of a hotel, agreed with the subscription committee to pay the sum subscribed, on condition that a ball or banquet should be given at their hotel, and a ball was given pursuant to this agreement, there was a good consideration for the promise to pay the sum subscribed.

3. Where a complaint in an action on a subscription to a charitable purpose shows that plaintiffs are trustees of an express trust, and states for whom they are trustees, it is sufficient, and the cestuis que trustent need not be joined.

4. Where a defect of parties appears on the face of the complaint, the objection should be taken by demurrer.

5. The word "entertainment," as used in a subscription for the purpose of entertaining a large number of strangers, constituting an organized body, by the residents and business men of a city, is not synonymous with "board," and limited to the ordinary necessities of life.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by Isaac Lasar and others against C. O. Johnson and others on a subscription. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for appellants. Graves & Graves and F. A. Dorn, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. The complaint alleges that plaintiffs constitute the subscription committee of Los Osos Parlor, No. 61, of the Native Sons of the Golden West, a social and benevolent organization in the city of San Luis Obispo, who, for the purpose of entertaining the grand parlor of said organization at their meeting in said city from April 26, 1896, to and including May 1, 1896, procured the signature of the defendants to a subscription paper, of which the following is a copy: "San Luis Obispo, Cal., January 1, 1896. We, the undersigned citizens and business men of the city of San Luis Obispo, do hereby agree to pay the amounts set opposite our respective names to the subscription committee of Los Osos Parlor, No. 61, N. S. G. W., on or before the fifteenth day of March, 1896, at the city of San Luis Obispo. The money so paid to be used in entertaining delegates to the grand parlor of the N. S. G. W. during their stay in the city of San Luis Obispo. Jack & Johnson, Ramona Hotel, $500.00." The complaint further alleged that "defendants signed, executed, and delivered to plaintiffs said instrument upon the express condition, and the consideration therefor, and the promise contained therein, was that said committee should entertain the delegates to the grand parlor of the N. S. G. W. during their visit and stay in the city of San Luis Obispo with social pleasures and entertainment, and that a ball or banquet should be tendered and given said delegates at defendants' hotel"; that said grand parlor was convened and held during the time stated; that the delegates were entertained by social pleasures and amusements; that a ball was given at defendants' hotel; that, relying upon the promise of defendants, plaintiffs expended large amounts of money, and incurred liabilities which remain unsatisfied, and which would not have been incurred but for such promise of defendants to pay said subscription. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs, and defendants appeal from the judgment entered thereon, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The defense to the action will sufficiently appear from the discussion of the points made by defendants for reversal.

The statement on motion for a new trial specifies as errors several rulings admitting and excluding evidence, and giving and refusing to give certain instructions, and also specifies several particulars in which it is claimed the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. Appellants, however, do not discuss, nor even allude directly to, any of these specifications, but discuss the broad and material questions involved in the case; and to these we will direct our attention.

It is contended that the performance of gratuitous promises depends wholly upon the good will of the promisors, and will not be enforced at law, unless the promisee has accepted and acted upon the same by incurring some obligation or expending money on the strength of it; citing Cottage Street Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 528. Accepting this as a correct statement of the law as applied to the facts of that case, no principle there stated is violated by the verdict and judgment in this case. By the terms of the subscription, it was payable March 15th, while the grand parlor was not to be held until April 26th. Mr. Lasar testified, in substance, that before the meeting of the parlor the committee requested payment of defendants' said subscription; that defendants said they could not pay it at that time, but would pay on April 24th, that it was as good as cash, and to go ahead and make all their arrangements; that in making their preparations they took the amount of the subscriptions in the aggregate, and considered said subscription as cash, and incurred obligations and expenses on the faith of it; that the amount of subscriptions collected was $1,914.60, and the total amount expended for the entertainment was $2,507.98, leaving a deficiency of $593.38; and that, after the grand parlor adjourned, defendants refused to pay their subscription. The request of the defendants to the committee to regard their subscription as cash, and to go on and make all their arrangements, and the action of the committee in incurring obligations on the faith of this request, was a sufficient consideration to fix the liability of the defendants upon their subscription, and it is not necessary that such request should have been made at the time of the subscription. In Presbyterian Church v. Cooper, 102 N. Y. 524, 20 N. E. 354, it was said: "There is, we suppose, no doubt that a subscription, invalid at the time for want of consideration, may be made valid and binding by a consideration arising subsequently between the subscribers and the church or corporation for whose benefit it is made. Both of the cases cited [Barnes v. Prine, 12 N. Y. 18, and Roberts v. Cobb, 103 N. Y. 600, 9 N. E. 500], as we understand them, were supported on this principle. There was, as held by the court in each of these cases, a subsequent request by the subscriber to the promisee to go on and render service or incur liabilities on the faith of the subscription, which request was complied with, and services were rendered or liabilities incurred pursuant thereto. It was as if the request was made at the very time of the subscription, followed by performance of the request of the promisor." Another fact showing a consideration for the promise to pay the amount sued for appears in the evidence. The defendants were the proprietors of a large hotel. At the time the subscription was made, the committee was considering the matter of giving a ball or banquet, or both, to the delegates to the grand parlor; and, defendants desiring it, it was agreed between the committee and the defendants at the time the subscription was made, or immediately thereafter, that, if the ball and banquet were given, one of them should be given at defendants' hotel, and, in case neither was given at that hotel, defendants' subscription should be reduced to $250. This agreement converted the subscription, which upon its face was originally one to a charitable purpose simply, into a contract to pay to the committee the sum so subscribed, upon condition that a ball or banquet should be given to the grand parlor at the defendants' hotel, and a ball was given at said hotel pursuant to this agreement. This was a good consideration for the promise to pay the full sum sued for, and it is therefore not necessary to consider whether the defendants' liability should be reduced to its proportion of the expense incurred in entertaining the grand parlor measured by the entire amount subscribed; the amount subscribed exceeding the expenditures by the sum of $241.52, but the amount of subscriptions collected being $593.38 less than the amount expended.

Defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence on the part of the plaintiffs, upon the ground that the complaint does not state a cause of action; and this objection to the complaint was also repeated upon defendants' motion for a nonsuit, where it was specified "that the plaintiffs sue as individuals, and seek to recover in an individual capacity as trustees of an express trust." The subscription was on its face made payable "to the subscription committee of Los Osos Parlor," and the complaint alleges that the plaintiffs constituted said committee, and as such committee entertained said delegates, etc. Trustees of an express trust need not join the cestuis que trustent as parties, though the title of the cause should state that they sue as trustees of the person or association for whom they are acting. If, however, the body of the complaint shows that they are trustees of an express trust, and for whom they are such trustees (Spear v. Ward, 20 Cal. 659, 676; Wise v. Williams, 72 Cal. 544, 547, 14 Pac. 204), it is sufficient; and these facts appear in the complaint. Besides, the objection should have been taken by demurrer, as the alleged defect appeared upon the face of the complaint.

Appellants contended, however, that expenditures were made which did not come within the purview of this subscription for "entertainment," which, they say, is synonymous with "board," and includes the ordinary necessities of life. The distinction between entertaining a friend at one's home, or a hotel keeper entertaining a traveler at his hotel, and entertaining a large number of strangers, constituting an organized body, by the residents and business men of a city, is quite apparent; and, as to the latter, what may be included in the entertainment of the visiting body is usually limited by the amount of money available for the purpose, and the ingenuity of the entertainers in devising sources of enjoyment. I think the record does not show that any of the money was expended for purposes not fairly within the meaning and intent of the subscription paper in that regard.

It is also contended by appellants that all the expenses of the entertainment have been fully paid, and that, therefore, they are not liable. It is shown, however, that the deficiency of $593.38 was met by borrowing that sum from one of the funds of Los Osos Parlor, which was not a fund intended to be used for the entertainment.

The supposed insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict appears to be based upon the alleged want of consideration for the promise, and has been sufficiently noticed. None of the alleged errors of law specified in the statement on motion for new trial are noticed in appellants' brief, and we have not discovered any that would justify a reversal of the judgment or order. I therefore advise that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

125 Cal. 472

LONDON & S. F. BANK, Limited, v. PARROTT et al. (S. F. 1,167.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 28, 1899.)

GUARANTY—NOTICE OF ACCEPTANCE—DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR BY ACCEPTANCE OF SECURITY—AGREED CASE—APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS—LIMITATIONS—LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS WHO ARE ALSO GUARANTORS.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 2795, providing that an absolute guaranty is binding on the guarantor without notice of acceptance, a guaranty stating that the signers "do hereby severally guaranty said credits" is an absolute guaranty, and becomes binding without notice of acceptance.

2. Civ. Code, § 1565, providing that the consent of parties to a contract must be communicated to each other, does not apply to a contract of absolute guaranty for the debt or default of a third person.

3. While a guarantor is entitled to stand upon the strict terms of his contract, yet, for purposes of construction, the same rules are applicable as to other written instruments.

4. Where the language in a guaranty is susceptible of two interpretations, the guarantor cannot deny the right of the person to whom it is given to act upon either interpretation.

5. Defendants guaranteed all credit by a bank given to, and future liabilities of, a corporation up to a certain amount. After the bank had given credit to an amount less than the limit, the corporation gave its note to the bank for the amount, which was not given or accepted in payment of the sums advanced, and was not delivered until after its date, and did not preclude the bank from suing immediately for such sum. Held, that the note did not discharge the liability of the guarantors.

6. In an action on a guaranty, a statement in the agreed case that "after September 6, 1893, no further credit was asked or given" thereunder, does not mean that no credit was given after that time, but that no credit was given to an amount greater than had been given before that time; the word "further" being equivalent to "additional."

7. Defendants guaranteed the payment of all advances made by a bank to a certain corporation. After considerable advances had been made, and a note had been given by the corporation to secure their payment, the corporation made frequent deposits, and checked against them. None of these deposits were applied to the payment of the debt. Held, that the bank was under no obligation so to apply them, as defendants' guaranty covered all advances for an indefinite time, and up to an amount which had not been exceeded.

8. Where the stockholders of a corporation enter into a personal guaranty for advances made to the corporation, but do not therein limit their liability to that of stockholders, they will be liable both as stockholders and as guarantors.

9. Where guarantors are liable both as guarantors of a corporation and as stockholders, while they cannot be held liable for more than the corporate liability in either or both capacities, yet where the judgment against them is less than their liability as stockholders, it is immaterial in what capacity it was recovered.

10. Where a corporation, having borrowed money, gives a note acknowledging its liability, and promising to pay the amounts, it prevents the bar of the statute of limitations, and preserves the liability until the maturity of the note.

11. Civ. Code, § 1479, provides that payments shall be applied, first, to interest due at the time of payment, and, second, to principal due at that time. A corporation, having borrowed money at various times from a bank, made payments on the debt. If such payments were applied to the preceding loans, the subsequent ones would be barred by the statute of limitations.

but, if applied to subsequent loans, they would be paid, and the preceding ones would be barred. Held, that such payments should be applied to the debts due at the time, and not to ones contracted subsequently.

12. Defendants had guaranteed payment of loans to be made by a bank to a certain corporation. To support the claim that some of the loans were barred by the statute of limitations, defendants questioned the right of the bank to apply payments to the earlier loans, because they were made in the form of deposits, and checks were drawn on the same day. Held, that this did not show that they were transactions independent of those which defendants had guaranteed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the London & San Francisco Bank, Limited, against Louie B. Parrott, Abby M. Parrott, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants Abby M. Parrott and others appeal. Affirmed.

Robert Y. Hayne, for appellants. Page, McCutchen & Eells, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The defendants in the above-entitled cause with others executed and delivered to the plaintiff September 30, 1891, the following instrument: "To the London & San Francisco Bank, Ltd, San Francisco, California: You will please give credit to the Capitol Packing Company for a sum of money in United States gold coin not exceeding the amount of one hundred thousand (\$100,000) dollars; and, as said packing company contemplates a course of future dealing with you, you will please continue the said credit, or, if it should be reduced or satisfied by payments made by said packing company, renew the same from time to time for said amount, or any less sum, or otherwise keep the said credit permanently up to the limit, as aforesaid, or any less amount. And these presents shall be deemed to be, and shall constitute to you, a continuing guaranty by each of us in the several proportions stated below, in reference to, and embracing, the original credit hereby authorized and all future liabilities of said packing company to you under said original credit, and under such successive transactions with you as shall either continue its liability, or from time to time renew it; and such guaranty shall remain and be operative until all present or future credit or credits given by you, as aforesaid, not exceeding the said limited amount, shall be fully paid, subject to our legal right to revoke the same in writing at any time as to any transactions occurring after such revocation. The subscribers hereto do hereby severally guaranty the said credits to the amount of one hundred thousand (\$100,000) dollars, in the following proportions, namely: * * * Thomas Cole, for another twenty-five six-hundredths ($\frac{25}{600}$) part thereof; Abby M. Parrott, for another one hundred and sixty-five six-hundredths ($\frac{125}{600}$) part thereof. This guaranty shall bind each subscriber for his said proportion of said total credit until after such revocation by him, notwithstanding some part of said total credit shall not be hereby guaranteed. Dated San Francisco, September 30, 1891." October 5, 1891, the Capitol Packing Company opened an account with the plaintiff, and thereafter, until August 30, 1894, made deposits of moneys for its said account, drew checks against the same, and received advances by way of loans from said bank, which said advances were, by the said packing company's agreement with said bank, to draw interest, payable monthly, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. In July, 1893, the San Francisco Clearing House, of which the plaintiff was a member, promulgated a rule for the government of its members, that they should not allow overdrafts on the part of their customers; and, for the purpose of complying with this rule, the Capitol Packing Company, at the request of the plaintiff, delivered to it on the 6th day of September its promissory note for the sum of \$73,000, bearing date August 31, 1893, and payable one day after date. At that time the books of the bank showed an indebtedness on the part of the packing company of \$72,899.61. This note was not accepted by the bank as payment, but its amount was placed upon the credit side of the packing company's account, and was so entered for the purpose of closing on its books the overdraft of the packing company, under the aforesaid rule of the clearing house. A balance was struck in the account, and the difference, viz. \$100.39, was carried to the credit column of the account, the account was continued upon the books, and the packing company continued to make deposits and draw checks against the same until August 30, 1894, when it was finally closed. On July 31, 1895, the total amount due to the bank, as shown by the accounts upon its books, was \$78,110, being the aforesaid sum of \$73,000 and interest thereon for one year. An agreed case, containing the above facts and others hereinafter named, was submitted to the superior court for its determination; the plaintiff claiming therefrom a right of recovery against the defendants, and they claiming to be under no liability by reason thereof. The superior court rendered its judgment in favor of the plaintiff, from which the present appeal has been taken.

1. The instrument of September 30, 1891, is both a letter of credit and a guaranty. The first portion thereof is a written instrument addressed by the appellants to the respondent, requesting the latter to give credit to the Capitol Packing Company, and thus falls directly within the terms of section 2858, Civ. Code; and in the subsequent portion thereof they guaranty the said credit to the amount of $100,000, in certain specific portions, and declare that the same shall be a continuing guaranty by each of them in these proportions until the credit that may be given shall be fully paid. Regarded as a letter of credit, the terms of the instrument do not require any notice of the credit thereafter given, nor can the necessity of giving such notice be implied from its terms; and, under section 2865, they became liable for such credit without notice to them. Their guaranty of the credits that might be given thereafter contains no limitation, and is unconditional. It is not an offer to guaranty, its language being that they "do hereby severally guaranty the said credits," but is an absolute guaranty, and, under section 2795, Id., became binding upon them without any notice of acceptance. The provisions of section 1565, Id., cited by the appellants, requiring the consent of parties to a contract to be "communicated by each to the other," has no application to a contract by which one person makes an absolute guaranty to another of the debt or default of a third person. It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that specific provisions upon a particular subject control general provisions for the class to which that subject belongs. End. Interp. St. § 399. Section 1565, Civ. Code, refers to contracts in general, and is found in title 1 of part 2 of that Code, while the sections relating to "Guaranty" are contained in title 13 of part 4 of the same Code. Section 4481 of the Political Code declares: "If the provisions of any title conflict with or contravene the provisions of another title, the provisions of each title must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such title."

It is claimed by the appellants that the acceptance by the bank of the promissory note for $73,000 was such an alteration of the relation between it and the packing company as to discharge the guarantors, and in support thereof they invoke the oft-cited rule that a surety or a guarantor is entitled to stand upon the strict terms of his contract. When it is said that a guarantor is entitled to stand upon the strict terms of his guaranty, nothing more is intended than that he is not to be held liable for anything that is not within the express terms of the instrument in which his guaranty is contained; that his liability is not to be extended by implication beyond these limits, or to other subjects than those expressed in the instrument of guaranty. But, for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of the language which he has used, and thus determining the extent of his guaranty, the same rules of construction are to be applied as are applied in the construction of other written instruments. His liability is not to be extended by implication beyond the terms of his guaranty as thus ascertained. The language used by him is, however, to receive a fair and reasonable interpretation, for the purpose of effecting the objects for which he made the instrument, and the purpose to which it was to be applied. If his language is fairly susceptible of two interpretations, either of which is within the spirit of the guaranty, he is not at liberty to say that the person to whom it is given was not justified in acting upon either, or that he should have acted upon one rather than the other. Civ. Code, § 1654;

Bell v. Bruen, 1 How. 169; Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. 426; Gates v. McKee, 13 N. Y. 232; Powers v. Clarke, 127 N. Y. 417, 28 N. E. 402; Pratt v. Matthews, 24 Hun, 386; Smith v. Molleson, 148 N. Y. 241, 42 N. E. 669; Lafargue v. Harrison, 70 Cal. 380, 11 Pac. 636.

The taking of the note by the bank did not discharge the appellants from their liability upon the guaranty, unless the obligation which they had guaranteed was thereby changed. By the terms of the instrument, the bank was to give to the packing company "credit" to the amount of $100,000, and to "continue the said credit," or, if it should be "reduced or satisfied by payments," renew the same, or otherwise keep the said "credit" permanently up to the limit aforesaid, or any less amount; and the signers thereof agreed that the instrument should be a continuing guaranty in reference to and embracing the original credit thereby authorized, "and all future liabilities of said packing company under said original credit," and under such successive transactions as shall either "continue its liability, or from time to time renew it," until all present or future credit or credits "shall be fully paid." The instrument does not designate the form in which the credit should be given, and its language is broad enough to embrace any form of credit which might be agreed upon between the bank and the packing company; nor is there any language therein which limits the guaranty or the credit to be given to the form which might be originally adopted, or to preclude the bank and the packing company from the right to change the form of such credit, or from adopting at the same time different forms of credit without impairing the guaranty. It may be conceded that if, after the bank had given credit to the packing company by way of an open account for its overdrafts, payable on demand, it had accepted a promissory note therefor by which its right to demand immediate payment would be postponed to a future day, the guarantors would have been discharged, since in that case the contract guaranteed by them would have been changed by giving time to the debtor, and preventing them from taking up the debt and immediately suing the packing company. It is stated, however, in the agreed case that the note was not taken by the bank as payment, and therefore the original credit given to the packing company was not thereby "reduced or satisfied." In the absence of an agreement to that effect, or evidence that such was the intention of the parties, the taking of a note for an existing liability does not constitute a payment of the debt. Dellapiazza v. Foley, 112 Cal. 380, 44 Pac. 727; Bank v. Shuey (Cal.) 55 Pac. 682. In the present case the note was not delivered to the bank until after its date, and was therefore payable immediately, and the bank could at any time bring its action upon the original overdrafts. The giving of the promissory note was a transaction between the bank and the packing company, which at least had the effect to "continue" its liability for the amount of its previous overdrafts, and was within the express terms of the guaranty. It was evidence of the extent of the credit existing at that time, but did not change the amount or character of the liability. If, instead of taking the note, the bank had at that time sued the packing company, and obtained judgment against it for the amount of its overdrafts, the guarantors would not have been thereby discharged, and the taking from it of a written agreement to pay the amount of the overdraft can have no greater effect in discharging them. There was but one account opened with the bank by the packing company, and this account was not finally closed until August 30, 1894; and the entry of the amount of the note to the credit of the packing company upon this account was made merely for the purpose of closing the "overdraft" upon its books, but did not change the liability of the packing company, or reduce the amount of the credit which it had received from the bank. An account is not closed at each time a footing is made and the balance carried to another column. These views are sustained by the following authorities: Bush v. Critchfield, 5 Ohio, 109; Wise v. Miller, 45 Ohio St. 388, 14 N. E. 218; Bank v. Woolsey, 31 App. Div. 61, 52 N. Y. Supp. 827; Norton v. Eastman, 4 Greenl. 521; Lennox v. Murphy, 171 Mass. 370, 50 N. E. 644; Bank v. Bandmann, 120 Cal. 220, 52 Pac. 583.

It is stated in the agreed case, after reciting the making of the aforesaid note, and crediting its amount against the overdraft: "After that time, viz. on and after September 6, 1893, the company continued to make deposits and to check against the same, as is shown by the statement hereto annexed marked 'Exhibit 2.' But after September 6, 1893, no further credit was asked by or given to the packing company. All deposits so made were applied by the bank to the checks drawn after the date last mentioned, until August 30, 1894, when the said account was finally closed." Upon this statement it is contended by the appellants that their liability as guarantors ceased September 6, 1893; that, as after that date the bank gave no further credit to the packing company, the liability of the guarantors ceased at that date. We cannot assent to this construction of the above clause. The argument of the appellants is drawn from what we deem a misconstruction of the language used in the agreed case. The statement that after September 6th no further credit was given to the packing company is not equivalent to a statement that credit was not given to it after that date. The word "further," as here employed, is an adjective used in the sense of "additional," limiting "credit," and is not to be construed as an adverb of time, qualifying the verb "given"; and the phrase is to be construed as meaning that after that date the bank gave no credit to the packing company beyond, or in addition to, the amount of the note. The sentence itself is introduced by the restrictive connective "but," and its apparent purpose is to limit the statement in the previous sentence that after that date "the company continued to make deposits and to check against the same," by declaring that, notwithstanding the checks drawn against the deposits, they did not, of themselves, result in giving any credit to the packing company. This construction is consistent with the fact appearing upon the face of the account, which is referred to in the sentence that after that date there were no further overdrafts, the deposits being at all times in excess of the checks, and also harmonizes with the effect which we hold is to be given to the transaction of accepting the note, and placing its amount to the credit of the packing company's account.

Permitting the packing company to draw checks against the deposits made by it after September 6, 1893, did not affect the liability of the guarantors. The moneys so deposited were not directed to be applied as payments upon the note, and, in the absence of any direction, the bank was not required to make such application. A bank which holds the note of its customer is not required at its maturity, or thereafter, to apply thereon moneys subsequently deposited by the customer, and an indorser or surety upon the note is not discharged by its omission to make such application (Morse, Banks, § 562; Bank v. Peltz, 176 Pa. St. 513, 35 Atl. 218; Bank v. Peck, 127 Mass. 298; Strong v. Foster, 17 C. B. 201); and, if the bank was not required to make such application, its payment of checks drawn subsequent to the deposits was not a reloading to the packing company of money that should have been applied towards the payment of the note. As we hold that the "credit" which was guarantied did not cease on the 6th of September, but continued from the time it was opened with the bank in October, 1891, it is immaterial, so far as the guarantors are concerned, whether the deposits made after that date were applied in reduction of the amount of the note, or in payment of checks subsequently drawn. The liability of the packing company which they guarantied was whatever amount of credit less than $100,000 might at any time exist in favor of the bank, whether in the form of an open account for overdrafts, or in the nature of bills receivable. As between the bank and the packing company, all the payments of its checks by the bank upon overdrafts constituted "credit," and all of the deposits by the packing company were payments to be applied in "reducing or satisfying" that credit, and whatever amount of such credit remained unpaid was within the terms of the guaranty.

2. The Capitol Packing Company is a corporation organized under the laws of this state, with a capital stock divided into 600 shares, of which 590 were issued, and during all the times in which the aforesaid liability of the corporation was incurred the appellant Abby M. Parrott was the owner and holder of 165 shares of said stock, and the appellant Thomas Cole of 25 shares. The plaintiff claims, in addition to a recovery upon the guaranty of the appellants, the right to recover from them, respectively, as stockholders, their proportion of the aforesaid corporate obligation, and the superior court rendered judgment in its favor in accordance with this claim. The appellants contend that their guaranty was only a collateral security for their liability as stockholders, that their liability thereon was commensurate with their liability as stockholders, and that the court was not authorized to render judgment against them in their double capacity. In the agreed case the liability of the packing company to the plaintiff is stated to be $78,116, and it is stated that the plaintiff claims the right to recover from Mrs. Parrott upon her stockholder's liability the sum of $21,844.32, and upon her liability as guarantor the sum of $10,922.16, and from Mr. Cole upon his liability as stockholder the sum of $3,309.75, and upon his guaranty the sum of $1,323.89. The aggregate amount of the judgments against the defendants is less than the agreed amount of the corporate liability, but they do not specify the amounts thereof rendered against the appellants upon their respective liabilities as guarantors and as stockholders. No exception, however, is made upon this ground, nor do the appellants claim that the judgment against them is incorrect in amount, their claim being that by reason of the guaranty they are not liable in any amount as stockholders. The guaranty does not, however, contain any reference to the liability of the signers as stockholders, and, inasmuch as such liability is distinct from that arising upon their contract, if they had intended not to be bound as stockholders, they should have caused words of release or discharge to be inserted in the guaranty. Their liability as stockholders existed by virtue of the statute, while their liability as guarantors was purely a matter of contract between them and the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had the right to demand the guaranty, in addition to their liability as stockholders, as a condition upon which it would give credit to the corporation. There was no connection between the two, or dependence of one upon the other, and, in the absence of any agreement to that effect, the plaintiff is not to be deprived of the right to enforce their statutory liability. No inference of this nature is to be drawn from the similarity between the number of shares of stock held by the appellants and the proportion of the credit which they guarantied. In fact, their liabilities under the two obligations are not the same,—that as guarantors being for a certain number of six-hundredths of the credit, while as stockholders they were liable for that number of five hundred and ninetyeths.

The plaintiff is, of course, not entitled to recover from the defendants, whether as guarantors or as stockholders, or in both capacities, more than the amount of the corporate liability; but, as it appears from the record that the aggregate amount of the judgments is less than the agreed amount of the corporate liability, we cannot say that the record discloses any error in this respect. It is also stated in the agreed case that some stockholders did not sign the guaranty, and that some of the guarantors were not stockholders. The case also shows that the defendants in the action had 290 shares of the stock, but it does not appear that any of the guarantors, other than the defendants, were stockholders.

It is stated in the agreed case that the defendants shall be considered as having pleaded the statute of limitations upon any other matter than the guaranty, and appellants contend that their liability as stockholders is barred by this statute. The liability of a stockholder is an obligation created by statute, and, under section 359, Code Civ. Proc., is barred unless the action thereon is commenced within three years after the cause of action accrues. Green v. Beckman, 59 Cal. 545; Moore v. Boyd, 74 Cal. 167, 15 Pac. 670; Wells v. Black, 117 Cal. 157, 48 Pac. 1090. It is unnecessary to consider the proposition presented by the appellants that, if the liability of a corporation is barred by the statute, the stockholders may avail themselves of that fact as a defense to their own liability, since in the present case the liability of the packing company was not barred. Before the statute had run against its liability, it made its written acknowledgment thereof, and promised to pay the same, and thus prevented the bar of the statute. The giving of this note had the effect to preserve its liability until the maturity of the note. The plaintiff's claim against the appellants as stockholders is not upon the note, but upon the liability originally created by reason of the advances made to the corporation. We have seen that the giving of this note did not affect the liability of the appellants upon their guaranty, since it did not affect the original liability of the corporation, and for the same reason it did not affect their liability as stockholders.

Neither is their liability as stockholders barred by the three-year statute. The account with the packing company was opened October 5, 1891, and from that date until September 5, 1893, deposits were made by the packing company, from time to time, and its checks paid by the bank. Section 1479, Civ. Code, providing for the application of payments, declares: (3) "If neither party makes such application within the time prescribed herein, the performance (i. e., the payment) must be applied to the extinction of obligations in the following order: 1st. Of interest due at the time of performance; 2nd. Of principal due at that time." The superior court acted in accordance with this rule, and held that the deposits of the packing company should be applied, first, to the interest due at the time of making the several deposits, and next to the payment of the checks earliest in time, and that the application should be made as of the date of the several deposits, irrespective of the time that had elapsed between the earliest items and the commencement of the action. The appellants claim that the court thus acted in disregard of their plea of the statute of limitations; that under this plea the court was not at liberty to apply any of the deposits in discharge of advances made more than three years prior to the time the application was made; that the application of the deposits, whether made by the court or the creditor, cannot be made after three years from the time that the liability accrued. We cannot assent to this proposition. Under section 462, Code Civ. Proc., the plea of the statute of limitations is to be deemed "controverted" by the plaintiff, and whatever will defeat its effect may be shown upon the trial. The right to a correct application of payments is one of the elements in the plaintiff's right of action, and he is not to be deprived of the exercise of that right by a delay in bringing his action on for trial. The application of payments which is made by the court is to be made "in such a manner, in view of all the circumstances of the case, as is most in accordance with justice and equity, and will best protect and maintain the rights of both parties." Murdock v. Clarke, 88 Cal. 390, 26 Pac. 603. The circumstances which are to guide the court may have arisen since the payment was made, but the application when made relates to the time of the payment. There could be no propriety in applying a payment to the discharge of an obligation incurred subsequent to the time when the payment was made.

It is next contended by the appellants that, under their plea of the statute, their liability as stockholders is limited to that portion of the corporate liabilities which were incurred subsequent to August 16, 1892, the agreed case having been filed August 15, 1895. At the time of the execution of the note of September 5, 1893, the statute of limitations had not run against any of the items of the account, and the parties thereto could at that time agree upon the mode and extent to which the previous deposits by the packing company should be applied in the extinction of its liability for the advances; and the making and acceptance of the note for an amount agreed upon between them must be regarded as an agreement or acquiescence on the part of the packing company in their application to the extinction thereby of so much of the liability theretofore incurred as was not included in the note. The appellants urge, however, that the plaintiff had, prior to that date, made an appropriation of a por-

SALTZMAN v. SUNSET TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. (S. F. 1,164.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 29, 1899.)

MISCONDUCT OF JURY—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL BASED ON STATEMENT OF CASE—COMPETENCY OF AFFIDAVIT OF DISSENTING JUROR—DEPOSITION OF DEPUTY SHERIFF—NECESSITY OF EXCEPTION TO SPECIFIC RULINGS—PRESUMPTION OF MISCONDUCT.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 658, providing that a motion for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury shall be made on affidavits, a motion made on a statement of the case is unauthorized.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 658, providing that a motion for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury shall be based on affidavits, where a deputy sheriff having charge of the jury refuses to make an affidavit his deposition in open court must be taken as equivalent to such affidavit.

3. In an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury, it is not necessary to except specifically to the rulings of the court excluding evidence of such misconduct, as all such errors are included in the appeal from the order.

4. Const. 1879, art. 1, § 7, providing that the concurrence of nine jurymen is sufficient for a verdict, does not alter the rule that a jurymen cannot impeach his own verdict, and consequently affidavits by the dissenting jurors are not competent evidence to show misconduct.

5. Where a juror has been separated from the jury against the order of the court, and undue influence might have been brought to bear upon him, the burden is upon the party seeking to sustain the verdict to show that no such attempt was made.

6. Where a juror was permitted to go to the telephone and communicate with persons unknown to the deputy in charge of the jury, evidence that the communication was very brief and that the deputy heard what the juror said, and the affidavit of the juror himself setting out the nature of the communication, are sufficient to rebut the presumption that undue influence was brought to bear on him.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action for personal injuries by Edward Saltzman against the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company. Verdict for defendant. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. M. Jennings (Thos. V. Cator, of counsel), for appellant. Van Ness & Redman, for respondent. Jackson Hatch, for receiver.

TEMPLE, J. Action for damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff while in the employment of defendant. Verdict was rendered for the defendant by a divided jury. The motion for a new trial was based upon the point of alleged misconduct of the jury. Such alleged misconduct was made to appear by the affidavits of the dissenting jurors, and upon one charge of misconduct by the affidavit of the deputy sheriff who had charge of the jury. The notice of motion for a new trial stated that the motion would be made on a statement of the case and upon affidavits. The Code provides that when the motion is made upon the ground of misconduct it shall be made on affidavits. Section 658, Code Civ. Proc. The statement was therefore tion of the deposits to the payment of interest at the end of each month, and that, the appropriation having once been made, it was irrevocable, and that a different appropriation thereafter was unauthorized. This claim rests upon these facts: At the opening of the account, the packing company agreed to pay interest upon the advances made to it monthly, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. This interest upon overdrafts was, according to the usual course of business, paid by a memorandum check signed by the bank itself, and a list of the checks so drawn was handed to the packing company whenever its book was balanced. In the account upon the books of the bank these items of interest appear under date of the last day of each month, and amount to a little over $7,000. It is claimed that by this mode the bank elected to allow the interest to compound, and not to apply any subsequent deposits to its payment. Instead, however, of being an application of the deposits, this action of the bank was in the nature of an additional loan to the packing company. It was equivalent to advancing to it the amount of the interest for the previous month upon its check therefor, in the same mode that it would advance money upon its check for any other purpose. Deposits subsequently made were not applied by the bank to the payment of this interest, but were placed to the general credit of the packing company in its account upon the books of the bank. From the copy of the account annexed to the agreed case, it appears that upon many occasions the amount of the deposits and of the checks drawn by the packing company upon the same day were identical, and from this fact the appellants contend that it should be held that these deposits and checks were parts of the same transaction, and were transactions independent of the general account between the packing company and the bank, and consequently the deposits so made should not be applied to the discharge of any of the earlier items of the account. There is nothing, however, in the record tending to show that these were independent transactions except the identity of amount and date, and these items only constitute evidence from which an inference might be drawn that they were parts of separate transactions. They are not conclusive of the fact, and as the superior court has not drawn this inference, but its judgment has impliedly found the contrary, we must accept its finding as conclusive. It may be added that in the dealings between a bank and its customer the deposit is usually made before the checks are drawn, and, in the absence of some specific direction, there would be no presumption that a deposit was intended to be applied to a check that might be thereafter drawn. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; VAN DYKE, J.

unauthorized. On the hearing the court refused to consider certain affidavits, and denied the motion. Plaintiff then prepared a bill of exceptions, which was settled by the court, which included all the affidavits and the ruling. This was proper, and no injury was done by the statement. The record here seems sufficient if that be excluded. The deposition of the deputy sheriff, taken in open court, must be regarded as an affidavit. If he refused to make an affidavit, no other course was open to plaintiff, who should not be deprived of his testimony because of his unwillingness.

We are not called upon to review the action of the court in refusing to hear read the affidavits of the dissenting jurors which tended to impeach the verdict, except so far as it becomes necessary to determine the competency of such evidence in considering the final order of the court in denying a new trial. It was not necessary that the ruling in regard to the evidence should have been specifically excepted to or appealed from. It is all involved and included in the appeal from the order refusing a new trial.

One matter of alleged misconduct consists of the charge made in the affidavit of a dissenting juror that one of the jurors who assented to the verdict stated, in substance, that he wanted his pay; that they would receive no pay unless they brought in a verdict; and he would agree to anything rather than not be paid. There were three dissenting jurors out of twelve, so that a change of one vote from the majority would have defeated the verdict. The trial court concluded that the verdict could not be impeached in this way. Whether it could be so impeached is the first question for discussion here. Appellant admits that the general rule is that the affidavit of a juror cannot be used to impeach a verdict, but he contends that this rule is that the juror shall not be permitted to impeach his own verdict, and that the reason of this rule is that otherwise he may be induced by corrupt means to change his mind or to swear falsely. It is also contended that he is estopped of record by his assent to the verdict, and should not be heard to the contrary. But it is contended that the rule has no application to dissenting jurors where a valid verdict may be rendered by the concurrence of three-fourths, and since the new constitution of 1879 the rule must be understood to be that a juror shall not be permitted to impeach his own verdict, and does not apply to dissenting jurors. For nearly 20 years we have had a statute (section 657, Code Civ. Proc.) to the effect that, if the assent of one or more of the jurors has been determined by a resort to chance, the misconduct may be proved by the affidavit of any one of the jurors. This is an exception to the general rule, and proves the rule; but in such case ten jurors might be unconnected with the matter, and an affidavit on their part would not indicate a change of mind or imply corruption. The so-called estoppel is simply that public policy requires that the sanctity and stability of judicial determinations shall not be subject to the evidence of jurors who may be tampered with, and who cannot, in general, testify without accusing themselves or some member of the jury. And this last consideration is, in my opinion, not the least cogent reason for the rule. The independence of the jury and the value of their discussions would be lessened if the reasons given by any juror for his opinions or for his verdict could be reported to the court and criticised, and his motives impugned for remarks made in the jury room. And such reports would be more likely to be made by dissenting jurors who had been heated by earnest debate and defeated by the final vote. But the independence of the jury would be gone if a perfectly correct report could be made and the verdict attacked by showing that some jurors mistook the evidence or the law or were actuated by other considerations. There would be no freedom of discussion in the jury room if they were subject to a possible censorship of this character. And the stability of judicial determinations would be as much imperiled by liability to attack by dissenting jurors as by the others. Nor is it true that the reason for the rule has always been stated to be that a juror may be induced to retract. Often an attack by the affidavit of a juror would not indicate a change of views or be an attack upon his individual verdict,—if it could be so regarded. I have already shown this, but the instances may be greatly varied. He might testify that a fellow juror had his bottle in the jury room, or got drunk, or offered a bribe to a fellow member, or stated facts not in evidence. Were it not for the rule a juror would be commended for disclosing these matters, and to do so would not be self-accusation, although it might furnish ground for attacking the verdict. The main reasons, I think, are these two: (1) That the jurors, who are practically the only witnesses in regard to the matter, may not be tampered with and verdicts by these means imperiled; and (2) to secure independence and freedom from improper restraint on the part of the jury. In Wilson v. Berryman, 5 Cal. 45, the reason for the rule is given that independence of opinion would be thus secured. In Hannum v. Inhabitants of Belchertown, 19 Pick. 311, it was said: "The secrecy of the deliberations and discussions of the jury, and the exemption of jurors from the liability of being questioned as to their motives and grounds of action, are highly important to the freedom and independence of their decisions." In Woodward v. Leavitt, 107 Mass. 453, the court says: "It is essential to the freedom and independence of their deliberations that their discussions in the jury room should be kept secret and inviolable, and to admit the testimony of jurors to what took place there would create embarrassment and uncertainty." The learned judge cites a great many cases, English and American, in support of his views, among them Cook v. Castner, 9 Cush. 266, where Shaw, C. J., said: "All communications among jurors are confidential; they are intended to be secret, and it is best they should remain so." To the same effect is Heffron v. Gallupe, 55 Me. 563. Also State v. Freeman, 5 Conn. 348, where Hosmer, J., says: "On a principle of policy, to give stability to the verdicts of jurors and preserve the purity of trials by jury, the evidence ought not to be admitted." See, also, Jones, Ev. § 784, and Thomp. & M. Jur. 440. These authorities all show that the reason given for the rule is not solely because jurors may be induced to repent of their verdicts. No doubt, also, courts more willingly and strictly enforce the rule because, if the verdict is wrong, it may be attacked and reviewed upon that ground without reference to the misconduct of the jury. I think the rule is not changed in its application by the amendment which permits a verdict by the specified majority of the jury.

The question still remains to be considered whether the communication by the juror Krumb over the telephone with some person outside was such misconduct as should induce the court to vacate the verdict. This fact is shown by the affidavit of the deputy sheriff who had charge of the jury. It is to be considered solely in connection with the facts found in this affidavit, and without knowledge of how Krumb had previously voted. The deputy, in violation of his sworn duty, permitted Krumb, while the jury were dining at a restaurant, to which he had taken them in obedience to an order of the court, to leave the table and go to a telephone receiver, which was apparently in the same room, and call some one, no doubt at the central office, which was in charge of the defendant in the case. The deputy went to the receiver with him. He heard him ask through the telephone for his father-in-law, and tell someone to have his father-in-law call him, as he would probably stay out all night,—that he was then at the restaurant. He was afterwards called up, and again went to the telephone, the deputy going with him. He heard Krumb tell his father-in-law that he would probably be kept out all night, and ask him to take care of his horse. Krumb said nothing about the case, and, though the deputy was produced for examination by the appellant, nothing was shown which was calculated to raise a suspicion that any communication was had with any one about the case. With the deputy standing by his side while giving this very short and simple message, it could easily be told whether there was further conversation. The affidavit of Krumb was also read in explanation. He says he called one Hobson to go for his father-in-law, and also to a clerk in his own store, and asked him to close up at the usual time, and that he was called up by his father-in-law, and asked him to take care of his horse and chickens, to which his father-in-law assented. He had no further communication with any one, and nothing was said about the case at all. It is agreed that, while the affidavit of a juror cannot be used to impeach a verdict, it is perfectly competent to explain or to deny alleged misconduct or interferences with the jury. It is contended that the conduct of Krumb was a separation from the jury under such circumstances, that improper communications could have been made to him, and in the nature of things there can be no conclusive evidence upon the matter save his own. Communications through a telephone, it is said, are especially dangerous. A telephone in a jury room takes the ear of the juror abroad secretly for any corrupt proposition a party may desire to send. Appellant contends that the affidavit of a juror cannot be used to show that he has not been corruptly approached where he has improperly separated himself from the jury under such circumstances that an attempt to corrupt might be made. As authority he cites People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 275; People v. Thornton, 74 Cal. 484, 16 Pac. 244, and People v. Stokes, 103 Cal. 193, 37 Pac. 207. In criminal cases our statutes have always provided, as now by section 1181 of the Penal Code, that a court may grant a new trial "when the jury has separated without leave of the court, after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict." There is no such ground for granting a new trial in a civil case, except under the ground of misconduct of the jury "materially affecting the substantial rights of a party." The force of the decision in People v. Backus has been somewhat weakened by People v. Bonney, 19 Cal. 427, People v. Symonds, 22 Cal. 349, and People v. Brannigan, 21 Cal. 338. The matter is fully discussed in a note to McKinney v. People, 43 Am. Dec. 65. The annotator says it is almost the universal rule that in order to set aside the verdict "there must be some evidence of other misconduct, in addition to the mere fact of separation, which has operated to the party's prejudice." The rule in this state I take it to be, in civil cases, that a separation, against the instruction of the court, with evidence that improper influence might have been brought to bear upon the juror, puts the burden upon the party seeking to sustain the verdict to negative the presumption, and show that no such attempt was made. I think that was done in this case. The brevity of the communication, the presence of the deputy, who could hear what was said by the juror, and the affidavit of the juror, rebut the presumption of injury. Still, I am impressed with the argument as to the particular impropriety of allowing a juror to communicate by telephone. Both the juror and the deputy were guilty of gross impropriety. The juror should have obtained permission from the court to send a message, and the deputy should have been at the receiver. The judgment and order are affirmed.

DAY v. GUNNING. (S. F. 1,816.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 4, 1899.)

ELECTION CONTEST—JUDGMENT—APPEAL—SUPERSEDEAS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 949, which provides that the perfecting of an appeal stays proceedings in the court below on the judgment, except where the judgment adjudges defendant guilty of usurping or unlawfully holding public office, has no application to a judgment in an election contest instituted under Code Civ. Proc. pt. 3, tit. 2, where contestee is in possession of the office, at the time of the rendition of judgment against him, by virtue of an election certificate, though such judgment contains the unauthorized declaration that contestee is unlawfully holding the office; and an appeal from it operates as a supersedeas.

In bank. Application for a writ of mandamus by Fred H. Day against S. O. Gunning. Application denied.

W. T. Phipps, for petitioner. W. H. Carlin, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. An alternative writ of mandate was issued from this court, directed to the respondent, and ordering him to admit petitioner to the use and enjoyment of the office of auditor and recorder of the county of Yuba, or to show cause why he does not do so. At the hearing upon the return it was made to appear that at the general election held in 1898 the petitioner and the respondent were opposing candidates for the office of auditor and recorder of Yuba county. In due time the board of supervisors canvassed the vote cast at the election, and declared Gunning to have been elected to the office. A certificate of election was issued to him accordingly. Within the time contemplated by law the petitioner instituted a contest of the election under the provisions of title 2, pt. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The contest was heard in the superior court, the votes were counted, and as a result the court gave its judgment that the contestor, the petitioner herein, was duly elected to the office, and "that said defendant and respondent is unlawfully holding said office; that the certificate of election to said office heretofore issued to said respondent for said office is hereby revoked, annulled, set aside, and canceled; that the clerk of the said county of Yuba is ordered to issue to said Fred H. Day a certificate of election to said office, and that, upon properly qualifying, said Fred H. Day be let into possession of said office." Thereafter, and within 10 days of the date of the judgment, Gunning appealed to this court, giving the ordinary $300 bond upon appeal. Between the date of the institution of the election contest and the date of the judgment therein the term of the auditor-elect commenced. By virtue of his certificate of election, Gunning entered the office, and discharged its duties. He was so in possession and so discharging its duties at the time when the judgment was rendered against him in the election contest. After that judgment, Day duly qualified, and made demand upon Gunning to be let into possession of the office, with which demand Gunning refused to comply. Under these facts it is seen that the legal question presented is the single one, namely, whether an appeal from a judgment such as this operates as a supersedeas. Generally speaking, an appeal to this court, accompanied by the $300 undertaking, operates to stay the execution of the judgment, save as to judgments in certain enumerated and excepted kinds of cases. As an appeal in contested election cases is accorded to either party under section 1126 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must follow that, unless the judgment which the court is authorized to enter in such a case belongs to one or another of the excepted classes, the appeal does operate to stay its enforcement. Section 949, Id., provides that the perfecting of an appeal stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment, excepting where the judgment "adjudges the defendant guilty of usurping or intruding into or unlawfully holding public office, civil or military, within this state." It is contended by petitioner that the judgment in this case is one declaring that the contestee unlawfully holds a public office, and that, therefore, the perfection of the appeal does not stay the enforcement of the judgment. But it would not matter that the judgment so declared, unless it were within the power of the court in this proceeding to pronounce such a judgment. This is an action to contest an election, the judgment in which may be one of three,—a judgment of dismissal, a judgment setting aside and annulling the election, or a judgment declaring that the contestee or some other person has received the highest number of legal votes, and is therefore elected. It was this last kind of judgment which the court gave, but it added to it the unauthorized declaration that the contestee was unlawfully holding the office. Such a judicial declaration is appropriate to the action of quo warranto, or usurpation of office, which is an entirely distinct proceeding from the one which was here employed. Section 803, Id., authorizes the commencement of an action against any person who "usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, civil or military, or any franchise within this state." This language is identical with that above quoted from section 949 of the same Code, and it is quite apparent upon the reading of the two sections that it is to such a judgment in quo warranto, or for usurpation of office, that section 949 has reference. Within the reading of those sections it cannot be said that the respondent is unlawfully holding his office. Assuredly, he entered upon it lawfully by virtue of his certificate of election. If, by matters arising after his incumbency, he has lost the right to retain the office, still it cannot be adjudged in this proceeding that he is usurping, or intruding, or unlawfully holding office, within the intent and meaning of section 949. In this respect the case would be parallel with that of Covarrubias v. Supervisors, 52 Cal. 622. See, also, Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 50 Pac. 644. Moreover, having regard to the nature of the proceeding upon contested elections, it will be observed that it is designed as speedily as may be to determine the question—First, whether a given election was legally held; and, second, to decide which of two or more opposing candidates has been legally chosen to office. No question of usurpation, of unlawfully intruding, or of illegal holding enters into this consideration. Indeed, the time limited for the commencement of such a contest, and the requirement that the court shall sit in special session to hear and determine it, indicate that it was the purpose of the law that a judgment should be rendered before the term of office actually commenced. It is by chance, in this case, that the hearing continued after the commencement of the term, and that the determination was reached when one of the candidates had been inducted into office by virtue of his certificate. But this circumstance does not change the form of the proceeding, or authorize the entry of a judgment not provided for therein. It might be a wise provision of the law to declare that in such contests the successful party shall, by virtue of the judgment of the trial court, be immediately let into possession of the office. In some states will be found that or similar provisions. There is none such upon our own books, and in the present condition of the law it must be held that the perfecting of the appeal by the party aggrieved ipso facto operates as a supersedeas. The application for the writ is therefore denied.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
v. SHARP. (S. F. 1,208.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 7, 1899.)
SAN FRANCISCO PUEBLO LANDS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—COMPENSATION.

The ordinance of October 16, 1856, of the common council of the city of San Francisco, relating to the disposition of pueblo lands, providing that the Van Ness map be adopted in respect to the reservation of squares and lots for public purposes, on being ratified and confirmed by Act March 11, 1858, operated as a present and complete dedication of the lots, as shown by the map, to the public use; and, in an action by the city and county of San Francisco to quiet title to a tract of land designated on such map as "Hospital Lot," defendant, holding possession of a portion of such tract continuous with that of her predecessors in interest, from a date prior to January 1, 1855, is not entitled to compensation.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the city and county of San Francisco against Honora Sharp to quiet title to a certain tract of land. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. B. Sharp, for appellant. H. T. Cresswell, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Action by the city and county of San Francisco to quiet title to the tract of land which was designated on the Van Ness map of 1856 as "Hospital Lot," and which was originally part of the pueblo lands of the city within the corporate limits as defined by the act of April 15, 1851. Such tract was within the scope of Ordinance No. 822 of the common council, approved June 20, 1855 (the Van Ness ordinance), and the other ordinances following thereon, relating to the disposition of said pueblo lands, all of which were ratified by the act of the legislature approved March 11, 1858 (St. 1858, p. 52). Defendant has possession of a portion of said tract, and the possession so held by her is continuous with that of her predecessors in interest, beginning at a time prior to January 1, 1855. The court below rendered judgment declaring that plaintiff is the owner of the land in suit, "in trust for the use and benefit of the people of the state of California, and the inhabitants of the city and county of San Francisco, for the purposes of a public hospital"; and that defendant has no right or interest in any part of the same.

On appeal defendant abandons sundry of the defenses set up in her answer, and admits that as a result of the legislation above referred to, and the confirmatory act of congress of July 1, 1864, the said lot was dedicated to public use for purposes of a hospital; but she claims, as we understand the argument, that she is entitled to occupy the part thereof in her possession as aforesaid until the city shall pay to her the value of the same (found by the court to be the sum of $75,000), and that the judgment was erroneous in not requiring the city to compensate her to the amount of such value as a condition precedent to quieting its title against her. The several ordinances mentioned are recited at length in the said act of 1858; and the steps taken by the common council of the city and the commission appointed by it, for the selection of public grounds to be reserved from the general granting provisions of Ordinance No. 822, have been described in a number of cases involving the effect thereof as ratified by the legislature, and need not be here rehearsed. See Hoadley v. City and County of San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265; Id., 124 U. S. 639, 8 Sup. Ct. 659; Sawyer v. Same, 50 Cal. 370; Board v. Martin, 92 Cal. 209, 28 Pac. 799. The claim of the defendant to pecuniary compensation, as above stated, rests on the provision of section 6 of Ordinance No. 822, that "the city shall not, without due compensation, occupy for the purposes mentioned in this section [which included sites for hospitals] more than one-twentieth part of the land in the possession of any one person." The court found that, at the time the said hospital lot was selected and dedicated to public use, the portion of the same then in the possession of defendant's said predecessors in interest "comprised more than one-twentieth of the lands in their possession between January 1 and June 20, 1855."

Since the persons through whom defendant claims had no estate in the land which they could assert against the United States, the state of California, or the city, they were equally without legal right to be paid for the same, when, by appropriate legislation, it was dedicated to public uses in charge of the city. The claim now made is therefore to a governmental gratuity, and the statute under which it is advanced—the act of March 11, 1858—is to be construed strictly against the pretensions of the claimant; ambiguities therein, if any, are to be resolved against the demand. City of Oakland v. Oakland Water-Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277. Three ordinances were ratified by the act of 1858. Section 6 of the first (No. 822) contained several restrictions on the power to reserve lots for public uses. Thus, it was declared that public squares or parks "shall not embrace more than one block, corresponding in size to the adjoining blocks"; also, that the selection of lots to be reserved "shall be made within six months from the time of the passage of this ordinance"; and that the city should not occupy more than one-twentieth part of the land in the possession of any one person "without due compensation." But it is perfectly clear that the third of said series of ordinances (the order of October 16, 1856, adopting the Van Ness map) was passed in utter disregard of the said restrictions of Ordinance No. 822, relating to the time limit for the selection of the reserved lands, and relating to the size of the parks; for such limit of time expired December 20, 1855, not having been previously extended, and the Van Ness map, showing the selections made by the commissioners, was not reported to the common council until April 19, 1856, while the public squares shown on the map and dedicated by its adoption included in most instances four blocks, instead of one, as provided by Ordinance No. 822. These departures from the original scheme have been held to affect in no wise the dedication of the reserved grounds. San Francisco v. Mooney, 106 Cal. 586, 39 Pac. 852, and cases cited. The language of the order of October 16, 1856, was that the Van Ness map be adopted "in respect to * * * the reservation of squares and lots for public purposes." By the ratification of this order in the statute of 1858, it acquired the force of law, and operated immediately to dedicate the lots to public use. Hoadley v. City &

County of San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265. Since, therefore, it had, and was obviously intended to have, this effect, notwithstanding that it ignored some of the most important of the conditions which, by the terms of Ordinance No. 822, hampered the right of the city to reserve land for its own purposes, it is a very natural inference that it was meant to disregard also the provision by which the city was to be required to pay the possessors of the lots dedicated for something they did not own, viz. the right to occupy the same. If this is not so, we should have the anomaly of land completely dedicated to public uses, which yet the public cannot use without paying its value to persons who have no title or estate in the land itself. While such a condition might possibly be created by statute, all intentions in the construction of the act of 1858 should, for reasons already stated, be indulged against it.

The effect of the analogies above suggested is sought to be avoided on the ground that section 6 of Ordinance No. 822 did not forbid the city to take more than one-twentieth of the land possessed by any one person, but, on the contrary, contemplated that more might be taken upon making compensation to the occupants, and that accordingly the actual dedication of more than one-twentieth of the lands possessed by defendant's grantors shows no intent not to pay for it. This is hardly a sufficient answer. The question in one case, for example, is whether the legislature intended to dedicate finally land which, by the terms of said section 6, was not subject to reservation at all; in the other (the case here), whether it intended to dedicate finally land which the same section forbade to be occupied,—certainly an indispensable step in any effectual dedication to public use,—without paying the value to the possessors. It seems to us that the present and complete dedication contemplated by the order of October 16, 1856, confirmed by the statute of 1858, was inconsistent alike with all the restrictions of said section 6. See Sawyer v. City & County of San Francisco, 50 Cal. 370; Holladay v. Same (Cal.) 57 Pac. 146. The present decision might perhaps be rested on the authority of Sawyer's Case, just cited; but defendant characterizes the view there expressed as dictum merely, and contends that for other reasons it is not controlling; and since, besides this case, there are others now pending for decision in which reliance is placed on the main contention urged for defendant here, we have preferred to respond directly to the question of the proper construction of the statute. We think defendant is not entitled to the compensation she claims, and that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

VERNON SCHOOL DIST. v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 510.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 17, 1899.)

STATUTES—GENERAL LAW—CONSTITUTIONALITY—ANNEXATION OF SCHOOL PROPERTY BY CITY.

1. Act 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358), relating to the alteration of boundaries and annexation of territory to incorporated towns and cities, providing that electors of the municipality may petition the municipal authorities to make the proposed annexation, is not unconstitutional, as conferring on the electors of the municipality a special privilege not conferred on the electors of the territory proposed to be annexed, as the provision applies to the electors of all towns and cities, and is therefore general, and not special.

2. Act 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358) entitled "An act to provide for the alteration of the boundaries of and for the annexation of territory to incorporated towns and cities, and for the incorporation of such annexed territory in and as part of such municipalities, and for the districting, government and municipal control of annexed territory," includes within its title the provision, "And henceforth annexed territory shall be to all intents and purposes a part of such municipal corporation, except only that no part of such annexed territory shall ever be taxed to pay any portion of any indebtedness or liability of such municipal corporation contracted prior to or existing at the time of such annexation," and makes for all municipal purposes, except as above stated, the annexed territory a part of the city, so that school property, on annexation, comes in possession and under control of the board of education of the city.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Vernon school district against the board of education of the city of Los Angeles to quiet title. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Hotchkiss, for appellant. W. E. Dunn and F. J. Thomas, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action to quiet title. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals therefrom and from an order denying a new trial.

In 1876 the plaintiff purchased the property in question for school purposes, and the same was conveyed to the trustees of said district for school purposes only. In 1896 certain territory was added to the city of Los Angeles, which added territory embraced a portion of said Vernon school district, including said school site and improvements. It is conceded that the proceedings for the annexation of said additional territory to the city of Los Angeles were regular, and the validity of said annexation is not questioned except by an attack upon the constitutionality of the act of 1889, under which the annexation proceedings were taken. The portion of Vernon school district not included in the annexed territory still maintains its organization and name as such district, and prosecutes this suit to quiet its title to the property formerly conveyed to it for school purposes, but which is now within the limits of the city of Los Angeles; and the question is whether said lot is now owned and should be controlled by said Vernon school district or by the board of education of said city. It is contended that the act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358) is unconstitutional, in that it confers upon the electors of the municipality a special privilege not conferred upon the electors of the territory proposed to be annexed, viz. that of petitioning the municipal authorities to make the proposed annexation. This provision of the statute, however, applies to the electors of all towns and cities, and is inapplicable to all those not similarly situated. The statute is therefore general, and not special, and does not confer a special privilege, since it is a privilege not denied to any elector or electors of any town or city. The residents of the territory proposed to be added are, however, fully protected, as the annexation cannot be made unless the proposition to annex shall be submitted to the electors of such territory as well as to the electors of the municipality, and authorized by a majority of the voters thereof.

Appellant also contends that, if the effect of the annexation under the act of 1889 is to make the board of education of the city the successors in office of the trustees of the Vernon school district, such purpose of the act is not expressed in its title. The title of said act is as follows: "An act to provide for the alteration of the boundaries of and for the annexation of territory to incorporated towns and cities, and for the incorporation of such annexed territory in and as part of such municipalities, and for the districting, government and municipal control of annexed territory;" and the act provides: "And henceforth such annexed territory shall be to all intents and purposes a part of such municipal corporation, except only that no part of such annexed territory shall ever be taxed to pay any portion of any indebtedness or liability of such municipal corporation contracted prior to or existing at the time of such annexation." It is too clear to require argument or illustration that this provision in the body of the act is within its title, and that for all municipal purposes, except as above stated, the annexed territory is part of the city of Los Angeles, and subject to the same municipal control, and the operation of the same statutes, that it would have been if originally incorporated therewith. If, therefore, public schools and school property within municipalities are subject to municipal control, it follows that the school property here in question belongs to the city, and is rightfully in the possession and under the control of the board of education of said city, and is its property. Even if this territory had not been annexed to city for municipal purposes under the act of 1889, but upon petition had been annexed to the city "for school purposes only," the part of Vernon school district so annexed would have been under the sole control of the board of education of the city. Pol. Code, § 1576, as amended St. 1891, p. 157. So, in the absence of statutory provisions governing the ownership of municipal property upon the division of a municipality, municipal property, consisting of real estate, belongs to the municipality within which it is located by the division. Los Angeles Co. v. Orange Co., 97 Cal. 331, 32 Pac. 316, and authorities there cited. Any other conclusion would involve a conflict of jurisdiction not to be tolerated. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CLARKE et al. v. MOHR et al. (S. F. 1,771).¹

UNDERTAKINGS ON APPEAL—WANT OF CONSIDERATION—MATERIAL ALTERATION AFTER EXECUTION—DIVISIBILITY OF OBLIGATION—NOTICE OF APPEAL.

1. Undertakings on appeal, executed between the time of the entering of judgment and the filing of a motion for new trial, cannot be made to cover the appeal from the order denying the new trial, as at the time of their execution there is no right of appeal from such order, and, consequently, no consideration for the undertaking in that respect.

2. Where an undertaking on appeal was executed between the time of the entering of judgment and the filing of a motion for new trial, and by its terms covered the appeal both from the judgment and from the order denying the new trial, but omitted the date of such order, a subsequent interlineation of the date of the order is such an alteration of the contract as to discharge the surety from all obligation.

3. Where an undertaking on appeal is executed between the time of entering the judgment and the filing of a motion for a new trial, and is designed to cover the appeal from both, the instrument is divisible, and the fact that it is invalid for want of consideration as to the appeal from the order does not affect its validity as to the appeal from the judgment.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, providing that, where defendant has not appeared, notice of subsequent proceedings is not necessary, defendants who have not been served with summons in an action, or appeared therein, are not entitled to notice of appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action on a promissory note by J. F. Clarke against H. Mohr, Kate C. Byrne, Florence B. Hinckley, and others. Complaints in intervention were filed by Henry I. Kowalsky and Timothy Hurley. From a judgment in favor of the intervenor Kowalsky, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff and the intervenor Hurley appeal. Motions by defendants Byrne and Hinckley and intervenor Kowalsky to dismiss the appeal. Denied as to defendant Hinckley. Granted as to the intervenor Kowalsky and defendant Byrne.

Alfred Clarke, for plaintiff. Wilson & Wilson and H. Wilkins, for defendants. T. J. Crowley and A. R. Cotton, for interveners.

HARRISON, J. Motions to dismiss the appeals. The plaintiff commenced this action to recover judgment in her favor upon a promissory note executed by the defendant Kate C. Byrne, and for its payment out of the sale of a certain security given therefor, and also for determining the rights of the other defendants in the proceeds of said sale. Mrs. Byrne filed an answer to this complaint, denying its several allegations. Complaints in intervention were thereafter filed by H. I. Kowalsky and by Timothy Hurley, and to these complaints answers were filed by the plaintiff and by Mrs. Byrne. The cause was tried by the court, and judgment entered June 20, 1898, "that the intervenor Henry I. Kowalsky have and recover from the defendant Florence Blythe Hinckley the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, and that plaintiff take nothing by this action, and that said intervenor Timothy Hurley take nothing by this action, and that this action be dismissed as to all the other defendants therein." The motion for a new trial was denied December 2, 1898. From this order and from the judgment the plaintiff and the intervenor Hurley have appealed.

1. The defendants Byrne and the intervenor Kowalsky have moved to dismiss the appeals, upon the ground that no sufficient undertaking on appeal has been filed in behalf of either appellant. These undertakings, for the sum of $300 each, are dated August 9, 1898, and on that day the sureties qualified as such before a notary public, but the undertakings were not filed until December 3, 1898. Each of the instruments recites that judgment has been rendered against the appellants therein "and motion for new trial was denied Dec. 3, 1898"; that the appellant is dissatisfied with said judgment "and denial of new trial," and is desirous of appealing therefrom; that in consideration of the premises and of such appeal the sureties undertake and promise, etc.

It is claimed in support of the motions that the undertakings have been altered since their execution by the insertion and interlineation therein of the above-quoted words: "and motion for new trial was denied Dec. 3, 1898," and the words "and denial of new trial," and that thereby the undertakings became invalid. There are many reasons, as well from the appearance of the undertakings themselves as from the circumstances connected with their filing, in support of the contention that the above interlineations were made after the instruments were signed and verified; but the appellants have presented affidavits by the sureties thereon, in which they state that with the exception of the words "Dec. 3, 1898," the above-quoted words were inserted in the undertakings at the time they were signed. These affidavits are not contradicted, and we must hold that the facts are as therein stated. At the time the instruments were signed the motion for a new trial had not been presented to the court for its consideration, and the order denying it was not made until December 2, 1898. There was, therefore, no right of appeal therefrom on behalf of either of the appellants at the time they were signed and verified, and consequently no consideration for the execution of an undertaking upon such appeal. The interlineation of the words "Dec. 3, 1898," after the signing of the undertaking, was such an alteration of the contract entered into by the sureties as to discharge them from all obligation thereon. It is not shown when or by whom the alteration was made, but the respondents are entitled to an undertaking sufficient in fact as well as in form, and are not to be subjected to the necessity of showing that the sureties thereon are liable by reason merely of an estoppel in pais. The undertaking upon the appeal from the order denying a new trial must therefore be held invalid.

The undertaking on the appeal from the judgment is, however, distinct from that upon the appeal from the order denying a new trial, and, although both may be included in the same instrument, the validity of each is to be determined by a reference to the appeal for which it is given. An appeal from the order is frequently dismissed, while that from the judgment is allowed to remain, and vice versa. The words in the instrument herein referring to the order denying a new trial do not affect the undertaking upon the appeal from the judgment, and may be regarded as surplusage. At the time the instrument was assigned by the sureties, the judgment had been entered, and the subsequent appeal therefrom was a sufficient consideration to make it a valid and effective obligation whenever it should be filed. The statute does not require that the undertaking shall not be signed by the sureties until after the appeal is taken, or limit any time between the two acts, but merely requires that it shall be "filed" within five days after the service of the notice of appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 940. The undertaking has no effect until that time, but upon being filed it becomes an executed and valid obligation upon the sureties. See Wheeler v. Farmer, 38 Cal. 215.

2. A motion is also made on behalf of the respondent Hinckley to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground that the notice of appeal was not served upon certain other defendants. The record does not show, however, that either of these defendants was served with the summons in the action, or appeared therein, and consequently service upon them of the notice was not required. Code Civ. Proc. § 1014. Unless they had been brought before the superior court, they would not be affected by its judgment, or by any reversal thereof by this court. The want of a sufficient undertaking is not made a ground of the motion by this respondent, and cannot therefore be considered. Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 Pac. 48. The respondent may have waived the giving of the undertaking.

The motions to dismiss the appeals from the judgment are denied. The appeals from the order denying a new trial are dismissed as to the respondents Kowalsky and Byrne, and the motion therefor by the respondent Hinckley is denied.

CRAWFORD et al. v. TRANS-ATLANTIC FIRE INS. CO. (L. A. 540.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 28, 1899.)

INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY—EVIDENCE OF PAROL CONTRACT—DECLARATIONS OF AGENTS.

In an action on a fire insurance policy written before, but not delivered until after, the property covered thereby was destroyed by fire, it is material for plaintiff to show an oral contract existing before the fire, and for that purpose any statements made by the agents of defendant while engaged in the transaction with the plaintiff, and up to the time the policy was delivered, are part of the res gestæ, and competent; but declarations of such agents, made thereafter, when not acting in connection with the business with plaintiff, and which relate wholly to the past transaction, are hearsay, and their admission is error.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by E. H. Crawford and others against the Trans-Atlantic Fire Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. S. Goodfellow and Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for appellant. W. H. Spencer, for respondents.

BRITT, C. Action on a policy of fire insurance, which in terms purports to be the contract of defendant, and to insure a certain stable building, the property of plaintiff Crawford, to the amount of $1,000, for the period of one year commencing at noon of May 2, 1897. The defense is that the instrument was not executed by defendant, and never took effect as its contract. For the purposes of the trial the parties stipulated that from April 1, 1897, to May 15, 1897, one Roberts and one Barrett "were, and each of them was, the agent of the defendant, and authorized to execute said policy, if it was executed." It appeared in evidence for plaintiffs: That said Roberts was a traveling agent for defendant, and said Barrett was its local agent at the town of San Luis Obispo, where said building was situated. That, as the result of some oral negotiations between Crawford and both of said agents on April 30, 1897, Roberts on that day prepared and signed said policy, and left it with Barrett; Crawford having agreed to accept the same, and pay the premium thereon. On the following day—May 1st—Barrett sought Crawford for the purpose of delivering the policy, but, failing to find him, kept the document over May 2d, which was a Sunday; and while it was so in his possession, on Sunday night, the building was destroyed by fire. On May 3d, after the fire, Barrett delivered the policy to a certain bank as Crawford's agent. A few days later Crawford offered to pay the premium on the policy to said agents, but they declined to receive it. On behalf of defendant there was evidence tending to show that Crawford refused the proposal of said agents to insure the building and to issue said policy, and that the same was prepared without his consent, Barrett expecting to induce him to accept it; and that the delivery to the bank after the fire was, it seems, but provisional, pending other arrangements. There was a verdict and judgment for plaintiffs.

The main question for determination was whether all the acts of said agents, taken together, amounted to an execution of the policy, so that it became obligatory on the defendant. If the policy—as the evidence for plaintiffs tended to show—was the memorial of a contract, which in its essentials had been agreed upon by parol before the fire, and which the parties intended should take effect, according to its terms, on the 2d of May at noon, then certainly the subsequent delivery was sufficient to make the defendant liable on the instrument; its liability thereon probably attached even without actual delivery to the insured or his agent. Lightbody v. Insurance Co., 23 Wend. 18; City of Davenport v. Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 17 Iowa, 276; Insurance Co. v. Colt, 20 Wall. 560; Yonge v. Society, 30 Fed. 902; Harrington v. Insurance Co. (S. F. 1,658; Aug. 14, 1899), 58 Pac. 180. If, however, as the evidence for defendant tended to show, there had been, before the fire, no agreement that defendant should insure the building, and issue its policy accordingly,—such an agreement as would have made Crawford liable for the premium,—then it is equally plain that delivery of the policy after the building had been destroyed, to the knowledge of the parties, could not impart to the instrument any effect whatever. Civ. Code, §§ 2527, 2528; Clark v. Insurance Co., 89 Me. 26, 35 Atl. 1008; People v. Dimick, 107 N. Y. 13, 14 N. E. 178. It was therefore important evidence for the plaintiffs if they could show that defendant considered or admitted at any time that the contract was complete, and the risk had attached. For this purpose all the acts and declarations of either Roberts or Barrett which might characterize or explain their intent while they were engaged in the business with Crawford, and until the delivery of the policy to the bank, were part of the res gestæ, and hence admissible evidence against the defendant. Of this nature, for instance, was the testimony of the plaintiff

Bush—who was named in the policy as payee of the insurance in case of loss—that Barrett said to him, at the time he handed the policy to the bank: "You are a thousand dollars better off than you thought. Here is a policy for a thousand dollars just put on your stable." Testimony such as this was plainly competent. But the plaintiffs went further. The court allowed them, over the objection of defendant, to prove as part of their case in chief a declaration made by said Roberts at a time subsequent to the delivery of the policy, and when he was not acting for defendant in any business connected therewith, that he "had received a dispatch from his company to adjust a loss on Crawford's stable, and that he had found out since * * * that his policy didn't cover." Evidence was also admitted, over like objection, of a statement made by Barrett, on the morning following the fire, that "he had issued a policy for a thousand dollars on that building to Mr. Crawford a few days before." By these rulings, and one or two others of similar character, the plaintiffs were allowed to place before the jury evidence of admissions by defendant's agents, made not as part of the transactions looking to the execution of the policy, nor while discharging any duty of their agency pertaining to their treaty with Crawford, but as mere narration or illustration of their past conduct. Such evidence was only hearsay, and was incompetent. Beasley v. Packing Co., 92 Cal. 388, 28 Pac. 485; Dean v. Insurance Co., 62 N. Y. 642; Insurance Co. v. Mahone, 21 Wall. 152; Walker v. Insurance Co., 51 Iowa, 682, 2 N. W. 583. It was material to the issue pending, and for the error in its admission the judgment and order denying a new trial should be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

ELLIS et al. v. RADEMACHER et al. (L. A. 571.)

PLEADING—RELIEF INCONSISTENT WITH COMPLAINT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 580, provides that, where there is no answer, the court shall give plaintiff no more relief than he has demanded in his complaint, but in other cases may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint, and embraced within the issue. Defendant agreed to sell a half interest in a mining claim to plaintiff in consideration that plaintiff would erect a stamp mill and procure a water supply. The proceeds of the mine were to be equally divided. Defendant failed to perform, and plaintiff sued, praying for specific performance by defendant, for an injunction restraining him from carrying away the ore and from conveying the mine to any one except plaintiff, and for general relief. Defendant answered, admitting the allegations in the complaint, and praying that plaintiff might have judgment. Held, that a decree directing specific performance by defendant, enjoining him from selling the mine to any one other than plaintiff, and from digging the ore, that did not order plaintiff to perform the contract on his part, or pay the consideration, was erroneous, and granted relief that was not consistent with the complaint.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Action by John R. Ellis and others against Aleck Rademacher and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant Rademacher appealed. Reversed.

T. M. Osmont, for appellant. W. W. Middlecoff, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. The defendant Rademacher (appellant here) filed an answer, and by his answer admitted the allegations of the complaint, and prayed that plaintiff might have judgment. Findings were filed, and judgment entered for respondents. The appellant claims that the findings and judgment are too broad, and give to respondent more relief than is warranted by the complaint. It is well settled that a judgment by default cannot give any relief in excess of that demanded in the complaint. Code Civ. Proc. § 580; Raun v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 19; Lamping v. Hyatt, 27 Cal. 102. A default admits the material allegations of the complaint, and no more. It is not necessary to determine whether there is any difference in principle between a case where the allegations of the complaint are admitted by the legal effect of the silence of a party, and where such allegations are admitted by a written answer. In either case the relief given to the plaintiff cannot exceed that which the law awards as the legal conclusion from the facts alleged. The court cannot grant any relief in either case not warranted by the averments of the complaint. Carpentier v. Brenham, 50 Cal. 551; Cummings v. Cummings, 75 Cal. 441, 17 Pac. 442; Hicks v. Murray, 43 Cal. 522. Our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 580) provides as follows: "The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint; but, in any other case, the court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue." It will be necessary, therefore, for us to determine whether in this case the relief granted was consistent with the complaint, as there were no issues made by the answer. The complaint alleges that on July 28, 1896, the appellant and respondent Ellis entered into a written contract by the terms of which the appellant agreed to sell and convey to said Ellis an undivided one-half of a certain mining claim known as the "Baron Mine" in consideration of the agreement of said Ellis to erect a quartz stamp mill on the nearest adjacent mill site where water can be obtained, the said mill to be erected within six months from the time that the water can be procured at some near and suitable place, the appellant reserving the surface ground upon which his cabin stands. The proceeds from the mining and milling of ores were to be equally divided. Each party was to have equal voice in determining whether or not the milling capacity of the mill so erected should be increased. Respondent Ellis further agreed to use his best endeavors immediately to secure a sufficient water supply as near said mine as possible. The complaint further alleges that the appellant interfered with and prevented respondent Ellis from performing said contract on his part, and from prospecting for water on said claim, and from taking ores therefrom, and from entering thereon for the purpose of erecting a mill, and that appellant ousted and ejected the respondent Ellis from said claim. The prayer of the complaint is for a specific performance of the contract, and that defendants be enjoined from digging up and carrying away the ores, and from interfering with plaintiffs' rights, and that appellant Rademacher be enjoined from conveying the mine to any one other than respondent Ellis, and for general relief.

The decree entered grants more relief to respondents than is authorized by the complaint in several respects. It directs appellant to specifically perform the contract, while it does not so direct the respondent Ellis, and fixes no time within which the respondent Ellis is to erect the quartz mill, or perform the conditions of said contract on his part. It makes it the duty of the appellant absolutely to perform the contract without any reference to the payment of the consideration by the respondent Ellis by performing the covenants of said contract on his part to be performed. It perpetually enjoins the appellant from conveying the said mine, or any part thereof, to any one other than the respondent Ellis. The injunction not only prevents the appellant from selling and conveying the undivided one-half of said mine, which, under the terms of the contract, he was to convey to respondent Ellis, but it absolutely prevents the appellant from conveying any part of the mine to any one other than respondents, and this without any regard to the question as to whether or not respondent Ellis ever complies with the contract on his part. It enjoins the appellant forever from digging up or carrying away any ore or gold on said premises, with no condition as to whether or not the respondent Ellis shall comply with the said contract on his part. The decree, in the respects pointed out, is erroneous, and grants relief beyond that authorized by the complaint. The appellant has the right to have respondent Ellis proceed with reasonable diligence, and in a reasonable time, to erect the said quartz mill as provided in said contract. The time fixed by the said contract for the erection of said mill is six months from the time that water can be procured at some near and suitable place. The respondent Ellis should use reasonable diligence, and within a reasonable time, to procure water, and, if he shall fail to do so, the consideration will have failed, and the appellant will not longer be bound by the contract. The decree as entered is in favor of Downing, one of the plaintiffs, and the only allegation of the complaint as to him is that plaintiffs (of whom Downing is one) are informed and believe that plaintiff Downing has, or claims to have, some interest in said mining property. The complaint, therefore, did not authorize any judgment in favor of plaintiff Downing. The contract is set forth in the complaint as "Exhibit A," and the decree enjoins the appellant "from doing any act whatever which will in any manner interfere with the rights of the plaintiffs under said Exhibit A." The decree should be definite as to the things to be performed and as to the acts enjoined. To enjoin the appellant from doing any act which will in any manner interfere with the plaintiffs' rights under a certain contract is too uncertain and indefinite to ever be enforced. The appellant is entitled to have the decree define his rights as well as the rights of the respondents, and to have it direct what specific acts appellant is to do, as well as what he is not to do. The decree should be definite and certain, and grant no greater relief than that authorized by the complaint. It should fix and define a time within which respondent Ellis shall be required to build the quartz mill upon the premises. We think the judgment should be reversed, and that the cause should be remanded, with instructions to the court below to render its judgment and decree in accordance with this opinion, and as authorized by the allegations of the complaint.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the court below to render its judgment and decree in accordance with this opinion, and as authorized by the allegations of the complaint.

HARRINGTON v. HOME LIFE INS. CO.
(S. F. 1,658.)

INSURANCE—FORFEITURE OR LAPSE—WAIVER OF NOTICE—NOTE IN PAYMENT OF PREMIUM—WHEN POLICY BECOMES OPERATIVE—WHEN NOTICE AND PROOF SHOULD BE MADE—LIMITATIONS.

1. Under the laws of the state of New York, which provide that no life insurance company doing business in that state shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy by reason of nonpayment of premium or interest, or any portion thereof, until 30 days after the mailing of a written notice to the assured, a policy issued by an insurance company located in the state of New York, and doing business in another state, to be performed in New York, cannot be forfeited for nonpayment of premium without a written notice to the assured, though the policy contains an express waiver of such notice.

2. Where an insurance company located in the state of New York and doing business in California issued a policy to the assured in the latter state, who gave a note for the first premium, and there was no rule of the company, condition in the policy or in the application, nor any instruction to the agents prohibiting payment by note, or which rendered the policy inoperative until payment in money was made or duly waived, a contention that, to make the policy operative, delivery must have been in California, because the contract could not be in force until payment in cash was waived by an unconditional delivery, is without force.

3. Where payment of the first premium has been made to an insurance company located in the state of New York and doing business in California, for which a receipt is given providing that in the event of acceptance of the application the policy shall be in force from the date of acceptance, and the company accepts the application, and prepares a policy at its home office in New York, the policy will be deemed in force when it was transmitted from New York to the local agent, and is an instrument executed out of California.

4. Where a policy of life insurance contains a covenant to pay the legal representatives of the assured, after due notice and satisfactory proof of death and interest, in accordance with the terms of the contract, the demand, notice, and proof must be made within the period limited.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Marguerite D. Harrington, administratrix of the estate of John T. Hope, deceased, against the Home Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. Elliott McAllister, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. February 20, 1888, plaintiff's intestate applied through Conway, an agent of defendant in San Francisco, for a policy of insurance upon his life for $10,000. The medical examination was had, and the risk accepted. Hope gave his note, payable to the order of Dunphy, the general agent at San Francisco, for the amount of the first premium, and received from the agent a conditional receipt. Dunphy testified: "He gave his note, and it was to show that a settlement was made at the time the application was made. We call it a conditional binding receipt." The receipt provided that, in the event of the acceptance of the application, the policy should be in force from the date of the acceptance. The application and note were placed with the general agent at San Francisco, who forwarded them to the home office at New York for its approval and acceptance. The amount of the note was charged to Conway, the soliciting agent, and was actually paid to the company by him about one year thereafter. Whether Hope paid is left as a matter of inference and presumption. A policy was issued at the New York office, which alone had authority to accept and issue policies, on the 8th day of March, 1888, was sent to the San Francisco agency, and received there March 12, 1888. Some time during the same month, and before Conway had actually paid the amount of the first premium to the company, the policy was handed to Hope, or to his father-in-law for him. It must be held that the first annual premium was paid by the promissory note, and that the delivery of the policy is evidence that payment in actual cash was waived, if it can justly be said that such payment is made a condition precedent to the delivery of the policy. Apparently Hope paid no further attention to the insurance, and died September 22, 1891, delinquent for three annual premiums. This action was commenced August 21, 1895. The defendant, among other defenses, denied the issuance of a paid policy; averred that the first premium was not paid before the delivery of the policy, and therefore, by the terms of the policy, defendant is not liable thereon; also that the policy lapsed by the failure of deceased to pay the annual premiums; and pleaded the statute of limitations. At the trial a nonsuit was granted, and a motion for a new trial was made by the plaintiff, which was denied. The appeal is from that order and from the judgment. Motion for nonsuit was based upon three grounds: (1) It does not appear that any premium except the first was paid; (2) it was proven that no premium except the first was ever tendered; and (3) the action is barred by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is averred in the complaint that the second premium had not been paid, and it is not contended that any part of any premium had been tendered. In fact, Hope paid no attention to it after its issuance. The insurance company is located in the state of New York, and it is agreed that the policy is a contract which was to be performed in that state. By a statute of that state then and now in force it was provided: "No life insurance company doing business in the state of New York shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy hereinafter issued, or renewed by reason of nonpayment of any annual premium or interest, or any portion thereof, except as hereinafter provided." Laws 1876, c. 341, as amended by Laws 1877, c. 321. It is then provided that written notice shall be mailed to the assured, and no forfeiture declared until 30 days thereafter. The policy contains an express waiver of this notice. In Griffith v. Insurance Co., 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113, this precise question was decided, and it was ruled that the statutory notice could not be waived. "The statute is a limitation upon the power of the company to do a specific thing, except under prescribed conditions. That which a corporation has not the power to do, if attempted to be done by it, is ultra vires and void." It is averred in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, that no statutory notice was ever mailed to Hope. It is held by the court of appeals in New York (De Frece v. Insurance Co., 136 N. Y. 144, 32 N. E. 556) that: "The contract is to be read as if the act of 1876 had been literally incorporated into it. There could be no forfeiture for this cause unless the defendant alleged and proved nonpayment after due service of the notice required by law." This authority was followed in Griffith v. Insurance Co., supra.

The suit was not commenced for more than three years after the death of Hope, but was commenced in less than four years. An action upon a contract, obligation, or liability founded upon an instrument in writing executed in this state is barred in four years (section 337, Code Civ. Proc.); if founded upon an instrument in writing executed out of the state, within two years (subdivision 1, § 339, Id.). Is the policy upon which suit is based an instrument executed in this state, or was it executed, within the meaning of the statute, in the state of New York? The question of locality depends upon the further inquiry as to when the contract became in force. The defendant contends that it was in force as soon as the risk was accepted by the company, and the policy was issued and sent from its office to its local agent for Hope. The plaintiff claims that the policy was not in force until it was handed to Hope by the local agent. This last contention is based, in part at least, upon the fact that Hope had not paid the first premium in cash, and counsel argue that such payment was expressly made a condition to the taking effect of the policy. Appellant relies for authority upon this point upon Griffith v. Insurance Co., supra, and Jurgens v. Insurance Co., 114 Cal. 165, 45 Pac. 1054, and 46 Pac. 386. In the policies considered in those cases it was expressly stipulated that the policy should not be in force until actual payment of the premium to the company during the lifetime and good health of the insured. There is no equivalent stipulation in the policy involved here. There was no provision that it should not be in force until the payments were made. There is no express requirement that the premiums shall be paid in money, nor were the agents restricted, as in those cases, by the express direction that they should receive only cash in payment. Still, in each of those cases it was held that the agent could waive the requirement as to cash payments, and that he did so by an unconditional delivery of the policy. Another difference between the Griffith Case and this is that there the policy was issued and sent with express instructions not to deliver it until the money was paid by the insured, and he was found to be in good health. There was nothing of the kind in this case. The only mention of cash payments in this case is an indorsement upon the policy, which is signed by no one, and presumably not known to the insured prior to his receipt of the policy. In his application he was made to covenant that the policy should not bind the company "until the premium thereon shall have been received by said company in the lifetime of the assured, and that it shall not continue in force in case of default of payment of any note or notes which may be given in part payment of the premium thereon." Instead of prohibiting payment by note, this was a plain intimation that notes might be accepted in payment. The application made by Hope was reported to the general agent at San Francisco, who was also present when the note was given. He testified: "He gave his note, and it was to show the company that a settlement was made at the time the application was made. We call it a conditional binding receipt." He said further that the receipt showed the amount of premium paid for the amount of insurance applied for, and stated that the insurance would be in force "from the date when the application was accepted from the company." In the policy it is recited: "In consideration of the representations and agreements contained in the application therefor, and the sum of two hundred eighty-three dollars and sixty cents, to be paid on or before the delivery of this policy," etc. Among the covenants in regard to forfeiture is one to the effect that if the statements contained in the application shall be found to be untrue, "or in case the said John T. Hope shall not actually pay the first premium, as aforesaid, before the delivery of this policy, and while the said John T. Hope is in good health," or shall not pay subsequent annual premiums, or shall engage in certain specified extrahazardous employments, "or shall die in consequence of a duel, or of the violation of law, then, and in every such case, the said company shall not be liable for the payment of the sum assured, or any part thereof, and this policy shall cease, and be null, void, and of no effect." Of course, a covenant for a forfeiture implies that the policy is in force, and must do so here, notwithstanding the use of the word "delivery"; and, besides, this contains no provision forbidding payments being made by note. Finally, the attesting clause is as follows: "In witness whereof, the Home Life Insurance Company has, by its president and secretary, signed and delivered this contract at the city of New York, in the state of New York, this eighth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight." We may conclude that there was no rule of the company, condition in the policy, or in the application for it, nor any instruction to the agents, which prohibited payments by notes, or which rendered the policy inoperative until payment in money was made or duly waived. There is, therefore, no force in the argument that the delivery must have been in California, because the contract could not be in force until such condition was waived by an unconditional delivery to Hope.

The question, then, is whether the policy was in force so soon as issued and sent from the home office to the agent in San Francisco for Hope. There was no stipulated condition as to the delivery except that the first premium should be paid while he was in health. That had been paid by his note, for which he received a conditional receipt. The condition was that the risk should be accepted, and would have been the same had the premium been paid in cash. It was a payment if the risk was accepted, otherwise not; and it was provided that the policy should be in force as soon as the application was accepted by the issuance of a policy. Could the company, after the policy had been sent, have then refused to deliver? The test is to suppose Hope had paid in cash, that he had been guilty of no misrepresentation, and had died while it was in transitu. There being no condition requiring an actual tradition of the instrument to him while alive and in good health, such as may be found in some cases, I think the company would have been liable. Our statute makes the rule of delivery as to written instruments the same as in regard to grants (section 1627, Civ. Code), and in section 1059, Id., it is enacted: "Though a grant be not actually delivered into the possession of the grantee, it is yet constructively delivered in the following cases: (1) Where the instrument is by the agreement of the parties at the time of execution understood to be delivered, and under such circumstances that the grantee is entitled to immediate delivery." It is therefore a matter solely of intention. If it was intended that document should be in force before it was actually handed over, it will be deemed constructively delivered. Of course, the agent could not complete the contract of insurance, but he could provisionally contract, subject to the approval of the principal, whose ratification would make the contract binding as made. The corporation, by its attesting clause, declared that the instrument was delivered in New York on the 8th of March. By itself this formal clause means but little. But the understanding was that it was then to be in force, and it was sent to the local agent for delivery without condition. No act was to be done, no fact determined, before delivery. Under such instructions, supposing everything had been properly done, and all was fair and honest, had Hope died during the transmission, his beneficiaries could have enforced the policy; and, that being so, its execution was complete when it left the New York office. And such, I think, are all the authorities. In Bliss, Ins. § 150, it is said: "If the company so far accepts the application as to prepare and forward a policy to its agent for delivery, and if payment of the premium has been made, or if such payment is not a condition of the policy's taking effect, or, being a condition, is waived, the contract is then complete, and the company cannot revoke its acceptance, though the policy had not been delivered." To the same effect is 1 May, Ins. 97; 1 Beach, Ins. § 482; Richards, Ins. 54; Elliott, Ins. § 14; 1 Wood, Ins. 49; Ford v. Insurance Co., 99 Am. Dec. 671, note. The matter is elaborately considered in Yonge v. Society, 30 Fed. 902; also in Hallock v. Insurance Co., 26 N. J. Law, 268. In this last case it is said: "Breck, the agent, and the mail were only the vehicles to carry it to him, and it was the same thing as if mailed or sent directly to the plaintiff. The defendants suggest in answer that Breck was their agent, and that by sending it to him they did not part with the possession of the policy, and that they only gave authority to Breck to deliver, which they could and did revoke before actual delivery. But when they mailed the policy to Breck to deliver they did not constitute him their agent to receive it and keep it for them, nor to retain it as their agent. * * * It was a delivery to Breck to deliver it to plaintiff, which was a good delivery to plaintiff." This was affirmed in the court of errors. 27 N. J. Law, 645. See, also, Fied v. Insurance Co., 47 Barb. 127, affirmed in 50 N. Y. 243. In Insurance Co. v. Babcock, 104 Ga. 67, 30 S. E. 273, the matter is again gone over, and the cases cited and discussed. It is concluded that the delivery is complete when sent to the local agent to be unconditionally delivered, and, though it was lost on the way, it was nevertheless the property of the insured. Regarding, therefore, the expressed intention of the parties, and the law as declared in the authorities, the policy was in force when it was transmitted from New York, and is an instrument executed out of this state.

But the appellant argues that, conceding that section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable, still it does not appear that the claim is barred, because it is not shown that the cause of action accrued two years before the commencement of the action. Hope died September 22, 1891. The complaint was filed August 21, 1895, in which it is averred that notice of the death was given more than 60 days before the action was begun. No proof having been made, we must assume that no notice of proof was made until immediately before the action was commenced. The only statement in the policy upon the subject is the covenant to pay the legal representatives of John T. Hope, after due notice and satisfactory proof of death and interest, in accordance with the terms of the contract. It is not provided, as in Case v. Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 473, 23 Pac. 534, that an action shall not be commenced until something else has been done in addition to the demand. The main thing is notice and proof of death and the interest of the party giving the notice. These things must necessarily be stated in any notice. Practically, this covenant calls for a demand only. But, in any event, the demand, notice, and proof should be made within the period of limitations, or the demand is stale, and suit cannot be maintained thereon. Meherin v. Produce Exchange, 117 Cal. 215, 48 Pac. 1074; Thomas v. Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 46 Pac. 899; Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 Pac. 877. In Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487, which is a leading case upon this question, it is said: "He is really and in fact able at any time to bring an action when he can by his own act fix the time of payment. It is no stretch of language to hold that a cause of action accrued for the purpose of setting the statute in motion as soon as the creditor, by his own act, and in spite of the debtor, can make the demand payable." This is, in my judgment, the true doctrine; otherwise, the demand is in this condition: The cause of action has accrued if the creditor so wills, but, if it suits his convenience, its life will be prolonged indefinitely. The rule is put upon a different theory in Bills v. Mining Co., 106 Cal. 9, 39 Pac. 43, which, however, may work the same result. It is there practically said that the cause of action does not accrue until demand, but, where demand can be made at any time, it must be made within the period of the statute, or the right of action is lost. This leaves undetermined whether, if the demand is made within the period, the creditor has not the whole period allowed by the statute after demand. But I think that is not the doctrine of the decisions. In Palmer v. Palmer the rule is applied as though the statute is put in motion as soon as demand may be made; otherwise, the creditor could, if he saw fit, add to the life of the contract a period equal to the statutory limitation. He cannot prevent the statute from running by failing to make the demand. Ball v. Railway Co., 62 Iowa, 751, 16 N. W. 592. Whenever he can, if he chooses, by the terms of the contract commence an action, the cause of action has accrued, for the purposes of the statute. Telegraph Co. v. Purdy, 83 Iowa, 430, 50 N. W. 45; Railroad Co. v. Burlingame, 36 Kan. 628, 14 Pac. 271. The order and judgment are affirmed.

In re ARMSTRONG'S ESTATE. (L. A. 612.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 23, 1899.)
ADMINISTRATORS—MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE
—FINAL ACCOUNTING.

1. The mere fact that an administrator pays off a lien on personal property of the estate, which, on a subsequent sale at public auction, fails to bring the amount of the lien, does not establish gross mismanagement of the estate, and the administrator is not chargeable with the loss, where he acted in good faith, and with reasonable care and prudence.

2. Where an action against an administrator to foreclose a mortgage on property of the estate was tried on its merits, the heirs of the decedent cannot charge the administrator with damages on the settlement of his accounts because of the alleged failure of his counsel to take advantage of a technical defect in the mortgagee's complaint.

3. Heirs of a decedent have no standing, on the settlement of the administrator's accounts, to charge him with damages on the ground of negligence in the management of the estate, where the estate was insolvent, and the negligence charged, if established, did not affect the interests of such heirs.

4. Where delay in the settlement of an estate resulted in no loss to the heirs, the administrator cannot be charged, on his final accounting, with damages therefor beyond interest on the balance in his hands.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

On final accounting of the administrator of Mary J. Armstrong, deceased. From an order allowing the administrator's account, B. F. H. Odell and others appeal. Annirmed.

Henning & Bowen, for appellants. Wells & Lee, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Appeal from order allowing final account of administrator. Deceased died October 20, 1889, leaving personal property, which sold at public sale for $681.79, and 10 acres of land, upon which there was a mortgage for $5,500. Claims were presented and allowed against said estate amounting to over $1,000. The administrator filed his final account in 1897, to which many objections and exceptions were made by the appellants, but two of which are urged upon this appeal.

1. It is first claimed that the court erred in not charging the administrator with $32.75 loss on sale of two horses belonging to the estate. It appears that at the time of the death of deceased the two horses had been for several months out on pasture with one McMaster; that the administrator was informed by one of the creditors that the horses were assets of the estate; that thereupon the said administrator found the horses in the possession of McMaster, who claimed a lien upon them for pasturage to the amount of $93.66. After some negotiations, McMaster agreed to accept $89.50 in full, which the administrator paid, and the horses were delivered to him. The administrator testified that, at the time, he believed the horses would sell for considerably more than the amount of the lien, but that he sold them at public auction, and they only brought $56.75. This testimony was not contradicted, and there was no evidence of want of good faith on the part of the administrator. The sale was approved without objection, after due notice given. It appears that the transaction resulted in a loss to the estate of $32.75, but the loss cannot, from the testimony, be attributable to the negligence of the administrator. He appears to have acted in good faith, and for what he deemed to be the best interest of the estate; and he could not legally be charged with the loss of the sum unless it had been made to appear that he was guilty of negligence in not using ordinary care and diligence in connection with the matter. Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 525, 31 Pac. 584. It is not claimed that the administrator did not have the authority to redeem the horses; neither is it claimed that there was not a valid lien upon them. The specification is for gross mismanagement of the estate in selling the horses for less than the amount paid out for redemption, but no proof is before us of any want of good faith in the transaction. The act might have been for the benefit of the estate, and, as there is no proof of negligence or want of ordinary care, and the proof shows that the administrator acted in good faith, we must hold that if his acts could, under any state of facts, be sustained as valid, they must be presumed to be valid under such state of facts, rather than to be held invalid from the mere fact that the property did not sell for enough to repay the amount paid out by the administrator. Burnett v. Lyford, 93 Cal. 119, 28 Pac. 855. We do not lay down the rule that an administrator can, of his own volition, redeem pledged personal property, or property upon which there is a valid lien, under all circumstances, and justify his acts in case of loss to the estate. If the proof should show that the property, at the time it was redeemed, was of little value, while a large amount was paid out for the purpose of redeeming it, or if the circumstances were such that we could not say a reasonably prudent man would have done the same thing, then the circumstances might justify the charging of the loss to the administrator; but we cannot say, as a matter of law, that a reasonably prudent business man might not make the honest mistake of paying out more to free property from a lien than the property would sell for after the lien was extinguished.

2. The holder of the mortgage which was executed by the deceased in her lifetime brought suit against the administrator for the foreclosure of the same, and in the decree were included the sums of $571.12 for taxes and interest thereon, and $2,643.88 interest on the promissory note. It is claimed that in the complaint on foreclosure there was no allegation of payment of taxes, and that the administrator and his counsel, notwithstanding this fact, consented to the taxes being included in the decree. The mortgage provided that, in case of foreclosure, the mortgagee should be entitled to include in the decree all taxes paid out upon the property. The bill of exceptions shows that proof was made of the amount of taxes so paid, and that the attorneys for the administrator found the same to be correct. It therefore appears that the foreclosure case was tried upon the theory that the complaint contained the necessary allegation as to taxes, and it is too late now to raise the objection for the first time. As the objection, if raised, would have been merely technical, and as the bill of exceptions shows that the taxes were properly included according to the mortgage and the proof, we cannot now say it was negligence in the administrator not to object to the proof of the payment of the taxes because the complaint did not allege such payment. We must presume, in support of the judgment, that the matter was heard and determined in the lower court upon the theory that the complaint was sufficient, and the issue properly before the court. Bank v. Kowalsky, 105 Cal. 43, 38 Pac. 517.

It is claimed that the amount of interest in the decree was computed according to the terms of the promissory note, and not at the legal rate after the first publication of notice of creditors, and that thus the interest was $409.41 too much, and that the administrator here should be charged with it. This claim is made upon the theory that the estate is insolvent, and that after the first publication of notice to creditors the note and mortgage should have drawn interest at the legal rate, and not at the rate specified therein. It is not necessary to decide the question as to whether or not the rate of interest should have been 7 per cent. after the first publication of notice to creditors. If the estate is insolvent, as claimed by appellants, then, as devisees, they have no interest in the matter, and no creditor has appealed from the order allowing the account. We do not think the amount of the judgment in the foreclosure proceedings can be here attacked except by proof of negligence on the part of the administrator.

The decree was offered in evidence by appellants. It showed that plaintiff, in open court, waived all claim for attorney's fees, and all claim to a deficiency judgment; that the court heard evidence, and determined that there was due for principal and interest the sum of $8,715 and $11.45 costs. The evidence introduced in this record shows that the amount named in the decree was correct. It is not claimed that the property was ever redeemed, or that the administrator ever received any money from it in any way. It is not claimed that he acted fraudulently or corruptly. Another answer to the contention as to the interest and taxes amounting to $980.53 is that appellants are not in a position to complain. If the full amount claimed should be charged to the administrator, there would then not be sufficient on hand to pay the creditors, and appellants would not be entitled to anything. The proof shows that after the foreclosure sale the administrator made arrangements with the plaintiff in the suit, who was the purchaser at the sale, that, if he could find a purchaser for the land, she would deduct $1,000 from the amount due her; that the administrator tried to find such purchaser, but could not, and the plaintiff, who purchased the property at foreclosure sale, finally sold it for less than the amount due her. Finally, it is claimed that the administrator did not make any appraisal of the property, and was guilty of negligence in not settling up the estate sooner. These grounds could properly have been urged on petition to remove the administrator, but we do not understand that, in the absence of proof of loss by such negligence, the court could charge the administrator in the final account with damages. The proof shows that the administrator used diligent efforts to procure a purchaser for the land, not only up to, but after, the foreclosure sale; that he procured an agreement from the purchaser at the sale to take $1,000 less than the amount due her, and yet could find no purchaser. B. F. H. Odell, one of the appellants, testified that he knew of the efforts of the administrator to sell the land, and that the administrator requested him to assist in finding a purchaser; that he was aware that the administrator was making diligent efforts to sell the land, but that, owing to the conditions of the real-estate market, he could not find a purchaser; that he did not expect to get anything out of the real estate. There is not in the record any evidence that the real estate could ever, during the administration of the estate, have been sold for even enough to pay off the mortgage upon it. It would, then, have been a useless expense for the administrator to have appraised it. The court below, as a penalty for the delay in the administration, charged the administrator with interest on the balance of $154.42 in his hands at 7 per cent. per annum, with annual rests until the account was allowed, the amount being $80.48. In this the court below was justified. There are no other points requiring special notice. We advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

BALDWIN v. SUPERIOR COURT et al. (S. F. 1,770.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1899.)

APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—
BOND—SUPERSEDEAS.

Execution on a judgment for the payment of money is stayed by an appeal from an order denying a new trial and the filing of a bond in double the amount of the judgment, though the appellant did not appeal from the judgment; hence a writ of supersedeas will issue when the judgment creditor is proceeding to issue execution.

In bank. Application by E. J. Baldwin for a writ of supersedeas against the superior court and others to stay the execution of a judgment. Ordered issued.

Byron Waters, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. This is a petition for a writ of supersedeas to stay all proceedings upon a certain judgment against petitioner pending an appeal. The judgment was rendered in the superior court against petitioner, and in favor of one Roche, for a certain sum of money; petitioner appealed from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and gave an undertaking in double the amount of the judgment, but has not appealed from the judgment; and the plaintiff in the action is proceeding to enforce the judgment by execution, notwithstanding the undertaking, upon the theory that the execution of a judgment directing the payment of money cannot be stayed upon an appeal from an order denying a new trial, where there is no appeal from the judgment itself. It was held otherwise, however, in the recent case of Holland v. McDade (Cal.) 58 Pac. 9, and upon the authority of that case the petition must be granted. Let the writ of supersedeas issue as prayed for in the petition.

WAREHOUSEMEN—SALE OF GOODS FOR STORAGE CHARGES—NOTICE TO OWNER—AGENCY.

1. Since the enactment of Civ. Code, § 1856 (St. 1891, p. 470), providing that "a depository for hire has a lien for storage charges, which is regulated by the title on liens," the sale of goods, not perishable, by a warehouseman, for charges, is governed by Civ. Code, §§ 3000-3011, and a notice to the owner is essential, unless the sale is made in a judicial proceeding for foreclosure of the lien.

2. The want of knowledge of a warehouseman of the address of the owner of goods stored will not excuse the failure to give such owner notice of a sale of the goods for storage charges, where the foreman in charge of the warehouse when the goods were stored was given the address, and requested to note it on the books, which was not done.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by John Stewart against Louise Naud. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

P. W. Dooner, for appellant. McLachlan, Cohrs & Landt, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Defendant conducted the business of a warehouseman in the city of Los Angeles. Some time prior to August 9, 1895, the plaintiff stored in defendant's warehouse 14 boxes, described as containing household goods, which, as shown by the testimony of the plaintiff, were packed in April, 1892, in Canada, and shipped to Los Angeles. In July, 1895, plaintiff paid the freight charges and storage up to August 9, 1895, and defendant gave him a warehouse receipt for said goods, bearing said date, in which the subsequent storage charges were fixed at $1.50 per month. On September 1, 1895, no part of the storage dues accruing after August 9, 1895, having been paid, the defendant sold said 14 packages to pay said storage charges. This action is for the conversion of said goods by the defendant. It was tried by the court without a jury. The findings and judgment were for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

Many questions are discussed by counsel, but the more important are as to the sufficiency of the notice of sale, and whether the conditions existed which justified or authorized a sale. Touching the notice of sale, the answer alleged: "That prior to said sale she caused due and sufficient notice thereof to be published daily in the Los Angeles Herald, a daily newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in Los Angeles city, aforesaid, for ten consecutive days next before said day of sale, and caused a copy of said notice to be posted for the same period in a conspicuous place at the auction room of Thomas B. Clark (a duly-licensed auctioneer, by whom said sale was made and conducted), at a room 232 West

First street, in Los Angeles city, and a further copy of said notice to be posted for the same period in a conspicuous place in the said warehouse." There was no allegation of notice to the plaintiff. There was evidence tending to show that about the 5th of August the defendant's bookkeeper wrote a letter to the plaintiff, informing him that his goods would be sold on the 1st of September, unless the storage charges were paid prior to the sale, which letter was addressed to the plaintiff at Los Angeles city; that he had no exact information as to his residence; and that the letter was never returned,—while on the part of the plaintiff the evidence was to the effect that it was never received, and that the city directory showed that there were several persons in the city having the same name as the plaintiff. The plaintiff testified, in substance, that Hopkins, who was in charge of the warehouse at the time the goods were stored therein (and up to the end of July, 1896, at which time the defendant took personal charge of the business), knew the residence of plaintiff, and had been at his house after the goods were stored, and had been requested by plaintiff to enter his address on the warehouse books; but this was not done. Hopkins was not a witness, and this testimony was not rebutted. The court found that "the defendant sold all of said property in the manner and after notice as alleged in the answer, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, and wrongfully converted the same to her own use." At common law a warehouseman had a lien for storage charges, but such lien conferred no right to sell the property to which the lien attached, but only to hold it until his charges were paid. Jones, Liens, § 676. Such common-law liens were enforced by obtaining judgment for the charges and levying an execution upon the goods. In most of the states, however, a remedy by sale is provided by statute, though only in a few states are there any statutes expressly enacted for the purpose of providing a remedy for the enforcement of a warehouseman's lien, while in other states there are statutes applicable to the enforcement of all common-law liens. In this state the statute was silent as to liens for storage until 1891, when a new section was added to the Civil Code, designated as "section 1856." St. 1891, p. 470. It reads as follows: "A depository for hire has a lien for storage charges, which is regulated by the title on liens." By the same act another new section (1857) was added to the same Code, as follows: "If from any cause, other than want of ordinary care and diligence on his part, a depository for hire is unable to deliver perishable property, baggage or luggage received by him for storage, or to collect his charges due for storage thereon, he may cause such property to be sold, in open market, to satisfy his lien for storage: provided, that no property except perishable property shall be sold, under the provisions of this section, upon which storage charges shall not be due and unpaid for one year at the time of such sale;" and the act repealed all acts and parts of acts in conflict with its provisions. The section of the Civil Code last above quoted is the only one expressly relating to sales of stored property for the payment of charges found in the article relating to storage, while the first of said new sections declares that the lien of the depositary for hire is "regulated by the title on liens." Said section (Civ. Code, § 1857), however, has no application to this case. It applies only to perishable goods and baggage or luggage; and the court found, upon sufficient evidence, that the goods in question did not belong to either of these classes. It is therefore not necessary to consider or decide what construction should be given to that clause relating to the length of time the charges for storage must be due and unpaid to authorize a sale under its provisions. Turning to the title on liens, we find that "a pledgee, or pledge holder for reward, assumes the duties and liabilities of a depositary for reward" (Civ. Code, § 2997); and "a gratuitous pledge holder assumes the duties and liabilities of a gratuitous depositary" (Id. § 2998). These sections, as well as the general similarity between pledge holders and depositaries, would seem to make the provisions relating to the sale of pledged property appropriate to the sale of property by a depositary for hire, in the absence of special provisions relating to the latter. The provisions of the Civil Code relating to the sale of pledged property are sections 3000-3011, and they require a sale by auction upon notice to the public usual at the place of sale, and "actual notice to the pledgor of the time and place of sale at which the property pledged will be sold, at such reasonable time before the sale as will enable the pledgor to attend"; or the "pledgee may foreclose the right of redemption by a judicial sale under the direction of a competent court." The negligence of Hopkins, who was in charge of defendant's warehouse, in not noting plaintiff's address, as requested, was the negligence of defendant; and the defendant's want of knowledge of the residence of plaintiff could not, under these circumstances, if at all, excuse the want of actual notice to him of the time and place of sale. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

NEWPORT WHARF & LUMBER CO. v.
DREW et al. (L. A. 554.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 16, 1899.)

MECHANIC'S LIEN—EFFECT OF NOTICE BY SUBCONTRACTOR—PUBLIC BUILDING—AS-SIGNMENT BY CONTRACTOR—APPROVAL OF ESTIMATES—COMPETENCY OF TRUSTEE.

1. A notice given to trustees of a state institution by one who had furnished material to a contractor with such trustees for the erection of a building, that an amount is still due him for such material, and requiring the trustees to pay him any amount then due, or that shall thereafter become due, to the contractor, operates as a garnishment, and intercepts any payments which the contractor may then or thereafter be entitled to receive, but it does not affect a payment which previously became due, and has been transferred for value by the contractor.

2. Where a contract with trustees for the erection of a public building required the work to be done to the satisfaction of the trustees, and provided for partial payments as the work progressed, to be made on estimates certified by the superintendent, the trustees retaining 10 per cent. of such estimates until final completion and acceptance of the building, such a partial payment did not become due so as to be subject to disposition by the contractor until the estimates were approved and the amounts ordered paid by the trustees; and an assignment previously made by the contractor of the amount due on an estimate did not become effective until such approval, nor did an assignment of the 10 per cent. reserved become effective until final completion and acceptance of the work.

3. By St. 1876, p. 430, § 7, it is made the duty of the superintendent of construction of any state building to make an estimate of the amount of each payment to be made the contractor thereon; and, where a contract for the erection of an asylum building required the work to be done to the satisfaction of the trustees, the approval by them of an estimate made by the superintendent operates merely as an acceptance of the work done, and the fact that one of the trustees is president of a bank which has taken an assignment from the contractor of the amount due him on such an estimate does not disqualify him from acting thereon, nor can his right be questioned by any one except the state.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Action by the Newport Wharf & Lumber Company against H. L. Drew and others. From a judgment for defendants, and order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. S. Chapman and Jas. G. Scarborough, for appellant. Otis, Gregg & Hall, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Dewar & Chisholm, as contractors, entered into a contract with the board of trustees of the Southern California State Asylum for the Insane and Inebriates, January 5, 1894, by which they agreed to perform the labor and furnish the materials required for the carpenters' and plasterers' work of a ward building for the asylum at an agreed price to be paid as follows, viz. 90 per cent. of the value of the materials used and labor performed "as the work progresses," and payment in full "upon the acceptance of said work by the board of trustees." For the purpose of determining the amount of the several payments, the contract provided that the superintendent of construction should for each payment make a certificate "showing a full and accurate estimate of the labor performed and materials furnished under the contract, with the amount due thereon," which estimate should, in all cases, give the amount of the preceding estimates, if any, and the amount of labor performed and materials furnished since the last estimate; and it was further provided that these estimates should not be required oftener than once a month, and that the trustees of the asylum should retain from each and all payments a sum amounting to 10 per cent. of the amount thereof "until the completion and acceptance of said work" by them. Under these provisions, ten estimates, or certificates, were made by the superintendent of construction, of which the first seven were paid to the contractors. The controversy herein relates only to the last three estimates and the 10 per cent. of the contract price to be retained by the trustees. The customary mode of making these estimates was as follows: A certificate showing the labor performed and materials furnished by the contractors subsequent to the preceding one, together with their value, was prepared in the form of a bill of account in behalf of the contractors, with the approval of the superintendent of construction indorsed thereon, and was presented to the board of trustees for its allowance and order for payment. Upon the allowance and order for payment of this bill, a warrant was drawn by the state controller in favor of the trustees for the payment of 90 per cent. of its amount, and delivered to them. In this manner the eighth estimate, amounting to $2,814.75, was presented to the board of trustees, and by that body allowed and ordered paid January 14, 1895, and a warrant for 90 per cent. thereof, viz. $2,533.28, was drawn by the controller in favor of the trustees March 2d, and thereafter paid to the trustees. The ninth estimate, for $649.75, was presented and allowed February 11th, and a warrant for 90 per cent. thereof, viz. $584.78, was drawn March 29th, and paid to the trustees. March 18th the tenth and final estimate, for $725.90, was presented and allowed, and, the work of the contract having at that time been completed, a warrant for $2,579.33, the amount of this estimate, together with the amount of the previous deductions of 10 per cent., was drawn in favor of the trustees and paid May 17th. The plaintiff herein furnished materials to Dewar & Chisholm at various times prior to February 7, 1895, which were used in the performance of their contract, and on March 1, 1895, gave to the board of trustees a notice in writing of that fact, and that there was remaining unpaid thereof the sum of $6,654.10, and demanded payment to it of the balance then remaining unpaid to Dewar & Chisholm. Dewar & Chisholm borrowed money at different times during the performance of their contract from the Farmers' Exchange Bank, one of the defendants herein, and in some instances executed their promissory notes therefor, and assigned to the bank the estimates of the superintendent of construction as security for their payment. The superintendent of construction was accustomed to give to them informal certificates, or estimates, before presenting them to the board of trustees for allowance, and upon their receipt Dewar & Chisholm assigned them to the bank, as such security, with directions that the amount of the estimate be paid to the bank. Such informal certificate for the eighth estimate was made December 28, 1894, and was assigned to the bank on the next day as security for a note of $2,000, with an order for its payment to the bank. The ninth estimate is dated February 11, 1895, and was in like manner indorsed over to the bank February 13th. After the approval of these estimates by the board of trustees, and an order for their payment, the cashier gave notice to the trustees that they had been assigned to the bank, and requested that the amounts thereof should be paid to it. The tenth informal certificate is dated February 15th, and states that it will be presented to the trustees for their approval March 11th. It was indorsed over to the bank on the day of its date, and on the same day the cashier gave notice thereof to the trustees, stating therein that the estimate would be presented to the board at its next meeting. At the meeting of the trustees, March 18th, at which the tenth estimate was approved, the above notice given by the plaintiff to the trustees was considered by them, and they determined that, inasmuch as the above three estimates had been assigned for value to the bank, prior to the receipt of the notice, the amount thereof should be paid to the bank, and not to the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present action for the purpose of determining the respective rights of it and the bank to the same. The superior court held that the bank was entitled to the unpaid amount of its advances upon the estimates to Dewar & Chisholm, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the surplus thereof, and rendered judgment accordingly. From this judgment, and the order denying a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

1. The effect of the notice of March 1st, given by the plaintiff to the trustees, was to intercept in their hands any money which Dewar & Chisholm were then entitled to receive, or which afterwards might be payable to them in accordance with the terms of their contract. The notice was equivalent to a garnishment of the moneys then payable to them, and also operated as a notice to the trustees of the plaintiff's claim against Dewar & Chisholm, and that the payment to the latter of any moneys that might thereafter become payable to them under the terms of the contract would be at the peril of the trustees. The contractor cannot prevent the effect of this notice as to any payments that may mature after it is given, but its effect upon payments that have matured before it is given, but which have not been made, is to be determined by the rights of the contractor in reference to them. If he is still entitled to demand their payment from the owner, such payment is intercepted by the notice, but, if he has already assigned them to a third party, the notice will be inoperative to prevent their payment to such party. Code Civ. Proc. § 1184; Bates v. Santa Barbara Co., 90 Cal. 543,

27 Pac. 438; First Nat. Bank of Bridgeport v. Perris Irr. Dist., 107 Cal. 55, 40 Pac. 45. The provision in the contract for the payment of 90 per cent. of the value of materials used and labor performed "as the work progresses," with the condition that, before any payment should be made, the superintendent of construction should, not oftener than once a month, furnish an "estimate" of such labor and materials, "with the amount due thereon," rendered such installment of the contract price due and payable immediately upon the acceptance of the work by the trustees. The contract provided that the work should be done to the satisfaction of the board of trustees, and the contractors were not entitled to demand payment of the amount of the estimate until after such approval and acceptance. Their approval of the estimate and direction for its payment implied their satisfaction with the work without any formal declaration to that effect. Upon such approval and direction the obligation of the state which had been created in favor of the contractors by the trustees became complete, and the right of the contractors to immediate payment became vested in them, and was subject to their disposition. The provision in the contract for payment of the contract price in controller's warrants on the state treasurer did not affect this power of disposition, or right to immediate payment, or suspend its exercise until such warrants should be obtained. The failure or neglect to obtain a warrant immediately upon the approval of the estimates would have no greater effect than a similar failure on the part of the contractor, in the case of an ordinary building contract, to obtain a check from the owner immediately upon receiving the architect's certificate that the installment is payable. As seen above, the eighth and ninth estimates were approved and ordered paid before the plaintiff gave the notice of March 1st, but prior to the giving of the notice the contractors had assigned these estimates for value to the Farmers' Exchange Bank, and were no longer entitled to receive the amount of the warrants drawn therefor. The right of the bank to receive the amounts for which the warrants were drawn was not affected by the fact that the assignment had been made before the estimates were approved by the trustees. The contractors had assigned whatever claim they had by virtue of the "estimates," and the subsequent approval by the trustees, prior to receiving the notice from the plaintiff, inured to the benefit of their assignee. At the time the tenth estimate was presented to the trustees, the plaintiff had given notice of its claim, and had thus intercepted the payment to the contractors before their right to receive the money had accrued. Any assignment thereof by the contractors prior to the time when this estimate was payable was ineffective as against the plaintiff. By the terms of the contract "payment in full" was not to be made until the "acceptance of said work by the board of trustees," and the trusttees were to retain, "until the completion and acceptance of said work" by them, 10 per cent. of all payments. The aggregate of the estimates was $19,260.40, and 10 per cent. thereof, viz. $1,926.04, was to be so retained until the acceptance of the work. This amount is included in the warrant covering the amount of the tenth estimate, and was not ordered to be paid until March 18th. There is nothing in the record showing that the work was accepted by the trustees prior to that date, and as, at that time, the plaintiff had given its notice of claim, it must be held that this notice had the effect to cut off the right of the trustees to make the payment to the contractors, or to their order, and gave to the plaintiff the right to receive it.

2. Each of the above estimates made by the superintendent of construction was presented to the board of trustees, and approved by it, and is indorsed, "Examined, allowed, and ordered paid by the board of trustees this — day of —, 1895," with the date of such approval, and is authenticated by the signature, "H. L. Drew, Chairman." It is contended by the appellant that, as Drew was at the times of such approval the president of the Farmers' Exchange Bank, he was disqualified from acting as one of the trustees of the asylum in the approval of the estimates. The board of trustees of the asylum consists of five members, and it does not appear from the record that Mr. Drew participated in the action of the board when it approved these estimates and directed their payment. The authentication by him of the action of the board was subsequent thereto, and was only a ministerial act. Drew's position, however, as one of the trustees, was not such as to disqualify him from acting upon the estimates of the superintendent of construction. Under the provisions of section 7 of the "Act to regulate contracts on behalf of the state in relation to erections and buildings" (St. 1876, p. 430), it is made the duty of the "officer to whom is confided the duty of superintending the erection of any state asylum, building or improvement," at the times named in the contract for constructing such building, to make an estimate of the amount of each payment to be made, and the warrant of the controller is to be drawn upon the treasurer for the amount of such estimate. Under the statute authorizing the construction of this asylum (St. 1889, p. 120), the trustees therein created are empowered to appoint a competent person to superintend its construction. The contract between the parties and Dewar & Chisholm was in conformity with the above provisions of the act of 1876, and was approved by the attorney general, as provided in that act; and by its terms these estimates were to be made by the superintendent of construction. The trustees appointed T. H. Goff as such superintendent of construction, and he was, therefore, the officer to whom, in the terms of the act of 1876, was confided the duty of superintending the erection of the asylum, and whose duty it was under said act, as well as under the contract with Dewar & Chisholm, to make the aforesaid estimates. By the terms of the contract the work was to be done to the satisfaction of the board of trustees, as well as that of the superintendent of construction, and the approval by the trustees of the several estimates when presented operated as an acceptance of the work done on the contract prior to the dates of such approval. Their function, however, was merely to declare their approval or disapproval of the work, and to determine its conformity with the terms of the contract, while the function of fixing the amount of the payment, both under the statute and by the terms of the contract, devolved upon Goff. Upon their acceptance of the work the contractors became immediately entitled to the payment of the amount of the estimate. The state alone was interested in securing a satisfactory compliance with the contract, and under section 10 of the act of 1876 could at any time question the act of Drew in fraudulently accepting the same; but the plaintiff herein is not in a position to object to such acceptance, even if it had been open to objection. It is not suggested that Dewar & Chisholm failed in any respect to complete their contract according to its terms, nor is it claimed that Drew was in any respect negligent or unmindful of his obligations as trustee; the claim of the plaintiff being that by reason of his dual relation he was disqualified from accepting the work, upon the ground that by such acceptance he enabled the bank in which he was interested to receive the amount of the estimate. Such advantage to the bank did not, however, flow directly to it from the acceptance of the work, but was merely an incidental consequence thereof. The acceptance of the work was not invalidated by reason of Drew's relation to the bank, even though its effect was to cause the amount of the estimate to become immediately payable. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

APPEAL—FINDINGS OF FACT—STIPULATION—PUBLIC STREETS—DEDICATION—JOINT OWNERS—INTENTION TO DEDICATE—EVIDENCE.

1. When a stipulated statement of the facts of a case are inconsistent with the findings of facts made by the trial court, the latter will, on appeal, be set aside, and a new trial ordered.

2. The acts of one of two joint owners of land, tending to show the dedication of a strip thereof to public use as a street, cannot be considered in an action brought by a grantee of such joint owners against a city to restrain it from working such strip as a public street.

3. In an action by the owner of land to restrain a city from working a strip thereof as a public street, findings of fact that for about 12 years prior to the commencement of the action the strip has been open to public travel without protest from plaintiffs, and that it has been continuously used as a public way; that a few years prior to the commencement of the action the owner thereof caused a plat of his land adjacent to the strip to be made, dividing the same into lots facing on the strip, which plat, however, did not include the strip, nor refer to it in any way,—are insufficient to support a conclusion of law that such strip is a public street, as there is no finding of an intention to dedicate.

4. A conclusion of law, following such findings of fact, "that the strip is a public street," is not equivalent to a finding of fact that the owners intended to dedicate it as a street, but such conclusion is clearly one based on the previous facts found.

5. In an action to enjoin a city from working a strip of plaintiff's land as a public street, it appeared that plaintiff and a neighbor, being the owners of adjacent land, agreed with each other to fence off a strip of their respective properties for a passageway, and did fence off a strip so as to constitute a continuation of a regularly opened street; that such strip was thereafter cultivated up to plaintiff's line; that he paid taxes on it; that the city had never worked or improved the strip; and that, on a map made by the city for the purpose of assessing property for improvements made on a street intersecting said strip and the street of which it is claimed to be a continuation, the strip was indicated and assessed as the property of plaintiff. Held not to show a dedication or abandonment to the use of the public.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by N. S. Niles and another against the city of Los Angeles and another. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiffs appealed. Reversed.

W. M. Conklin, for appellants. W. E. Dunn, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This action was brought by appellants to restrain the respondents from entering upon, taking possession of, and removing trees, fences, and improvements from the real estate described in the complaint. The respondents, in their answer, claimed that a certain part of the land described in the complaint, about 30 feet wide, off the eastern side thereof, running north and south, bounded on the northern end by Washington street, on the south by Parcel's subdivision of the John Thomas tract, and on the east by a line formerly the west line of the lands of Reed and Snodgrass, constituted a part of a public street, to wit, Trinity street, in the city of Los Angeles. Findings were filed, and judgment rendered in favor of the respondents as to the lands described in the answer. A motion was made for a new trial, and denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and order.

The findings and conclusions of the lower court were as follows:

"(1) That in the year 1887 the plaintiff William Niles was the owner of a certain tract of land in said city of Los Angeles, including the strip of land in question in this action, which tract fronted on Washington street on the north, adjoined Parcel's subdivision of the John Thomas tract on the south, and adjoined a tract of land belonging to one L. Snodgrass on the east. (2) That in 1887, at a time when said William Niles and said Snodgrass were the owners, respectively, of said adjoining tracts of land, said Niles caused a fence to be built across his said tract of land running from Washington street to the south line of his said tract, and on a line parallel with and thirty feet distant from the division line between the lands of Niles and Snodgrass, and at the same time said Snodgrass fenced his said tract of land, leaving outside of his said fence a strip of land about thirty feet in width, adjoining for its full length said thirty-foot strip which said Niles had left outside of his said fence; and that said two strips of land, having a total width of about sixty feet, were at said time thrown open to public travel by said Niles and Snodgrass, and have been ever since, until a few months prior to the bringing of this action, open to public travel without protest from plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest. (3) That the strip of land sixty feet in width, and composed of the two thirty-foot strips aforesaid, was in direct line with Trinity street, in said city, as it then existed, and as it now exists, south of said tract of Niles and Snodgrass, and said sixty-foot strip extends from Washington street south in direct continuation of said Trinity street. (4) That ever since the building of said fences, in 1887, said sixty-foot strip of land, including the land in question in this action, has been and was continuously used and traveled by the public as a public street of said city until obstructing fences were built by the plaintiff across the same a few months before the bringing of this action, and was during said time known as and called 'Trinity Street.' (5) That subsequent to the building of said fences, in 1887, William Niles made a conveyance of his said tract of land, and including the strip in question, to the plaintiff N. S. Niles, and thereafter, to wit, on August 6, 1894, the said N. S. Niles caused a survey of said property to be made, and a map thereof to be recorded in the office of the county recorder of said Los Angeles county, on which map her said property is shown subdivided into lots and blocks only up to the line of said fence theretofore erected by said William Niles in 1887; the easterly line of said subdivision, as shown by said map, being substantially on the same line as the said fence.

"And as conclusions of law from the foregoing facts the court finds and decides: (1) That the land described in the complaint herein is a part of a public street of the city of Los Angeles, to wit, Trinity street. (2) That the restraining order heretofore granted herein should be dissolved. (3) That plaintiffs should take nothing by their said action, and that defendants recover their costs herein."

It is contended that the evidence does not sustain the findings, and that the findings do not justify the conclusions of law, and we think both contentions will have to be sustained. The stipulation contained in the statement on motion for a new trial shows that William Niles and John B. Niles owned the property described in the complaint in fee simple in the year 1880, and continued to so own it until February 4, 1888, when they conveyed it to the appellant N. S. Niles. Findings 1 and 2, to the extent that they find that William Niles was the owner of the land in controversy in the year 1887, are therefore not supported by the evidence, and in direct conflict with the stipulation of the parties as shown by the record. The acts of William Niles tending to show a dedication in the year 1887, and prior to February 4, 1888, at a time when he was not the sole owner of the land, in so far as they would or could in any way affect the rights of this appellant, N. S. Niles, cannot be considered in this case. We then have the findings remaining, to the effect that since 1887 until within a few months prior to the commencement of this action the land described in the answer has been open to public travel without protest from appellants, and has been continuously used and traveled by the public as a public street until a few months before bringing this action, and that on August 6, 1894, the appellant N. S. Niles made a survey and map of the portion of the property described in the complaint other than that claimed in the answer to be a street, and said map showed lots and blocks up to the portion so claimed to be a street in said answer, said portion not being on the said map. There is no finding of dedication, and no finding that the land in controversy is a public street, and we do not think the findings of the probative facts herein stated are sufficient of themselves to show the premises to be a public street. It is not found that the public, during the times it has traveled over the said land, claimed any right to so travel over it, or that appellants even knew of such travel. There is no finding that the public authorities of the city ever claimed the said land as a public street, or that they ever expended any money in improving or grading the same. The finding that the appellants caused a map to be made and filed of other land up to a fence along the west line of the strip in controversy is of little consequence. It is not claimed that the land in dispute was shown or platted on said map as a street, or that the map even included it. The title to the land is in appellant N. S. Niles, unless by clear and unequivocal acts she or her predecessors in interest have dedicated it to the public. The law does not allow the land of a private owner to be taken for public purposes without any conveyance or consideration, except upon proof of such facts and circumstances as clearly show an intention on the part of the owner to abandon or dedicate the land to the public. Section 2618 of our Political Code defines public highways as follows: "In all counties of this state highways are roads, streets, alleys, lanes, courts, places, trails and bridges, laid out or erected as such by the public, or, if laid out or erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public, or made such in actions for the partition of real property." There is no pretense that the land claimed to be a street was ever laid out or erected by the public, or that it was made such in any action for partition of real estate. It follows that it cannot be held to be a public street unless it has "been dedicated or abandoned" to the public by the owner of the land.

In the early and leading cases on the question of dedication in this state it is said: "The vital principle of the dedication is the intention to dedicate; and, whenever this is unequivocally manifested, the dedication, so far as the owner of the soil is concerned, has been made. Time, therefore, though often a material ingredient in the evidence, is not an indispensable ingredient in the act of dedication. If accepted and used by the public in the manner intended, the dedication is complete, precluding the owner, and all claiming in his right, from asserting any ownership inconsistent with such use. Dedication, therefore, is a conclusion of fact to be drawn by the jury from the circumstances of each particular case; the whole question, as against the owner of the soil, being whether there is sufficient evidence of an intention on his part to dedicate the land to the public use as a highway." Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 648. To constitute a dedication of land to the public, two things are necessary, to wit: An intention by the owner, clearly indicated by his words or acts, to dedicate the land to public use; and an acceptance by the public of the dedication. Elliott, Roads & S. p. 85; City of San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 553; City and County of San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 585; People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 70, 22 Pac. 474; Washb. Easem. 140, 239; Child v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 257. This use must be of such duration that the public interest and private right would be materially impaired if the dedication were revoked, and the use by the public discontinued. President, etc., v. White's Lessee, 6 Pet. 431, 439; City of San Francisco v. Canavan, supra. The making and filing a map designating certain streets thereon is only an offer to dedicate such streets to the public, and the dedication does not become effectual and irrevocable until the same is accepted by the public. People v. Williams, 64 Cal. 502, 2 Pac. 393; Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476, 13 Pac. 141; People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 77, 22 Pac. 474. Such acceptance must be within a reasonable time after offer of dedication, and, if not accepted, the owner may resume the possession of the property, and thereby revoke his offer. Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476, 13 Pac. 141; State v. Trask, 6 Vt. 355; Fleld v. Village of Manchester, 32 Mich. 279; Wayne Co. v. Miller, 31 Mich. 447; People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 80, 22 Pac. 474. The finding that the strip of land was traveled and used by the public since 1887, without protest from appellants or their predecessors in interest, is only the finding of probative facts tending to prove dedication, but the fact of dedication does not necessarily follow from such probative facts, as they are not necessarily inconsistent with a total absence of intention to dedicate, and may indicate a mere license. Cooper v. Monterey Co., 104 Cal. 438, 38 Pac. 106. Dedication is never presumed without evidence of unequivocal intention on the part of the owner. Quinn v. Anderson, 70 Cal. 456, 11 Pac. 746. Where the dedication of a highway is sought to be established by user, it must be shown that the user was adverse (Huffman v. Hall, 102 Cal. 30, 36 Pac. 417), and with the knowledge of the owner (Hope v. Barnett, 78 Cal. 14, 20 Pac. 245); and in this case there is no finding that the use was adverse, or with the knowledge of the owner. It is claimed that under the portion of the findings termed "conclusions of law" the fact is found that the disputed premises are a public street. It has been held in many cases, in which the appellant sought to overthrow a judgment because of the absence of a finding, that a misplaced finding of fact placed in the conclusions of law will be considered to prevent the reversal of a case fairly tried, or to prevent the setting aside of a judgment justly given. But in this case we have the finding of specific facts under five different headings, and, finally: "And as conclusions of law from the foregoing facts the court finds and decides: (1) That the land described in the complaint herein is a part of a public street of the city of Los Angeles, to wit, Trinity street." It is plain that this is a general statement or conclusion drawn by the court from the facts previously found. The rule in such cases is that the general finding cannot stand unless the specific facts previously found support it. People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 76, 22 Pac. 474; Geer v. Sibley, 83 Cal. 4, 23 Pac. 220; Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 540, 39 Pac. 922.

As this case must be sent back for a new trial, it may be well for us to indicate our opinion on the evidence without regard to the findings. Conceding that William Niles was the sole owner of the land in 1887, at the time of the acts set forth in findings 1 and 2, and conceding that the court found the facts of dedication, and that the premises are a public street, we do not think the evidence would be sufficient to support the findings. William Niles testified that the fence was moved back, leaving the strip in contest open, during his absence in the East, and that since the fence was removed the ground has been cultivated each year; that there are orange, pear, fig, and eucalyptus trees on the strip; that taxes have been paid to the city upon the land for the years 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896. The witness Snodgrass, who owned the land immediately east of the strip in dispute in 1887, testified that he and William Niles talked it over between themselves, and agreed to leave open a strip 60 feet wide, being 30 feet off the side of the land of each, for a passageway, and that it was so left for a passageway; that it was not left for a street, and there was never any agreement to give the land for a street; that, after the fences were set back, Niles continued to farm his land right up to the line, and that witness always paid taxes on his; that the city never exempted it from taxes, and never curbed or graded it, and claimed that it was not a street. No witness testified to any declaration made by any owner of the land of an intent to dedicate it for a public street. Other witnesses testified that the strip had been in cultivation almost every year since 1887. It appeared that after 1887 (no definite time is fixed) the city levied assessments for the improvement of Washington street, which runs east and west along the northern end of the strip, and made a map for the assessment of the improvements of Washington street. On the map the strip was shown to be the land of Niles, and not a street, and was assessed to Niles. The sidewalk was curbed along the south side of Washington street, and along the 30 feet at the northern end of the strip. It does not appear that the premises claimed to be a street have ever been improved, graded, or accepted by the public authorities. In our opinion, the evidence wholly fails to show that the strip was ever dedicated or abandoned to the public as a street. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed.

McKENZIE v. BUDD et al. (Sac. 647.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 22, 1899.)

DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE—CONCLUSIVENESS OF TITLE TO REAL ESTATE—ACTION TO QUIET TITLE.

1. A decree of distribution entered in the settlement of an estate, determining the title to real estate under the will of the testator, is conclusive of such title between the parties in interest, or those claiming through them.

2. In an action to quiet title, where plaintiff's claim of title fails, the status of the title as between two defendants is immaterial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Daniel McKenzie against James H. Budd and others. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Budd & Thompson, for appellant. Minor & Ashley, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This action is brought to quiet title to certain real estate, and arises upon the following state of facts: Andrew Smith died, disposing of the real estate here involved by will, as follows: "I give and bequeath to my wife, Mary Ann Smith, all of the real and personal property of which I die possessed, so long as she remains my widow, and at her death the residue of said property to be equally divided among my lawful heirs." Pending the administration of Smith's estate, the wife died, and letters of administration were taken out upon her estate. By decree of distribution in his estate the court found: "That said Mary A. Smith, by reason of her community right aforesaid, and under and by virtue of the terms of the will of said deceased, was, at the time of her death, the owner of the whole of the residue of the estate of said Andrew Smith, deceased, which said residue is described as follows." By that decree it was ordered that the property of his estate be turned over to the estate of his wife, and this was done. Thereafter, by the decree of distribution in her estate, the property was distributed to her heirs. The defendant V. J.

Smith is a son of the deceased father and mother. Defendant J. H. Budd is a grantee under a deed made by V. J. Smith, pending the administration of his father's estate. Budd appeared at the trial, and disclaimed any interest in the property. Plaintiff, McKenzie, by attachment, levied upon the interest of V. J. Smith in the real estate left by his father. Under this attachment the real estate was sold, McKenzie becoming the purchaser, and he now holds a deed under that sale. All of these circumstances occurred during the administration of the father's estate, and prior to the mother's death. By the decree of distribution in the father's estate it was determined that Mrs. Smith took title to this land in fee; hence the attachment by the sheriff and sale thereunder to plaintiff went for nothing. His deed gave him no title, for defendant Smith had no title. In this collateral proceeding the decree of distribution in the father's estate is conclusive upon all the world. This court cannot say in this proceeding that the will of Andrew Smith was improperly construed by the decree of distribution, or that his wife was declared the owner of a greater interest in the land than that which should have been allotted to her. The later cases upon this question are to the effect that the decree of distribution entered in the estate of Andrew Smith is conclusive upon the question that his wife, Mary Ann Smith, was, at the instant of his death, the owner of his entire estate. It is said in Cunha v. Hughes, 122 Cal. 112, 54 Pac. 535: "The decree of distribution becomes the measure of the rights of all claimants to the estate, and their rights are to be determined by the terms of this decree." The same doctrine is recognized and approved in William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 Pac. 323, in Re Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 51 Pac. 951, and Jewell v. Pierce, 120 Cal. 82, 52 Pac. 132. There is nothing in Chever v. Ching Hong Poy, 82 Cal. 68, 22 Pac. 1081, opposed to this doctrine. It follows, for these reasons, that plaintiff has no title to the land involved in this litigation, and is entitled to no relief.

It is further claimed that defendant Smith, under the decree of distribution in his mother's estate, became possessed of an after-acquired title which passed to Budd under his deed of grant, and therefore he is estopped from making claim of title in himself in this action. This would seem to be a matter wholly between the defendants Smith and Budd. Plaintiff gets no title by that transaction. His claim of title is entirely independent of it, and, having no title of any kind in himself, his claims must fall, regardless of the status of the title as between Budd and Smith. It may be further suggested that the Smith deed did not purport to convey title in fee, hence it carried no after-acquired title. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

HENNESSEY v. BINGHAM. (S. F. 995.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 5, 1899.)

STEVEDORES — PERSONAL INJURY — NEGLIGENCE — ASSUMPTION OF RISK — EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTIONS.

1. An instruction, in an action by a stevedore for injury from lumber, which was being lowered through a hatchway into the hold of the vessel where he was taking it away, falling on him, that if it was customary to station a man at the hatch to give a warning cry, and on hearing the signal it was customary for the men to get to a place of safety, and this means of warning the men "had theretofore been found to be" a safe and sufficient mode for the protection of the men so working in the hold, and all these precautions had been taken by defendant, verdict should be for defendant, is properly modified by inserting the word "was" for the words "had theretofore been found to be," as one is not relieved of the consequences of carelessness because no injury had resulted from former carelessness.

2. Whether a stevedore engaged in taking away lumber in the hold of a vessel, where it was lowered through a hatchway, and who was injured by lumber slipping from a box in which it was being lowered, because there was nothing over the end of it,—assumed the unusual risk, there being evidence that the ends were usually closed,—depends on whether the employer understood and had a right to believe that the stevedore knew and assumed it; and this is a question for the jury, though the stevedore testifies that such lumber was sometimes loaded in open boxes.

3. Where an experienced stevedore, who had long been employed as such at S., is there injured by the falling of lumber which was being lowered through a hatchway to the hold of a vessel, where he is taking it away, and the issue is whether there was a sufficient warning, and whether he had assumed the risk of the way in which it was lowered, evidence is admissible which tends to show what was customary among stevedores in S. in handling such lumber, and what the respective duties were of the workmen engaged in the work,—especially of the hatchman and others engaged in lowering the lumber.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Patrick Hennessey against Henry Bingham. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

Van Ness & Redman, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff while in the employ of defendant. Defendant was a stevedore, and was engaged in loading dressed lumber upon the steamer Aztec at the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's dock. The lumber was delivered by the shippers in boxes, which consisted of four boards nailed together, and were about 15 feet long and 8 inches in each of the other dimensions. Sometimes the ends of the boxes were closed by wires, and sometimes they were not. Whether they were usually so closed, and whether it was negligence to load them on the vessel in the mode adopted, without being so closed, are matters of interest in this case. As the jury found for the plaintiff, we are bound, if necessary to support the verdict, to assume that the jury believed those witnesses who testified that when loaded on the ship in boxes, as this lumber was, the ends of the boxes were nearly always closed, and, if not so closed, the lumber was very likely to slip out. The lumber was taken from the wharf by the side of the vessel, where a chain was wrapped around two boxes containing lumber, and one end of the chain, having been put through a ring at the other end, was attached to a block and tackle, and raised to the deck of the vessel and above the hatchway, through which it was then lowered to the hold of the vessel, where there were two gangs of workmen, who took alternate loads, stowing the lumber, one gang on one side of the ship and the other on the other side. It took about two minutes for each gang to stow its load, and they were lowered into the hold at the rate of one load each minute. The men took one box at a time, and, per consequence, they would be at the hatchway for the second box at about the time a load was coming down for the other gang. There were four compartments in the ship, and freight was being stowed in each compartment at the time of the accident. The work was being rushed as much as possible, as, according to the testimony, this kind of work always is. The men are paid by the hour, and understand that they must work as fast as possible, or they will be ordered out. There was a great deal of noise about the ship while the work was in progress. Defendant had stationed a man on the upper deck at the hatchway, whose duty it was to call out to the men at work in the hold, warning them of danger when the load was about to be lowered through the hatchway. He was called the "hatchman," and was accustomed to call out, in a loud voice, "Stand clear below." There was plenty of room for the men to get away from danger, and it was shown that on this occasion, as a rule, the warning was given in time and was heard. There was evidence which tended to show that the warning was not given on the particular occasion when plaintiff was injured. Plaintiff testified that he did not hear it, and other witnesses testified that in the hurried work, with the great noise which prevailed, it might not be heard or heeded if given. The men were, however, accustomed to rely upon the warning, more or less, for their security, as from various causes the load or some part of it might fall at any time while being lowered. There was evidence which tended to prove that plaintiff was injured when in the act of picking up a box of lumber, not directly under the hatchway, but two feet inside the coamings. The contents of the box, consisting of 15 or more boards, slipped out "like pouring water out of a glass," struck the shaft tunnel, and "bounced off" upon the plaintiff, injuring him very severely. The theory of the plaintiff's case seems to be that the employer failed to furnish to plaintiff a safe place in which to do his work, and that the injury resulted from unusual and unnecessary hazard, which plaintiff did not assume by accepting the employment. Counsel says: "Neither the failure of plaintiff to hear and heed the warning, if it was in fact given, nor the failure to give the warning, was the proximate cause of the injury, but this proximate cause was the negligence of the defendant in loading into the ship boxes of lumber that were liable to shoot their whole contents into the hold of the vessel so as to injure the workmen, not only if they were standing directly underneath the hatchway, but even if they were several feet underneath the coamings, as was the plaintiff in this case at the time he was injured." Defendant, it is contended, was carrying on a hazardous employment in a reckless manner, and the warning, if given, was not an adequate protection against this unnecessary danger. Defendant contended that such boxes of lumber were quite frequently shipped from this port, and that sometimes they were sent by the shipper with the ends of the boxes closed, and sometimes open; that the stevedore took the lumber as it was delivered to him, and loaded it in the condition in which he found it, and prevented injury to the men below by stopping the lumber at the coamings and giving a warning to the men below; that this was the usual and customary mode of doing the work, and had been found to be, and was in fact, a sufficient protection. Plaintiff was a stevedore, who admitted that he had often assisted in loading such boxes, and knew all the hazards of the employment, and understood the purpose of the warning; and, as defendant did station at the hatchway a competent man to give the warning, defendant is not liable if plaintiff failed to heed the warning, or if his fellow workmen neglected to give it. So far as there is a conflict of evidence the presumption must, of course, be in favor of the respondent, except when we are considering the rulings in regard to the instructions. One of the witnesses for the plaintiff testified that such lumber is usually delivered in boxes, and is wired over the ends to keep the lumber from sliding out. If it is not wired, the lumber is sure to slide out. "It is usual and customary, on the water front in San Francisco, in loading lumber of that character, to have obstructions across the ends of the boxes to keep the timber from falling out." The wires, he said, are put on in the lumber yard, but, if it is delivered at the wharf without wires, it is shipped in that condition. He had known the shipper to be sent for and required to put on wires. He said, however, that it was no part of the stevedore's business to put on the wires, but to load the ship with the freight as delivered. Plaintiff testified that they had been at work about one-half hour before he was hurt. Some lumber had fallen before that time. He came to assist in stowing the second case. He heard no warning, but looked, and, seeing the hatchway clear, stooped to pick up the case, when the lumber being lowered slipped from the case, struck the shaft tunnel which ran across that hatch, bounded off, and hit him. He was not at the time under the open hatchway, but was about two feet inside the coamings. As to the warning, he said: "That is the usual and customary mode of giving to the men working in the hold full notice and warning to get out of the way of the load that is to be sent down the hatch." The hatchman testified that the box from which the lumber fell had no wire upon it. Defendant's witnesses gave nearly the same evidence, except that they emphasized the fact that such boxes were often stowed by stevedores without wires, and that the sling chains compress the lumber, even in the boxes, and usually prevent its slipping. They also testified that the precautions taken in this case are such as are usual in such cases, and contended that such precautions had usually been found sufficient.

1. The first proposition of appellant is that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury to find for the defendant. This contention, I think, cannot be sustained. The jury were warranted in finding from the evidence that loading timber of this character in the mode adopted was unusually and unnecessarily hazardous. Whether the plaintiff by accepting the employment assumed such risk was for the jury to determine. There was also evidence which could have justified a finding that, in the hurry of the work and the noise, the warning was insufficient to protect the workmen from the dangers which attend the work.

2. The defendant asked the court to give to the jury a long instruction to the effect that if they found that in loading lumber upon a ship, as this was being loaded, it was customary to station a man at the hatch to give such warning as has been described, and upon hearing the signal it was customary for the men to get to a place of safety, "and this means of warning the men had theretofore been found to be a safe and sufficient mode for the protection of the men so working in the hold," etc., and that all these precautions had been taken by defendant, then their verdict must be for the defendant. The court modified the instruction by striking out the words "had theretofore been found to be," and inserting the word "was." I think the modification was proper. Carelessness does not always result in injury. In a case of continued carelessness, when injury results, a common remark is that it is strange it did not happen before. Defendant will not be exonerated because others have been reckless and no one has been injured. As remarked in Monaghan v. Rolling-

Mill Co., 81 Cal. 190, 22 Pac. 590, "That circumstance is only a matter of wonderment, and is an instance of how good luck will sometimes protect carelessness for long periods." The master's duty was to use due diligence to provide plaintiff a safe place in which to do his work. Former experience may have some bearing upon the question as to whether he has taken the proper precautions, but its value is for the jury. I may remark, these hypothetical instructions are always dangerous, and especially so in a case of alleged negligence. Negligence is the ultimate fact to be inferred from many probative facts. The inference is within the province of the jury, even when the facts are undisputed. When different conclusions as to negligence can reasonably be drawn from the admitted facts, it is not for the court to instruct the jury as to which is to be adopted by them. The defendant also asked for an instruction which may be summarized thus: If it was not Bingham's duty to close the boxes so that the lumber would not slip out, but to load it into the ship as it was received, giving proper warning, as already explained, and a competent hatchman was employed to give the warning, and, if given, the workmen could have avoided the danger, "and the plaintiff accepted employment from the defendant, Bingham, with the understanding that his safety in the hold was to be secured by the giving of the warning referred to, and such further care on his part as should be necessary, then and in that case" the verdict should be for the defendant. The instruction is misleading. When the jury find that it was "only his duty to load the lumber into the ship as he received it, giving such warning," etc., they have found the entire issue as to negligence for the defendant. But this was probably not what was intended. Probably counsel meant, if the jury find that that was what he contracted to do. Respondent contends that he violated his duty when he loaded into the ship lumber in that condition, in that mode, and that the warning was not a sufficient protection, and that the risk, not being an ordinary risk of employment, was not assumed by the plaintiff. The jury were not required to find, by this instruction, that plaintiff knew that this particular lumber was to be loaded upon the ship in boxes, the ends of which had not been closed; and there was evidence to the effect that usually they were closed. Whether plaintiff assumed these unusual risks or not depended upon the question whether, under the circumstances, defendant understood and had a right to believe that plaintiff knew and assumed them. Martin v. Railway Co., 94 Cal. 326, 29 Pac. 645. Plaintiff may have been willing to depend upon the warning for his safety, as against the ordinary risks of the work. Whether he was not in this case subjected to more than the ordinary risks of the employment was an important question, and was for the jury. Plaintiff himself testified that such lumber was sometimes loaded in open boxes. This was very important evidence on this issue for the defendant, but is still left a question for the jury, which this instruction would have taken from them. I understand the warning was provided as additional security to the workmen from dangers resulting when the freight was being lowered into the hold, not dropped, and because, although the master used ordinary care to see that it was properly handled and safely lowered, still accidents might happen. But if the employer has failed to use ordinary care in the mode of doing the work, and therefore injury has resulted, he has failed to provide a safe place for the workmen to do their work, and has subjected them to unusual risks, which they did not assume by accepting the employment, unless they knew of the unusual risks. Elledge v. Railway Co., 100 Cal. 282, 34 Pac. 720; Civ. Code, § 1971. In such case the neglect of the employer in respect to duties which he cannot evade, by putting them upon a co-employee, has contributed to the injury, and he is responsible.

But this argument in favor of the rulings of the court below in regard to the instructions necessitates the reversal of the case upon another ground. The learned judge of the trial court evidently disagreed with the theory of the case which was acted upon by the defendant, and exception was taken to 38 rulings made against the defendant in regard to the admission of evidence. Evidence was rejected which tended to show what was customary among stevedores in San Francisco in handling such lumber, and what the respective duties were of the workmen who were engaged in the work; that is, what was required of each, and especially of the hatchman and others engaged in lowering the freight. I think this evidence was relevant and material. It tended to show what care was taken by the defendant in the work, and also what risks the plaintiff assumed by the employment. Plaintiff's own testimony shows that he was an experienced stevedore, and had long been employed as such at San Francisco. As to some of the evidence, it might perhaps be shown that it was immaterial, or that the particular ruling was not harmful; but that certainly cannot be said as to all, and a more minute discussion could not be useful. The judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

McCRAV v. BURR, Sheriff. (L. A. 481.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 5, 1899.)

TROVER—FINDINGS OF FACT.

1. The findings as to damages in an action for conversion are sufficient to support the judgment, where it is found that, at the time alleged, plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the property, and the same was worth $700, and that defendant then took the same as alleged, and afterwards sold it, and that by virtue of the levy and sale "said property was entirely lost to the plaintiff," and as conclusion of law it is found that plaintiff is entitled to recover of defendant $700, with interest.

2. It is not necessary, in an action for conversion of property levied on by defendant under a writ in a suit between third persons, to find that plaintiff was the owner thereof when he made his demand for its return.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by R. H. McCray against John Burr, sheriff. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller and McKinley & Graff, for appellant. Curtis Wilbur and Murphy & Gottschalk, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover damages for the alleged conversion of certain personal property. The case was tried without a jury, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

It was averred in the complaint that on the 4th of April the plaintiff was the owner of, in possession of and entitled to the possession, and ever since has been the owner and entitled to the possession of, certain described personal property, consisting of horses, wagons, and farming implements; that on the said 4th day of April the defendant, as sheriff, levied upon and took possession of said property under a writ of attachment in a suit against one S. R. McCray, brought by third parties, and converted the same to his own use; that before the commencement of this action, to wit, on or about the 14th day of April, the plaintiff demanded of the defendant the possession of the said property in accordance with the statutory provisions upon the subject, and that the defendant refused to deliver the same to the plaintiff; that the value of the property was about $970, and that the plaintiff had expended large sums of money in pursuit of the same; and that by reason of the wrongful taking, detention, and conversion of the property, plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $1,500, for which he prays judgment.

The main contention of appellant is that the findings do not support the judgment, because there is no finding that plaintiff was damaged in any amount whatever. No doubt, the findings could have been more full and specific, but we think that they are sufficient to support the judgment. A great many embarrassing questions have been raised in this court in consequence of a want of care in preparing findings. It seems to have been assumed in many cases that when the trial court had announced the judgment which it intended to enter the case was over, and there was nothing further for the winning side to look to; but it must be remembered that, under our Code, findings must be prepared, which must contain statements of facts necessary to support the judgment. In the case at bar, while there has been carelessness in the preparation of the findings, still we think that they are sufficient. The court finds that on the said 4th day of April the plaintiff was the owner of and in possession of the property, and that it was of the value of $700, and that on said day the defendant took the property as alleged in the complaint, and afterwards sold the same, and that by virtue of the levy and sale "said property was entirely lost to the plaintiff." And as a conclusion of law the court finds that the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the defendant the said sum of $700, with interest, etc. The objection to the finding is that the court does not expressly say that the plaintiff was thereby damaged in the sum of $700, or any sum, but from the facts found it necessarily follows that the damage accrued to plaintiff. "Where probative facts are found, and the court can declare that the ultimate facts necessarily result from the facts which are found, the finding is sufficient." Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 601, 14 Pac. 381. See, also, Souter v. Maguire, 78 Cal. 543, 21 Pac. 183; Coveny v. Hale, 49 Cal. 552; People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 189; Osborne v. Clark, 60 Cal. 622. From the facts found in the case at bar it necessarily followed that plaintiff was damaged in the amount of the value of the property. Moreover, the court finds that by virtue of the other facts found the property "was entirely lost to plaintiff"; and, while this language is not very good legal literature, yet it sufficiently includes the fact of damage. The findings are not deficient because the court did not find that on the 14th day of April, when plaintiff made his demand upon the sheriff, the plaintiff was then the owner of, and entitled to, the property. The cause of action was the taking of the property on the 4th of April. Demanding its return was a mere statutory requirement for the benefit of the sheriff. We see no other points necessary to be noticed. The claim of respondent that damages should be imposed for a frivolous appeal cannot be allowed. The respondent, under the circumstances, should be satisfied with an affirmance of the judgment. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

KUHN et al. v. SMITH. (S. F. 1,890.)

TENANT AT WILL.

One in possession of land under a lease for a definite period, and who, on expiration thereof, refuses to give up possession, does not become a tenant at will, so as to be entitled to the 30-days notice provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1162, before action to eject him can be brought.

Action by A. C. Kuhn and others against Charles C. Smith. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Moore and Chas. Clark, for appellant. S. F. Lieb, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action of ejectment. Plaintiffs, by writing, leased certain agricultural lands to defendant for a fixed, definite period,—about 10 months. Upon the expiration of the lease, defendant refused to give up possession, and this action was commenced. Plaintiffs commenced the action some six weeks after the lease had expired, and defendant now rests his right of possession upon the claim that after the expiration of the lease he became a tenant at will, and by virtue of such tenancy he was entitled to a notice of 30 days (section 1162, Code Civ. Proc.) before action could be brought to eject him; in other words, his only defense is that the action is prematurely brought. There is nothing whatever in the claim made. The defendant was not a tenant at will. Under his lease he was a tenant for years, and upon the expiration of his term it was his duty to move without notice. He had no rights of any kind which demanded a notice in writing in order that they might be cut off. It is not the law of this state that a tenant who remains in possession, perchance a single day after the expiration of his lease, thereby becomes a tenant at will, and must be served with a 30-days notice before he may be ejected. Upon a similar state of facts it is said in McKissick v. Ashby, 98 Cal. 425, 33 Pac. 730: "Under the facts stated, we think that plaintiff had a right to re-enter when the term expired, and to maintain an action for possession without previous notice or demand." It is also said in Canning v. Fibush, 77 Cal. 196, 19 Pac. 376: "And, inasmuch as the lease expired by its own limitation, there was no necessity of a notice to terminate it. * * * This being the case, we do not see how the defendants had any right to continue in possession, and, if they had no such right, why the plaintiff should not recover the premises, with damages for the detention." In Perine v. Teague, 66 Cal. 446, 6 Pac. 84, the syllabus is as follows: "A tenant who enters and continues in possession of the demised premises under a written lease until the expiration of the term does not thereafter become a tenant at will by refusing to surrender that possession, and by holding over without the consent of the lessor." For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

NOTES—PAYMENT—EVIDENCE.

The prima facie case of nonpayment made out by plaintiff introducing a note, proving the signature of deceased thereto, due presentation of the claim to defendant's executor, and its rejection, is not overcome by defendant showing that, after its date, deceased executed to plaintiff a note for about the amount of the note sued on and another note which deceased had given plaintiff.

Action by David E. Griffiths against M. Lewin, administrator of John M. Hughes, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

James & O'Donnell and Graves & Graves, for appellant. F. A. Dorn, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Action to recover on a promissory note. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The case is here on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. The court below found that the note had been fully paid, and the plaintiff contends that this finding is not supported by the evidence, and we think the contention will have to be sustained.

On May 22, 1893, John M. Hughes, now deceased, made his promissory note to plaintiff for $1,174.35, due one year after date, with interest thereon until paid. On September 30, 1895, the said Hughes died, and defendant was in October, 1895, duly appointed administrator of his estate. In October, 1895, publication of notice to creditors was made by defendant as such administrator. The plaintiff in due time made out and presented his claim against said estate upon the said promissory note, which claim was rejected by the defendant. The complaint contains a copy of the said note, alleges the due presentation of the claim and its rejection by defendant, and is verified. The answer, which is also verified, alleges that defendant has no information or belief as to the making and delivering of the note, and upon that ground denies that it was made and delivered as set forth in the complaint. The answer also denies that the note has not been paid, and denies the presentation of the claim to the defendant. Plaintiff introduced in evidence the promissory note, with the indorsements thereon, proved the signature of deceased thereto, and the due presentation of the claim and its rejection, and rested. This made out a prima facie case of nonpayment. Bank v. Christensen, 51 Cal. 572; Turner v. Turner, 79 Cal. 566, 21 Pac. 959; Ritter v. Schenk, 101 Ill. 389. It being thus proved that the note was not paid, the burden was cast upon defendant to prove by competent evidence that it had been paid. The evidence on the part of the plaintiff raised a presumption of non-payment, which in law entitled him to recover. The evidence on the part of the defendant must have been such, whether direct or by raising legal presumptions, as to rebut the prima facie case made by plaintiff. The only evidence offered by defendant is to the effect that on October 5, 1894, the deceased executed and delivered to plaintiff his promissory note, secured by mortgage, for $4,543.32; that on said last-named date there was due upon an old note and mortgage executed by deceased to this plaintiff in 1891 the sum of about $3,200 or $3,300. There was no proof that the note and mortgage of October 5, 1894, was in payment of the old note and mortgage of 1891, and no evidence as to the consideration for the same, and it was not shown that either of the mortgages had any connection in any way with the note in controversy here. Counsel for defendant, in their brief, in a very ingenious manner, undertake to show by calculation that the note and mortgage of October 5, 1894, were for about the amount due on the old mortgage of 1891 and the note in this case, and insist that the presumption is that the note and mortgage of October 5, 1894, was in full settlement of the note in this suit. We do not think the law indulges in such imaginary presumptions. It is said we must presume "that the ordinary course of business has been followed." If so, we must presume that, if deceased in his lifetime ever paid the note in this case, it was delivered up to him. If it had been delivered up to him, we would have to presume that it had been paid. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 9. But as it was not delivered up, but was at his death in the possession of plaintiff, we must presume that it has not been paid. A promissory note in the possession of the payee after the death of the maker is an instrument of too solemn a nature to be adjudged as having been fully paid, in the absence of proof or circumstances which raise a legal presumption of its payment. The uncontradicted evidence shows that at the time of the death of Hughes the note was in the possession of plaintiff's agent, Mr. Brown, with whom it had been since 1893. During the years 1894 and 1895 Mr. Brown made some 20 indorsements of payments, in his own handwriting, amounting to over $600. These payments were all made and indorsed on the note after the making of the note and mortgage of October 5, 1894. It would not be considered the ordinary course of business for the payee of a note to keep it in his possession after it had been paid. It would certainly not be in the ordinary course of business for the maker of a note, after having once paid it, to continue making payments upon it for two years thereafter. The plaintiff was not permitted to testify against the estate of deceased, and the lips of deceased had been closed by death. The note, therefore, in the possession of plaintiff, raises a presumption of nonpayment, which, in the absence of testimony, or legal presumptions from facts established by the testimony, entitles him to judgment. The receipts offered in evidence by defendant are not described in such manner in the bill of exceptions as to enable us to even guess at what they were for. The date is not given, nor the contents of the receipts, nor any single fact from which a presumption can arise that the receipts were for money paid on the note. The statement shows that the defendant introduced in evidence "receipts aggregating $310.50, none of which receipts correspond in date or amount with the indorsements on the note." Even if the amount was for money actually paid by deceased, to be credited on the note, it would not change the result here, because the amount is not sufficient to show that the note has been fully paid. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

Action by I. Isaac Irwin against Thomas C. Exton and others, trustees of the city of Oceanside, Cal., and the city of Oceanside. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Eugene Daney, for appellant. W. T. McNeally, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Oceanside is a city of the sixth class. On May 8, 1894, it voted $30,000 of bonds, under the act of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 399) and the acts amendatory thereof (St. 1891, pp. 84, 132, and St. 1893, p. 61), for the purpose of acquiring water rights and the construction of waterworks to supply the city and its inhabitants with water. Bonds were printed, but were never executed or sold, and it is conceded by both parties that they are void, and therefore cannot be legally issued. After the election the city proceeded to levy an annual tax, under the provisions of the act, to raise the funds with which to pay the interest on the bonds, and provide a sinking fund to pay the principal at maturity. As the result of said levy it is stipulated that "there is now in the city treasury, * * * for taxes collected on account of said bonds, * * * in the fund known as 'Water-Bond Fund No. 2,' about the sum of seven thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars"; and that, unless restrained, defendants "will transfer from said water-bond fund No. 2 to the waterworks improvement fund, or to some other fund, moneys of said water-bond fund No. 2, and will pay and order paid out of said moneys now in or hereafter taken from said last-mentioned fund, for the services of the engineer employed under the aforesaid resolutions,"—i. e. certain resolutions of the said defendants,—the sum of eight hundred and forty dollars. Plaintiff is an elector and resident property holder of said city, but whether he paid into the treasury any of said sum collected as taxes does not appear. He is not seeking to recover any of this fund as paid by him. He seeks only to restrain defendants from transferring any of the money now in the said water-bond fund to any other fund, and to restrain defendants from using any of said money for the purposes threatened by them. The court entered judgment for defendants, denying the injunction, and the appeal is from this judgment.

Counsel discuss many propositions which we do not deem it necessary to consider. The validity of the bond issue is not necessarily raised by the pleadings, and we do not pass upon that question. Both parties, however,

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—TAXES COLLECTED FOR INTEREST ON VOID BONDS—USE OF FUND—EQUITY—ADEQUATE LEGAL REMEDY.

1. Money collected by a city by a tax levy to pay interest on void bonds voted to be issued for constructing waterworks, under St. 1889, p. 399, as amended by St. 1891, pp. 84, 132, and St. 1893, p. 61, authorizing the issue of such bonds, is held by the city freed from the directions of the statute relating to taxes collected to pay principal and interest on bonds, requiring the same "to be inviolably appropriated to the payment of principal and interest on such indebtedness"; and, if it cannot be recovered by the taxpayers who paid it, it may be carried into concede that the bonds are invalid, and for the purposes of this case they will be so regarded. Appellant devotes much attention to the provisions of the statutes relating to the transfer by the municipal authorities of money under their control from one fund to another fund, and also to certain requirements of the municipal corporation act, by which it is claimed that taxes collected to pay the principal and interest on bonds "shall be kept in the treasury as a separate fund, to be inviolably appropriated to the payment of the principal and interest of such indebtedness." We cannot regard these provisions of the statute as involved. Appellant contends and respondents concede that there are no legal bonds in existence for many reasons, and, among others, that the initial proceedings of defendants were not in conformity with law, and no authority exists for creating a bonded debt. This being so, we cannot see how there can be a water-bond fund, where the taxes collected under these illegal proceedings can be impounded and held indefinitely. The statute provides for holding inviolate money paid into the treasury to meet the interest and principal of valid bonds, not bonds that have no legal existence. The trustees of the city may have entered these taxes on the books of the city as to the credit of a water-bond fund, but as the proceedings leading up to the collection of this money were void, and as the purpose for which the money was paid has failed, it seems to us that it is held by the city authorities freed from any of the directions of the statute under which it was collected, and is to be treated as any other money coming into their hands for some lawful purpose, but which cannot be used for the particular object contemplated when it was paid into the treasury. The money either belongs to the persons who paid it, or, if it cannot be recovered back by them, it may be carried to the general fund of the city, and may be used for any of the purposes for which any other money in that fund may be used. Appellant cites the case of Kerr v. Butz, 34 Ill. App. 220, to show that these payments were not voluntary, and that the city holds the money as bailee, to be paid to the taxpayer on demand. We are not called upon in this action to decide whether this money may be recovered back by the taxpayers who paid it. They are not asking it, and may never do so; and the evidence is not directed specially to that question, and to express any opinion upon it would bind nobody. We cannot see, however, in what way plaintiff would be injured, whatever may happen. He paid none of the money, so far as we know, and has no claim upon it. If it is paid back, it does not injure him, and, if it is retained and used, presumably he will be benefited in common with other property holders. We do not think that the equity powers of the court should be interposed to restrain the officers of a municipality from doing an act which, if done, will not injure the complainant, and in a matter where there is an adequate remedy at law given to the persons really aggrieved. Appellant's action amounts simply to a benevolent effort on his part to tie up this money against the day when the taxpayers who paid may claim their own. We cannot believe it to be within the legitimate powers of an equity court to aid in such a purpose. If defendants proposed to use this money for some unlawful object (that is, for some object for which they could not use the funds of the city), plaintiff might maintain the action, upon the principles laid down in Winn v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 631, 25 Pac. 968, but no such case is presented. The city has the right to use its general fund in proper expenditures to secure plans for proposed waterworks. The act relied upon by appellant provides, and he insists, that, before the city can submit to the voters the question of issuing bonds for this purpose, there must be plans and estimates of cost for the information of the voters. For authority to employ an engineer as is proposed, see Act March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 269) § 862, subd. 3. The proposed use of the money is not, therefore, in excess of the powers of the city authorities. In no view of the case can we see that plaintiff is entitled to the relief asked, and for this reason it is advised that the judgment be affirmed.

STEPHENSON v. DEUEL et al. (S. F. 994.) (Supreme Court of California. Sept. 6, 1899.)

QUIETING TITLE—DEED—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Judgment, after trial on the merits, will not be disturbed on appeal, because of the overruling of demurrer to the answer on the ground of uncertainty and ambiguity, it not clearly appearing that there was prejudice therefrom.

2. Defendant may have his title quieted by cross complaint, in suit to have set aside a sale to him on execution against one from whose grantor plaintiff claims under deed.

3. Nothing passes under a deed without consideration, the grantor having previously executed and delivered a deed thereof to another.

4. It is enough to entitle defendant to have title quieted as against plaintiff, who has no title, that at the time plaintiff commenced his action defendant was in possession under a sheriff's deed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by Alice M. Stephenson against J. C. Deuel and another. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wiley J. Tinnin, for appellant. J. C. Deuel and Frank H. Short, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Berdenia F. Stephenson brought an action for divorce against William

M. Stephenson on February 13, 1892, in the superior court of Fresno county. On that day the court made an order requiring defendant to pay a counsel fee of $150, and on April 18th the court made another order reciting the former order and defendant's refusal to obey it, and ordering the fee to be increased to $300, and that it, together with certain alimony previously ordered, be paid within two days after notice of the making of the order, and that, in case of default, execution issue to enforce payment. A copy of this last order was served on defendant's attorney, April 19th. On May 20th an execution was issued for the unpaid balance, which was levied upon the right, title, and interest of William M. Stephenson (defendant in the divorce suit) in and to certain lots situated in the city of Fresno, the lots in controversy, and the same were sold by the sheriff to defendant Deuel on July 14, 1892, and a certificate of purchase issued to him, and on January 17, 1893, a deed was made to him by the sheriff, and a writ of assistance was issued January 23, 1893, under which said William M. Stephenson, then in possession, was removed from the land, and Deuel put in possession thereof, which he still holds. Plaintiff claims title to the land under deed from one Dyas and wife, dated February 1, 1892. It is in support of this title that plaintiff now seeks to have the proceedings set aside as void under which Deuel claims. Defendant Deuel in his answer avers that Dyas conveyed the lots to William M. Stephenson prior to the alleged conveyance to plaintiff by Dyas, and that Stephenson became, and at the time of the levy was, the owner of the lots, but that the deed was not recorded, though delivered and the consideration paid; and that, pending the divorce proceedings between Berdenia and William, the latter caused Dyas to convey the lots to William's minor child (plaintiff), with the fraudulent purpose of preventing his wife, Berdenia, from getting the same, and to prevent the collection of the money ordered to be paid as alimony and counsel fees, and in fraud of his creditors generally. By cross complaint, defendant Deuel asked to have his title quieted. The court gave judgment for defendant, from which and from the order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals.

1. The ruling upon demurrer to defendants' amended answer, on the ground of uncertainty and ambiguity, cannot now avail plaintiff. The pleadings are verified, and defendants' answer is deemed controverted. Where there is an answer and trial on the merits, the court will not reverse the judgment for ambiguity and uncertainty, unless it clearly appears that demurrant was prejudiced by the alleged infirmity in the pleading. It does not so appear here. Lothrop v. Golden (Cal.) 57 Pac. 394.

2. The demurrer to defendants' cross complaint, on the ground that several causes of action were improperly united, was rightly overruled. Defendants could have the relief asked in this action by way of cross complaint. Code Civ. Proc. § 442.

3. Several of the findings are attacked for insufficiency of the evidence to justify them. Finding 3 is to the effect that plaintiff did not become the owner of the property in question by the deed of J. C. Dyas and wife, dated February 1, 1892, or otherwise. The evidence tends to show that prior to the delivery of this deed Dyas sold and conveyed the lots to W. M. Stephenson by deed, which was delivered for him to his agent, one McKenzie, who testified that it was still in his office. Another witness testified that she heard Stephenson in the latter part of January, 1892, say that he had bought the property in controversy. There is evidence tending to show that he was occupying the premises when Deuel caused the execution to be levied. The deed under which plaintiff claims bears date February 1st, but there is evidence from which the inference may be drawn that it was first executed and acknowledged by Mrs. Dyas at Santa Cruz on March 29, 1892, and that it was afterwards sent to McKenzie at Fresno, and then executed and acknowledged by Mr. Dyas before McKenzie on March 31, 1892. The acknowledgments are dated, respectively, March 29 and March 31, 1892. Plaintiff claims, and there is some evidence tending to show, that Stephenson instructed McKenzie to prepare a deed from Dyas and wife to plaintiff, after the deed was executed conveying the property to him, as he said the former deed was a mistake, and he wanted the lots to go to his child (plaintiff), and that McKenzie did, by Stephenson's direction, prepare the deed which bears date February 1st. This first deed, however, had been delivered to McKenzie for Stephenson and as his agent. The deed to plaintiff was recorded April 2, 1892, by McKenzie at the direction of W. M. Stephenson and his son, John M. Stephenson, and the latter testified that he paid Dyas for the lots from his own money. There is evidence that the money came from a sale of property by W. M. Stephenson, the proceeds of which he gave his children, and that Dyas got $2,600, the consideration for the lots, out of a portion of the money paid on account of this sale. This money was handled by McKenzie, and he testified that when he paid Dyas he charged the money to the account of John M. Stephenson. There is some evidence tending to show that W. M. Stephenson caused the deed to be made to his daughter because of the divorce proceedings, and because he wanted to prevent his wife from getting any of his property. We think, however, aside from the question of fraud raised by the answer, that the execution of the deed by Dyas, and its delivery by Dyas to McKenzie for Stephenson, divested Dyas of the title, and vested the title in Stephenson. When Dyas undertook to convey the property to plaintiff, he had nothing to convey. No question of purchase by plaintiff for a valuable consideration without notice is presented. It appears that plaintiff paid no consideration, and it does not appear that she knew that the property was conveyed to her at the time Dyas made the deed under which she claims. Finding 5 is that the order of April 18, 1892, as to counsel fees, was served on the counsel of Stephenson, defendant in the divorce action, and that both counsel and Stephenson had knowledge of the making and entry of the order. The order, in fact, was served upon Stephenson's attorney, but not on Stephenson. Counsel for appellant contends that the order should have been served upon Stephenson personally; citing Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1015, 1016, and numerous cases. Whether the service was sufficient or not, appellant is in no position to complain. The court found, as we have seen, upon sufficient evidence, that plaintiff had no title to, or interest in, the lots. This is a collateral attack upon the proceedings under which Deuel claims title. Unless plaintiff had some interest in the property, it is immaterial whether the order above referred to was properly served. This view of the matter disposes of appellant's objection to findings 6 to 13, inclusive. Finding 14 is that Dyas and wife, about February 1, 1892, executed their deed conveying the property to W. M. Stephenson, which deed was delivered to W. H. McKenzie and accepted by him as the agent of and for Stephenson; that this deed was retained by McKenzie, but not recorded, and that thereafter, on or about March 25, 1892, and before the purchase price had been paid by Stephenson to Dyas, said Stephenson, "with the purpose and intention and designing to cheat, hinder, and delay and defraud defendant Berdenia F. Stephenson, who was then his wife, and to prevent said real property from being subject to the order and process of the court, and the payment of the expenses, counsel fees, and alimony, which had been then, or which he anticipated or expected would be, awarded against him" in the divorce action then pending, etc., did procure said deed to be made from Dyas and wife to plaintiff, then a minor and daughter of said W. M. Stephenson, and to be delivered to said McKenzie, and thereupon said W. M. Stephenson caused McKenzie to pay Dyas $2,600, the purchase price of said real property, and that said last-named deed was procured to be made "for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the said Berdenia, and not otherwise; that about February 13, 1892, she commenced her said action for divorce, and said action was pending thereafter at all times until January 10, 1893, upon which last date W. M. Stephenson died." Other subdivisions of this finding relate to matters concerning the proceedings in the action for divorce under which defendant Deuel claims title. There was evidence tending to show that about the time the divorce was commenced, both before and after, Stephenson declared that his wife should have none of his property, and that, to prevent her from getting any of it, he would "put the property out of his hands." A witness testified that Stephenson told witness he had bought the lots in controversy for $2,700, and after that, "when Mrs. Stephenson commenced suit against him, he said she would not get a dollar of his property; that he would put the property out of his hands; that he would give it to Alice; that he would deed it to Alice, his daughter." There was much other testimony to like effect. There was also evidence introduced by plaintiff tending to contradict the evidence of defendant, but, at most, it left the evidence as to the transfer to plaintiff in conflict, as also the evidence as to the delivery of the deed to Stephenson. It cannot be said there was not sufficient evidence to sustain this finding. And, if this were not so, we cannot see that plaintiff was injured by the finding, since Dyas had no title to convey when he made the deed to plaintiff, through which alone plaintiff claims.

4. There are numerous assignments of error in admitting evidence, over plaintiff's objection, tending to show that the conveyance to plaintiff was fraudulent. Counsel for plaintiff has not stated why he objected to the evidence as immaterial, but I infer that the objection rests upon the theory that evidence as to Stephenson's alleged fraudulent intent was outside the issues. The issue of fraud was presented by the pleadings, and the evidence was material upon that issue.

5. It is contended that the decision is not justified by the evidence unless it be held that Deuel's title was good, and that, before it can be held good, the court must hold the service of notice of the order under which Deuel claims to have been properly made upon the attorney of Stephenson in the divorce case. When this action was commenced, Deuel was in possession under the deed of the sheriff. This was sufficient to have his title quieted as against the deed of Dyas to plaintiff, which the court found, upon sufficient evidence, conveyed no title and was void. Pierce v. Felter, 53 Cal. 18; McKinnie v. Shaffer, 74 Cal. 614, 16 Pac. 509; Pennie v. Hildreth, 81 Cal. 127, 22 Pac. 398.

There are some other assignments of error, but they appear to depend, in one way and another, upon matters already noticed, and do not require special consideration. Discovering no reversible error, I advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

BUCKLEY v. MOHR. (L. A. 570.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 8, 1899.)

BOUNDARIES—MAPS OF DIFFERENT ADDITIONS TO CITY—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. Where plaintiff in ejectment claims land under the official map of a certain addition to a city, and defendant claims under the official map of an adjoining addition, and it is stipulated that the map under which defendant claims is the official map of that addition, and that under it defendant has shown title to the land in controversy, and the evidence shows that such map is the one under which both parties have acted, it will be considered as the controlling map by which to locate the line between the two additions.

2. Where plaintiff in ejectment claims the west 25 feet of a certain lot on which a building is located, and the land in controversy consists of a certain number of feet off the east side of said strip of 25 feet, and the evidence shows that plaintiff and her grantors supposed they had located the building as far east as they claimed possession, and made no claim of possession to any land east of the building until after defendant inclosed the same, plaintiff cannot claim constructive adverse possession to the land east of said building.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Ejectment by Mary Buckley against William Mohr. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Withington & Carter, for appellant. A. C. Mouser, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Ejectment. Defendant had judgment, from which, and from the order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Block K of Horton's addition to the city of San Diego is fractional, and its west boundary line is the east boundary line of fractional block 2 of Middletown, the two fractional blocks extending from Front street on the east to Union street on the west, forming one entire block, being bounded as shown above on the east and west, on the south by C. street, and on the north by B street. Plaintiff claims by a deed made to her in 1886, describing her land as follows: "Beginning at the southwest corner of block K, Horton's addition, thence easterly 25 feet, thence northerly 100 feet, thence westerly 25 feet, thence southerly 100 feet to beginning; being the same land previously conveyed to plaintiff's grantor by the San Diego and Los Angeles R. R. Co." It is otherwise known as the west 25 feet off lots G and H of Horton's addition. Defendant claims the east 92 feet of said lot G through conveyance which described a piece of land beginning at the southeast corner of said block K; thence northerly along Front street 50 feet; thence at right angles west to the west line of the block, which line divides this block and block 2 of Middletown; thence south along this line to C street; thence along C street 117 feet to the beginning,—“excepting a strip off the west end of above tract of 25 feet wide from east to west on said C street by 50 feet long from north to south, deeded to the Texas Pacific Railway Company August 5, 1873.” This excepted piece is the same as described in the complaint. When plaintiff's grantor bought the property, in 1886, he built a laundry upon it, which was then, and ever since has been, rented and used for laundry purposes. The building fronts 22 feet and 3 inches on C street, and extends back about 50 feet, and plaintiff's evidence tends to show that it was the intention of plaintiff's grantor to build the house entirely on the west 25 feet of lot G, with a space for a drainage sewer on the west side of the house to C street. Plaintiff made no use of any of the land lying along the east side of this laundry building, and no door opened on that side, but a door opened on the west side. In 1896 defendant inclosed his part of lot G with a fence, including in his inclosure all the land within six inches of the laundry. Defendant claims that lot G runs back from Front street to the dividing line between block K of Horton's addition and block 2 of Middletown, 117 feet, according to Lockling's map of Horton's addition, and that his part of the lot is the east 92 feet, while he concedes that plaintiff's deed calls for the west 25 feet of the lot, to which defendant makes no claim. Plaintiff claims according to the Jackson map of Middletown, which gives 87 feet as the width of block 2, and would locate the dividing line between the two blocks 3 feet 6 inches further east than by Lockling's map of Horton's addition, and would reduce the length of lot G to 113 feet 4 inches; and, as defendant concedes to plaintiff 25 feet off the west side of this lot, the Jackson map, if the true survey, would reduce defendant's lot from 92 feet to 83 feet 4 inches, and would show defendant to be a trespasser. It was stipulated at the trial by the parties that Lockling's map of Horton's addition is the official map, and was filed June 21, 1871, “and that the south line of said fractional block K, in said addition, is marked thereon 117 feet long, and that said south line of said fractional block K is the south line of said lot G therein; that said map shows that Horton's addition has in it over 400 blocks, each divided into 12 lots, designated by the letters A to L, and that the west half of each block is lettered A to F from north to south, and the east half G to L from south to north; that the Jackson map of Middletown is the official map of Middletown, and was filed October 19, 1874.” It was stipulated that defendant showed valid title to the realty east of the property named in the complaint, by a description which, among others, describes lot G as running on C street 117 feet from the line dividing Horton's addition and Middletown.

It seems to me that the pivotal question is as to which of these two maps should prevail. A subordinate question is whether the occupation by the laundry building carried with it title by adverse possession to any land east of that building. That the Lockling map should prevail over the Jackson map seems quite clear from the evidence. The Middletown reservation comprised some 637 acres, more or less, having a frontage "along the line of low-water mark on the bay of San Diego, and 1,980 feet easterly is the dividing line between Middletown and Horton's addition, running parallel with said low-water mark on said bay of San Diego." This Middletown reservation was partitioned by decree of court, and the map thereof is what is known as the "Jackson Map," which was filed October 19, 1874. There is no evidence that any of defendant's predecessors in interest were parties to that partition suit, or that it involved any of the other lands of the city of San Diego. It appears, however, that the remainder of the city's lands were surveyed and platted by Charles H. Poole, and divided in pueblo lots of 160 acres each, and were so designated on the official map thereof by Poole in 1856; and on May 11, 1867, the city conveyed to Horton certain six of these pueblo lots as designated on the map of 1856 (among which was the lot in which block K is situated), and these pueblo lots were subsequently subdivided by Horton, and the official map thereof duly filed June 21, 1871. The deed under which plaintiff claims begins its description at the southwest corner of block K of Horton's addition, and the evidence is that plaintiff's part of lot G has generally been described as the west 25 feet of lot G of Horton's addition. We think the evidence, stipulated and otherwise, sufficiently establishes the fact that the Lockling map of Horton's addition, and not the Jackson map, has been the one upon which all the parties have acted. And, as it is stipulated that lot G has a depth of 117 feet east and west from Front street, it seems quite plain that, so far as the conveyances should control, defendant has a clear right to the land he has inclosed, and he claims no more. We do not wish to be understood as deciding for all purposes, and in all cases which may hereafter arise, that the dividing line between block K of Horton's addition and block 2 of Middletown must be located by the Lockling map. We only decide that in the case here it must be so done, upon the evidence before us.

But plaintiff claims that, if it be that she has failed to prove perfect title by deed, she yet has proved title by adverse possession. The evidence is that her grantor took possession of what he supposed was the west 25 feet of lot G as laid down on the Lockling map of Horton's addition. He built upon that assumption, and the house is where it was placed in 1886. Plaintiff's witness testified: "Before I obtained any interest in this property, in 1886,—possibly in 1885,—I went to it with Santee [his grantor], who showed me this twenty-five feet on C street. He pointed it out, and located it where we built the laundry, which has been occupied, ever since we built it, as a laundry. We built a sewer, at great expense, on the west side of this twenty-five feet. It was not put on the line, but on this twenty-five feet." Again he testified: "We had a map there, and he showed me the west line of the twenty-five feet from the map, * * * and he indicated to me the fact that we had twenty-five feet off the west end of lots G and H of fractional block K. * * * I do not remember how much of our twenty-five feet we left on the east side of the laundry, nor how much on the west side. There was never any fence on either side of the laundry, that I know of. There was nothing there but the laundry. Before we put the wash house there, we measured off our twenty-five feet. Then the sewer was expensive, and we aimed to be right about it, so we had a survey made. We had some one make a survey before we put the sewer in, and we put it on the westerly part of our twenty-five feet. We did not aim to put it on any line. We aimed to get it inside of our own domains." For purposes of taxation this piece was variously described. Plaintiff's agent since 1889 testified that it has been generally described as the "west twenty-five feet of lot G." It seems to me that the evidence warrants the inference that plaintiff and her grantors supposed they had located the laundry as far east on the lot as they claimed possession. The building is stated by one witness to be 23 feet 3 inches, and by another witness 22 feet and 3 inches, wide. The latter of these measurements would leave but 2 feet 9 inches for the sewer, which was built west of the house, and within the 25 feet claimed; there was a door leading out to the west, but no door or entrance from the east. The evidence tends strongly to show that no claim of possession or right of possession was set up by plaintiff or her grantor to any land east of the laundry. We do not see how the doctrine relied upon by plaintiff, as to constructive possession of a larger tract while in actual possession of only a portion, can apply, for the evidence shows that the entry was upon the whole tract called for by plaintiff's deed, as the claimants understood their rights. They never occupied or made claim to any land east of the building until after defendant built his fence. Plaintiff's adverse possession was of the west 25 feet of the 117 feet of lot G of Horton's addition, and we do not see how she can claim constructive adverse possession beyond this, in view of the evidence in the case. How far in the other direction her adverse possession may be maintained, in order to give her the full 25 feet front on C street, it is not our intention to intimate. All that is intended to be decided is that the evidence fails to support her claim to the land she now seeks to recover, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

McKEEBY v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

(L. A. 484.)

ADMINISTRATORS — SETTLING CLAIM—RIGHTS OF HEIR.

An administrator, without any authority, executed to a city a deed to part of a lot belonging to intestate, which commissioners had reported as land to be taken for opening a street, and the city took possession of the land, and paid to him the sum fixed as the value thereof, which he used in paying claims against the estate. Held that, though the deed was void and the city was a trespasser, yet, as the administrator had the right to accept payment for the damage, subject to the approval of the court, which he had when his account, showing the facts, was settled and allowed, the heir, who knew of the facts, and consented to the allowance of the account, or one who, also knowing the facts, took from him a deed of the lot and an assignment of any claim for damages, could not recover damages from the city.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by L. C. McKeeby against the city of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McKeeby & Whitney and H. H. Appel, for appellant. W. E. Dunn, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for damages. The court found the following facts: Under the provisions of the act of March 6, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70), for laying out, opening, and extending any street, etc., and to condemn and acquire any land necessary or convenient for that purpose, the city council of the city of Los Angeles took all the steps required by the statute to assess the benefits and damages for the opening of Castelar street into Bellevue avenue. The report of the commissioners was confirmed and adopted May 7, 1894, and among other pieces of property described in the ordinance of intention and in the report as land to be taken for said opening of said street was a portion of lot 24, in block H, of the Fort Hill tract, reported as belonging, and which did belong, to the estate of Mary Martin, deceased, and the sum of $620 was fixed and allowed as the value of said portion of said lot. D. W. Field, public administrator, was the administrator of said estate at the time, and so continued until after March 12, 1896. On February 15, 1895, the street commissioners, by warrant drawn on the funds of the treasury of said city to the account of said improvement, paid to said Field the sum of $620, as administrator of said estate, and on that day he executed, as such administrator, to the city a deed conveying said portion of said lot, and delivered the same to the commissioners. One Samuel Earl was the sole heir of deceased, and as such succeeded to all the property of the estate, subject to all just debts of deceased and costs and expenses of administration. Said sum so paid to said Field was used by him and applied "in payment of claims against said estate of Mary Martin, deceased, and costs of administration, duly allowed; and that in his final account as such administrator said Field fully accounted for the same as money received 'for improving street,' and that on the settlement of said final account it appeared that said estate was indebted in the sum of $710, and that the further sum of $90 in addition to said sum of $620 was required to pay off and discharge the debts and expenses of administration, in order to close up said estate; that said sum of $90 was advanced by said heir, Samuel Earl, and said account settled and allowed; that said Earl was represented on the hearing of settlement of said final account by his attorneys (one of whom is the plaintiff in this action), and that no exceptions or objections to said final account were made." A decree of distribution was thereafter entered, whereby the whole of said lot was distributed to said Earl, who thereafter made his deed of conveyance to plaintiff, who "knew that said commissioners had paid said sum of $620 to said Field, and that said Field had executed and delivered said deed to said city, and that said Field had paid and applied said sum of $620 in satisfaction of legal and duly-allowed claims against the estate of said Mary Martin, deceased." "The value of the strip of land hereinbefore described and the damages to the remaining portion of said lot * * * does not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $620." As conclusions of law, the court found that the plaintiff should recover nothing by his action, and that defendant should recover its costs. Judgment was accordingly entered, from which, and from an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals.

It is admitted that the administrator took no proceedings in the probate court to sell the property to the city, and obtained no order to convey it. All parties agree that his deed was without authority and is void. The evidence shows that Earl, the sole heir of deceased, plaintiff's grantor, had knowledge of the conveyance by the administrator and the purpose for which it was given. He had knowledge that the consideration paid was used by the administrator in paying debts and expenses of administration, and his attorney, the present plaintiff, was in court at the time the final account was heard, as Earl's representative, and he examined the items of the account. Plaintiff testified: "We looked at the account, and had no objection to it. We wanted to see what part of the $620 was paid." When asked to what extent he represented Earl, he said: "To the extent I have stated. We simply said that we had no objection to that account. The court asked if we had looked at this account, and we said, 'Yes,' and that we had no objection." And, again, he said he "consented that this account be allowed." The account shows receipts, including an item of $620 "cash received Los Angeles city damages to Reld lot for improving street," $2,022.80, and disbursements, $2004. There was a report accompanying the account explaining this item of $620, and showing a balance of $18.80. The account was settled as rendered, and Earl's attorneys advanced for Earl to the administrator sufficient ($90, as shown by the report) to enable the estate to be closed and the property distributed. Subsequently, with full knowledge of all the facts, plaintiff took his deed from Earl (including an assignment of any claim he had for damages), and presented the claim to the city authorities for damages, which being refused, he thereupon brought this suit.

So far as we can see it is a simple action for damages done by the city under a deed which it is conceded has no validity. The right of the city to retain the possession of the land is not involved. The city was a trespasser, and as such became liable in damages. It paid in full, however, all the court found that the land was injured, and the only question is whether it should pay a second time. Appellant's position is that the payment by the city was under a mistake of law, and was a voluntary payment to the administrator, and cannot be recovered from him nor from one to whose benefit he applied it, by way of counterclaim or set-off; that there is no ground for estoppel in the case against the heir or his grantee, and there is no right of subrogation; that the decree of distribution, until set aside, is a complete estoppel of record against the city. Whatever may be the law in this state as to the title to the land and the right of the city to withhold possession from plaintiff,—questions not now involved,—we think the plainest principles of equity and good conscience should prevent plaintiff from recovering damages after having once had the benefit of full payment. When the land was damaged, it was part of the estate. The city became at once liable to the estate, but we cannot see that because the liability arose through mistake of law, and through the unauthorized act of the administrator, the claim for damage would be different from a claim which would have arisen if the city had proceeded without the knowledge or consent of the administrator. The claim became an asset of the estate, and it was the duty of the administrator to collect it, and he did so as the representative of the heir, and accounted for the money to the estate, and used it to pay debts and charges for which the land in question was liable, and which had to be paid before complete title could pass by distribution to plaintiff's grantor. Conceding that, if this were an action to quiet title or to recover possession of the land, defendant would not be subrogated to the rights of creditors, and would not be entitled to the repayment of the money it paid out before plaintiff could recover, and also conceding that in such an action plaintiff would not be estopped, because he had indirectly received the benefit of the sale, it seems to us that the principles upon which the court might hold with plaintiff do not apply. The statutes relating to sales of land by an administrator, compliance with which is essential to a valid sale, have no reference to claims accruing to the estate by reason of acts of trespass upon the land. There is no pretense of fraud in the permission given by the administrator to the defendant to take possession of the land. The most that can be said is that he unlawfully permitted injury to property in his care and custody as trustee of the estate and of the heir at law. But when that injury was fully compensated, and the estate and the heir received the full benefit of the compensation, and the heir consented to the settlement of the final account, including this item of damage to his property, he took the land on distribution freed from any claim against defendant on account of this damage. The administrator, as the representative of the heir, had a right, as such, to accept payment for the damage, subject to the approval of the court. He had this approval when his account was settled and allowed, and, as the heir consented to the allowance of the account, we cannot see why his grantee, who stands in his shoes, should be heard to complain. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

CASEY v. LEGGETT et al. (S. F. 932.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 6, 1899.)
FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—CONSIDERATION —EVIDENCE—APPEAL.

1. Finding that there was a consideration for a deed claimed to be in fraud of creditors, and that the deed was delivered, being supported by substantial evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. There being consideration for a deed, one attacking it as in fraud of the grantor's creditors has the burden of proving that the grantee was a party to the fraud, and did not take the deed in good faith.

3. A case having been tried as though the pleadings raised a certain issue, a technical objection that they did not cannot be made for the first time on appeal.

4. Deed from F. to L. being supported by consideration and taken in good faith, a conveyance of the property by L. to a third person, though without consideration, is good as against a creditor of F.

5. An owner of lands, though not in possession, may maintain action to quiet title.

6. Allowance of leading questions is not ground for reversal, except in case of manifest abuse of discretion.

7. Letter to F., advising him to convey his property to the writer till he could settle with a creditor, is not admissible in action to set aside, as in fraud of creditors, a conveyance by F., where he did not act on the advice, but refused to so deed his property.

8. Where F., when free from debt, gives money to L., and afterwards borrows it, a deed in payment thereof has a good consideration, as against creditors of F.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

Action by E. J. Casey against Joseph Leggett and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James G. Maguire, for appellants. Wm. H. Jordan (Anson Hilton, of counsel), for respondent.

COOPER, C. Action to quiet title. Judgment for plaintiff. Motion for new trial denied. This appeal is from the judgment and order. On July 24, 1893, and prior thereto, one L. Frank Clar was the owner and seised in fee of the lands in controversy, and was then in insolvent circumstances, and owed, among others, one Adolph Sommer the sum of $4,800, besides interest. On said date the said L. Frank Clar made a bargain and sale deed of said lands to his brother Leo H. Clar. On September 11, 1893, said Sommer assigned the indebtedness so due him from L. Frank Clar to defendant Leggett, and on September 21, 1893, Leggett commenced an action in the proper court against said L. Frank Clar, and had a writ of attachment issue, which said writ was levied upon the said lands September 22, 1893. On the following day, September 23d, the deed made by said L. Frank Clar to his brother Leo H. was placed on record in the county where the lands are situated. October 15, 1894, said Leo H. Clar made a quitclaim deed of said lands to plaintiff, and on the 25th of the same month said Leggett recovered judgment against said L. Frank Clar. On December 17, 1894, the defendant Leggett purchased the said premises at execution sale under his said judgment, the same having been sold as the property of said L. Frank Clar. The defendants other than Leggett made default. Leggett, by his answer and cross complaint, denied the execution, delivery, and consideration of the deed from L. Frank Clar to Leo H. Clar, and of the deed from Leo H. Clar to plaintiff, and asked the court to set aside the said deeds, upon the ground that they were fraudulent, made without consideration, and that the lands were held in secret trust by plaintiff for said L. Frank Clar. The plaintiff denied the averments of the cross complaint, and upon the issues so made the case went to trial. The court found in favor of plaintiff upon the material issues, and the main contention of the defendant is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify these findings. The court found that the deed made by L. Frank Clar to his brother Leo was made for a valuable consideration, to wit, in consideration of an indebtedness due from said L. Frank Clar to his said brother amounting to about $4,237.87.

As this finding is the most vital one, and the one most earnestly attacked, we will first examine it. L. Frank Clar testified that his father, before his death, left $670 in a sack for his brother Leo H., who was then a mere boy, and that the father, among his last requests, asked him to take care of it and keep it for Leo; that his father deeded him a lot in San Francisco about the year 1880 for himself and his brother Leo; that this property was sold for $5,000, and of this sum one-half of it belonged to Leo; that $2,000 of the amount realized from the sale of the real estate, and the $670 and $680 due for wages, amounted, with interest, on July 24, 1893, to $4,600 or $4,700; that the money after the sale of the lot was placed in Leo's hands, or, rather, $2,000 of it, together with the $670 and $500 that witness had from other sources; that Leo gave witness permission to use this money, and that witness did use it, in his own business, and was thus indebted to his brother Leo, on the 24th day of July, 1893, in a sum exceeding $4,600. Leo H. Clar testified that he went with his older brother, L. Frank, to the safe-deposit vault, and the money was placed in his hands, and he gave his brother L. Frank permission to use it in his own business. Ivan Clar, another brother, testified to seeing and counting the $670 tied up in a sack in the vault of the safe-deposit company, with a tag on it bearing his brother Leo's name. It further was testified by the brothers Leo and Frank that after Leo attained his majority he worked for Frank for 17 months, and that such services were worth $40 per month, amounting to $680, and that Leo had never been paid. There is other testimony, but the above is sufficient to support the finding as to consideration. The brothers, who were witnesses for each other, do not agree as to all the facts, and there is a certain degree of improbability about much of the evidence that leaves it to our minds unsatisfactory. If we had to pass upon it in the first instance, we are not at all certain that we would find as did the judge of the court below. But the evidence is not contradicted or impeached, except by its own weakness, and the judge of the court below has found it true. As he saw and heard the witnesses, he was more capable of judging of the credit to be given to their testimony than we could possibly be by examining the record. As we understand the rule, we have not the power to disturb a finding of fact if there is substantial evidence to support it. Unlike the court below when trying the cause without a jury, we possess none of the functions of the jury, and therefore cannot substitute our opinion in the place of his, and say which testimony is true and which is false. Lick v. Madden, 36 Cal. 212.

It is further claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the deed made to Leo H. Clar was delivered. The witness Butts testified that at the request of, and as agent of, Leo he prepared the deed and sent it to L. Frank Clar at Boston, to be executed and returned to him; that the deed was executed and returned to witness, and that he received it and took possession of it for Leo. The witness Leo H. Clar says that he employed Butts as his attorney to get the deed for him. We think the evidence (which is not contradicted) amply sufficient to support the finding. The deed having been made for a valuable consideration and delivered to the grantee, the law presumes that the grantee rightfully acquired the title to the property. The burden was therefore upon the defendant, after such consideration and delivery were established, to prove a fraudulent intent on the part of the grantor, and that the grantee was in some way a party to such fraud, by purchasing with knowledge of such fraudulent intent, or under such circumstances as should put him on inquiry as to the fraud on the part of the grantor. Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 614, 6 Sup. Ct. 538; Ross v. Wellman, 102 Cal. 4, 36 Pac. 402. The court found that, at the time of the making of the conveyance from L. Frank Clar to Leo H., Leo was not privy to, or a participator in, any fraud whatsoever, and that Leo never conspired with his brother or any one else in any fraudulent attempt to convey or dispose of said property. This finding does not appear to be directly attacked in appellants' brief, but the argument against it is only from inference and a narration of circumstances. The burden was upon the defendant to show that Leo was in some way a party to the fraud, and that the deed was not taken by him in good faith. In the absence of proof—that is, in the absence of such facts and circumstances—that the court would be justified in the conclusion that Leo was in some way connected with or a party to a fraudulent intent on the part of Frank H., the finding would be justified. As was said by this court in Levy v. Scott, 115 Cal. 41, 46 Pac. 893: "It is quite true that evidences of fraud are not left lying patent in the sunlight; that fraud itself is always concealed; and that the truth is to be discovered more often from circumstances, from the interests of the parties, from the irregularities of the transaction, coupled with injury worked to an innocent party, than from direct and primary evidence of the fraudulent contrivance itself. Nevertheless, the evidence of these matters, facts, and circumstances, taken together, must amount to proof of fraud, and not to a mere suspicion thereof; for the presumption of the law, except where confidential relations are involved, is always in favor of the fair dealing of the parties."

If we are correct in what has been said, the finding as to the intent of L. Frank Clar in making the deed to his brother Leo is not material, and it is not necessary to discuss it. It is claimed that the finding that the deed from Leo H. Clar to plaintiff was for a valuable consideration was outside the issues, contrary to the admissions in the pleadings, and that the said deed was in fact a mortgage given as security only. The technical argument is urged that the plaintiff, in denying the cross complaint, literally denied "that the deed was wholly voluntary and without any consideration whatever," and that such denial was virtually an admission of the allegation of the cross complaint as to want of consideration. If counsel had urged the objection in the court below, it would probably have resulted in an amendment to the answer to the cross complaint in furtherance of justice, and in order that the case might be tried upon its merits. This course was not pursued, and the case was fully tried, as though the issue was properly made by the pleadings. Counsel will not be allowed to try the case upon the theory that the issue was properly before the court below, and thus entice his adversary into a trap to be sprung in this court at the last moment. This court does not countenance technical objections to pleadings when the case was tried in the court below upon the theory that the issues were properly made. Cushing v. Pires (Cal.; S. F. 1,089, filed June 5, 1899) 57 Pac. 572. We do not think the defendant is in a position to claim that the deed from Leo H. Clar to plaintiff was not made in good faith, or that it was intended as a mortgage. He is not a creditor of Leo H. Clar nor of the plaintiff, and, if the deed was a gift, it would not in the least concern the defendant. The deed to Leo H. Clar having been made in good faith and for a valuable consideration, he could afterwards transfer the title acquired by the deed to any one, whether such person was a purchaser in good faith or not. A purchaser without notice of the fraud may sell the property to a person who has notice; for the law does not know of an unincumbered estate which is forfeited by alienation, or for which the owner cannot pass a good title to the purchaser. Bump, Fraud. Conv. § 499, and cases cited.

Considerable space is taken up in appellants' brief in the attempt to show that the finding that plaintiff was in possession of the lands at the time of the commencement of the action is not supported by the evidence. The evidence is sufficient, but the finding is wholly immaterial. The owner of land does not have to be in possession in order to enable him to maintain an action to quiet title. Code Civ. Proc. § 738; People v. Center, 66 Cal. 555, 5 Pac. 263, and 6 Pac. 481; Brusie v. Gates, 80 Cal. 463, 22 Pac. 284.

Many technical objections are made to the rulings upon the admission or rejection of evidence. The first one argued is the ruling of the court in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the defendants' question asked of the witness Leo H. Clar, to wit: "What statement did you make to Mr. Butts at the time you told him to get the deed? How did you tell him? Did you give him any instructions about getting it?" The court sustained the objection upon the ground that the question "had already been answered and gone over."

We think the ruling is not prejudicial error. The witness had been fully examined and cross-examined, and then re-examined and recross-examined, and again re-examined and recross-examined, and this question was asked at the latter end of the third cross-examination, and had been substantially gone over before. The witness was again called by defendant, and examined and cross-examined some three or four times.

The next objection is to a large number of questions asked by plaintiff's counsel, upon the ground that they are leading and suggestive. It is the settled rule in this state that the allowance of leading questions is in the discretion of the trial court, and that a case will not be reversed on such ground unless there is a manifest abuse of such discretion. White v. White, 82 Cal. 452, 23 Pac. 276; Kyle v. Craig (Cal.; filed June 17, 1899) 57 Pac. 791.

A Miss Burnett testified by deposition, and it appeared that she wrote a letter to L. Frank Clar prior to the time the deed was made by Frank to Leo. The letter was written by Miss Burnett to Frank, and not to Leo, or any party now interested in this case. It appears that Miss Burnett knew that Frank was indebted to Sommer, and she was afraid that Sommer might attach his property or cause him trouble. She advised Frank to deed his property to her until he could settle with Sommer, and then she would reconvey it. The court excluded the portions of Miss Burnett's letter relating to or rather advising such conveyance, and we think the ruling correct. The advice was never acted upon, and in fact Frank refused to so deed his property, and told Miss Burnett that he would not do it, as it would not be honest. It would be contrary to all rules of evidence to allow a written suggestion of a stranger to the litigation, to which no one of the parties or their privies consented, to be admitted in evidence. The case quoted by counsel (People v. Colburn, 105 Cal. 651, 38 Pac. 1105) is directly against him. It is said in the opinion: "The letter was a statement of a third party in no wise connected with defendant, was not made under the sanction of an oath, and not admissible. The possession of unanswered letters is not such evidence of acquiescence in their contents as to make them admissible in a civil case, and a letter found upon a prisoner when arrested has been held to be no evidence of the facts stated in it." If the proof had shown that L. Frank Clar acted upon the advice given in the letter, or that he requested it or in any way agreed to it, then it would be admissible for the purpose of showing his fraudulent intent. His fraudulent intent, however, would not change the result of the finding that the deed was made to Leo H. in good faith and for a valuable consideration. We think the testimony tending to show a gift of $2,000 from L. Frank Clar to his brother Leo was within the issues made by the pleadings.

The cross complaint alleged that the deed to Leo was without consideration. The answer to the cross complaint denied this. If L. Frank Clar, at the time when he was not indebted, made a gift of $2,000 to his brother, he had the right to do so. If he afterwards borrowed it, the payment of the debt would be a good consideration for the deed. As has been said before, the truth or falsity of the evidence was left to the trial judge, and is not for this court. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

BROWN v. ROUSE. (S. F. 787),¹

SUBROGATION—VOLUNTARY PAYMENT.

Where plaintiff made a loan to defendant's husband, who gave a mortgage therefor on his wife's land, acting under a power of attorney, which plaintiff, under a mistake of law, thought authorized the mortgage, and the wife never ratified it, he cannot be subrogated to a prior mortgage on the land, which he and defendant's husband paid out of the loan, and had canceled, such payment being voluntary.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action by Adam Brown against Charlotte D. Rouse. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

John H. Durst, for appellant. W. C. Kennedy, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. This is the third appeal of the case. Originally the action was to foreclose a mortgage executed by one German M. Rouse, under power of attorney, in the name of defendant, who was then his wife. At the first trial the court below held the note and mortgage to have been given without authority, but entered a personal judgment against defendant for $1,271 and costs. On appeal this judgment was reversed as outside the issues. 93 Cal. 237, 28 Pac. 1044. At the second trial plaintiff amended his complaint, alleging a loan of $1,200 on November 18, 1887, and its nonpayment. Plaintiff had a personal judgment for $1,510.68 and costs, on the theory that defendant had ratified the loan. On the second appeal the judgment was reversed, on the ground that the evidence failed to establish ratification. 104 Cal. 672, 38 Pac. 507. Defendant had previously given a mortgage on the land to one Davis, which had been overdue for three years and a half at the time of this alleged loan. In the opinion reversing the second judgment, the court said: "As to the $481.65 which went to satisfy the Davis mortgage, it would certainly be proper and just for appellant to pay it, and it is stated in appellant's brief that she is willing to pay it. * * * Perhaps, under appropriate pleadings and findings, plaintiff could recover for the amount of money that went to satisfy the said prior mortgage." The third trial was upon an amendment of the complaint, by which it was alleged that defendant, through her husband, procured plaintiff, as agent, to pay, and he did pay and satisfy, the Davis mortgage, amounting to $580, in full discharge thereof, and that Davis released the same at defendant's request, acting through her said agent; that she had full knowledge of these facts, and thereupon ratified and confirmed said release and discharge of said mortgage, and all the acts of her said agent, Rouse, and said sum of $580 forms a part of the consideration alleged to have been created by the said loan of $1,200 on November 18, 1887. The court found the facts substantially as alleged in the complaint, and that the amount paid to Davis was $481.65. The court also found that defendant had knowledge of all said facts, "and thereupon expressly ratified and confirmed said payment and release of said mortgage, and all of said acts of said agent, G. M. Rouse." As to the loan of $1,200, the court found that defendant's husband, assuming to act as agent and attorney in fact, and in pursuance of said power of attorney, borrowed from plaintiff and said plaintiff loaned to defendant the sum of $1,198, and gave therefor to said plaintiff a promissory note executed by said German M. Rouse, in the name of said Charlotte D. Rouse, for $1,200, which remains unpaid, except the said sum of $481.65, and that defendant "did receive by her said husband, as her agent, the residue of said $1,198. * * * Subsequently to said 18th day of November, 1887, and from time to time, she ratified and confirmed the loan made by Brown, by letters instructing the payment of interest on said loan, after being fully informed and having specific and complete knowledge of said loan and all the circumstances thereof." These interest payments were $54 on May 19, 1888, and $54 on November 23, 1888, being semiannual installments at 9 per cent. It is further found that when the money was borrowed defendant and her husband resided in the territory of Washington; that soon after the loan her husband returned to their then home, "taking with him the balance of said money, to wit, $716.35; that he then reported to his said wife that he had borrowed the money in her name, and had used the sum of $481.65 to pay off said mortgage, and that he had the balance with him, and that she, knowing that he had said money, did not request him to pay it to her, but allowed him to use the same as he saw fit, believing at the time that she was liable therefor; that thereafter she ratified and confirmed the acts of her said husband in procuring said sum of $1,198 from the plaintiff." Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of plaintiff for $1,729.37 and costs. Defendant claims that the evidence does not support these findings or the decision, and that the decision is against law, and appeals from the judgment and from the order denying her motion for a new trial.

So far as the alleged ratification of the loan is concerned, the case is in no particular strengthened by any new evidence. It still rests upon the fact that defendant paid two installments of interest on the note. As was said in the opinion given at the second appeal: "She consented to the two payments of interest, not as interest upon a mere verbal loan made by her husband, but as interest on a genuine note and mortgage executed in her name, and which bound her firmly and irrevocably. Now, it is an inherent element of ratification that the party to be charged with it must have fully known what he was doing." Plaintiff added to his testimony given at the second trial the following as to the loan to Mrs. Rouse: "She got the full benefit of it." He had no personal knowledge of the fact, he never saw her, and at the time defendant's husband borrowed the money she was in Washington Territory and he was in California. His statement has no probative value. Added to the former evidence are certain letters,—one from Mrs. Rouse to Rucker & Son, her then agents in San Jose, dated July 21, 1887, relating to the management of the property, and stating her desire to sell at a price not less than $2,000, and referring to the mortgage then on the place; a letter, also, dated October 27, 1887, from Rucker & Son to J. H. Durst, of San Francisco, defendant's nephew, calling attention to an offer they had for the property, to which Durst replies October 28th, stating that he has not heard from Mrs. Rouse lately, and must refer the matter to her. These were all written before the alleged loan, and seem to have no relation to it, and certainly cast no light upon the alleged ratification of the loan subsequently made; and the same may be said of the only remaining additional letter of Rucker & Son to Mrs. Rouse, of date February 9, 1888. It relates only to the price the party to whom they were trying to sell the property would probably be willing to pay. The witness Rucker, who had testified at the former trial, added the following to his testimony given at that time: "Davis had previously requested me to notify Mrs. Rouse that the mortgage and note must be paid or he would be obliged to foreclose. I did write her to that effect, but received no reply from her directly, but shortly after that her husband came down on this business." His letters to Mrs. Rouse were not in evidence, and there was no evidence that she received any such letters, and there is no evidence that her husband came here in response to these letters. But, if he did, the fact throws no light upon the question of his authority to borrow money in her name, nor upon the question of subsequent ratification of any such loan. Plaintiff also introduced as additional evidence the testimony of John H. Durst, who resided in San Francisco at the time the loan was made. He testified that defendant's husband told him what had been done in the matter of the loan. Durst was not only nephew to defendant, but had attended to some of her business for her. He testified: "I corresponded with Mrs. Rouse about her San Jose property at times, both before and after the note and mortgage in this case were given, and up to the present time." He nowhere testifies that he informed her of what her husband had done. The evidence as to ratification stands precisely where it did when the case was last here, and we discover no reason for changing the opinion then expressed upon the point.

The evidence as to what defendant's husband reported to his wife as to the loan on his return to Washington, and what she did in the matter, is the same as at the second trial. There is no evidence now, and there was none then, to support the finding that defendant's husband paid her the borrowed money, less the amount used to discharge the Davis mortgage. She testified then, and it is the only evidence on the subject, that she never received any of this borrowed money; that her husband told her he had borrowed money from plaintiff, but he never informed her he had executed a note in her name. He told her he had paid off the Davis mortgage out of the money he had borrowed, and he told her he had money with him when he came home, and this is the extent of her knowledge of the transaction, except as subsequently obtained, when called upon to pay the interest on the plaintiff's mortgage. In June, 1888, Rouse deserted his wife, and they never after lived together. Upon substantially the same evidence as now here, the trial court at the second trial found, as conclusion of law, that plaintiff was not entitled to be subrogated to the Davis mortgage, but was entitled to recover the amount of the loan on the ground of ratification. The court at the last trial made no finding as to the right of plaintiff to be subrogated to the Davis mortgage, but found that plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the loan, with interest at 7 per cent. from November 18, 1887.

Plaintiff, however, urges his right to be subrogated to the Davis mortgage, and he prays that this may be done; but he does not ask that he be treated as the equitable assignee of the Davis mortgage, and that it be foreclosed for his benefit, the property sold, and its proceeds applied to the payment of his claim to the amount of the Davis mortgage. Subrogation is the substitution of another person in the place of a creditor, the substituted party succeeding to the rights of the creditor in relation to the debt. The substitute is put in all respects in the place of the party to whose right he is subrogated. Sheld. Subr. § 1. The Davis note was dated January 1, 1884, and was due 12 months after its date. The statute of limitations barred foreclosure after January 1, 1889. There is evidence tending to show that this action was not brought until after January 1, 1889, and after the Davis note and mortgage were barred by the statute, and defendant has pleaded the statute. It is not necessary to pass upon the question of limitation.

The right of subrogation in this case rests upon the undisputed facts: That plaintiff's mortgage was made without defendant's authority, and we have held that it was not afterwards ratified. It therefore is a nullity as to defendant. When plaintiff made the loan to Rouse, the two went together with Davis to the recorder's office. Out of the money loaned the Davis mortgage was paid, and it was thereupon satisfied of record, and the plaintiff's mortgage was then recorded. Plaintiff had previously caused the record to be searched. He testified: "Being told by Mr. Bailey that the title was all right, and that the power of attorney was all right and of record, and appeared in the abstract, I made the loan in good faith upon the property, and under the circumstances I have stated." He did not take an assignment of the Davis mortgage, but paid the debt secured by it and had it canceled. There was no mistake of fact, for he had knowledge of the authority under which Rouse was acting. His mistake was one of law. No question of fraud, accident, or mistake of fact arises. The case is closely analogous to Guy v. Du Uprey, 16 Cal. 196, where the mortgage was executed by the guardian of a minor without authority, and the guardian used a portion of the money to discharge a valid mortgage lien resting on the property at the time. It was held that the guardian could not be substituted in the place of the prior mortgagee, for the reason that he made payment voluntarily and as a stranger. We think Guy v. Du Uprey correctly states the law of this case, and is in harmony with adjudication of the question in other states. See cases collected in 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 281, tit. "Subrogation"; Sheld. Subr. § 240. The case of Campbell v. Association, 163 Pa. St. 609, 30 Atl. 222, in most respects was a counterpart of the case here. The mortgage under which subrogation was claimed was executed under a power of attorney to sell, and the money borrowed by this mortgage was in part used to pay off and discharge then existing prior mortgage liens. Both questions as to the power to mortgage under a power to sell and the right of subrogation had very full consideration, and an unusually painstaking examination of the authorities is shown in the opinion. It was held that the mortgagee, on the second mortgage being declared invalid, had no right to be subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee so as to recover the $6,000 paid in extinguishment of the first mortgage. It was said in Webster and Goldsmith's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 409: "While subrogation is founded upon principles of equity and benevolence, and may be decreed where no contract exists, yet it will not be decreed in favor of a mere volunteer, who, without any duty, moral or otherwise, pays the debt of another. It will not arise in favor of a stranger, but only in favor of a party who, on some sort of compulsion, discharges a demand against a common debtor." At the second trial defendant expressed a willingness to pay the amount of the Davis mortgage, and at the last trial counsel for defendant offered in open court to allow judgment to go against defendant for the sum of $481.65. These overtures, however, were rejected, the plaintiff apparently insisting upon the full amount or nothing. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed.

SHERWOOD et al. v. KYLE. (S. F. 974.) (Supreme Court of California. Sept. 6, 1899.)

NEW TRIAL—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES—ABUSE OF DISCRETION—REVIEW ON APPEAL.

1. In an action for slander against defendant, a trustee of the school district, for words spoken of plaintiff as a school-teacher, where the trial was two years after the alleged slander, and plaintiff testified that she had found no difficulty in obtaining schools since, and a verdict of $1,000 was given her, an order of the trial court granting a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, unless plaintiff would remit $700 of the judgment, will not be set aside on the ground that the court abused its discretion.

2. An order of the trial court granting a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, given under the influence of passion or prejudice, will not be interfered with unless it clearly appears that there was an abuse of discretion.

3. Except where one of the grounds for a new trial is as to the ruling on the insufficiency of the evidence, it is immaterial, on appeal, on what ground the new trial was granted, as respondent may defend the ruling on any point involved in his motion.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lake county.

Action for slander by Dwight Sherwood and Julia C. Sherwood against Shelton Kyle for injurious words spoken of plaintiff Julia C. Sherwood in respect to her profession as a school-teacher. From an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. J. Hudson and Dan Jones, for appellants. T. J. Sheridan and J. J. Bruton, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action for slander, wherein the plaintiffs seek damages for injurious words spoken of the plaintiff Julia C. in respect to her profession or occupation as a school-teacher. After suitable allegations in regard to the qualification and occupation of said Julia C., plaintiffs charge that while engaged in her profession, and while school was in session, defendant entered her schoolroom, and, in the hearing of the pupils, spoke willfully and maliciously to, of, and concerning said plaintiff the following false and scandalous words: "You have no business to be in charge of young children. You are no more fit to teach school than hell is for a powder house,"—meaning, etc. Defendant does not deny the language attributed to him, but says it was not malicious, and has not damaged plaintiffs. He avers, also, that the language was privileged. He was a trustee of the school district, and, having evidence that the proper discipline was not maintained by such plaintiff, he went to the school to remonstrate, and did not intimate or say anything derogatory to Mrs. Sherwood, except that she did not maintain the proper control over her pupils, and for that reason only was unfit to teach. He denies that he harbors any malice or ill will towards said plaintiff, or that he was at all angry with her; and he avers that his charge that she was unfit to teach school, because of her lack of power to control her pupils, is true. In another defense he alleges that he owns and occupies a farm adjoining the school lot, and the school children, through lack of proper control, have frequently committed depredations upon his property, and therefore he went to the teacher to complain, and to request that she exercise some restraint over her pupils. Plaintiffs recovered a verdict for $1,000, which the trial judge, upon the motion for a new trial, adjudged to be excessive, and made an order granting a new trial unless plaintiffs would remit $700. This plaintiffs declined to remit, and the order was made absolute.

The first question which naturally presents itself for consideration is whether this court can set aside the order on the ground that the court abused its discretion in ordering a new trial unless plaintiffs would remit a portion of their judgment. The power of the court to make a conditional order of this character is thoroughly settled in this state. Gregg v. Railroad Co., 59 Cal. 312; Lee v. Railroad Co., 101 Cal. 118, 35 Pac. 572; Domico v. Casassa, 101 Cal. 411, 35 Pac. 1024. It is true that in actions for damages for a personal tort the court should not substitute its judgment for that of the jury. The judge should not grant a new trial merely because he deems the verdict excessive, unless it is so excessive as to indicate that it was the result of passion or prejudice. But the motion for a new trial was based, in part, upon the ground of excessive damages given under the influence of passion or prejudice. The court sustained this contention, holding that the damages were given under the influence of passion or prejudice. The learned judge had advantages over us in regard to the matter, and, besides, that he abused his discretion must clearly appear before we can interfere. It is especially so when such discretion is used in awarding a new trial which does not finally dispose of the matter. From the testimony of Mrs. Sherwood, the conduct of defendant certainly seems very offensive and boorish. His testimony, however, which the court must have believed, puts a different phase upon the matter. Manners are largely a matter of training and circumstance, and absence of decorum does not always imply malice or insult. And the suit is not for an injury to the character and general reputation of Mrs. Sherwood. In her complaint she says that defendant meant to be and was understood to mean "that plaintiff was unreliable and unworthy of confidence as a teacher aforesaid, and in all respects in her profession was wholly disqualified for the exercise thereof." No insinuation was made that she did not enjoy and deserve the highest reputation as a woman. The trial was two years after the alleged slander, and Mrs. Sherwood testified that she had found no difficulty in obtaining schools in Lake county since. She might have continued at the same school. The judge probably concluded that she had not been seriously injured by the slander, and that the jury had simply imposed a fine on the defendant for his bad manners.

It is not necessary to discuss the other points made on the motion for a new trial. They are, however, all involved on this appeal; for the court cannot foreclose the defendant as to any of them by granting a new trial upon some one ground. Except where one ground is as to the insufficiency of the evidence, and this only as to the ruling upon that one point, it is utterly immaterial here upon what ground the new trial was granted. The respondent may defend the ruling upon any point involved in his motion. The order is affirmed.

DOW et al. v. SWAIN et al. (S. F. 1,144.)
FRAUD—RESCISSION OF SALE—VALUE OF CORPORATE STOCK—FINDINGS.

1. In an action by a purchaser to rescind a sale for false and fraudulent representations made by the vendor, a paragraph following the findings of facts, which recites that, "as conclusions of law from the foregoing facts the court finds that, by reason of their neglect and failure to properly examine the property which they took, and to investigate its value, equity will not grant relief to the plaintiffs," is not a misplaced finding of fact, but the expression of a reason for a decision.

2. Equity will rescind a contract for the conveyance of land, in consideration of the transfer of stock in a corporation, induced by false representations of the agent of the owner of the stock as to its value, who claimed to know the facts concerning which the representations were made, where such representations are believed and relied on by the owner of the land, though no relation of confidence existed between them, and the owner of the land was not prevented from investigating the truth of the representations by any fraud of the agent, where he did not investigate the truth of the representations, as to the condition of the corporation, and the value of the stock, and, even if he had investigated, he would not have been able to have learned the truth.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Burritt N. Dow and others against Revilla A. Swain and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiffs appealed. Reversed.

Boyd & Fifield, for appellants. A. E. Bolton, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought to enforce a rescission of a contract for fraud. It is averred that Carrie C. Dow, wife of the other plaintiff, until August 1, 1895, and until conveyance to defendant Swain, owned as her separate property a ranch in Tulare county, worth $20,000. The Atlas Iron Works was a corporation with a capital stock of 100,000 shares, of the par value of $10 per share, of which 83,882 shares had been issued. August 1, 1895, plaintiffs contracted with defendant Hovey, who professed to be the agent of defendant Swain, to exchange said farm for 22,220 shares of stock in said corporation. August 5th she conveyed the property to Swain and received the stock. Plaintiffs were induced to make the exchange by certain fraudulent misrepresentations, which admittedly were quite material and important, and which were all averred and found to be false. It is also averred and found that the defendants were both interested in the exchange, although Hovey represented that he had no interest in the matter, and no stock in the corporation, except just enough to authorize him to act as a director; also that plaintiffs knew nothing of the facts save what they were told by Hovey. The representations were made with the intent to defraud and deceive. They were false, and both defendants knew that to be so. It is found that plaintiffs believed the representations, and were induced by them to make the exchange, which they would not otherwise have made. The representations were as to facts, and not mere matters of opinion. Demand for a rescission and the necessary offer to return stock, etc., before the action was commenced were all admitted. But, while finding all other facts for plaintiffs, the court also found that there was no relation of trust or confidence between the parties, and plaintiffs were not fraudulently induced to forbear inquiry into the truth of the said representations, and "they might have ascertained their falsity by making the necessary investigations and employing the proper means to that end"; and, so finding, rendered judgment for the defendants, and adds: "As conclusions of law from the foregoing facts the court finds: First. That by reason of their neglect and failure to properly examine the property which they took in exchange for their property, and to investigate and ascertain its value, equity will not grant relief to the plaintiffs." It is argued that this is a misplaced finding of a fact. I think not, though it may be doubted whether it can be called a conclusion of law. It is expressly a conclusion from the foregoing facts, and in its nature is not the statement of an ultimate fact, but the reason for a decision. The property of the corporation consisted of a foundry on the Potrero, with machine shop attached, with tools and stock, and certain book accounts and bills receivable. The works were in operation. The finding states: "The plaintiffs had no experience in the business there carried on, nor in any similar business, and no knowledge in regard to the value of the said property and assets of the concern, nor its shares of stock, and neither of them was skilled in books of account." The false representations, as stated in the third finding, were the following: "The said Hovey, for the purpose and with the intent to induce the making by the plaintiffs of the contract mentioned in the complaint, and the execution of the said deed and transfer therein mentioned, stated and represented to the plaintiffs that the said Atlas Iron Works was perfectly solvent; that the net profits of its business for the year 1894 were ten thousand dollars; that there were outstanding accounts due to it, which were good, sufficient to pay all its indebtedness; that it was in better condition than the statement of February 1, 1895 (set forth in the complaint) showed; that its credit was A 1; that it could buy all the material it wanted on credit; that he knew more about its business than anyone else; that he had thoroughly investigated its affairs, and that said stock was worth ninety cents a share; that the open accounts shown in said statement of February 1, 1895, among the assets, were good; that he did not own any of said stock, except enough to qualify him as a director of the company; that said Swain had borrowed thirty-five or forty cents a share on the stock." The statement of February 1, 1895, was shown to plaintiffs in connection with the representations, and is as follows:

Statement of the Atlas Iron Works.

	February 1, 1895.
Assets.
Construction, building, hotel, stock and tools.....	$68,742 22
Cash	883 92
Merchandise	5,016 00
Open accounts.....	21,252 27
Total	$95,894 41
Liabilities.
Open accounts	$ 4,169 05
Note, J. F. Chapman.....	1,173 89
Anglo-California Bank	2,412 50
Pacific Axle Co., note due January, 1896	8,791 50
Total	$16,546 94
Assets over and above liabilities.....	$79,347 47

As stated, the court specifically finds each representation untrue. As to the statement of February 1, 1895, it was found that the property valued at $68,742.22 was not worth to exceed $25,000, and that more than $8,000 of the open accounts were worthless, and that the collections from bills receivable will not pay the indebtedness by $4,357.35. The eleventh finding is as follows: "The stock of the Atlas Iron Works has no market value. It was not bought or sold on the market. It was not worth intrinsically to exceed thirty cents a share. That amount per share might have been derived from a sale of all its property and plant as a going concern, the payment of its debts, and the division of the surplus among the outstanding shares, provided a purchaser could be found. If it had been compelled, within any reasonable time, to sell its property and assets for what they would bring in cash, there would have been no surplus for the stockholders. The value of the stock could have been approximately ascertained only by a thorough investigation by experts of the values of its assets and property, and of its books and business." Before closing the trade, Hovey took plaintiffs to the foundry, where they met Swain, who was secretary of the corporation. The defendants then showed plaintiffs through the foundry, and they were "informed in a general way that they could have opportunity to examine the books of the company." At the same time Hovey told them that he "knew all about the affairs of the company, and could give them any information that they wanted." Plaintiffs did not examine the books, or employ any one to do so, and did not discover the falsity "of any of the said statements or representations above found to have been made, nor did they gain any knowledge beyond the said representations." All these facts are from the findings, there being no bill of exceptions. And this is the rule of law asserted by the judgment: Although the vendor and his agent had peculiar means of knowing the material facts, and knew that plaintiffs knew nothing of the property, or of the business, or of bookkeeping; and although the value of the property could not have been ascertained without the employment of skilled accountants and expert appraisers; although plaintiffs relied wholly upon the false representation, and had no other knowledge and no means of knowledge except by the employing of experts to examine the books and property, and although even by that means the falsity of some quite material representations could not have been discovered (such as the value of the open accounts),—still plaintiffs cannot recover, because there was no relation of trust and confidence between the parties, and they were not fraudulently induced to forbear inquiry, "and they might have ascertained their falsity by making the necessary investigations, and employing the proper means to that end." The word "necessary" must mean such inquiries as would have proved successful. If the rule were applied to all cases of fraud, relief would always be denied where the relations are not confidential. It is unnecessary to state that no case has been or can be found which comes anywhere near sustaining this proposition. The only rational explanation of the ruling which I can imagine is that the court concluded that plaintiffs did investigate for themselves, and did not rely upon the representations, and, since they were not induced to forbear by the fault of the defendants, it was their own fault if their investigations were not sufficiently thorough. The general rules upon the question as to when a party may or may not rely upon representations are stated in Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (section 892). He cannot rely upon them (1) when he investigates for himself; (2) when he is afforded the means of investigation, and commences to make inquiries which, if efficiently prosecuted, would have resulted in proving the falsity of the representations; (3) when the representation is in regard to generalities, equally within the knowledge of the parties, or the knowledge is equally within the reach of both parties. "But when the representation is concerning facts of which the party making it has, or is supposed to have, knowledge, and the other party has no such advantage, and the circumstances are not those described in the first or second case, then it will be presumed that he relied on the statements. He is justified in doing so." This case is plainly within this last proposition, unless the plaintiffs, instead of relying upon the representations, did investigate for themselves. The parties were not on an equal footing as to knowledge. Defendants, as they represented, knew more about the matter than anybody else; the plaintiffs were entirely ignorant in regard to such property. The corporate stock, which was the subject of the trade, had no market value, but the false representations gave it an intrinsic value. This is not a case of patent defects, or where the property is at hand, and it would argue gross negligence on the part of the buyer to rely upon statements of the seller without opening his eyes to look. Under such circumstances there is no case which holds that the purchaser is bound to investigate for himself, and may not rely upon the representations, and that equity will not grant relief to him if he does, and is defrauded.

The reason given by the court for its conclusion that defendants were entitled to judgment was as stated, but it found facts as follows: "The plaintiffs were deceived and misled by said false statements and representations, and were ignorant of their falsity, but believed them to be true; and they both acted and relied solely upon them as true in making said contract and executing and delivering said deed and transfer, and were induced thereby to make said contract and execute said deed and transfer, and, but for said false statements and representations, would not have entered into said contract, or made said deed and transfer. The plaintiffs did not discover or know the falsity of said representations and statements, nor any of them, until more than two weeks after they had executed and delivered the said deed and transfer." And further: "By reason of said statements and representations, and their reliance thereon, the plaintiffs have suffered damages in the loss of the real and personal property described in the complaint, and to the value and amount thereof." The plaintiffs were not put upon inquiry by having their suspicions so aroused that it was negligence on their part not to inquire further, and it also appears that they did not in fact rely upon any examination made by themselves, if it can be held that they made any. It is quite obvious that the plaintiffs in this case did not make an examination for themselves, or attempt to do so. Defendants knew that they were utterly incapable of so doing, except, as the court finds, by the employment of experts. Showing these inexperienced rustics through the foundry and machine shop was but in furtherance of the fraud, and, when they were told "in a general way" that they could examine the books, Hovey also told them that he knew all about it, and could give them all the information they desired. To lead a blind man through the works would not have afforded an opportunity to examine for himself. These could learn no more except that there was in fact a foundry.

I do not subscribe to the idea that under all circumstances an actual examination by the buyer will shield the wrongdoer from an action for damages. Every case must be judged for itself, and the circumstances which warrant or forbid relief cannot be scheduled. If the seller knows the facts, and the buyer is ignorant, and to the knowledge of the seller the buyer relies upon the representations, I see no reason why relief should not be granted, although an imperfect examination was made. It may have been imperfect because of the representations. Means were used to prevent the examination, and it would not be going far to say that the relation is made confidential by the mere making of the representation with the knowledge that it will be acted upon. Section 2219, Civ. Code. "It is now settled law that one who chooses to make positive assertions without warrant will not excuse himself by saying that the other party need not have relied upon them. He must show that his representations were not in fact relied upon. In the same spirit it is now understood that the defense of contributory negligence does not mean that the plaintiff is to be punished for his want of caution, but that an act or default of his own, and not the negligence of the defendant, was the approximate cause of his damage." Webb, Pol. Torts, 378; and see note, where numerous authorities are cited. In Bish. Noncont. Law, § 330, it is said: That plaintiff is too credulous is not generally a defense. "The test of the representation is its actual effect on the particular mind, whether it is a strong and circumspect mind, or one weak and too relying." See, also, Bigelow, Frauds, 524. "Every contracting party has an absolute right to rely on the express statement of an existing fact, the truth of which is known to the opposite party, and unknown to him, as the basis of a mutual agreement; and he is under no obligation to investigate and verify statements to the truth of which the other party to the contract, with full means of knowledge, has deliberately pledged his faith." Mead v. Bunn, 32 N. Y. 275. To the same effect are Eaton v. Winnie, 20 Mich. 156, McBeth v. Craddock, 28 Mo. App. 380, and numerous cases there cited. The effrontery of the defendants, and their unbounded confidence in the guileless simplicity of the plaintiffs, is shown by the fact that they told Mrs. Dow that she could verify the statement of February 1, 1895, which is set out above, by inquiring at the mercantile agencies. She did so inquire, and found only that the same statement had been submitted there by the Atlas Iron Works, of which Swain was secretary. This sufficiently shows the incapacity of plaintiffs, but hardly proves that they examined for themselves, and did not rely upon the representations.

I have examined the numerous authorities cited by counsel for respondent, and do not think there is one which would help his case. He assumes, however, that his case is one in which the purchasers did not rely upon the representations, but made an examination for themselves. I cannot agree with that proposition. The findings seem to cover the whole case, and every issue of fact is resolved in favor of plaintiffs. I see no reason for a new trial. The findings, as they are, entitle the plaintiffs to the relief demanded.

The case is therefore remanded, with directions to set aside the judgment, and in lieu thereof to enter judgment for the plaintiffs as demanded in the complaint.

HUBBARD v. UNIVERSITY BANK OF LOS ANGELES et al. (L. A. 485.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 7, 1899.)
MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE BY ACTION—INDORSERS AS DEFENDANTS—PERSONAL JUDGMENT—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

1. On general principles, as well as under Code Civ. Proc. § 383, providing that parties to promissory notes "may all or any of them be included in the same action at the option of the plaintiff," the indorsers of a promissory note, secured by a mortgage on real estate, may be joined as co-defendants with the maker, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, where a personal judgment against them is asked.

2. A corporation cannot object to the allowance of attorney's fees, provided for in its mortgage, on the ground that the resolution authorizing its execution did not authorize payment of such fees, where its directors had passed a resolution authorizing the execution of a mortgage, "to contain covenants, terms, and provisions set forth in a draft of such mortgage submitted" to them by the proposed mortgagee, which provided for such fees.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action of foreclosure by Anthony G. Hubbard against the University Bank of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. & H. L. Dunnigan, for appellants. E. R. Anable, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The action was brought upon a promissory note secured by mortgage. The University Bank, as maker, executed both the note and mortgage to the plaintiff as payee and mortgagee. Others of the defendants indorsed the note at the time it was made, and before its delivery, as follows: "Demand of payment, notice of dishonor, protest, and notice of protest hereby waived." The mortgage provided for a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, and declared that the fee fixed should be deemed a lien upon the mortgaged premises, secured by the mortgage. The complaint was verified. It pleaded that $1,000 was a reasonable sum to be allowed as attorney's fees. The only issue upon this point was a denial that such an amount was a reasonable amount. The foreclosure was decreed, the property ordered sold, and a judgment for any deficiency docketed against the appellants, the makers and indorsers of the note.

The indorsers contend that they were improperly joined as co-defendants in the action. They were properly joined. Civ. Code, § 3117; Code Civ. Proc. § 383; 3 Rand. Com. Paper, § 1660; Wilts. Mortg. Forec. § 208.

It is next contended that no attorney's fee should have been allowed. Herein it is argued that the resolution of the corporation authorizing the execution of the mortgage and mortgage note to plaintiff did not authorize the payment of an attorney's fee; but the complaint, which was verified, averred that plaintiff agreed with the bank that, "if it would cause to be executed and delivered to him a certain indorsed note and collateral mortgage in manner and form as it subsequently did execute and deliver said instruments, as hereinafter stated, he would make such loan to it," etc. It is then averred that "the defendant corporation, in response to plaintiff's proposal, did then and there duly adopt and pass a certain resolution authorizing the execution of a mortgage to plaintiff, said mortgage to contain the covenants, terms, and provisions set forth in the draft of mortgage proposed and submitted to this board by the said Anthony G. Hubbard"; and, further, "that the bank did, pursuant to the proposals and demands of the plaintiff, made as aforesaid, execute and deliver unto him the mortgage set forth." There is no question but that the mortgage executed by the bank did provide for the payment of attorney's fees, and that the fee allowed by the court should be secured by the mortgage. The averments above quoted are sufficient to charge the corporation with the execution of this particular mortgage, and, as they are not denied, the defendants are bound by them.

We think the court correctly construed the collateral agreement, and that the judgment rendered was not in excess of the sum actually due. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

CHAPMAN v. HUGHES et al. (S. F. 968.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 7, 1899.)

JUDGMENTS—RES JUDICATA—PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—ACCOUNTING—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—RESULTING TRUST—NOTICE TO PURCHASER—EVIDENCE—PARTIES.

1. While a general verdict or judgment operates as an estoppel as to such matters as were necessarily considered and determined, it is never conclusive upon immaterial or collateral issues.

2. According to the terms of a trust agreement in writing between the parties, a principal advanced money to his agent for the purchase of lands in the name of the latter, who was to sell them, and reimburse himself for the purchase money and other expenses, after which the profits and the remainder of the unsold lands were to be divided equally between them. Held, in an action of accounting, that the principal was entitled to enforce the agreement to the letter, and to avoid all conveyances made in violation thereof.

3. An agent authorized to sell real estate, in which he has an interest under a trust agreement with his principal, has no authority to mortgage it, or exchange it for other lands.

4. An agent authorized to sell land, in which he had an interest under a trust agreement with his principal, conveyed a portion thereof in exchange for the grantee's equity in other lands, and charged himself in his account with the consideration as though received in cash. The grantee was the agent's son and partner, familiar with his business, and had knowledge of the terms of the trust agreement. Held, that the principal was entitled to have the grantee charged as an involuntary trustee for his interest in the land so conveyed, under Civ. Code, § 2243, providing that every one to whom property is transferred in violation of a trust holds the same as an involuntary trustee, unless he purchased it in good faith and for a valuable consideration.

5. Where a principal attacks his agent's conveyance of land as made in fraud of his rights under a trust agreement between them, slight evidence of the purchaser's lack of notice of the fraudulent intent on the part of the agent is sufficient to support a finding that he was a purchaser in good faith, in absence of direct evidence of such notice.

6. When the agent of the vendee has full knowledge of the terms of a trust agreement between the vendor and a third party, such knowledge will be imputed to his principal.

7. In an action of accounting, where real estate had been conveyed by an agent to grantees, who are made defendants, in violation of a trust agreement with the plaintiff, the latter is not obliged to take a money judgment, but may recover the land improperly or fraudulently disposed of.

8. In an action of accounting to enforce the terms of a trust agreement in writing between the plaintiff and defendant, under which lands were sold by the latter as agent and trustee, grantees of the land may be brought in as defendants by supplemental pleadings for the purpose of avoiding conveyances made in fraud of plaintiff's rights.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by W. S. Chapman against Thomas E. Hughes and others. From a judgment for defendant Hughes, the plaintiff, W. S. Chapman, and the defendant E. W. Chapman appeal. Reversed in part and affirmed in part.

Garret W. McEnerney, for appellants. L. L. Cory, George E. Church, Horace Hawes, and Stearns & Elliott, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. W. S. Chapman commenced this action against Thomas E. Hughes for an accounting under an agreement according to the terms of which the latter advanced $95,000 for the purchase of certain lands, taking the title thereto, and was to sell these lands, reimburse himself for the purchase money and all other necessary and proper outlays, after which the profits and the remainder of the unsold lands were to be equally divided between himself and Hughes. Hughes, by his answer, did not dispute the terms of the agreement, nor question Chapman's right to an accounting, but, with other allegations, he set out an agreement made between himself and plaintiff, whereunder he was entitled to offset against any sum due from him to W. S. Chapman any indebtedness existing in his favor against E. W.

Chapman under another agreement touching the management and sale of lands between Hughes and E. W. Chapman. E. W. Chapman thus came into the case as a party defendant. Afterwards the plaintiff, W. S. Chapman, filed two supplemental complaints, and brought two separate actions, alleging that Hughes had made conveyances of parts of the lands and of notes and mortgages in contravention of the agreement and in fraud of his rights. The grantees under these conveyances were impleaded and brought in, and a decree was sought annulling these deeds and assignments. After trial and submission of the cause, the court ordered its commissioner to take an accounting between Hughes and E. W. Chapman, and report the result. The commissioner found that E. W. Chapman was indebted to Hughes in the sum of $114,825.30. The court reduced this amount, and found an indebtedness from E. W. Chapman to Thomas E. Hughes of $67,741.46. It further found that Thomas E. Hughes was indebted to the plaintiff, W. S. Chapman, in the sum of $55,551.46. Under the agreement above referred to, the indebtedness of E. W. Chapman to Hughes was set off against the indebtedness of Hughes to W. S. Chapman, and Hughes was given a judgment for the difference, amounting to something over $12,000. The court further upheld the questioned conveyances made by Hughes as having been executed to purchasers in good faith and for value, and decreed that the unsold property was owned equally by W. S. Chapman and Hughes. Upon this appeal the principal attack is made upon the findings of the court upholding the various conveyances made by Hughes, which plaintiff insists were in violation of the terms of the trust agreement, and in fraud of his rights, and also upon the ruling of the court admitting a certain judgment roll, and giving it the force of an estoppel against the plaintiff. This last question is of vital consequence in the case, and may receive first attention.

Prior to the commencement of this litigation, W. S. and E. W. Chapman had commenced an action against the defendant Hughes for an accounting with reference to certain real-estate transactions under an agreement which then existed between the parties. The facts and the decision of this court upon the appeal in that case will be found in 104 Cal., at page 302, 37 Pac. 1048, and 38 Pac. 109. The relief sought by the plaintiffs in that action was for an accounting under the so-called "syndicate agreement," which they insisted constituted themselves and Hughes co-partners. Their whole cause of action rested upon the existence of and the transactions under the syndicate agreement. Hughes, defending, pleaded that the relation of partnership did not exist; that the syndicate agreement did not create a partnership, but that it expired by limitation on August 31, 1889, and that the syndicate agreement was canceled, annulled, and set aside by later agreements of the respective parties, "as is more fully set forth in the contracts hereinafter particularly set forth." As to these contracts which Hughes pleaded had been entered into with the effect to cancel and annul the syndicate agreement, one was with and between Hughes, E. W. Chapman, and Richard L. Dixon. It was in the form of a trust deed made by E. W. Chapman to Dixon as trustee. The trustee was to hold the legal title to the lands for two years, or until an earlier termination of the trust by the fulfillment of its purposes, or by the joint revocation of the parties. Hughes, the party of the third part, was diligently to use his personal efforts and experience to effect sales of the land, and after the payment of certain specified sums Chapman and Hughes were to become joint owners in the funds, notes, and mortgages arising from the sales of the lands, and tenants in common of all lands and water rights not sold. Having thus pleaded that the syndicate agreement had been canceled and superseded by the trust deed (and by a certain other agreement with W. S. Chapman, which it is not necessary here to particularize), and that no sales of or transactions in the land had been made or had under the syndicate agreement, Hughes added: "That subsequent to the execution of said agreement and trust deed of June 20, 1888, the said Richard L. Dixon, the trustee therein named, resigned and relinquished the trust so reposed and vested in him, and the trust thereby created was revoked and terminated, and the legal title to the property therein described was reconveyed and reassigned to and vested absolutely in said E. W. Chapman, subject to the mortgages thereon; but none of the other agreements or conditions contained in said agreement and trust deed were revoked, canceled, annulled, or terminated, but the same remained and continued in full force and effect, and the property therein described was sold and disposed of under said agreement by this defendant, and the moneys and notes and mortgages received, taken, and realized from such sales were paid, given, and delivered to and retained by said E. W. Chapman, and under the terms and conditions of said agreement this defendant is entitled to receive from said E. W. Chapman, upon a settlement and adjustment of their accounts, more than eighty thousand dollars as his share of the profits of the sales of said lands, * * * and his expenses and commissions in making such sales provided in and by said agreement." After trial of that cause the court found, in accordance with the terms of Hughes' defense, that the syndicate agreement had in fact been canceled, annulled, and set aside by the later agreements between the parties, of which the trust deed was one. This determination of the trial court was upheld upon appeal to this court. Chapman v. Hughes, 104 Cal. 302-305, 37 Pac. 1048, and 38 Pac. 109. It is to be borne in mind that the decision of the trial court was that the making of the agreement with W. S. Chapman, and of the trust deed with E. W. Chapman and Dixon, was understood to operate, and did operate, as an absolute revocation and cancellation of the syndicate agreement. But the court found additionally, as defendant had pleaded, that, subsequent to the execution of the trust deed, Dixon, the trustee, resigned and relinquished his trust, and the trust thereby created was revoked and terminated, and the legal title to the property was reconveyed and reassigned to, and vested absolutely in, E. W. Chapman, but that none of the other agreements or conditions in the agreement and trust deed were revoked, canceled, or terminated, but they all remained and continued in full force and effect.

The foregoing statement of facts is necessary to the understanding of the question here presented. Upon the trial of the present action it will be remembered that it was conceded to be Hughes' right to offset against any sum due from him to W. S. Chapman any sum found due to him from E. W. Chapman on account of their land transactions. The basis of Hughes' right to an accounting against E. W. Chapman, and of his claim of indebtedness against E. W. Chapman, is this trust deed. By cross complaint Hughes pleaded these matters. For answer the Chapmans denied that any of the terms or agreements of the trust deed were continued in force after the reconveyance by Dixon to E. W. Chapman of the land, and alleged that the reconveyance was made by a written instrument, signed by all the parties to the trust deed, which instrument was set forth at length. Upon the trial of the cause it was contended by the Chapmans that the question whether the trust deed and all its terms and conditions had been revoked by the parties was one open for the reception of evidence, and one calling for a construction of the revocatory instrument above referred to. Upon the other hand, Hughes offered in evidence the judgment roll in Chapman v. Hughes, 104 Cal. 302, 37 Pac. 1048, and 38 Pac. 109, insisting that the judgment in that case foreclosed the parties, and estopped the Chapmans from raising this question. The court admitted the judgment roll in evidence, and it is not disputed that it was received in evidence in accordance with Hughes' contention that it operated as an estoppel. The finding of the court following its reception in evidence was that, though Dixon had reconveyed to E. W. Chapman, all of the other terms and conditions of the trust deed remained and were continued in full force and effect, and that consequently Hughes was entitled to an accounting, in accordance with them, of Chapman's transactions with the land. An attack is made upon this finding as being unsupported by the evidence, and upon the ruling of the court in admitting the judgment roll. The admissibility of the evidence and the soundness of the court's finding depend, then, upon the determination whether or not the judgment in the earlier case of Chapman v. Hughes adjudicated this question so as to estop the parties in this action from further litigating it. We think it did not. By section 1911 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually or necessarily included therein, or necessary thereto. The adjudication in Chapman v. Hughes was simply and directly to the effect that there had been no transactions in the land under the syndicate agreement, and that the syndicate agreement had been wholly canceled and superseded by later contracts between the parties. The judgment which necessarily followed from this was one denying to plaintiff an accounting under the syndicate agreement. It is true that Hughes, by his answer, pleaded that the trust deed, which he said, and which the court found, operated to annul the syndicate agreement, had, in its turn, been modified, and it is true also that the court made a finding to this effect; but this was an entirely immaterial allegation in Hughes' answer and defense. It tendered no material issue in the case. A determination upon it one way or the other would not and could not have affected the court's decision. When the court had found, as it did, that the syndicate agreement was superseded by the trust deed, it mattered not at all to that action what thereafter might have become of the superseding contract. The immateriality of the issue, and of the finding of the court upon it, is clearly seen when one considers that if, upon appeal, the Chapmans had convinced this court that this finding was wholly unsupported by the evidence, it would not have operated to effect a reversal. If that finding had been pressed upon the attention of this court as being erroneous, it would not have merited consideration, because the conclusive answer would have been that, whether erroneous or not, the judgment was in no way dependent upon it. While a general verdict or a judgment operates as an estoppel as to such matters as were necessarily considered and determined, it is never conclusive upon immaterial or collateral issues. McDonald v. Mining Co., 15 Cal. 149; Fulton v. Hanlow, 20 Cal. 456; Lillis v. Ditch Co., 95 Cal. 553, 30 Pac. 1108; Packet Co. v. Sickles, 5 Wall. 592; Herm. Estop. § 275; Wells, Res. Adj. § 295. It follows, therefore, that the judgment was not conclusive upon the parties in this particular, and the question whether or not the terms and conditions of the trust deed continued in force was not res judicata between the parties, but was an open question, which the court in this case was called upon to decide upon its merits. It was, therefore, error for the court to have admitted the judgment roll in evidence. Under this conclusion must fall to the ground the whole account stated between Hughes and E. W. Chapman, since Hughes' right to an accounting was a question first to be determined by the court upon competent evidence before the taking of an account could be ordered; and, as the judgment in this case offsets against the amount which the court finds due from Hughes to W. S. Chapman the larger amount which it finds due to Hughes from E. W. Chapman, with the result that a judgment in favor of Hughes for over $12,000 is given, it also follows from the foregoing that this judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded.

But, in contemplation of a new trial, other points and propositions advanced by appellants merit consideration. These questions arise out of certain sales, transfers, and assignments made by Hughes of parts of the land, and of mortgages and notes, proceeds of the sales of parts of the land. It cannot be assumed, however, that the evidence which may be adduced at the second trial concerning these matters will be identical with that shown in the present record, and therefore the observations of the court relative thereto can only be considered with reference to the facts as they now appear; and first, generally, as to the sales of land made by Hughes which are attacked as being in fraud of plaintiff's rights. Some of these sales were made to relatives of Hughes; some, it is contended, were mere gifts made without valuable consideration. As to all it is charged that the vendees took with notice or with actual knowledge of plaintiff's rights. But in each of these cases the defendant Hughes charged himself in his account with Chapman with what appears to have been the fair and full value of the land so disposed of. At any rate, we fail to find any attack upon this particular point, and the court seems to have regarded these charges as being adequate. If, then, the defendant Hughes were solvent, and able to respond promptly to any sum which might be found against him upon the accounting, it would really matter little to the plaintiff whether he were to be allowed the fair value of his share of these lands in money, or whether the sales should be set aside as fraudulent, and the vendees charged as involuntary trustees, holding an undivided one-half interest in the lands for the plaintiff. But there are other considerations which make the matter of some consequence. First, that plaintiff charges that the defendant Hughes was and is insolvent; and, though the finding of the court is against him upon this point, he is, of course, not obliged to accept it. If, in fact, Hughes is insolvent, or should prove unable to respond promptly to such money judgment as might be awarded against him, it would, indeed, be a matter of much consequence to the plaintiff to reduce an uncollectible money judgment by the value of the lands in question, and have those lands made available to his ends. And, again, without regard to the benefits or injuries which may follow, the plaintiff, occupying the position of a beneficiary under the trust agreement between himself and Hughes, Hughes being his agent and trustee, is entitled to enforce the agreement to the letter, and to insist that every transaction in the land which is in violation of the terms of the agreement, and of which fact the vendee had knowledge or notice, may be avoided.

By one of the transactions to which general reference has just been made, defendant Thomas Hughes conveyed to his son, William Hughes, a portion of the land embraced within the agreement between himself and Chapman. The conveyance was made after the commencement of this action. The consideration for it was the son's equity or interest in the Hughes block and in the Hughes hotel. Thomas Hughes testified that he received no cash; that he made the contract with him to clean up all his interest in the partnership business; that the consideration was $8,000, and that he entered that as so much received under a cash sale. The finding of the court is that William Hughes had no notice or knowledge of plaintiff's right in the property; that the conveyances were made without intent to defraud plaintiff, and were made in good faith and for a valuable consideration. But so much of the finding as declares that the defendant William M. Hughes had no notice or knowledge of plaintiff's rights in the property is unsupported by, and contrary to, the evidence. There is evidence tending to show that he did not know that the particular property in question was affected by the suit for an accounting which Chapman had brought against his father, but he testified that he was his father's partner, was familiar with his business, and had knowledge of the terms of the contract between his father and Chapman. He knew, therefore, that by the terms of the trust his father's power was limited to the right to sell. "Sale," in law, has a well-defined meaning, and trustees empowered to sell real estate are not authorized to exchange it for other lands. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 1 Har. & G. 11. As to one who has notice of the terms of an express trust, which terms are expressed in the instrument creating the estate, every transfer or act of the trustee in contravention of the trust is absolutely void (Civ. Code, § 870), and every one to whom property is transferred in violation of a trust holds the same as an involuntary trustee under such trust, unless he purchased it in good faith, and for a valuable consideration (Id. § 2243). Under the evidence, this transaction between father and son was but an exchange of properties; and while it is true that the father charged himself in his account with Chapman with the sum of $8,000 as though it were cash received, the fact remains that the transaction was not for cash, and was not a sale at all. Under the present showing, the plaintiff, Chapman, would be entitled to have William E. Hughes charged as involuntary trustee for his (Chapman's) one-half interest in the property so conveyed; but, upon the other hand, if this be done, the account of Thomas E. Hughes should be credited with the value of the land thus returned to the trust estate, with which value he now stands charged.

The findings upholding the conveyance to James B. King are sufficiently supported by the evidence. For the purchase price of the land Hughes testified that he received some money,—how much he did not recall,—and the rest in notes; the full purchase price being $2,000. It is within the terms of the agreement that notes should be thus received. It is said, however, by appellant that there is nothing in the record to show that King was an innocent purchaser, but it had been established that King gave value for the land, that he was a purchaser in the ordinary manner, and that he afterwards found out that there was a lawsuit which did or might affect the title to the land. Where a plaintiff attacks a conveyance as in fraud of his rights, it is incumbent upon him first to show the fraudulent intent of the vendor. The burden is then on the purchaser to show a valuable consideration, which shown, the burden again shifts, and the creditor must show knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the vendor on the part of the vendee. Ross v. Wellman, 102 Cal. 4, 36 Pac. 402; Wait, Fraud. Conv. (3d Ed.) § 271. Though the evidence of King's lack of notice is slight, yet it is sufficient, in the absence of direct evidence of notice, to support the finding that he was a purchaser in good faith. Gassen v. Hendrick, 74 Cal. 444, 16 Pac. 242.

Thomas E. Hughes conveyed to Miss Bernhard, now Mrs. Patterson, certain pieces of property. The conveyances were in fact mortgages given as additional security to Miss Bernhard for moneys which she had loaned to Thomas E. Hughes. However different the rule may be in other states, it is well settled in this that one who takes a mortgage to secure a pre-existing debt is a purchaser for a valuable consideration. Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335; Insurance Co. v. McCormick, 45 Cal. 580. So much having been established, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that she took this conveyance with notice or knowledge of his rights. There is no evidence to establish that she had any actual knowledge, but her agent in the transaction was William Hughes; and while, under the evidence, he is not chargeable with notice that the particular land conveyed was embraced within the accounting suit, yet, as has been before said, he did have full knowledge of the terms of the trust agreement between his father and Chapman, and with that information knew that his father was empowered merely to sell. The knowledge of the agent in this particular must be imputed to his principal. The transaction was not one contemplated by the agreement, and plaintiff, on the showing here made, would be entitled to have it avoided, while Thomas E. Hughes, upon the other hand, would be entitled to a credit for the amount with which he had charged himself upon account of this transaction. A somewhat similar transaction is involved in the conveyance by Thomas E. Hughes to Matilda B. Hughes, wife of his son, William M. Hughes. This was a conveyance of 80 acres of land. It was negotiated by William M. Hughes, who testified that he acted as his wife's agent in the matter. Thomas E. Hughes first testified that the conveyance was by way of gift to his daughter-in-law, for which he received no consideration, and that he charged himself in his account with Chapman for a price of $80 per acre. Subsequently he corrected his testimony in this regard, and said that the conveyance was made in extinguishment of an indebtedness due from him to his daughter-in-law, and that the plaintiff, with knowledge, consented that he might make it, and charge his account as he did. This conveyance was made before the institution of the suit, and the evidence, we think, is sufficient to support it.

Without setting it forth at length, we think the evidence sufficient to support the transfers made by way of security to H. D. Colson, as well as the transfer of certain water rights to H. U. Maxfield. But, upon the other hand, we think the evidence insufficient to support the finding that the Brown mortgages were sold outright to O. J. Woodward for the First National Bank of Fresno. The evidence, both of Woodward, who received the transfer, and of Hughes, who made it, is to the effect that it was made and taken as security for the debt which Hughes owed the bank, and perhaps for future advances to be made to him. Woodward testified that when the indebtedness amounted to $15,000 Hughes told him that for $5,000 more he would sell the mortgages outright, but we have been unable to perceive where this tentative proposition was accepted and acted upon. Under the showing here made, plaintiff would be entitled to an accounting from Woodward and from the bank of the proceeds of these mortgages after the bank had reimbursed itself in the amount due it from Hughes. Upon the other hand, as Hughes is charged in this account with the face value of these mortgages, he should be allowed a credit for such moneys as might come into the trust fund after the bank's debt had been extinguished.

As to all of these transactions respondent makes the objection that, as plaintiff had sued Hughes for a full accounting, and as such an accounting had been made, followed by a judgment and the satisfaction of plaintiff's right, the plaintiff must be held to his election, and cannot be allowed to recover the moneys due upon account of these sales and transfers from Hughes, and at the same time pursue the vendees and transferees for a recovery of the property. But this is not what plaintiff is doing. He sued his trustee, Hughes, for a general accounting, but at the same time specifically objected to and attacked certain of the trustee's dealings with the land. These were upheld by the court, and the value of the land, sales, and assignments charged against Hughes. But plaintiff has the unquestionable right, as has before been considered, to insist that he shall not be forced to take this judgment in money, but that he shall be permitted to recover the property which has been improperly or fraudulently disposed of. Nor can the fact that the court awarded plaintiff a monetary judgment be held to estop plaintiff, or bind him to its acceptance.

Respondent further urges and argues that Hughes' vendees and transferees may not thus be brought into court because Hughes became vested with the entire and absolute legal and beneficial ownership in the land, with full power of disposition and control, and free from any trust; and that Chapman's sole relief is in a suit for an accounting, or for a breach of contract. The cases which respondent cites in support of this proposition are those declaring the well-recognized and sound principle that no resulting trust arises to the grantor where the grantee takes upon a valuable consideration. 2 Perry, Trusts, § 151; Gibson v. Armstrong, 7 B. Mon. 489. But in this case plaintiff is not suing to have a resulting trust declared in his favor, but he is suing to enforce his rights under an express trust formally declared by an instrument in writing. By the terms of the agreement between the parties, Hughes was to discharge the mortgage which he gave to Montgomery. Ten thousand dollars of this it seems has not been paid. Appellants insist that Hughes should be charged with this balance. That may, in strictness, be so, but, if so charged upon the one hand, upon the other he must be credited with that amount as a payment, for, since upon the payment of the mortgage he was entitled to repayment from the proceeds of the sales of the property, if he is to be charged with this $10,000 provision must be made for reimbursing him. It is to be remembered that, while this was originally a simple action by Chapman against Hughes for an accounting, it subsequently became complicated by supplemental pleadings and the addition of new parties defendant. Of these one was the defendant E. W. Chapman, against whom Hughes was seeking an accounting, and others were grantees and transferees of parts of the land and of mortgages and of mortgage notes. Although these actions were consolidated, and tried as one, and a single judgment entered, yet between these defendants there was no privity nor common interest. It would therefore be unjust to force a defendant who has established the validity of his purchase to litigate the matter anew because the findings of the court in some other respect, not material to his rights, have been successfully attacked. Therefore, in subservience of the ends of justice and the rights of the parties, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be vacated. It is further ordered that a new trial be had upon the issues touching the right of Hughes to an accounting with E. W. Chapman; that if, after such hearing, the court shall determine that Hughes is entitled to an accounting, it shall take or order taken such an account, to the end that the sum found due, if any, from E. W. Chapman to Hughes, may be set off against the sum found due, if any, from Hughes to W. S. Chapman. It is further ordered and adjudged that the accounting between W. S. Chapman and Thomas E. Hughes be affirmed in all respects as settled by the court, and that his sales, transfers, and assignments of parts of the land, and of the proceeds of sales of parts of the land, be affirmed in all respects as found by the court, saving as to those matters and as to those findings hereinabove considered as to which it has been declared that the findings are not sufficiently supported by the evidence. As to such transactions, a further accounting shall be had in accordance with the rulings of this court, upon which accounting proper evidence adduced by any of the parties shall be received and considered.

HORNUNG v. McCARTHY et al. (S. F. 1,001.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ACTION TO ENFORCE ASSESSMENT—DEFENSE—EMINENT DOMAIN—REASSESSMENT.

1. It is no defense to an action by an assignee of a contractor to enforce an assessment for an improvement made by his assignor, to show that the assessment is based on a contract between the city and contractor for a public improvement which damaged defendant's property for public use without just compensation therefor being first made to, or paid into court for, defendant; as such contract is not void under Const. art. 1, § 14, which provides that private property shall not be damaged for public use without just compensation first made to, or paid into court for, the owner.

2. The damage to his property imposed by a public improvement, and for which no payment has been made, cannot be used as a set-off or counterclaim by defendant in an action to enforce an assessment based on the contract under which the work which damaged his property was performed.

3. Under St. 1891, p. 205, § 9, which provides that, where it appears by the final judgment of any court of this state that a suit brought to foreclose an assessment lien has been defeated by reason of any defect, any person interested may, at any time within three months after the filing of the judgment, apply for another assessment, a judgment of the superior court, final in its nature, declaring an assessment void for informality, is a final judgment, though the time for appealing therefrom has not expired, where plaintiff has applied for a new assessment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by C. F. Hornung against Joseph M. McCarthy and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appealed. Reversed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. Otto Tum Suden, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. Action by plaintiff, as assignee of Madigan, contractor, to enforce a street assessment against a lot owned by defendant on M street south, between Eighth and Ninth avenues south. Judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll, which includes findings.

The main ground upon which the court below gave judgment for respondent, and the one principally discussed in the briefs, is this: That the whole assessment proceeding was void because founded upon a contract which was void for the reason that it contemplated the damaging of appellant's land for public use "without just compensation having been first made to, or paid into court for, the owner," within the meaning of section 14 of article 1 of the state constitution. We do not think that this position is tenable. The findings of the court on this point are substantially these: That the board of supervisors, by resolution of intention, ordered M street, between the two avenues, to be "graded to the official line and grade," and let the contract to do the grading to the contractor, Madigan; that at the time of the contract M street was "in a state of nature, in that it had never been graded to any grade"; that respondent's lot was flush with the street, as it was originally, so that there was easy ingress and egress between the lot and street; that the necessary result of carrying out the intention of the board, and the doing of the work provided by the contract, would be to excavate the street to a depth of 30 feet below the natural level of respondent's lot, and thus greatly damage it by cutting off the ingress, etc.; that the board made no provision for compensating respondent for the damage which would result; that, "notwithstanding the board of supervisors knew" that the proposed work would damage the lot, still they "caused and ordered said contract to be entered into with the said Madigan, and caused said Madigan to perform the work"; and that Madigan did perform the work and enter into the contract, and did excavate the street to a depth of 30 feet, as aforesaid, whereby the lot was damaged in the sum of $1,500. It appears this was not a case where an official grade had been changed after a lot owner's title to his property had attached; but, as the case will be determined on other principles, we will not discuss the question whether or not one who acquires a lot after the official grade has been established can recover incidental damages resulting from work necessary to put the street on the official grade.

It is to be noticed that this is not an action to recover damages, as was Eachus v. Railway Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 Pac. 750, and other cases cited by respondent; nor is it an action to enjoin the prosecution of work, as was Geurkink v. City of Petaluma, 112 Cal. 306, 44 Pac. 570; nor is it like Bigelow v. Ballerino, 111 Cal. 559, 44 Pac. 307, in which it was merely decided that where the municipal authorities made an order closing a street, which order was invalid because made without compensation for the taking of appellant's property, the latter could maintain his easement in the street until compensation had been made. Respondent has not cited and relied on any case where the action was to enforce an assessment, and a defense similar to the one here interposed was set up. Whether or not the respondent could maintain an action for damages against the city, or whether he might have enjoined the prosecution of the work, are not questions here presented. The rights involved here are those of the contractor, and, in order to support the judgment, it must be maintained that, as to him, the contract, at the time it was made, was void. How can this proposition be maintained? The ground on which it rests is simply this: It is found that at the date of the contract the board of supervisors knew that its fulfillment would damage the lot, and knew that no compensation had been made; and, although it was not expressly found, we presume that it was inferred, that the contractor must have known, from the nature of the contract, that the damage would ensue. It is not found, however, that the contractor knew that no compensation had been made, and there is nothing to show that his attention was called to the matter in any way. The respondent never demanded compensation of anybody; he never made any objection to the doing of the work by the contractor, nor took any step to stop it; and, if the contractor had thought of the subject, he might well have presumed that respondent had waived damages, or had made some arrangement with the board on the subject. But respondent, after having allowed the contractor to incur the expense of doing the work without objection of any kind, now attempts, not to recover damages, but to have the entire assessment declared void, and the contractor not entitled to anything for his work, because a third party—the board of supervisors—had not paid him some money which he had never demanded, and about which the contractor knew nothing. The appellant's rights here grow out of the governmental power of taxation (Emery v. Gas Co., 28 Cal. 346), and the consideration that the respondent may have some cause of action founded upon rights reserved by that part of the constitution which deals with the exercise of the power of eminent domain does not make the assessment proceeding void. His claim for damages can certainly not be used as a set-off or counterclaim to the cause of action sued on. The only cases like the one at bar to which we have been referred are cases decided by the supreme court of Missouri, in which the law is declared to be as above stated. Keith v. Bingham, 100 Mo. 300, 13 S. W. 683, cannot be distinguished from the case at bar. That was an action upon tax bills for grading and other work done on a street; and the answer contains, among other things, the following: "Defendant, for a third defense to the tax bill sued on, states that the lot described by plaintiff's petition is now, and was at all the times stated in the plaintiff's petition, private property; that the grading mentioned in plaintiff's petition was done for public use, and damaged, and did not benefit, said lot; that no compensation was made or tendered to or paid into court for any person as the owner of said lot on account of said damages,—wherefore the defendant asks judgment." In response to this defense, the court say: "It is claimed by defendant that the tax bills in suit were issued in violation of that section of the constitution which declares 'that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. Such compensation shall be ascertained by a jury or board of commissioners of not less than three freeholders, in such manner as may be prescribed by law; and until the same shall be paid to the owner, or into court for the owner, the property shall not be disturbed.' Const. 1875, art. 2, § 21. Looking at this defense from the most favorable standpoint, it is evident that it is untenable. The section of the constitution just quoted refers to, and is intended to regulate, the exercise of the right of eminent domain; whereas special assessments for local improvements, such as the tax bills before us, are referable to, and sustainable under, the taxing power. This distinction is well recognized both here and elsewhere in the United States. Garrett v. City of St. Louis, 25 Mo. 505; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 5. If the taxing power has been called into play in the mode required by law for the purpose of paying for a local improvement, such as paving or grading a street, it is no defense to a bill issued therefor to say, as is said here, that the street or the improvement damaged and did not benefit, the property, though, if such were the fact, the party might have his action, on a proper showing, under the constitution, for such injury. Householder v. City of Kansas, 83 Mo. 488. If the city had invoked the power of eminent domain unlawfully in the premises, it could be held actionable therefor; but that would not interfere with the collection of the special tax bill for an improvement regularly made under the taxing power. The right of action which a person would thus have against the municipality would constitute no just defense to the claims of the contractor who had made the improvement, and to whom, under the law in question, the tax assessment is payable." Our conclusion is that the assessment was not void upon the grounds above noted.

Respondent also makes some contention that the assessment was void upon two other grounds, which are in their nature technical:

First. The present action is upon a second assessment, made under section 9 of the street law (St. 1891, p. 205), which provides that, where it appears by final judgment that a suit brought to foreclose an assessment lien has been defeated by reason of any defect, error, or informality, etc., any person interested may, at any time within three months after the filing of the judgment, apply to the superintendent of streets for another assessment; and it is contended by respondent that there was no final judgment in the former suit brought by the appellant, because the time within which an appeal might be taken from that judgment to this court had not expired when the demand for the new assessment was made. It is no doubt true that for certain purposes an action brought in the superior court is to be deemed as "still pending," although a final judgment has been rendered in said court, until the time for appealing to this court has expired; and that rule has been declared in the decided cases principally where a judgment of a superior court has been invoked as a bar to another action. But a judgment of the superior court, final in its nature, declaring an assessment void for informality, etc., is clearly within the meaning of the street law, where the words used are, "Any final judgment of any court of this state" (Cook v. Rice, 91 Cal. 664, 27 Pac. 1081); and this is certainly so where the plaintiff in such a suit, instead of appealing, has substantially abandoned his appeal by the act of applying for a new assessment. And the judgment was not less final because certain fictitious defendants—John Doe, Robert Roe, etc.—were not served, and did not appear, and there was no judgment against them. The court found that the respondent McCarthy appeared and contested the action, and that he is, and was at all the times mentioned in the complaint, "the sole owner of said lot of land."

Second. It is contended that there was no valid certificate of the city engineer, because one Fitzhugh was city engineer up to the time the work was completed, and went out of office without making any certificate. But a proper certificate was made by Tilton, who succeeded Fitzhugh as city engineer; and the person in office is the proper officer to make such a certificate, and for that purpose may, of course, use the official data found in the office. The judgment appealed from is reversed.

QUIETING TITLE—APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY OF FINDINGS—LIMITATIONS.

1. A general finding that each of the averments of an answer are not true is equivalent to a finding that a plea of limitation contained therein is not true, and is sufficient.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 4, providing that, when a motion for new trial is based on the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, the notice of the motion must specify the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient, a notice of intention to move for a new trial, specifying that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision, without giving the particulars in which it is insufficient, cannot be reviewed.

3. On appeal, all intendments of the law are in favor of the regularity of the judgment, and the appellant must show error affirmatively.

4. In an action to quiet title, the mere fact that the land was conveyed to defendant, and he had not conveyed it, is not sufficient to overcome a positive finding that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Action by J. D. McLennan and wife against W. W. Wilcox. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. R. Gray and F. D. Hamilton, for appellant. Leonard & Morris, for respondents.

COOPER, C. Action to quiet title to real estate described in complaint. Judgment for plaintiffs. This appeal is by defendant from the judgment and order denying motion for a new trial. The answer, after a denial of the allegations of the complaint, alleges affirmatively that defendant is the owner of the premises by reason of a sale thereof for delinquent taxes to one Pettijohn, and a deed by the tax collector in pursuance of said sale, the defendant having purchased from said Pettijohn. The answer also sets up the statute of limitations as a defense. It is claimed that the court failed to find upon defendant's plea of the statute of limitations. The court found that the averments of the answer are not true, except certain matters stated in the findings. The findings do not in any other manner refer to the plea of the statute, and such plea is not among the excepted matters referred to in the findings. The finding is therefore to the effect that the plea of the statute of limitations is not true, and is sufficient. Gale v. Bradbury, 116 Cal. 40, 47 Pac. 778.

The motion for a new trial was made upon the minutes of the court, and the statement of the case was settled after the order denying the motion. It appears from the statement that the only ground argued and presented for decision on the motion was "that the court found that the certificates of tax sales described in the answer were valid, and therefore defendant has an interest in the property." The court found that the plaintiff Mrs. J. D. McLennan is the owner of, and entitled to the possession of, the real estate described in the complaint. The finding is not attacked in such manner as to enable this court to review it. The notice of intention shows the only specification to be "that the evidence is insufficient to justify said decision that plaintiff is the owner of each of said lots or either of them, and that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of said property or any part thereof." The notice of motion must specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient. Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 4. Here we are simply told that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision, but the particulars in which it is insufficient are not pointed out. Therefore we cannot examine the evidence. De Molera v. Martin, 120 Cal. 544, 52 Pac. 825; Kyle v. Craig (Cal.) 57 Pac. 791. Conceding the sufficiency of the specifications, the statement shows that on January 7, 1893, Pettijohn executed to defendant a quitclaim deed, in which the premises were described, and that no evidence was offered to show that defendant has ever transferred the interest acquired by said conveyance. This is all the statement contains, and no attempt is made to show all the testimony upon any point involved. All intendments of the law are in favor of the regularity of the judgment and findings of the court below, and it is incumbent upon appellant to show error affirmatively. People v. Gibson, 106 Cal. 472, 39 Pac. 864. Applying this principle to the case at bar, and we cannot say the mere fact that Pettijohn made a deed to defendant in January, 1893, and that defendant has not since conveyed the premises, is sufficient to overthrow the direct and positive finding that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the property. This disposes of all the points discussed in appellant's brief. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

KELLOGG v. BURR. (L. A. 523.)
ATTACHMENT—CLAIM AND DELIVERY—PARTIES—NOTICE OF CLAIM—FINDING OF VALUE—DEFECTIVE AFFIDAVIT.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 627, providing that, in actions for specific property, the jury must find its value, and, if so instructed, the value of specific portions thereof, where complainant alleges its value at a gross sum, which defendant denies, and enumerates the items, stating the value of each, the failure to find the value of each item, whether it is requested or not, is not erroneous, there being no reason for such finding.

2. The holder of the legal title to property attached, who is entitled to its immediate possession, may maintain an action of claim and delivery against the sheriff, though at the time of the levy it was in possession of a third person.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 689, providing that, if property levied on be claimed by a third person by a written claim verified by oath, the sheriff is not bound to keep the property, unless plaintiff indemnify him against such claim, where a claim is presented for property attached, and the sheriff acts on it, and procures an indemnity bond from plaintiff, it is immaterial, in an action for the property, that claimant's oath was defective, as, having accomplished that for which it was intended, the sheriff was not prejudiced by its defects.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by D. D. Kellogg against John Burr. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Victor Montgomery, for appellant. B. W. Hahn and Schutz & Luckel, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action in claim and delivery. Findings and judgment were for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. On the 28th of June, 1895, the plaintiff was the proprietor of a butcher shop in Pasadena, and the owner of the personal property in question, being such as is usually used by retail butchers. On that day he entered into a contract with Kent & Veale, by which he sold to them said personal property for the sum of $1,350, $500 to be paid on July 1st; $50 per month, payable on the 1st days of August, September, October, and November, respectively; $75 per month, payable on the 1st days of December, 1895, and of January, February, and March, 1896; and $315 on April 1, 1896,—for which several sums Kent & Veale gave their promissory notes. Plaintiff also agreed to execute a bill of sale of said property on April 1, 1896, provided the purchasers performed their contract, and by the same written contract the plaintiff leased said property to the said purchasers, Kent & Veale, from that date to April 1, 1896, and stipulated that, upon the failure of the purchasers to meet any of said payments at the time they became due or within three days thereafter, they forfeited all payments theretofore made, and he should have the option of taking possession without suit. At the time of this transaction Kellogg was indebted to Mead, Wright & Co. (wholesale butchers) in the sum of $343.28, and said firm were informed by Kent & Veale, before said contract was made, of their intended purchase, and at the time it was executed their bookkeeper was present, and at his solicitation Kent & Veale made their promissory note to Mead, Wright & Co. for said sum, payable June 29, 1895, and Mead, Wright & Co. gave Kellogg a receipt in full of his indebtedness to them. After Kent & Veale went into possession of the property they became indebted to Mead, Wright & Co. for meat furnished, and on November 5, 1895, executed to them a promissory note for the sum of $380, payable one day after date. These notes were transferred to J. H. Pritt for collection merely, he having no interest therein, and he brought suit thereon, and on November 27, 1895, caused the said property embraced in said contract between Kellogg and Kent &

Veale to be attached by the sheriff as the property of the latter, and this action is brought by Kellogg against Burr, the sheriff, to recover possession of the attached property.

1. The complaint alleged the value of the several articles of personal property at a gross sum. The answer denied that they were of that value, or of a value exceeding $114.65, and proceeded to enumerate the various items, in all 30 or more, stating the value of each, the whole aggregating said sum of $114.65; and appellant contends that the court should have found the value of each item, an issue having been made as to each, citing Code Civ. Proc. § 627, and Brenot v. Robinson, 108 Cal. 143, 41 Pac. 37. Said section provides that the jury "must find the value of the property, and, if so instructed, the value of specific portions thereof." In Brenot v. Robinson, supra, in speaking of this provision, the court, quoting from Whetmore v. Rupe, 65 Cal. 237, 3 Pac. 851, said: "Error can therefore only arise in a case where such instruction was pertinent and proper, and the instruction was asked and refused." No reason is suggested why there should have been a finding as to the value of each item, and we see none. If the court would not have erred in refusing to instruct the jury to find the value of each article, it did not err in failing to find the value of each, whether requested to do so or not.

2. Appellant, conceding that the legal title to the attached property remained in Kellogg, the respondent, contends that the right of action for the recovery of the property was in the attachment defendants, Kent & Veale. The argument is that the attachment was levied on November 27, 1895; that the property sued for was taken from their possession; that their possession at that time was lawful under their contract, all payments prior to that of December 1st having been made; and hence the plaintiff did not at the time of the levy have the right of possession. On December 5th, the note due December 1st-3d not having been paid, plaintiff demanded payment, and was informed by Kent & Veale that they could not make any further payments; that plaintiff then surrendered all the unpaid notes to Kent & Veale, and demanded the property of the sheriff. Triscony v. Orr, 49 Cal. 612, and Lambert v. McCloud, 63 Cal. 162, are cited by appellant in support of his contention. In the first of these cases it was said: "The alleged trespass was committed during the term when the lessee was in the actual, and was entitled to the exclusive, possession against the plaintiff, his lessor. It is well settled that a person having neither the possession, nor the right to the possession, of personal chattels, cannot maintain trespass or trover for an injury done to the property." The second case cited was in claim and delivery, but it was held that the plaintiff did not have the right of possession, though he had the right of property. Neither of these cases is in point. Here, not only the title to the property was vested in Kellogg, who had never parted with it, but at the time the demand was made by him upon the sheriff for the return of the property he was entitled to its immediate possession, and those facts entitled him to maintain the action of claim and delivery. It was so expressly held in Rodgers v. Bachman, 109 Cal. 552, 42 Pac. 448, a case directly in point. See, also, Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 7 Sup. Ct. 51, there cited.

3. Appellant also contends that the verified claim of ownership and right to the possession of the attached property served by respondent upon the sheriff was not a compliance with sections 549, 689, Code Civ. Proc. The part claimed to be insufficient is as follows: "I hereby inform you that I am the owner and entitled to the possession of the following described property which you have in your possession, and demand the immediate return of the same to me." The alleged defect is in not "stating the grounds of such title." Said section 689 provides as follows: "If the property levied on be claimed by a third person as his property by a written claim verified by the oath of said claimant, setting out his title thereto, his right to the possession thereof, and stating the grounds of such title, and served upon the sheriff, the sheriff is not bound to keep the property, unless the plaintiff, or the person in whose favor the writ of execution runs, on demand, indemnify the sheriff against such claim by an undertaking by at least two good and sufficient sureties; and no claim to such property is valid against the sheriff, or shall be received, or be notice of any rights, unless made, as above provided;" and said section 549 makes said claim applicable to attachments. It has been held that said section 689 is intended for the protection of the sheriff. Paden v. Goldbaum (Cal.) 37 Pac. 759; Brenot v. Robinson, 108 Cal. 143, 41 Pac. 37; Dubois v. Spinks, 114 Cal. 289, 295, 46 Pac. 95. If such claim is made, the sheriff is not bound to retain the property unless he is indemnified, and may release it without incurring a liability therefor to the plaintiff in attachment or execution. The sufficiency of the notice is therefore a question between that officer and the plaintiff in attachment. If the plaintiff found the notice which was the basis of the sheriff's demand for indemnity insufficient, he might refuse to give it, and thus place the responsibility of an improper release upon that officer. The sheriff testified that said claim was served upon him, and he "therefore made a demand" upon Pritt for a bond of indemnity, which he gave; and the said bond recites: "And whereas, upon the taking of said goods and chattels by virtue of the said writ, D. D. Kellogg claimed the said goods and chattels as his property; and whereas, the said plaintiff, hereby expressly waiving a trial by a sheriff's jury of the right of property, * * * require of said sheriff that he shall retain said property under such attachment and in his custody." It would appear, therefore, that the plaintiff in attachment, as well as the sheriff, treated and regarded the notice as sufficient; and the sheriff having acted upon the claim served upon him, and because of its service procured the protection of an indemnity bond,—the only protection he could have, if he retained the attached property,—it would seem that the notice, though defective, accomplished the purpose intended by the statute as fully as though it had given a detailed statement "of the grounds" of his title, whatever that expression may mean. I do not see any ground upon which it could be said that appellant was misled or prejudiced by the alleged defect in the claim served upon him, and advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

FERREA v. TUBBS et al. (S. F. 1,763.)

JUDGMENT—INTEREST—TENDER PENDING APPEAL—LEAVE OF APPELLATE COURT—DEPOSIT IN COURT—DUTY OF COURT.

1. A tender by defendant to plaintiff personally of the amount of a judgment secured by the latter against the former, pending an appeal by the latter, is as effectual as though made to his attorney.

2. Civ. Code, § 1494, provides that an offer of performance must be free from any conditions which the creditor is not bound on his part to perform. Civ. Code, § 1499, provides that a debtor has a right to require from his creditor a written receipt for any property delivered in performance of his obligation. A judgment debtor made a tender of the amount of a judgment to his judgment creditor, pending an appeal by the latter, on condition that he satisfied the judgment. Held, that such tender was unconditional, and valid, and not violative of section 1494.

3. Where a judgment debtor has made a tender to the judgment creditor of the amount of the judgment, which has been refused by the latter, it is not necessary for the debtor to deposit the money in court in order to stop the running of interest, as such proceeding is only necessary where it is desired to extinguish the original obligation.

4. A tender by a judgment debtor to the judgment creditor of the amount of the judgment, made after the filing of a cost bond and appeal by the latter, operates to stop the running of interest on the judgment from the time of the tender, where the judgment is affirmed on appeal.

5. It is not necessary for a judgment debtor who wishes to make a tender to the judgment creditor of the amount of a judgment, after appeal by the latter, in order to secure the benefit of such tender, to apply to the appellate court for leave to do so, as such tender is extrajudicial.

6. After a tender by a judgment debtor pending an appeal by a judgment creditor of the amount of the judgment, and an affirmance by the appellate court, and sending of a remittitur to the trial court, it is proper for the judgment debtor to pay the amount of the judgment and interest thereon to the time of tender into court, and demand a satisfaction of the judgment, and it thereupon becomes the duty of the trial court to determine the amount necessary to satisfy the judgment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Nicola Ferrea against Hiram Tubbs and others. From an order satisfying a judgment on the payment into court by the judgment debtor of an amount required by the court, plaintiff appealed. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. Hilborn & Hall, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiff in an action for damages recovered a judgment of $4,800. He appealed from this judgment, and also from an order refusing his motion for a new trial. Pending the appeal to this court, defendants tendered him the full amount of the judgment, with all costs, and interest to that date. This tender was refused. Subsequently, upon appeal, the judgment and order denying a new trial were affirmed. Upon the return of the remittitur to the superior court, defendants asked for an order that the judgment be satisfied conditionally upon the payment into court of the amount of the tender, and at the same time again tendered to plaintiff the aforesaid amount, and paid the same into court; whereupon an order was made satisfying the judgment. The present appeal is prosecuted from that order, the real question being, did the tender made to plaintiff by defendants pending his appeal to this court stop the running of interest upon the judgment from which his appeal was taken?

We see no force in the contention that the tender should have been made to plaintiff's attorneys, rather than to plaintiff himself. While it may be assumed that the attorney has sole control of his client's case, as far as any question of practice and procedure is concerned, yet there can be no question but that a tender of money pending the litigation may be made to the client. The statute expressly authorizes the judgment creditor to satisfy the judgment, and section 1488, Civ. Code, declares that an offer of performance must be made to the creditor, or one authorized by him to receive the amount due. It primarily rests with the plaintiff, and not his attorneys, to decide whether or not an amount tendered should be accepted in full satisfaction of a claim for money due, and this tender was made to the proper party.

It is next claimed that the tender was conditional, and therefore of no force. The condition was that plaintiff deliver a receipt for said money "as payment in full for said judgment, with interest and costs." The offer is claimed to be violative of section 1494 of the Civil Code, which provides, "An offer of performance must be free from any conditions which the creditor is not bound on his part to perform." Whatever may be the law in other jurisdictions—especially in England—as to the effect upon the validity of a tender by the demand of a receipt from the creditor at the time, we are convinced that the true rule in this state is that a receipt may be demanded without jeopardizing the legality of the tender. Sections 1498 and 1499, respectively, provide: "When a debtor is entitled to the performance of a condition precedent to, or concurrent with, performance on his part, he may make his offer to depend upon the due performance of such condition." Section 1498. "A debtor has a right to require from his creditor a written receipt for any property delivered in performance of his obligation." Section 1499. By virtue of sections 1498, 1499, a debtor has a right to demand of the creditor a receipt. And by virtue of section 1494 the offer of performance need only be free from conditions which the creditor is not bound to perform. If the debtor tender a sufficient amount of money, he is entitled to a receipt in full, and may couple his tender with a demand for such receipt. Again, it was not necessary to deposit the money in court after tender made, in order to stop the running of interest. A deposit in court is only demanded when it is desired to extinguish the original obligation. No claim of that kind is made by the debtor here.

Appellant's main contention seems to be based upon the following closely-connected legal propositions advanced separately in his brief: "(1) The filing of the three hundred dollar cost bond perfected the appeal, and operated as a supersedeas as to the judgment. (2) Pending the appeal, the superior court was divested of jurisdiction for the enforcement or satisfaction of the judgment. (3) Pending the appeal, neither party could enforce nor satisfy the judgment." These contentions seem to miss the mark to which they are directed. We are not concerned in the fact, even if it be true, that pending the appeal neither party could enforce or satisfy the judgment; nor the further fact that, pending the appeal, the superior court had no jurisdiction to order the judgment satisfied. These matters are not material here. By the tender made to plaintiff, no attempt was made to secure relief by judicial process. It was a matter entirely outside of the courts. No court was asked to do anything. If the right of tender be denied here, it might with equal propriety be claimed that these two parties, pending the appeal, could not contract regarding the subject-matter of this litigation, either with themselves or with others. By the tender made, it was not sought to invoke the jurisdiction of the superior court in any way, nor to trespass upon the right of this court to hear the appeal. If the tender had been accepted, and the receipt in full given, the transaction would have been perfectly valid, and inevitably would have resulted in an end to the litigation. Appellant concedes all this when he says an acceptance of the tender would have resulted in a dismissal of his appeal. It seems to follow irresistibly that defendants had the legal right to make the tender. If they had the legal right to make it, certainly the creditor had the legal right to accept it; and, if it was a legal tender, it carried with it all the incidents of a valid and legal tender. Of course the appeal stayed any execution of the judgment. Especially is this plain, for plaintiff is appealing from a money judgment rendered in his favor. But appellant's position in this regard is not entirely clear to us. He says the judgment of the trial court was devitalized by the appeal, and revitalized by its affirmation in this court. He also seems—inferentially at least—to claim that, the judgment being devitalized at the date of the tender, no tender could be made; in other words, the claim at that time had assumed its original condition,—that of an unliquidated claim for damages. This is his position, or it is that, when the tender was made, the judgment, being devitalized by reason of the appeal, was drawing no interest, and therefore the tender could not have the effect to stop the running of interest. This court has had occasion many times, especially in recent days, to define the status of a judgment pending appeal; but the position now taken by appellant presents unplowed ground. It is somewhat original. We do not understand that an appeal stops the running of interest upon the judgment. Certainly this court has never so decided. However inanimate a judgment may be pending appeal, we believe it still has life enough to draw to itself interest. This court may have said that such a judgment was sleeping, but it never has gone so far as to declare it dead. If defendants had appealed from this judgment, instead of plaintiff, and upon appeal the judgment had been affirmed, certainly it would have drawn interest pending the appeal. Then why not in the present case? In justice and equity defendants should have the right to stop the running of interest upon this judgment. By the affirmation of the judgment in this court it was declared that plaintiff should not have appealed the case. It was further declared that defendants' tender in effect was sufficient in amount to cover all plaintiff's just claims, and therefore should have been accepted when made. Plaintiff could refuse to accept the tender, and prosecute his appeal, but he thereby assumed the risk of losing the use of this money pending the appeal in case of an affirmation of the judgment. We are perfectly satisfied that this judgment was not so devitalized by the appeal but that it still remained such a liquidated demand that a tender could be made by the debtor which would stop the running of interest.

It is claimed that, if defendants desired to secure any benefit from the tender made, they should have applied for leave to this court while the appeal was here pending. But this court upon appeal only reviewed the action of the trial court. It took the case as made by the trial court. It could not examine into the merits of this tender. Upon the going down of the remittitur it was clearly the right of defendants to bring their money into court, and ask that the judgment be satisfied. Upon such action and request by them, it was the duty of the trial court to determine the amount of money necessary to satisfy the judgment. If there were any credits to be made, then and there was the time for their allowance, and in effect the refusal of the tender here involved operated as a release by the judgment creditor of all interest which would otherwise have accrued upon the judgment after the date of the tender.

The remaining questions raised by appellant in his brief have been considered. We find nothing there which demands extended consideration. They appear to be without substantial merits. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

KOZMINSKY v. WILLIAMS, Justices' Court Clerk. (S. F. 1,437.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—FEES IN CIVIL ACTION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—MANDAMUS—ACTS OF CLERK OF COURT.

1. Under Act March 28, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 272), allowing each justice of the peace a fee of $2 "for all services to be performed by him before trial," etc., 25 cents for issuing writs "not otherwise herein provided for," and 50 cents "for taking and approving bond or undertaking," a justice of the peace is not entitled to any fee for approving an undertaking on attachment, and issuing the proper writ, in addition to the fee of $2 allowed by said act for "services to be performed by him before the trial."

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 91, providing that the justices' clerk shall not issue writs or process, for the service of which a fee is allowed by law, without the order of the presiding justice, and that he must collect the fees for such service in advance, a justices' clerk cannot be compelled by mandamus to issue a writ of attachment when no order for such writ was obtained, and the sheriff's fee for serving it was neither paid nor tendered.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Application for a peremptory writ of mandamus by H. S. Kozminsky against E. W. Williams, justices' court clerk of the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment granting the application, defendant appeals. Judgment modified and affirmed.

H. T. Creswell, for appellant. A. S. Newburg and Samuel Rosenheim, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. The defendant is justices' court clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and he prosecutes this appeal from a judgment of the superior court awarding a writ of mandate commanding him to file an affidavit and undertaking on attachment, and to issue the proper writ. The controversy arises out of the fact that the defendant demanded the payment of certain fees as a condition of filing the papers and issuing the writ, which the plaintiff contends (and the superior court has found) he was not required to pay. The case is governed by the act of March 28, 1895, establishing the fees of certain officers, including justices of the peace. St. 1895, p. 272. It is therein provided that justices of the peace may collect the following fees, and no others: "Each justice of the peace shall be allowed, in a civil action before him, for all services to be performed by him before trial, two dollars; and for the trial and all proceedings subsequent thereto, including all affidavits, swearing witnesses and jury, and the entry of judgment and issue of execution thereon, three dollars; and in all cases where judgment is rendered by default or confession, for all services, including execution and satisfaction of judgment, two dollars." In compliance with this clause of the statute, the plaintiff, on commencing his action, paid to the defendant the sum of $2, and thereupon presented a proper affidavit and undertaking, with a demand that the defendant should file them and issue the writ of attachment. But the defendant, relying upon two subsequent clauses of the statute, claimed additional fees, amounting to seventy-five cents, as a condition of filing the papers. These clauses are as follows: (1) "For issuing each process, writ, order or paper required by law to be issued, not otherwise herein provided for, twenty-five cents." (2) "For taking and approving bond or undertaking, including the justification of sureties, fifty cents." The superior court held that the defendant could not demand the fees here specified, because the issuance of the writ of attachment is a service to be performed before trial; that it is covered by the payment of $2 at the commencement of the action, and therefore otherwise provided for; and because the filing and approval of the undertaking is also a part of the services covered by the same payment. We have concluded, not without hesitation, that this is a correct construction of the statute. The only objection to it, so far as the issuance of the writ is concerned, is that it renders the clause relating to writs and process wholly superfluous and inoperative, since all sorts of writs and process of justices' courts, both in civil and criminal cases, are in the same manner otherwise provided for. This is, of course, in violation of one canon of construction, but any other view would involve a violation of other rules equally potent; and it is a reasonable conclusion that the special clause relating to writs and process was inserted merely out of abundant caution, to cover possible cases not provided for. So far as the taking and approval of the undertaking are concerned, the clause relating to that matter has full operation upon appeal bonds, which do not come under other provisions of the act.

These views would determine the case, were it not for an objection under section 91 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to practice in the justices' court of San Francisco. That section provides, in substance, that the justices' clerk shall not issue writs or process, for the service of which a fee is allowed by law, without the order of the presiding justice, and that he must collect the fees for such service in advance. Now, in this case, it is not alleged in the petition that any order for the issuance of the writ was ever obtained from the presiding justice, or that the fee of $1 allowed the sheriff for serving the writ was ever paid or tendered. The answer, moreover, which is verified, distinctly alleges that no order for the writ was obtained, and that the sheriff's fee was neither paid nor tendered. In the superior court this objection was held to be immaterial, and judgment was rendered on the pleadings. Respondent makes light of the objection here, and asks us to disregard it. But we do not see how we can do so. As to the technical objection that no order for the writ was obtained from the presiding justice, that is fairly enough answered by saying that such order could not be obtained until the affidavit and undertaking had been filed, and, as the clerk wrongfully refused to file those papers notwithstanding full payment of all he could rightfully demand, the plaintiff is at least entitled to a peremptory writ commanding defendant to file those papers. But the judgment appealed from goes further. It not only requires the filing of the affidavit and undertaking, but also the issuance of the writ. We do not think the clerk can issue the writ without the previous order of the presiding justice, or the justice acting for him in his absence, or that he is required to issue it until the sheriff's fee for service is paid. The judgment of the superior court is modified by limiting the peremptory writ to the filing of the affidavit and undertaking, and as so modified is affirmed.

JONES v. FALVELLA et al. (L. A. 670.)

HOMESTEAD—TRANSFER BY ORDER OF PROBATE COURT—INSANITY OF WIFE—PETITION—STATUTE—TITLE.

1. Where a husband whose wife has been adjudged insane proceeds to sell the homestead under the provisions of St. 1873-74, p. 582, enabling the husband or wife to alienate or encumber the homestead when one of them has become insane, such sale is void, unless the petition for the sale alleges the value of the homestead to be sold, as required by section 3 of said act, or contains language which can be fairly construed into a declaration of value.

2. The title of Act 1873-74 (St. 1873-74, p. 582), enabling a husband or wife to alienate the homestead when one of them has become insane, entitled "An act to enable certain parties therein named to alienate or incumber homesteads," sufficiently indicates its purpose, as required by the constitution.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Anna W. Jones, administratrix, etc., against Maria A. Falvella and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

M. W. Conklin, for appellant. F. R. Willis and Geo. W. Baker, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. The action is to quiet title. The facts were stipulated. Jesse H. Butler was the husband of Ida Merrill Butler in March, 1882, at which time the wife filed a declaration of homestead upon the separate property of the husband. In February, 1892, Ida M. Butler was adjudged insane, and committed to the asylum at Agnews. In April, 1892, the husband filed a petition to be allowed to sell the homestead under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to enable certain parties therein named to alienate or incumber homesteads." St. 1873-74, p. 582. The order was granted, and the sale was effected. The defendants claim title under this sale. Their title was upheld by the trial court, and judgment was rendered for them accordingly.

The first contention of appellant is against the constitutionality of the act. We think the title of the act sufficiently indicates its purpose; and, as for the other matters, they must be considered as adversely adjudicated by the case of Rider v. Regan, 114 Cal. 667, 46 Pac. 820, where the question of the constitutionality of this act received careful consideration.

It is next contended that the court never acquired jurisdiction to order the sale because of the omission of certain statutory requirements from the petition, and that, therefore, the sale is void. Section 3 of the act under consideration requires that in the petition shall be stated the value of the homestead to be sold or incumbered. In the petition which was the foundation of these proceedings there is a total absence of such allegation, nor are there any averments from which an expression of the value may be derived. The court acquires jurisdiction to order a judicial sale only upon the filing of a petition sufficient in form. Townsend v. Gordon, 19 Cal. 189. The statutory prerequisites to the execution of such a power may be, and frequently are, in their nature arbitrary, but when the legislature has prescribed them they may not be omitted or ignored. Thatcher v. Powell, 6 Wheat. 119. Courts have shown great liberality in construing such petitions because of the manifest hardships which result from overthrowing sales for such irregularities, when in other respects they have been fairly conducted; but no court has gone to the length of holding that a petition for such sale is sufficient when there is a total omission of any statutory prerequisite to the conferring of jurisdiction. If in this case it could be said with any reason that the value of the property was even inferentially stated, we should be inclined to uphold the sale; but, even with an inclination so to do, we are unable to see in any or in all the terms of the petition any language which can be fairly construed into a declaration of value. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

(S. F. 1,186.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 8, 1899.)

HARMLESS ERROR—MECHANIC'S LIEN—PROPERTY COVERED—FINDINGS—LIABILITY OF SUBCONTRACTORS—NEGLIGENCE OF PRINCIPAL CONTRACTOR—REMEDY OF SUBCONTRACTOR WHERE CONTRACT IS VOID—LIEN BY SUBCONTRACTOR FOR WORK OF EMPLOYEES—INTEREST—EMPLOYEES OF SUBCONTRACTOR—ASSIGNMENT BY SUBCONTRACTOR OF CLAIM—EVIDENCE—ADMISSION OF PARTY TO SUIT.

1. Error in overruling a demurrer directed to one cause of action set out in the complaint is harmless, where judgment is based entirely on another count, which states a good cause of action.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1185, relating to mechanics' liens, providing that the land on which the building is constructed, together with a convenient space about the same, shall be subject to the lien, the lien of a subcontractor for labor on a particular building is properly confined to the lands necessary and convenient to the use of such building, though the original contract, void for want of filing in the office of the county recorder, embraced other buildings.

3. It is not necessary for the court to make findings as to allegations which are not supported by evidence.

4. Subcontractors are not responsible to the owner for injuries resulting from the negligence of the principal contractor.

5. The remedy of subcontractors, who hold claims for work and materials furnished for a building constructed under a void builder's contract, is under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing that, when the contract for the construction of a building is void, labor and materials furnished by subcontractors shall be deemed to have been furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof.

6. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1184, providing that, when a contract for a building is void for any of certain reasons, labor and materials furnished by subcontractors and others mentioned therein shall be deemed to have been furnished at the special request of the owner, and the building shall be subject to a lien for the same, a subcontractor has a lien for the work done on a building by his employees, though the original contract is void.

7. Where the value of the work done by a subcontractor under his contract with the principal contractor was unliquidated and incapable of ascertainment until fixed by judgment of the court, the court, in an action by such subcontractor to foreclose a mechanic's lien, is unauthorized to allow interest on his claim prior to judgment.

8. Under Civ. Code, § 3287, providing that every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, with the right vested in him to recover on a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day, employes of a subcontractor, at fixed rates of compensation, which they are entitled to receive on completion of their work, are entitled, in an action to foreclose mechanics' liens, to interest on their claim from the time it was due, and also to have the amount of their judgments made liens on the property.

9. The assignment by a subcontractor of his claim to another as security merely, and its re-assignment to him, prior to the filing by him of a claim of lien, leave him the owner of the claim at the time of the filing.

10. In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, a witness testified that he was a stenographer, and that the writing handed him was a transcript from his shorthand notes, which he took at a certain date, of defendant's testimony, and that it was correct, to the best of his recollection. The declarations of defendant contained in said transcript were then offered in evidence "as an admission in the case." Held, that the evidence was admissible, as an admission of a party to the suit.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by C. A. Macomber, John Tuttle, and J. S. Reid against L. M. Bigelow, San Francisco Savings Union, Edward Metzger, and Louis Metzger to foreclose mechanics' liens. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Modified.

Knight & Heggerty, for appellants. Bull & Cleary, Henley & Costello, Crandall & Bull, H. E. Monroe, and Hart H. North, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. William Belyea and J. C. Rogers entered into a written contract with defendant Bigelow to construct for her a building of eight flats on Bush street, in San Francisco. This contract was void for want of filing in the office of the county recorder. The assignor of plaintiff Macomber, Thomas Madigan, the assignor of plaintiff Reid, S. H. Depuy, and plaintiff Tuttle, as subcontractors, each performed and supplied labor and furnished materials in the construction of said building, and filed liens on the property, and each of the plaintiffs began a suit to foreclose his lien. These suits were consolidated, and plaintiffs had judgment, from which defendants appeal. The San Francisco Savings Union and the Metzgers were joined as defendants because they claimed some interest in the premises. After careful consideration of appellants' brief, we have concluded that the judgment should stand except as to the allowance of interest hereinafter directed.

There is no error prejudicial to appellants in the action of the court in overruling the demurrer to the complaint of plaintiff Macomber, for this reason: The demurrer was specially directed to the second cause of action, and the first count of said complaint set out a good cause of action for a foreclosure of plaintiffs' lien, and the judgment in Macomber's favor was based altogether upon this first count or cause of action; and it is therefore immaterial on this appeal whether the second count of said complaint states a cause of action or not, as the judgment appealed from has no need of that portion of the complaint to support it. Canal Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 282.

In the complaint of the plaintiff Tuttle it sufficiently appears that both the work of excavation necessary to be done in the erection of the building and the building itself were completed before the lien was filed and before the action was begun. The excavating was included in the original contract, and this contract, though void, may be looked to to determine what should be treated as a part of the building, and the allegations of the complaint as to the completion of the building apply to all its parts, including the excavations necessary to its construction, as contemplated by the said contract. It was not necessary to state in the complaint that the original contract was void, as that was a proper matter of evidence to establish other material facts alleged in the complaint. Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 20 Pac. 1111. The demurrer to the Tuttle complaint was therefore properly overruled.

In this case the work for which liens were filed was all done and furnished on and for the new building of "eight flats." The liens filed by Madigan and Tuttle were therefore properly confined to the lands necessary and convenient to the use and occupation of that particular building, and the court, having the power so to do under section 1185, Code Civ. Proc., properly restricted the lien of Depuy to the same premises. There was nothing to show that the rear portion of the lot, covered by the old buildings, was in any way convenient or necessary to the use of the new building. Though the original contract embraced other buildings, the liens were properly confined to the building upon which the work was done. Brunner v. Marks, 98 Cal. 374, 33 Pac. 265.

The twentieth finding reads as follows: "That on the 5th day of January, 1894, and not before that time, the said Madigan sold, assigned, and transferred all his right, title, and interest and claim in and to said claim for labor performed by him, together with the claim of lien by which said claim is secured, unto C. H. Macomber, who ever since has been and now is the owner and holder thereof." This finding is supported by the evidence, and it completely disposes of all the issues raised by the pleadings as to the date of the transfer of the claim to Macomber, and as to Macomber's ownership thereof, and the precise time when he acquired such ownership. Taken in connection with the other findings, it shows that such ownership was first acquired after the claim of lien was filed by Madigan.

There was no evidence tending to support the allegations of fraud and trickery in the answer, and therefore it was not necessary for the court to make any finding as to those allegations. Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098. There was no fraud or wrong in Madigan's including in his claim of lien work done for him on the building by Tuttle and Depuy.

The allegation as to when the grading and excavations were completed tendered an immaterial issue. The thing material was, when was the building completed? and the findings show the date of such completion. Finding 12 shows that the work on the building was carried on without cessation to the time of its completion from the time it began, and fully covers all allegations in the answer as to cessation of work for more than 30 days.

The allegations of the answer as to injuries to the rear houses by caving, the result of Belyea & Rogers' negligence, were immaterial, and no findings as to such allegations were necessary. These plaintiffs were not responsible for the negligence of Belyea & Rogers.

The claims of plaintiffs are for work and materials necessarily furnished for the construction of a building which was being built under a void builder's contract, and their remedy is properly under section 1183, Code Civ. Proc. Section 1191, Code Civ. Proc., applies to grading or other improvement of a lot, done independent of, and not as a necessary part of, the construction of a building.

That the protection of the mechanic's lien law is not confined to those who actually perform labor, but is extended to subcontractors and others, is settled by the language of the Code. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1184. A fair construction of these sections gives to the subcontractor a lien for the work done on the building by his employés, and this, too, where the original contract is void. If it had been intended by the legislature that a subcontractor should have a lien for nothing except his own personal labor, they should have made the statute read, "shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have performed labor." Instead of the word "performed," the legislature used the word "bestowed," which means "used" or "placed," and never means "performed." This language shows that it was intended to give a subcontractor a lien for the labor that he caused his employés to perform on the building. The fact that the original contract was void can in no way affect the question under consideration.

The finding hereinbefore referred to, that the work proceeded without cessation, we think warranted by the evidence. There was some conflict in the evidence on this subject, but we think the trial court found in accordance with the preponderance of such evidence.

The judgment was rendered November 12, 1896, and to the extent that it awarded interest prior thereto upon the amount for which judgment was rendered in favor of the assignee of Madigan it was erroneous. His complaint was against Belyea & Rogers as original debtors to Madigan. He had no right to a personal judgment against the defendant Bigelow, but only to enforce a lien against her property. In the case of unrecorded contracts it is provided by section 1183, Code Civ. Proc., that all persons by whom the labor is done and the materials furnished "shall have a lien for the value thereof." No personal liability is incurred by the owner, but the land upon which the improvement is made is subjected to a lien therefor in favor of these persons. Madigan had ceased work upon the lot before the excavation was completed, and the value of the work done by him under his contract with Belyea & Rogers was unliquidated and incapable of ascertainment until fixed by the judgment of the court at the trial herein. Under these facts, the court was not authorized to allow interest upon his claim prior to the rendition of its judgment. Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100; Easterbrook v. Farquharson, 110 Cal. 311, 42 Pac. 811; Swinnerton v. Development Co., 112 Cal. 375, 44 Pac. 719.

Tuttle and Depuy were, however, employed by Madigan at fixed rates of compensation, which they were entitled to receive from him upon the completion of their work, and the court properly allowed them interest thereon (Civ. Code, § 3287; Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 233, 39 Pac. 758), and made the amount of their judgments liens upon the property of Bigelow. As Madigan was personally liable to them under this employment, it was proper for him to include in his claim of lien the value of the work done by them. The statute, however, gives a right of lien to them also, and they were not precluded by his filing a lien from filing a claim of lien in their own behalf, since they could not know whether he would prosecute his claim to judgment. In enforcing these liens, however, a court of equity would render judgment in favor of each according to the amount which it should determine each was entitled to receive. As between Tuttle, Depuy, and Madigan, equity will apportion the liens according to their respective rights inter sese, and will deduct whatever amount Tuttle and Depuy are entitled to enforce as a lien upon the property from the amount which Madigan would have been entitled to enforce except for their claims against him. The property is subject to a lien for only the "value" of the work done; but if Madigan, by his dealings with Tuttle and Depuy, has given them a right against him for a greater sum than he could enforce against the property, the loss must be borne by him.

The assignment of Madigan's claim to another as security merely, and its reassignment to Madigan, prior to the filing by Madigan of a claim of lien, left Madigan clearly the owner of the claim at the time he filed his claim of lien, and fully warranted the conclusion reached by the trial court as to the ownership of such claim.

A careful examination of the several complaints and claims of lien discloses no material variance between the evidence on the one hand and the complaints and claims of lien on the other. "The statute is a remedial statute, and, for the purpose of carrying into effect the object for which it was enacted, is to receive a liberal construction, and the notices which under its provisions are required to be given have regard to substance, rather than to form." McGinty v. Morgan, 122 Cal. 103, 54 Pac. 392. The variances complained of by appellants are trivial, do not go to any matter of substance, and could not have misled the appellants to their injury in any way.

Plaintiffs called one Williamson as a witness, who testified that he was a stenographer and typewriter, and that the writing handed him "was a transcript from his shorthand notes which he took July 18, 1893, of Mrs. Bigelow's testimony, and that it was correct to the best of his recollection and ability." Respondents then offered in evidence, "as an admission in the case," the declarations of the defendant Bigelow, contained in the said transcript. There was no error in overruling the objection made to this evidence. It was not offered as a deposition, but as an admission of a party to the suit.

There are some nine other alleged errors of the court, in ruling upon the admission of evidence, that need not be discussed further than to say that in none of them was there any error prejudicial to appellants. The motion for a nonsuit was properly denied, and there was evidence to support each finding of the court. The order denying a new trial is affirmed. The superior court is directed to modify its judgment in accordance with the views herein presented, and as so modified the judgment will stand affirmed.

THOMAS et ux. v. GATES. (L. A. 652.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 8, 1899.)

APPEAL—VERDICT BASED ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS RELATING TO TESTIMONY OF PARTICULAR WITNESS OR CLASS OF WITNESSES—INSTRUCTIONS NOT APPLICABLE TO EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTION COVERED BY OTHERS—REVERSAL WHERE CHARGE IS CORRECT AS AN ENTIRETY—RULE OF DAMAGES—PERSONAL INJURIES.

1. Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the verdict will not be interfered with on appeal.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, providing that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others, is applicable to all witnesses, whether for plaintiff or defendant; and an instruction that, if the jury believe that plaintiff in her deposition willfully swore falsely in regard to any material fact, then the whole of her testimony should be distrusted, is properly refused.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, providing that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others, is applicable to all witnesses, whether for plaintiff or defendant; and an instruction that, if any witness for the plaintiff willfully swore falsely in regard to any material fact, the whole of the testimony of such witness should be looked on with distrust and suspicion, is properly refused.

4. A proposition of law laying down a rule of evidence should be given to the jury in general terms, and not stated as being applicable to a certain witness or class of witnesses.

5. Where the record does not show that plaintiffs produced inferior evidence when it was in their power to produce higher evidence, an instruction requested by defendant that if either party has produced inferior evidence, where it is in the power of such party to produce higher evidence, the jury must presume that such higher evidence, if produced, would be adverse to that party, is properly refused.

6. Where there is no evidence in the record that plaintiffs willfully suppressed any testimony, and the instruction requested by defendant could only apply to testimony which he concedes was properly excluded, an instruction that, if the jury should find that any evidence has been willfully suppressed by plaintiffs, they should presume that such evidence would be adverse to them if produced, is properly refused.

7. An instruction fully covered by other instructions is properly refused.

8. In an action for damages for personal injuries causing plaintiff to have a miscarriage, an instruction by the court, after giving the rule as to the detriment proximately caused by the act of defendant, to the effect that this will include compensation for the pain resulting from the corporal hurt, if it produced pain; for mental suffering, if any, naturally resulting to plaintiff from the injury or wrong, if any; for wounded sensibility or affection, and for sense of wrong and insult, by reason of the malice or oppression of defendant, if he was guilty of malice or oppression,—states the correct rule of damages.

9. Judgment will not be reversed for verbal inaccuracies in the charge or for isolated sentences or phrases open to criticism, where such charge, as a whole, correctly states the law of the case.

10. In an action for damages for personal injuries, causing plaintiff to have a miscarriage, an instruction that if the jury shall find that defendant wrongfully inflicted injuries on the person of plaintiff, and that she suffered pain in consequence thereof, and that she was at the time pregnant, and the injury caused her to have a miscarriage, and that her health has been impaired by reason thereof, or if they find that any of said alleged facts have been proved, the amount of damages to which plaintiff is entitled is such sum as shall appear reasonable and just, provided, however, that a greater amount of damages than is alleged in the complaint cannot be given, is proper.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Isaac and Rebecca Thomas against David Gates for damages for personal injuries to Rebecca Thomas, causing her to have a miscarriage. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & Rush, for appellant. John D. Pope and C. N. Mottingly, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This action was brought by plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, to recover damages of defendant for personal injuries to plaintiff Rebecca Thomas, alleged to have been caused by the defendant violently assaulting, beating, and striking the said plaintiff, causing her to have a miscarriage and to suffer great pain. A jury was impaneled, and a verdict rendered in favor of plaintiffs for the sum of $4,500. A motion for a new trial was made, and the court below granted the motion unless plaintiffs would remit and waive $2,000 of the amount of the verdict, which they accordingly did, and the motion was then denied. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of plaintiffs. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

1. It is argued in appellant's brief that the verdict is not sustained by a preponderance of testimony, and in the brief it is said: "The record in this case discloses that the testimony is conflicting on every important issue of fact." It has been a rule of this court, so long settled that it should now be regarded as elementary, that it will not interfere with or set aside the verdict of a jury when there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. The trial court has the power to do so, and should in all proper cases exercise its discretion in reviewing the evidence, to the end that substantial justice may be done. In this case the court below, in the exercise of such discretion, modified the verdict, and, as it now stands supported by evidence on every important issue, we cannot, under the rule, disturb it.

2. Counsel for appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to give, at his request, two instructions,—the first being to the effect that, if the jury believed from the evidence that the plaintiff in her deposition willfully swore falsely in regard to any material fact, then the whole of her testimony should be distrusted; and the second that, if any witness for the plaintiff willfully swore falsely in regard to any material fact, the whole of the testimony of such witness should be looked upon with distrust and suspicion. We think both the instructions were properly refused. Our Code lays down a well-known rule of evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3), "that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others," and this rule applies to all witnesses, whether for plaintiff or defendant. If the rule had been asked for as given in the Code, and as applying to all witnesses, whether for plaintiff or defendant, no doubt it would have been given, and, if the court had refused the instruction when so requested, we would certainly hold such refusal to be error. But we do not think that the attention of the jury should be called to the rule as applying to one of the parties and not to the other, or as applying to the witnesses for the plaintiff and not to the witnesses for the defendant. If the instructions had been given, the jury might well infer that the rule applied only to the plaintiffs and their witnesses, and not to the defendant or to his witnesses. Counsel for defendant evidently desired to create this impression upon the jury, or else they would have asked for the general rule. If one of the parties to litigation, either plaintiff or defendant, can be singled out, and an abstract rule of evidence applied to him, or if the witnesses for plaintiff or defendant can be singled out as a class, and the rule applied to them, it could, upon the same principle, be applied to any one witness to the exclusion of others. Suppose that in this case the defendant claimed and strongly urged to the jury that Mrs. Price, one of plaintiffs' witnesses, committed perjury, and was unworthy of belief; can any one doubt for a moment that an instruction to the effect that, if the jury believed that Mrs. Price willfully swore falsely as to any material fact, the whole of her testimony should be distrusted, would not tend to create a suspicion in the minds of the jury that the court believed Mrs. Price swore falsely? A proposition of law laying down a rule of evidence should be given in general terms, and not stated as being applicable to one certain witness, or one certain class of witnesses. In Jones, Ev. § 905, in speaking of the rule in question, it is said: "It is error for the judge in his instruction to the jury to single out a particular witness, and to direct such cautionary instructions against his testimony, as such a course would tend to convey to the jury the impression that the particular witness is disbelieved by the judge." In Waters v. People (Ill. Sup.) 50 N. E. 148, the court charged the jury as follows: "If you believe that any witness for the defense has willfully and knowingly sworn falsely as to any material fact in issue, then you have a right to disregard his entire testimony, except where it is corroborated by other credible evidence in the case." The instruction was held to be error, and the court said: "This instruction calls attention of the jury alone to the testimony of the witnesses for the defense. It is the duty of the jury to consider the testimony of all the witnesses, and if any witness has willfully and knowingly testified falsely, whether for the prosecution or for the defense, the jury had the right to reject the testimony of such witness, unless sustained by other credible evidence." In Wastl v. Railway Co. (Mont.) 42 Pac. 772, the court below had designated three witnesses for plaintiff by name, and told the jury "that, if they believed these three witnesses had willfully sworn falsely to any material matter or thing, they were at liberty to disregard their entire testimony," etc. The instruction was held to be error, and in the opinion it is said: "It is a rule applicable alike to civil and criminal cases that it is error for the judge directly or inferentially to express an opinion to the jury or in their hearing as to the credibility of a particular witness or as to the weight that should be attached to his testimony." To the same effect are 2 Thomp. Trials, § 2421; Ott v. Oyer's Ex'x, 106 Pa. St. 6; State v. Stout, 31 Mo. 406; Davidson v. Wallingford (Tex. Sup.) 32 S. W. 1030;

Pennsylvania Co. v. Versten, 140 Ill. 637, 30 N. E. 540. The case of O'Rourke v. Vennekohl, 104 Cal. 254, 37 Pac. 930, is not in conflict with what has been said. The apparent approval of the instruction offered in that case may be regarded as obiter dictum. The court held that the court below properly refused the instruction because the court, in refusing it, charged the jury in the language of the statute.

3. The court refused to give an instruction requested by defendant, to the effect that, if the jury should find that any evidence has been willfully suppressed by plaintiffs, they should presume that such evidence would be adverse to them if produced; and another to the effect that, if either party has produced inferior evidence where it is in the power of such party to produce higher evidence, then the jury must presume that such higher evidence, if produced, would be adverse to that party. There is nothing in the record to show that plaintiffs produced inferior evidence when it was in their power to produce evidence of a higher degree, and hence the second part of the instruction was not applicable, as there was no testimony to which it might be applied, and there is no evidence in the record that the plaintiffs willfully suppressed any testimony, unless the objection to the evidence of Dr. Cates by plaintiffs was the suppression of testimony. Dr. Cates had been called in professionally, and made an examination of the plaintiff, Rebecca Thomas. He was called by defendant as a witness, and asked concerning matters that came to him professionally as a physician, and, upon plaintiffs' objection, the evidence was excluded, under subdivision 4, § 1881, Code Civ. Proc., which reads as follows: "A licensed physician or surgeon cannot, without the consent of his patient, be examined in a civil action as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient." It is conceded that the evidence was properly excluded under the above provision of our statute, but it is claimed that the instruction should have been given so that the jury might have applied it to the testimony so excluded. To this doctrine we cannot accede. It certainly is not the policy of the law to exclude certain testimony, and at the same time to raise a presumption prejudicial to the party at whose instance it was excluded. A defendant in a criminal case cannot be called as a witness against his will, and, if he does not see fit to become a witness in his own behalf, the law does not allow this to create any presumption against him. In re Carpenter's Estate, 94 Cal. 418, 29 Pac. 1105, the court below instructed the jury "that it is a presumption of law that evidence willfully suppressed would be adverse if produced," and it was held error. It was said the instruction from the record could have applied only to the testimony of one Dr. Stockton, to whose evidence proper objection was made, and the objection sustained. In discussing the matter, this court said: "This was not a suppression of evidence, and it would be strange that the court, having decided that the evidence was not admissible, should nevertheless instruct the jury that the party offering it should have the benefit of a presumption that it was favorable, and that the other party, because he made a legal and proper objection, should thereby lay his case under the suspicion that he had been guilty of suppressing testimony. The instruction would naturally have an injurious effect."

4. It is said that it was error to refuse defendant's instruction: "Plaintiffs, in order to recover in this action, must convince you to a moral certainty that the defendant has been guilty of some unlawful act or negligence by which plaintiffs have been damaged." If we concede that the instruction is correct, it is fully covered by other instructions. The jury, at the defendant's request, were told "that no verdict could be found against the defendant unless by wrongful act he injured the plaintiff Rebecca Thomas, and that every fact or circumstance that the plaintiffs have failed to prove to the satisfaction of the jury by a preponderance of testimony must be resolved in favor of the defendant."

5. It is said the rule of damages is incorrectly stated in the sixth instruction, given at plaintiffs' request. The court, after giving the rule as to the detriment proximately caused by the act of defendant, said: "This will include compensation for the pain resulting from the corporal hurt, if it produced pain; for mental suffering, if any, naturally resulting to plaintiff Rebecca Thomas, from the injury or wrong, if any you find; for wounded sensibility or affection, and for sense of wrong and insult, by reason of the malice or oppression of the wrongdoer, if you find he was guilty of malice or oppression." We think the instruction did not mislead the jury, and that it substantially stated the rule correctly. 3 Suth. Dam. p. 711; Civ. Code, § 3283; Sloane v. Railway Co., 111 Cal. 678, 44 Pac. 320.

It is argued by appellant that the words, "wounded sensibility or affection," mean that plaintiffs should have redress for the loss of their anticipated offspring. We do not think the words, when interpreted in connection with their context, have any such meaning. The jury were told in another part of the charge, and at defendant's request: "Even if you should find that the defendant caused a miscarriage of plaintiff Rebecca Thomas, the death of the fetus, or unborn child, cannot be included as an element of injury to the plaintiffs for which they can recover any damages of defendant." The whole charge should be taken together as the law of the case, and, if it fairly and clearly states the law, it is not ground for reversal if there are verbal inaccuracies in the charge or that isolated sentences and phrases are open to just criticism, but it is sufficient that the charge, regarded in its entirety, shows no substantial error. People v. Gibson, 106 Cal. 458, 89 Pac. 864.

6. It is finally claimed that it was error to give plaintiffs' eighth instruction, which reads as follows: "If, under the law as given in charge of the court and the facts as they appear in evidence, the jury shall find that defendant wrongfully inflicted injuries upon the person of plaintiff Rebecca Thomas, and that she suffered pain in consequence thereof, and that she was at the time pregnant with child, and the injury caused her to have a miscarriage, and that her health has been impaired by reason thereof, or if you find that any of said alleged facts have been proven, the amount of damages to which the plaintiffs are entitled is such sum as, in view of all the facts and circumstances of the case, shall appear to the jury reasonable and just: provided, however, that the jury cannot find any greater amount of damages than is alleged in the complaint." It is said that this instruction is vicious, because it enumerates several things, either of which, if proven, under the instruction, would entitle plaintiffs to recover. We do not think the instruction complained of is susceptible of such interpretation. The jury are told that if they shall find that defendant wrongfully inflicted injuries, etc., and that she suffered pain in consequence thereof (of such injuries), and that she was at the time (of such injuries) pregnant with child, and the injury (wrongful) caused her to have a miscarriage, and that her health has been impaired by reason thereof (of such wrongful injuries), or if any of said alleged facts, etc., have been proven, then the amount of damages, etc. It was only in the event the jury should find that the injuries were wrongfully inflicted that it could make any estimate of damages whatever. The instructions, taken in connection with the other instructions, could not have misled the jury. We find no error in the record, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

(L. A. 482.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1899.)
NAMES—IDENTITY OF DEFENDANT—APPEAL—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—JURISDICTION
—MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE.

1. In an action against William T. C. and others, where the affidavit of service filed shows service on "W. F. C.," and the judgment by defendant recites that William T. C. was "regularly served," it will not be presumed that "W. F. C." is the same person as William T. C., in the absence of any other evidence in the record showing that fact, although there is only one defendant named C.

2. A judgment by default will be reversed on appeal, where there is no evidence in the record showing that the lower court had jurisdiction of the person against whom it was rendered, except the recitals contained in the judgment.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 442, providing that "the cross complaint must be served upon the parties affected thereby," a judgment by default, granting the relief asked in a cross complaint in an action to foreclose a mortgage, will be reversed on appeal, so far as it affects a party not served with such complaint, although it is not alleged therein that he claims any interest in the premises.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.
Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by James F. Houghton and others against Luther C. Tibbets and William T. Curtis and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant William T. Curtis appeals. Reversed as to defendant Curtis.

Wm. Peck and Wm. J. Hunsaker, for appellant. Rolfe & Rolfe, P. S. Castleman, H. C. Hubbard, and Parris & Allison, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage. Defendants Lewis Jacobs and Lewis Meyerstein, partners as Bank of San Bernardino, appeared, and filed a cross complaint against all the other defendants in the action, whereby they sought to foreclose a mortgage against defendants Tibbets and wife. Appellant William T. Curtis was named as a party defendant in the cross complaint. The only service of the complaint upon Curtis, as shown by the record, was proved by affidavit, in which it is stated that affiant "personally served the same on W. F. Curtis, one of the defendants named in said action." There is but one defendant of the name of Curtis. Default was entered against W. F. Curtis. The judgment recites as follows: "William T. Curtis having been regularly served with process, and time for answering having expired, and they [referring to all defaulting defendants] not having answered, but made default, and the findings and decision of the court having been made and filed: Now, therefore, the judgment of the court is," etc. The cross complaint is against the plaintiffs and against William T. Curtis, among other defendants; but there is no evidence of its service upon Curtis, and no recital in the findings or judgment that it was served upon him. The judgment forecloses the mortgage of plaintiffs and the mortgage set out by the cross complainants, and directs the sale of all the mortgaged property. Defendant Curtis appeals from the judgment.

There is no evidence in the record that W. F. Curtis and William T. Curtis are the same person, except as it may be inferred from the foregoing. Appellant claims that the person sued and the person served are not the same person, for prima facie two different names designate two different persons.

In support of the claim, McNally v. Mott, 3 Cal. 235, and Sutter v. Cox, 6 Cal. 415, are cited. In the latter of these cases one of these defendants was sued by the name of John Cox. Service was returned upon James Cox, and the judgment was against J. Cox, and Cox appealed. The court said: "This is error, unless there was something in the record to show that the person served was the person sued." The judgment was reversed as to Cox, and affirmed as to the defendants. Assuming—and, we think, correctly—that, if the return had shown service upon W. T. Curtis, it would have been sufficient, respondent invokes the rule that the variance in the middle initial is immaterial. The authorities so hold generally as to the middle initial, but we understand the rule to be otherwise where the Christian name of the person is not given, but is designated merely by initials; and it was so held in the recent case of State v. Higgins, 60 Minn. 1, 61 N. W. 816. The Christian names of Higgins and his wife commenced with the same initial,—his name being Marion F. and her name Martha J. He had entered into a contract by the name of M. F., and was charged with having fraudulently changed the middle initial from F. to J., so as to make it the contract of his wife. The question was whether the middle initial was a material part of the name. The court said: "The middle name or initial is material where it appears to be material. Thus it is material when it appears that, with the exception of the middle name or initial, two persons have each the same name, and can be distinguished by the middle names or initial of each. It seems to us that it appears on its face that the middle letter or initial is material when only the initial of the first name is given. In the present case the first name is not given; only its initial. The name was written 'M. F. Higgins' in the body of the contract and in the signature. No one would understand 'M. J. Higgins' to mean the same person. In speaking of a man it is often customary, among his friends and acquaintances, to call him by his first and last name, omitting his middle name or initial. Thus 'Marion F. Higgins' might well be known as 'Marion Higgins.' But there is no such well-understood custom when the first name is not given, but merely his initial. Thus 'M. F. Higgins' would not be known as 'M. Higgins.' When the initials alone are given, it is not customary to drop the second initial, but it is almost invariably the custom to give both initials." With this view of the rule we concur. We do not think that W. F. Curtis can be presumed to be the same person as William T. Curtis. But respondent contends that, if there is no evidence of service upon Curtis, except as found in the judgment, we must, in support thereof, presume that he was duly served. The point is that, if there is no evidence of service upon William T. Curtis, the recital in the judgment that he was served is sufficient to confer jurisdiction. This we understand to be the rule upon collateral attack (Freem. Judgm. § 130, and cases cited); but when, from the whole record, it appears, even upon such attack, to be untrue, or when the record discloses the evidence upon which the recital was based, and such evidence overthrows, rather than supports, the recital, the recital in the judgment will be disregarded (Id.). When, however, there is a direct attack by appeal, as is the case here, it is requisite that the record should show jurisdiction of the person against whom the judgment was rendered. And, as was said in McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 570: "In determining that question, recitals which may be found in the judgment cannot be regarded, for the question is whether the record sustains the judgment. Such recitals, therefore, will not be accepted as a substitute for the summons and the proof of service; and, indeed, it would be as illogical so to do as to receive such recitals in the stead of the allegations of the pleadings." See, also, Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 600, 29 Pac. 220; Yolo Co. v. Knight, 70 Cal. 431, 11 Pac. 662.

2. Appellant complains that the judgment granting the relief asked in the cross complaint was unauthorized and erroneous as to him, because it was not served upon him. There is no recital in the judgment, and no evidence in the record that it was served.

The cross complainants ask that all the defendants and all persons claiming under them "be barred and foreclosed of all rights, claim, or equity of redemption in said premises," etc. Appellant was entitled to service of the cross complaint, and to answer or demur thereto. Section 442, Code Civ. Proc., provides that "the cross complaint must be served upon the parties affected thereby." Society v. Fella, 54 Cal. 598; White v. Patton, 87 Cal. 151, 25 Pac. 270; Society v. Clarke, 110 Cal. 27, 42 Pac. 425. It is claimed by respondent that the cross complaint does not allege that defendant Curtis claimed any interest in the premises. Still it appears from the judgment that he was served with process, and the cross complaint does ask some affirmative relief against him. The judgment appears to rest upon both complaint and cross complaint, and the complaint alleges that Curtis claims some interest in the mortgaged property, and that such interest is subject to plaintiffs' mortgage. The judgment would certainly be effectual to foreclose any equity of redemption which Curtis may have if allowed to stand. It is advised that the judgment, so far as it affects the defendant Curtis, be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment, so far as it affects the defendant Curtis, is reversed.

FENTON v. EDWARDS et al. (VON WINDHEIM, Intervener. L. A. 526).

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—FOREIGN ASSIGNMENT—TITLE TO PROPERTY—NOTICE OF ASSIGNMENT TO DEBTOR—VALIDITY OF FOREIGN ASSIGNMENT.

1. A voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, made in Illinois by a Minnesota corporation doing business in the former state, vests the personal property of the corporation in the assignee, wherever situate, so that a debt owing to the corporation by a resident of California cannot be garnished after the assignment at the suit of a Nebraska creditor.

2. Where a debtor was garnished after his creditor had made a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, the mere fact that the debtor did not receive notice of the assignment until after he was garnished is immaterial, where he received notice in time to avail himself of it, in discharge of the garnishment proceedings.

3. It will be presumed that an assignment of a Minnesota corporation doing business in Illinois was made in Illinois, where it is shown that the assignment is in conformity with the laws of the latter state, and that the trust is being administered by the courts of that state.

4. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, valid by the laws of the state where made, will be enforced by the courts of another state, though it does not conform to the laws of such state, where it does not purport to transfer property situate in such state.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by W. T. Fenton, as assignee, against Edwards & Johnson, to recover a debt due to plaintiff's insolvent. Emma Von Windheim intervened in the action, and garnished defendants on a claim owned by her against the insolvent. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, intervener appealed. Affirmed.

O. P. Wideman, M. W. Conklin, and J. P. Jones, for appellant. Anderson & Anderson, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This case was submitted in the court below upon an agreed statement of facts. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of plaintiff, and this appeal is by the intervener from the judgment, and comes here upon the judgment roll. The agreed statement of facts, which may here be treated as the findings, shows, in substance, as follows: At all times mentioned in the said stipulation the Northrup-Braslan-Goodwin Company was a corporation, organized under the laws of Minnesota, doing business in Minneapolis and in Chicago, Ill. On May 28, 1896, the said corporation made a general assignment for the benefit of its creditors to plaintiff, who is a resident of the state of Illinois, which assignment purported to convey to the plaintiff, as assignee, all the property, both real and personal, of the said corporation, wheresoever situate. The said assignment was made in conformity with the voluntary assignment laws of the state of Illinois. The plaintiff duly qualified as such assignee, filed the proper bond in the office of the clerk of the county court of Cook county, Ill., and ever since has been the assignee of said corporation, acting under the direction of said county court. It does not appear from the stipulation whether the assignment was executed in the state of Minnesota or the state of Illinois. On said last-named date the defendants were indebted to said corporation in the sum of $330.62, which said sum is the subject of controversy in this action. At the time of making the said assignment, and prior thereto, the said corporation was, and still is, indebted to the intervener, who was and is a citizen of the state of Nebraska, in the sum of $1,000. On the 17th day of July, 1896, after proceedings duly commenced by the intervener in the superior court of Los Angeles county, state of California, against said corporation, a writ of attachment was duly issued and served upon the defendants, by which it was attempted to levy upon and garnish the amount so due the corporation by the defendants. After the said writ was served upon defendants, the plaintiff made demand upon them for the payment to him as assignee of the amount owing by them to said corporation. Defendants admit the indebtedness, but desire the court to determine to whom it shall be paid. The only issue to be determined here is whether the indebtedness due by defendants to the corporation passed to plaintiff by said assignment. If it did so pass, then at the time of the levy of the said writ the defendants were not indebted to said corporation, but to plaintiff as such assignee for the benefit of creditors. There is no question here as to the rights of any citizen of this state or of property situate within this state. The chose in action due from defendants to the corporation has no situs in the state of California, but must follow the person of the owner, and was therefore, in contemplation of law, situate in the state of Minnesota at the time of the said assignment. Guillander v. Howell, 35 N. Y. 662; Burrill, Assignm. (6th Ed.) § 282. The above proposition is conceded by appellant's counsel. The stipulation of facts shows that the assignment "was made in conformity with the voluntary assignment laws of the state of Illinois," and that the laws of Minnesota and Illinois shall be considered before the court in determining the question in controversy. The Revised Statutes of Illinois provide that any debtor may make a voluntary assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors. Chapter 10a, § 1. The assignment, therefore, having been made to a resident of Chicago, in which place the corporation was doing business, under the laws of Illinois, and the assignee having qualified and filed his bond with the county clerk of Cook county, where he is now acting under the direction of the county court of said county, and the voluntary assignment law of Illinois by its terms applying to assignments made in the state of Illinois, we think the assignment was valid, and conveyed all the property of the corporation to the plaintiff, including the chose in action due from defendants to the corporation. It is the rule of all the states of the Union that a contract valid in the place where it is made is valid everywhere. 2 Pars. Cont. p. 570; Burrill, Assignm. § 275; Story, Conf. Laws, §§ 376-383; Guillander v. Howell, 35 N. Y. 657. Certain exceptions are stated in the books in cases where a contract or sale affects property situate in a different state from the one in which the sale is made, or the revenue laws of another state, or if it conflicts with the interests of another state or its citizens. In Burrill on Assignments (section 275), the rule is thus stated: "With regard to all contracts of which the subject-matter is personal property, it may be laid down as a broad general proposition, subject, however, to numerous qualifications, that their validity is to be tested by the law of the place where the contract is made. If valid there, they will be everywhere sustained, and foreign tribunals, on principles of international and interstate comity, will, in determining their force and sufficiency, regard them in the light of the law where they were made. On this principle, a voluntary assignment in one state valid by the laws of that state would operate to convey personal property (not already subject to liens) in every state where it might be found." In Story on Conflict of Laws (section 423a), the author, in discussing the rule that sales and contracts in relation to personal property are to be construed according to the law of the domicile of the owner or the place of the contract, says: "Similar rules will govern in cases of voluntary assignments by debtors and of involuntary assignments under the bankrupt laws of a state. In each case the lex loci of the assignment or the bankruptcy will ordinarily form the basis of the priorities and privileges attaching to his movable property, and will regulate the distribution thereof among his creditors, at least if that is the place of his domicile and of the situs of the property." In the case of Means v. Hapgood, 19 Pick. 105, it was held that an assignment made in the state of Maine by a citizen thereof to certain of his creditors was valid against a subsequent attachment of the debt of the commonwealth by a citizen thereof. The learned chief justice, Shaw, in the opinion said: "This is founded upon the general principle that an owner has the disposing power over property which is recognized by all civilized, and especially by all commercial, nations, to transfer his property for a good and valuable consideration, and the general disposition of all friendly governments to give effect to such contracts, when not opposed by some great consideration of public policy or manifestly injurious to their own citizens. A fortiori is this true of the several states of the American Union, who, though foreign for some purposes, are united for many others." In Campbell v. Iron Co. (Colo. Sup.; filed June 17, 1885) 7 Pac. 293, it is said: "It may be considered a settled doctrine that a voluntary assignment, which is valid in the state where the owner resides, will be held to pass personal property included, the situs of which is in another state. It is said that while 'an involuntary transfer of movable property abroad, by process at home, does not divest the title in prejudice of creditors domiciled at the place of the actual situs, a voluntary transfer by the act of the owner divests it everywhere.' This is in perfect harmony with the principle that, while the 'lex loci contractus determines the validity of the contract, the lex fori controls the remedy.' Speed v. May, 17 Pa. St. 91, citing Milne v. Moreton, 6 Bin. 360, and other cases. See, also, Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen, 545, and cases cited." In Caskie v. Webster, 2 Wall. Jr. 131, Fed. Cas. No. 2,500, it was held that a general voluntary assignment valid by the laws of one of the United States, though assumed to be void if it had been made in another state, will carry property in that other against a subsequent attaching creditor there. In the opinion it is said: "A debt is a mere incorporeal right. It has no situs, and follows the person of the creditor. A voluntary assignment of it by the creditor, which is valid by the laws of his domicile, whether such assignment be called legal or equitable, will operate as a transfer of the debt which should be regarded in all places." In the case of Law v. Mills, 18 Pa. St. 185, Joy and Webster made a general assignment in the state of New York on November 17, 1849, for the benefit of their creditors. At the time of the assignment they had personal property in the state of Pennsylvania, which was on November 20, 1849, levied upon by writ on a foreign judgment. It was held that the validity of the assignment was to be determined by the place of its execution, and, being valid under the laws of New York, it conveyed personal property situate in Pennsylvania. In Schuler v. Israel, 27 Fed. 851, it was held that a general assignment for the benefit of creditors valid in Texas, where it was executed, would be held valid in Missouri, unless it conflicted with the rights of resident creditors. In a note to the case last cited it is said: "A voluntary general assignment for the benefit of creditors made in another state, and valid by its laws, will be recognized as valid and as effectually transferring personal property wherever the same may be situated. In re Page-Sexsmith Lumber Co. (Minn.) 16 N. W. 700; Butler v. Wendell (Mich.) 23 N. W. 460." The general rule is that a voluntary assignment of personal property, valid at the place where it is made, is valid everywhere and wherever the property may be situated, unless such transfer interferes with the domestic laws, policy, or rights of the citizens of the state in which the property is situate. Burrill, Assignm. (6th Ed.) p. 359, and cases cited in note 5. It follows that the assignment conveyed the property to plaintiff, and that at the time the attachment was served the defendants were not indebted to the corporation, but to its assignee.

The fact that notice of the assignment was not given to defendants before the attachment was served upon them is immaterial. If the debtor receives notice of the assignment pendente lite in time to avail himself of it in discharge of the suit against him, this will be sufficient. Story, Conf. Laws, § 396, and cases cited.

It is claimed that, in the absence of any statement in the stipulation as to where the assignment was made, we must presume that it was made in Minnesota. We think the presumption from the facts, as stated in the stipulation, is that it was made in Illinois. The laws of Illinois evidently apply to assignments made in the state, and the stipulation shows that the assignment was in conformity with the laws of the state. The assignee resided in Chicago, where the corporation was doing business, and is now acting under the directions of the county court of Cook county. The presumption is that the assignment was valid, that the law has been obeyed, and that the ordinary course of business has been pursued. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963.

It is contended that the assignment is void because it does not comply with title 3 of division 4 of the Civil Code of this state, providing for assignments for the benefit of creditors. We think the provisions of the Civil Code referred to apply to assignments of property situate in the state of California. This is apparent by section 3451, which, among other things, provides: "The provisions of this title do not prevent a person residing in another state or country from making there, in good faith, and without intent to evade the laws of this state, a transfer of property situated within it; but such person cannot make a general assignment of property situated in this state for the satisfaction of all his creditors, except as in this title provided." The section ex industria provides that a transfer of property by a resident of another state, made in good faith, of property situate within this state, will be treated here as valid, except that a general assignment for the benefit of creditors of property situate in this state cannot be made. As there was no attempted transfer of any property claimed to be in this state by the assignment, the rule of section 3451 cannot be applied. It is true that the section states that it is not intended to prevent a resident of another state from disposing of or transferring property situate within this state, except that a general assignment of such property cannot be made except as in the title provided; but this only strengthens the view we have already expressed, that it was not intended to interfere with any assignment made by a party residing in another state of property in such other state. It is claimed by counsel for intervener that the first part of section 3451 refers to property situated in another state. If so, the section should read:

"The provisions of this title do not prevent a person residing in another state or country from making there, in good faith, and without intent to evade the laws of this state, a transfer of property situated within such other state or country." We certainly cannot think the legislature believed that the provisions of said title without the portions quoted would have prevented a person in another state from making there a transfer of property situated within such other state. If so, every provision of each of our Codes should contain such exception. The laws of this state, in relation to assignments for the benefit of creditors, refer to all persons and property within its jurisdiction, but not to persons and property in a foreign jurisdiction, and in relation to an assignment made in such jurisdiction in a case where no rights of any of its citizens are involved. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

MORE v. FINGER et al. (L. A. 548.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 11, 1899.)

REPLEVIN—NEGOTIABLE PAPER—TRANSFER WITHOUT INDORSEMENT—EVIDENCE—CONSPIRACY.

1. Where defendants obtained possession of a note from one whom they knew had parted with his title thereto, plaintiff is entitled to recover possession thereof, without restoring to defendants any amount which they may have paid the pledgee of the note in order that they might fraudulently gain possession of same.

2. Evidence that defendants were mutually engaged in the accomplishment of the common purpose of obtaining possession of a note, and did obtain possession of it by a deal made with plaintiff's husband, who they knew had parted with all title to the note, and while he was intoxicated, is sufficient to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff.

3. Circumstantial evidence tending to prove a conspiracy is properly admissible, with the qualification that if a conspiracy is not shown such evidence may be stricken out on motion.

4. Receipts indorsed on a promissory note, and signed by the payee, do not make the holder of the note the indorsee thereof, within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 3124, providing that the indorsee of a negotiable instrument, in due course, acquires an absolute title thereto.

5. An instruction that if the jury believe that there was known, at the time of the transfer of a note, facts sufficient to arouse the suspicions of an ordinarily prudent person, then the purchaser of the note cannot defeat the title of the true owner, is immaterial, where it appears, without conflict, that the parties so purchasing the note are not indorsees of the note, and therefore received no better title than the assignor had.

Otto Kaeding. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants Finger and Rogers appeal. Affirmed.

C. A. Storke, for appellants. Boyce & Taggart and Richards & Carrier, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This is an action of claim and delivery. The plaintiff had judgment, and defendants Finger and Rogers appeal from the same, and also from an order denying them a new trial. The amended complaint sets out the following facts: Plaintiff is the wife of Wallace H. More. On the 17th of April, 1894, Thomas R. More executed to his brother, Wallace H. More, his promissory note for $3,500, due two years after date, and thereafter paid $500 on said note. That thereafter said Wallace borrowed from defendant Kaeding $25, giving his note therefor, and delivered to Kaeding the Thomas R. More note as collateral security for said $25. That thereafter, on December 3, 1894, the plaintiff and her husband borrowed $15 from Kaeding, gave their notes for it, and agreed that the said Thomas R. More note should be held as collateral security therefor. That thereafter, on December 12, 1894, Wallace H. More gave and assigned, by an instrument in writing, the said Thomas R. More note to the plaintiff, and that plaintiff since "has been, and now is, the true and lawful owner of said promissory note, as her sole and separate property." That after notice to the defendants, and with full knowledge on their part of the said assignment to plaintiff by her husband, the defendants conspired and confederated to cheat and defraud the plaintiff out of said note; and, in pursuance of such conspiracy, the brother of Wallace, Thomas R. More, by certain tricks, separated her husband from plaintiff, and plied him with liquor until he was so drunk that he did not know what he was about, and while he was in that condition procured a transfer and assignment of the note in controversy from him to one of their number in exchange for about $290 in money, a duebill for $100, and a pretended conveyance of a piece of property of little or no value, each and all of the defendants then and there well knowing that the said note was the sole and separate property of plaintiff. The value of the note is then alleged, and plaintiff prays judgment for the return of the same to her, or the value thereof, in case a return cannot be had.

The facts set forth in this amended complaint show that the plaintiff has a good cause of action against the defendants in claim and delivery, and it is not open to the objection that two causes of action have been improperly joined therein. Nor is it amenable to any of the special objections set forth in the demurrer to it interposed by the appellants and referred to in their brief. That the amended complaint does not allege a payment or an offer to pay the amounts for which the note was pledged to the defendant

Kaeding is not an objection thereto available to the appellants. Kaeding has not appealed, nor did he demur to the amended complaint.

The appellants having wrongfully acquired possession of plaintiff's property by a deal with one who they knew had parted with his title thereto, as against them plaintiff was entitled to the possession thereof without restoring to them the amount which they had voluntarily paid to the pledgee of the note, that they might, for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff, gain possession of the same. After he had transferred and surrendered the note, Kaeding had no further right to or in it.

Appellants stoutly contend that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. To this we cannot consent. The main question in dispute in the case related to whether the appellants and defendants had knowledge of the transfer of the note from Wallace More to the plaintiff at the time they were making their deal with Wallace in reference thereto. The plaintiff testified that she had personally told the defendants Kaeding and More, prior to the surrender thereof to said defendant More, that she was the owner of the note; that her husband had assigned it to her; and though in this she was flatly contradicted by both those defendants, in support of the verdict and the order denying a new trial we must treat her testimony as true and decisive of that question of fact. It appears, further, that all the defendants were engaged in an effort to trade Wallace More out of the note in controversy, and that they were each and all interested and actively engaged in the accomplishment of this common purpose is plainly apparent from the evidence. That they were meeting with some difficulty at the hands of the plaintiff in accomplishing this purpose is also plainly apparent. Rogers, who was confessedly the agent for Finger in the transaction, besides being interested in it on his own account, had been told by the plaintiff that she did not want any real estate for the note, and she had plainly indicated to him that the trade which was finally accomplished with Wallace could not be made with her consent. In view of this direct evidence of notice, to some of the parties interested in the trade, of plaintiff's ownership of the note, and in view of the means and methods that were resorted to to secure the relinquishment of the note without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, and all the other circumstances surrounding the transaction, we cannot say that the jury, as well as the learned judge before whom the case was tried, were not warranted in reaching the conclusion that these appellants had knowledge of the previous transfer of the note to plaintiff, but proceeded with their trade with her husband upon the theory that their knowledge could not be made to appear, and they would occupy the position of bona fide purchasers of the note. The appellants, in their answer, admit that Wallace H. More did "transfer, sell, and deliver and assign to them" the note in controversy. If they accepted this assignment and delivery with knowledge of the previous assignment to plaintiff, then they could not shield themselves behind the law merchant, but the trade was a nullity for that reason, and they acquired no right whatever to the possession of the note as against the plaintiff, who was the true owner. The jury in their general verdict impliedly found that appellants took the note with knowledge of plaintiff's rights thereto and were not bona fide purchasers thereof, and, as we have already seen, there was evidence to support such a finding. This view of the case disposes of all the points in appellants' brief as to insufficiency of evidence.

It is objected that the court erred in permitting plaintiff to testify as to the acts and declarations of Thomas R. More, as against appellants, before proof of a conspiracy between these defendants and said Thomas R. More was had. The court, in overruling the objection to this evidence at the trial, said: "Of course, if there is no conspiracy shown, these remarks cannot be taken as against your client,"—meaning, evidently, the remarks of Thomas More sought to be put in evidence. The court doubtless had in mind that the plaintiff proposed to establish the conspiracy by circumstantial evidence,—that is, by showing that the defendants had pursued by their acts the same object, each with the same evident purpose in view,—and this statement of the court was a clear intimation that, if no conspiracy was made to appear, the testimony objected to was not to be considered by the jury as evidence. It was perfectly proper to admit the offered evidence with such qualification, and then, on failure to establish the conspiracy, it could have been stricken out on motion. It has been held that a conspiracy can be established by showing the conduct of the several parties to it evidencing a common purpose. People v. Bentley, 75 Cal. 407, 17 Pac. 436. But it is manifest that this could not be done if the trial court excluded the evidence of the conduct of each on the objection of the others that a conspiracy had not already been shown. The opinion which the court seems to have had at the conclusion of the evidence, that a conspiracy had been shown, was not without evidence to support it.

It is claimed that the court erred in instructing the jury that, "if the jury believe from a preponderance of the evidence that there was in the transaction sufficient to arouse the suspicions of an ordinarily prudent person, then the purchaser of the note cannot defeat the title of the true owner." It is not necessary to determine whether this instruction properly states the rule applicable, where the contention is that a party stands in the position of a bona fide purchaser of a negotiable instrument, for the reason that it appears without conflict that the appellants were not the indorsees of the note in controversy, and consequently not in a position to claim the protection of the law merchant. The note and the indorsements on it were placed in evidence, and they read as follows:

"$3,500.00. Santa Barbara, April 17, 1894. For value received, two years after date I promised to pay to Wallace H. More or order the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars ($3,500) in gold coin of the United States of America, with interest thereon in like gold coin at the rate of six per cent. per annum from date until paid. Interest payable annually, and if not so paid to be added to the principal and draw a like rate of interest. Thomas R. More."

Indorsed:

"Received on the principal of the within note the sum of five hundred dollars. April 27, 1894. Wallace H. More."

"Received from Otto Kaeding twenty-five dollars. Wallace H. More."

"Received from Otto Kaeding fifteen dollars. Wallace H. More."

Receipts indorsed on a promissory note, and signed by the payee, do not make the holder of the note the indorsee thereof, within the meaning of section 3124 of the Civil Code. Central Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 68; McCrum v. Corby, 11 Kan. 464; Hadden v. Rodkey, 17 Kan. 429; Haydon v. Nicoletti, 18 Nev. 290, 3 Pac. 473; Moore v. Miller, 6 Or. 254; Pickering v. Cording, 92 Ind. 306. The appellants, therefore, received no better title than their assignor, Wallace More, had, and he, having previously assigned the note to his wife, had nothing left to assign. This view of the case not only makes the instruction complained of immaterial and devoid of any injury to appellants, but it also makes the instruction requested by them and refused by the court immaterial, and is at the same time a complete answer to every contention made by them on the theory that they occupy the position of indorsees of the note. The evidence, without conflict, shows that they are not such indorsees. The note was assigned and delivered to them according to the admissions of their answer, but it was never indorsed to them. For these reasons we advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

YOAKAM v. KINGERY et al. (L. A. 683.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 11, 1899.)
QUIETING TITLE—RIGHT OF ACTION—HUSBAND AND WIFE—AGREEMENTS AS TO PROPERTY—VALIDITY—FINDINGS.

1. An agreement between husband and wife, reciting that all property then standing in the name of either is community property, under

Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159, authorizing husband and wife to alter their legal relations as to property, is sufficient, if properly executed, to transmute the separate estate of either into community property.

2. A finding that husband and wife "agreed" respecting their property, on appeal, will be held to import a valid, and not an invalid, agreement.

3. In an action against an administrator to quiet title to land which defendant had purchased at a foreclosure sale, before he became administrator, to hold in trust, under an agreement between plaintiff and defendant's predecessor, in such proportions as might be determined from their interest in the decree, the findings did not show their respective rights in the decree. Held, that the trial court rightly refused to declare that defendant, as administrator, had no interest in the land.

4. A complainant cannot maintain an action to quiet title against one who holds the legal title in trust for him, as Code Civ. Proc. § 733, provides that such action may be brought only against one who claims an interest in realty adverse to complainant.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by George P. Yoakam against Samuel H. Kingery individually, and as administrator of Emily R. Yoakam, deceased, and others, to quiet title to land. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed as to the land held by defendant Kingery individually, and reversed as to that claimed by him as administrator.

Clarence A. Miller, for appellant. Flint & Barker, for respondents.

BRITT, C. This action, as it is presented on appeal, has for its object the quieting of plaintiff's title to sundry parcels of land situated in the county of Los Angeles. The plaintiff, George P. Yoakam, is the surviving husband of Emily R. Yoakam, who died March 22, 1893; and the main dispute in the case is whether at that time the property involved was community property of plaintiff and his said wife, or was her separate estate. One McKinlay first received special letters of administration of the estate of said deceased, but was superseded in the administration by the defendant Kingery upon the appointment of the latter as administrator with the will annexed in October, 1895. As to one of the parcels of land affected, the action is against Kingery both individually and as administrator aforesaid. As to the others, it is against him as administrator only. In his representative capacity he is sued professedly under section 1582, Code Civ. Proc., as amended in the year 1895, providing that an action to quiet the title to property, or to determine an adverse claim thereon, may be maintained "by and against executors and administrators in all cases in which the same might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates." St. 1895, p. 80. No question is raised as to misjoinder of parties defendant or of causes of action, nor whether the action is within said amendment of section 1582. The case was submitted for decision upon an agreed statement of facts. The court adopted this statement bodily as findings of fact in the case, and made some additional findings, which seem to be chiefly of the character of deductions from the facts stipulated and found. The judgment was that plaintiff take nothing, and that his complaint be dismissed.

1. Among the facts found as aforesaid, it appears that on or about February 10, 1891, said George P. Yoakam and his wife, the said Emily, agreed with each other that all property (with an immaterial exception) "then standing in the name" of either of them was community property, and that thereupon they made divers arrangements between themselves,—not necessary to be detailed here,—founded on the assumption that such agreement was effective. Within the scope of this agreement was a certain lot 15 in the Long-street tract in the city of Los Angeles, more particularly described in the findings, which lot was conveyed by deed on said February 10, 1891, to Yoakam and wife upon a consideration rendered wholly from the separate property of the husband. Under the amendment to section 164 of the Civil Code then in force (St. 1889, p. 328), the presumption arising upon the face of this deed is that the grantees took the land as tenants in common, each one-half as his or her separate estate; but the court below was of opinion that Mrs. Yoakam took the legal title to her half interest subject to a resulting trust in favor of her husband, because the whole consideration had moved from him; and hence, it seems, the court concluded that plaintiff can have no relief in this action as to the undivided half of the lot standing in the name of his wife, for the reason that, as the holder of but an equity therein, he cannot maintain an action such as the present against the representative of the legal title. This conclusion would probably be correct, but for the agreement aforesaid, that the land was community property, which, if valid, had the effect, upon the death of Mrs. Yoakam, to vest the whole title in her husband, as survivor of the marital community. Civ. Code, § 1401. Husband and wife may, by contract with each other, "alter their legal relations as to property" (Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159); and we see no reason to doubt that the contract of Yoakam and wife was sufficient to transmute the separate estate of either of them into community property, if it was properly executed. Counsel for defendant maintain, however, that such contract rested in parol, whereas a change so radical in the character of the estate in the land could be effected by writing only. But it is to be inferred from the record that the agreement of Yoakam and wife was a written contract and duly executed. The finding is that they "agreed" that the property standing in the name of either of them was community property. In McDonald v. Association, 51 Cal. 210, a finding that a contract to sell real estate had been made was held to import that it had been made in writing; and the decision in Lewis v. Kelton, 58 Cal. 303, was to very similar effect. We must hold that the finding here of the agreement between plaintiff and his wife means a valid and effectual agreement, not one invalid or void. It follows that said lot 15 became community property, as they intended, and plaintiff is now the owner of the whole thereof absolutely. The title to some other parcels in dispute—lot 24 of block U in West Los Angeles, and lots 53, 54, and 55 of the Kenwood Park tract—is in a situation not materially different from that of said lot 15; and for the reasons stated the plaintiff appears to be the owner of those lots, also.

2. A certain tract, containing 10 acres, was covered by a mortgage held by Yoakam and wife, at the time of the death of the latter, as security for a promissory note payable to them jointly. The consideration for such note appears to have been advanced out of the separate property of Mr. Yoakam. Subsequently Yoakam and McKinlay, the special administrator, obtained a judgment or decree in an action for the foreclosure of said mortgage, under which a sale of the premises was made for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. At that time Kingery had not been appointed administrator, and he became the nominal purchaser at such sale, and received the sheriff's deed for the property, pursuant to an agreement with McKinlay and Yoakam whereby he (Kingery) undertook to hold the title in trust for Yoakam and McKinlay "in such proportions between them as they may determine, or as may be determined for them by law, based upon their respective interests in the said decree of foreclosure." Both Yoakam and McKinlay as special administrator made various advancements for costs, expenses, and attorney's fees in the suit which resulted in said decree, the amounts of which expenditures seem to be yet unascertained. The findings are in some respects obscure on the subject of this 10-acre piece of land. We have not attempted even an abstract of all of them, but as we understand the terms of the trust on which Kingery, in his individual character, holds the title, the beneficial interest of plaintiff therein is measured by his interest in the decree of foreclosure; but Kingery also, as administrator, has an interest in the decree to the amount, at least, of the expense paid by McKinlay in procuring it. The findings contain no sufficient data to show the extent of their respective rights in said decree, even if such matters could properly be determined in an action of this nature, and the court rightly refused to declare that Kingery, as administrator, has no interest in the land. And, since he holds individually the legal title in trust, plaintiff could not maintain this action against him as trustee in any event. Shanahan v. Crampton, 92 Cal. 9, 28 Pac. 50; McDonald v. McCoy, 121 Cal. 71, 53 Pac. 421. The judgment should be affirmed so far as it concerns the tract of land held by Kingery upon trust in his individual capacity. As to the other lands mentioned, the judgment should be reversed, with directions to the court below to render judgment quieting the title of plaintiff in those lands against all claims of Kingery as administrator.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed, so far as it concerns the tract of land held by Kingery upon trust in his individual capacity. As to the other lands mentioned in said opinion, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to render judgment quieting the title of plaintiff in those lands against all claims of Kingery as administrator.

In re EIKERENKOTTER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,610.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1899.)
GUARDIAN AND WARD—LETTERS—VALIDITY—NOTICE OF HEARING.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, declaring that, before a court shall appoint a guardian of an infant, it must cause such notice as it deems reasonable to be given to the person having the care and custody of the infant, is mandatory; and without such notice the court has no power to make an appointment.

2. Letters of guardianship of an infant will not be set aside, after six months from their issuance, on the ground that one claiming to have had custody of the infant at the time was not notified of the hearing as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, where failure to give such notice does not affirmatively appear by the record of such proceedings.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county.

Application by Ioan Smith to set aside guardianship of Catharine H. Eikerenkotter and others, minors. From an order denying the application, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

I. S. Thompson, for appellant. G. W. Fox and Geo. C. Ross, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal is prosecuted from an order made by the superior court refusing to set aside the letters of guardianship theretofore issued to Julius Eikerenkotter over the person of Catharine H. Eikerenkotter, a minor. The application for the order to set aside was made more than six months after the order of appointment, and, as appears by the application, was based largely upon the fact that petitioner, Ioan Smith, had the custody of the minor at the time the order of appointment was made, and no notice of the hearing was given her. The trial court refused to go into the merits of her application as to Eikerenkotter's incompetency to act as guardian and her competency to so act, but held that the application to set aside the order of his appointment, having been made more than six months after the order was made, should be denied for that reason. The judgment of the trial court is correct, if the order appointing Eikerenkotter guardian be not void upon its face. In other words, if the record discloses that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order of appointment, then the order is void upon its face, and can be attacked at any time. Jacks v. Baldez, 97 Cal. 91, 31 Pac. 899; Norton v. Railroad Co., 97 Cal. 388, 30 Pac. 585, and 32 Pac. 452; People v. Temple, 103 Cal. 447, 37 Pac. 414. This is fully apparent, for there can be no statute of limitations which will run against an order or judgment void upon its face. In People v. Temple, supra, and also in later cases, it is held that all applications to set aside orders or judgments not void upon their face must be made within six months after the entry of such order or judgment, and that, too, whether or not the application is made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It follows from the foregoing that this application came too late, unless the order is void upon its face. Among other matters, section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares, "Before making such appointment the court must cause such notice as such court deems reasonable to be given to any person having the care of such minor." By virtue of this provision of the statute, it is mandatory that the person having the custody of the minor should have notice of the hearing. Such notice is absolutely necessary to give the court jurisdiction of the proceeding, and power to make the order of appointment. But in this case, from an inspection of the record,—which consists of the petition for the appointment,—the consent of the relatives residing in the county, and the order of appointment, we find nothing showing the order of appointment to be void as beyond the power of the court to make. The fact of service, and not the proof of service, gives a court jurisdiction to hear and determine. Here there is nothing in the record to disprove the fact of service of the notice upon the person having the custody of the minor. Lack of jurisdiction must be affirm-actively shown by the record. Perchance, some of the consenting relatives to the appointment of Eikerenkotter may have had the custody of the minor at the time. Perchance, Eikerenkotter himself had the custody of the minor upon the day of hearing. Again, as far as the record discloses, the fact may have been that the custody of the minor was in no one at the time the application for appointment was made, and consequently there could be no service of the notice contemplated by the statute. If this application had been made within six months after the order of appointment, then, under the authority of Norton v. Railroad Co., supra, and People v. Temple, the true state of facts could have been shown dehors the record; but, under this application, petitioner is bound to rest her case upon the facts affirmatively disclosed by the record. Upon that state of facts, we cannot say that the court lacked jurisdiction to make the order appointing the guardian. For the foregoing reasons, the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: VAN DYKE, J.; HARRISON, J.

PEOPLE v. MATTHEWS. (Cr. 525.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 16, 1899.)

CRIMINAL LAW — HOMICIDE — EVIDENCE — HARMLESS ERROR — INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The admission of evidence not affecting substantial rights of defendant, and not prejudicial to the merits of his defense, is not ground for reversal.

2. Evidence showing that at the time of the murder defendant was sober is not prejudicial to defendant, where he and others have testified to the same effect.

3. An instruction is properly refused which is based upon a state of facts of which there is no evidence.

4. Testimony to the effect that witness, on the night of the homicide, passed a young man on the road; that afterwards she heard a wagon coming rapidly up behind, and soon after the sound ceased, and she heard a pistol shot; that she passed the place next morning, and saw a pool of blood; and that she had recognized a body at the morgue as the body of the young man she had passed on the road,—is material, and properly admitted.

5. Where the defense to homicide is that defendant, a constable, was attempting to arrest deceased, an instruction, "If the jury believe that defendant, when he fired the fatal shot, was lawfully attempting to arrest deceased, and intended to shoot over his head, they will find defendant not guilty," was properly modified to read, "If the jury believe that defendant had reasonable cause to believe, and did believe, that the deceased had committed a felony, and was attempting to arrest deceased, and fired the fatal shot intending to shoot over the defendant's head."

6. An instruction that, "if the jury had any doubt about the lawfulness of the means adopted by defendant to arrest deceased, they should acquit defendant," is properly refused, as being indefinite.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

John A. Matthews was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

D. W. Burchard and C. L. Witten, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

COOPER, C. The defendant was charged with the crime of murder, alleged to have been committed in the felonious killing of one Heinrich Hopken on the 28th day of June, 1898. It appears that defendant was, at the time of the homicide, a constable of Milpitas township, in Santa Clara county. He had been in and around the saloon of one Pancera nearly all the afternoon, and had been drinking. About 8 o'clock or later in the evening defendant was engaged in playing cards with one McCarron and others in the saloon, when Pancera came in and informed the parties in the saloon that if any of them had any articles in their vehicles outside that they did not want stolen they had better go out and see about them. Defendant and McCarron immediately went out to where defendant's horse, attached to a light spring wagon, was tied to a hitching post. Defendant looked into his wagon, and informed McCarron that his whip was missing. The defendant immediately unhitched his horse, got into his wagon, and, with McCarron, started south on the Berryessa road, and after the two had gone about a hundred yards the defendant claimed that he had discovered that his coat was also missing from the wagon. After driving rapidly along the road until they had passed Fourteenth street they overtook deceased, who was walking along the south side of the road, and, as the horse was traveling rapidly, they passed him some 10 or 12 feet, and stopped. No coat or whip was seen in the possession of deceased other than the coat he was wearing, which was not claimed to be the coat of defendant. When defendant came to within 5 or 6 feet of deceased, he addressed him, in substance, "What did you do with that whip?" The deceased said he did not have any whip, and turned and ran; whereupon defendant took out his pistol, and immediately fired, and deceased fell to the ground, some 10 or 12 steps from defendant. The defendant and McCarron immediately went up to deceased, and he was lying on his back, with blood on his face, dead. The jury, by its verdict, found the defendant guilty of manslaughter, and the court sentenced him to a term of five years in San Quentin. He made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and order. The case comes here on a bill of exceptions and the judgment roll.

1. There was no error in admitting the evidence of the witness Cothran. The witness testified that on the evening of the homicide he saw deceased at the house of his brother, E. E. Cothran, 229 Ninth street, and that deceased left about half past 9 o'clock; that he saw the dead body the next morning; and that deceased was between 17 and 18 years of age. There was nothing in the testimony of the witness that could in any way have been prejudicial to defendant. The admission of evidence not affecting the substantial rights of a defendant, and not appearing by the record to have been prejudicial to the merits of his defense, is no ground for the reversal of a judgment. People v. Clark, 106 Cal. 32, 39 Pac. 53.

2. The witness Jones was allowed, under defendant's objection, to testify that defendant was at the saloon of witness on the morning of June 28th; that he took probably three or four drinks, but was at no time intoxicated, and left about 1 o'clock in the afternoon. While this testimony does not appear to have much to do with the issue, it could not have prejudiced the defendant. He testified in his own behalf that he was perfectly sober, and his counsel proved by McCarron, on his cross-examination, that defendant was not under the influence of liquor at the time of the homicide.

3. In the instructions of the court to the jury it was said, in effect, that a peace officer cannot legally arrest any person for petit larceny without a warrant, when the larceny was not committed in the presence of such officer; and the court refused the thirty-third instruction asked by defendant, to the effect that a peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest a person for a public offense committed in his presence. We think the instruction given by the court stated the law correctly (Pen. Code, § 836; People v. Johnson [Mich.] 48 N. W. 870); and the defendant's requested instruction was properly refused, because there was no evidence that any offense had been committed in the presence of the defendant.

4. The witness Mrs. Thompson was allowed, after objection of defendant's counsel, to testify that, on the night of the homicide, she was on the way home from San Jose, with her husband and sister; that, after 9 o'clock, they passed a young man on the Berryessa road, walking leisurely along smoking a cigar, and that he had no coat or whip, except the coat he was wearing; that, after they passed the young man, they heard a horse and wagon coming up behind them rapidly, and after they had gone some 20 or 30 rods there was a cessation of the sound of the horse and wagon, and they heard a pistol shot; that she passed the place next morning, and saw a pool of blood by the road; and that she saw the body of the boy at the morgue, and recognized it as the body of the young man she had passed in the road. This testimony was material, and was properly admitted.

5. It is said that the court erred in refusing defendant's requested instructions numbered 12, 13, 19, 24, 26, and 35. Counsel have not seen fit, in their brief, to give us the benefit of their reasons as to why the refusal to give the instructions, or either of them, was error; but we have examined them, and we discover no prejudicial error in the refusal to give any of them. The twelfth, while stating a correct proposition of law, was covered fully by other instructions. The thirteenth, as requested, was as follows: "If the jury believe that the defendant, when he fired the fatal shot, was lawfully attempting to arrest deceased, and intended to shoot over the head of deceased, and that such act on the part of defendant was a necessary and proper one for the purpose of inducing the deceased to stop, then they will find the defendant not guilty." While the court refused it as requested, it was given as modified, as follows: "If the jury believe that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe, and did believe, that the deceased had committed a felony, and was attempting to arrest deceased, and fired the fatal shot intending to shoot over the head of deceased, and that in so shooting the defendant did so for the purpose of inducing the deceased to stop, then if you find that such act on the part of defendant was necessary for the purpose of effecting such arrest, then you will find the defendant not guilty." The modification was proper, and was certainly as favorable to defendant as he could expect, or as the law would warrant. The nineteenth request was that if the jury had any doubt about the lawfulness of the means adopted by defendant to arrest the deceased they should acquit the defendant. This instruction was too indefinite in the form in which it was tendered, and would only have tended to confuse the jury. Elsewhere in the charge the jury are told that the prosecution must prove every fact and circumstance necessary to a conviction beyond a reasonable doubt, or they cannot convict the defendant. The twenty-fourth and twenty-sixth requests were fully covered by other instructions given by the court. The thirty-fifth instruction, as requested, was properly refused. It not only states an incorrect proposition of law, but it was properly refused because there was no evidence in the record upon which it could apply. The court very fully and ably stated the law as applied to the evidence in its charge to the jury, and in every part of the charge the rights of defendant were carefully guarded. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

STATUTES—REPEAL—COUNTIES—ISSUANCE AND SALE OF BONDS—CONTRACT—VOID PROVISION.

1. Where it is apparent that a later statute is revisory of the entire matter of an earlier one, and is designed as a substitute therefor, the later statute will prevail, and the earlier one will be held to have been superseded, though there be no inconsistencies or repugnancies between them.

2. County Government Act 1897 (St. 1897, p. 460, § 25, subd. 13), setting forth a full and complete plan for the issuance of bonds, providing that said bonds shall be sold in the manner prescribed by the board of supervisors, but for not less than par, repeals County Government Act 1893 (St. 1893, p. 353, § 25, subd. 14), providing that the bonds shall be delivered to the county treasurer, and his receipt taken therefor, and he shall sell or exchange the same under the direction of the board of supervisors on the best available terms, and that no sale shall be made except to the highest bidder, after advertising bids for the purchase of the same for not less than three weeks, etc., as by the earlier act the county treasurer stands charged with the duty of selling the bonds after advertising for bids, while by the later act full power in this regard is vested in the board of supervisors.

3. Where a void provision of a contract is severable, it does not invalidate the whole contract.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Action by Julius J. Mack against H. A. Jastro and others, composing the board of supervisors of the county of Kern, and Trowbridge & Co., intervener, to enjoin the board of supervisors from carrying out a contract entered into between them and the intervener relative to the sale of refunding bonds of the county. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants and intervener appeal. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Ford and Alvin Fay, for appellants. George E. Church and T. M. McNamara, for respondent. Lockhart & Smith, for intervener.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff, as a resident and taxpayer of Kern county, brought this action to enjoin the defendants, the board of supervisors of the county, from carrying out a contract entered into between them and the intervener relative to the sale of refunding bonds of the county. The court decreed a perpetual injunction, and from the judgment the defendants and the intervener prosecute separate appeals, which, however, may be considered together.

Before the proposition to issue the refunding bonds in question had been submitted to, and acted upon by, the electors of the county, the supervisors had entered into this contract with Trowbridge & Co., under which the sale and purchase of these bonds was agreed upon. The right and power of the supervisors to dispose of the bonds at all is the principal question here presented. By appellants it is contended that this power is found in the county government act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 460, § 25, subd. 13), and by the respondent that it is denied to the supervisors, and is vested in the treasurer, under the provisions of the county government act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 353, § 25, subd. 14). By appellants it is argued that the county government act of 1897 supersedes and repeals the county government act of 1893 in these particulars, while by respondent it is insisted that the provisions of the two acts are not inharmonious; that no express repeal is declared; and that in these particulars, therefore, the two acts should be so construed that all the consistent provisions of both may stand.

We think, however, that a reading of the two sections at once discloses that the legislature in the county government act of 1897 designed and devised a new and complete scheme for the issuance of county bonds, and, while it is true that repeals by implication are not favored, whenever it becomes apparent that a later statute is revisory of the entire matter of an earlier statute, and is declared as a substitute for it, the later statute will prevail, and the earlier statute will be held to have been superseded, even though there be found no inconsistencies or repugnancies between the two. Frequently these cases arise where the later statute, covering the whole subject-matter, omits or fails to mention certain terms or requirements, found in an earlier, and it is insisted, as here, that those particular provisions of the earlier statute should be held to be still in force. But, as is said by the supreme court of the United States in Murdock v. City of Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, where a like question was presented to the consideration of that tribunal: "It will be perceived by this statement that there is no repeal by positive new enactments inconsistent in terms with the old law. It is the words that are wholly omitted in the new statute which constitute the important feature in the questions thus propounded for discussion.

* * * A careful comparison of these two sections can leave no doubt that it was the intention of congress by the latter statute to revise the entire matter to which they both had reference, to make such changes in the law as it stood as they thought best, and to substitute their will in that regard entirely for the old law upon the subject. We are of opinion that it was their intention to make a new law so far as the present law differed from the former, and that the new law, embracing all that was intended to be preserved of the old, omitted what was not so intended, because complete in itself, and repealed all other laws on the subject embraced within it. The authorities on this subject are clear and uniform." Upon this same subject, see Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 315; City and County of Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 295; State v. Conkling, 19 Cal. 501; Charnock v. Rose, 70 Cal. 189, 11 Pac. 625; Black, Interp. Laws, p. 116; Sedg. St. & Const. Law, p. 124; Fisk v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 12 Sup. Ct. 207; King v. Cornell, 106 U. S. 395, 1 Sup. Ct. 312; District of Columbia v. Hutton, 143 U. S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 369. The facts in the case above quoted and in the one at bar are strictly analogous, and the principle declared is pertinent and decisive. It would unduly and unnecessarily prolong this consideration to set forth the two statutes for purposes of comparison and contrast, but, as has been said, a mere reading of the two will at once disclose that the legislature by the latter formulated a plan for the issuance of bonds full and complete in itself, and therefore a plan which superseded its earlier declaration on the matter. It is not so much a repeal by implication as it is that, the legislature having made a new and complete expression of its will upon the subject, this last expression must prevail, and whatever is excluded therefrom must be ignored.

This discussion has so far proceeded upon the assumption that there is no inconsistency between the two acts upon the question of the right and power to dispose of the bonds, but there is a direct conflict in this particular, and for this further reason the later act must prevail. The act of 1897 provides that "all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." As to the disposition of the bonds, it is provided "that said bonds shall be sold in the manner prescribed by said board of supervisors, but for not less than par." By the act of 1893 it is provided that the bonds shall be delivered to the county treasurer, and his receipt taken therefor, and he shall sell the same or exchange them, under the direction of the board of supervisors, on the best available terms, etc. And, further, that "no sale shall be made of any such bonds except to the highest bidder, after advertising bids for the purchase of the same for not less than three weeks," etc. By the earlier act it is the county treasurer who stands charged with the duty of selling the bonds after advertising for bids. By the later act full power in this regard is vested in the board of supervisors, the only limitation upon the power being that they shall not sell the bonds for less than par.

The provision in the contract that the bonds shall be payable at Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Bank at San Francisco, Cal., even if it be conceded to be void, is a severable provision, and would not invalidate the whole contract. City of Los Angeles v. Teed, 112 Cal. 319, 329, 44 Pac. 580; Johnson v. Stark Co., 24 Ill. 75; Sherlock v. Village of Winnetka, 68 Ill. 530; Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 680, 7 Sup. Ct. 358. The act of 1897 expressly authorizes the supervisors to cause the bonds to be made payable "at the treasury of the county, or at such place as such board may designate, or both." St. 1897, p. 461. In City of Los Angeles v. Teed, supra, the discussion turned upon the provision making the bonds payable without the state of California and in the state of New York. It was there said that no law authorized the treasurer to go to New York with the money, and that to remit the money to the bank for payment would be to make the bank a depository and agent, within the constitutional inhibition. Const. art. 11, §§ 13, 16. The mere naming of a bank as the place of payment does not, however, constitute the bank the custodian of funds or the agent of either party. Hill v. Place, 48 N. Y. 520. Moreover, it appears that Trowbridge & Co. has waived this provision in the contract as to place of payment. By the contract the supervisors are called upon, as of right they should do, to issue legal bonds. If this particular provision should be void, it would not warrant a finding that the whole contract was void, nor justify the supervisors in refusing to issue bonds omitting the obnoxious provision as to place of payment. The judgment appealed from is reversed, and, as the cause was decided upon the pleadings and papers in the case, it is directed that the trial court enter judgment for defendants and interveners.

BAXTER et al. v. GILBERT et al. (L. A. 505.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 12, 1899.)

In bank. For opinion in department, see 58 Pac. 129.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this case, because I do not think it ought to be finally disposed of here without a decision of the most important question involved,—a decision upon which, if in accordance with the contention of the appellants, would necessarily demand a reversal or important modification of the judgment appealed from. The right of appellants to interfere with the lakes referred to in the opinion of the court is but one of the questions presented in the briefs of counsel, and to my mind much the less important of the two leading propositions upon which he relies. It appears from the record that the lands of the plaintiffs are riparian to the stream upon its lower course near where it empties into Owens river. The stream heads in certain small lakes near the summit of the Sierras, and is fed during the spring and early summer by the melting snows. At such seasons it carries a large amount of water,—much more than the plaintiffs can profitably use. The findings of the superior court show that there is a surplus of water when the river is high, but do not indicate the quantity of that surplus. There is evidence to the effect that it is often very large. Notwithstanding this admitted surplus of water over the needs of the plaintiffs, and the fact that it goes to waste below them, the defendants are absolutely enjoined from diverting to their lands any portion of the stream at any time. The question is thus presented whether a riparian owner upon the lower course of one of our mountain streams can insist, as against an appropriator whose land is within the watershed of the stream, but nonriparian, that the whole stream, in times of flood, when he has no use for the water himself, must come down to him. It may be that this is the riparian doctrine established in this state, but I doubt it; and, at all events, the question, when it is fairly presented, is too important to be ignored.

MANN v. O'SULLIVAN. (S. F. 751.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1899.)
MASTER AND SERVANT—FELLOW SERVANT—ACTIONS—PLEADING.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 1970, which exonerates an employer from liability for negligence of persons "employed in the same general business," a carpenter engaged in inclosing an elevator shaft within a frame for the owner of a building is a fellow servant of one operating the elevator for such owner.

2. Where a complaint is demurrable because it shows that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of a fellow servant, such fact need not be pleaded in an answer.

3. In the absence of an express agreement, one employed to repair an elevator is not entitled to warning from the master when the elevator is about to start, where he relies upon a fellow servant, whom he has requested to give such warning.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by John Mann against Mary Ann O'Sullivan. There was judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gunnison, Booth & Bartnett, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries. The single question involved is, does the complaint state a cause of action? Defendant was the owner of a certain building, in which she operated and maintained an elevator. "Plaintiff was employed by said defendant to work for her in the capacity of a carpenter, and to perform the work of inclosing the elevator shaft in said premises within a glass frame." While working at this employment, "said defendant, through her servant, agent, and employé, one Emmet Carney, carelessly and negligently, and without any warning or notice * * * to plaintiff, and against his positive instructions not to operate the elevator herein mentioned at any time without notice to him, suddenly operated * * * said elevator * * * from the ground floor, where said elevator was standing, so that said elevator suddenly struck with great force the screening on which plaintiff was working as aforesaid, * * * and that by reason of the gross negligence and carelessness of said defendant in operating said elevator as aforesaid said plaintiff sustained the injuries * * * above mentioned."

The important matter presented by this appeal arises from the solution of the question as to whether or not the plaintiff and Carney, the man operating the elevator, were fellow servants. In other words, these two men being employed by defendant, were they employed "in the same general business"? Section 1970, Civ. Code. It is impossible to declare a rule of law by which all cases presenting this interesting question may be weighed and tested. In that excellent work, the American and English Encyclopædia of Law (volume 7, p. 864), it is said, "In the note will be found every authority, it is believed, determining who are and who are not fellow servants, alphabetically arranged according to the various occupations or employments." Yet, after a careful perusal of that note, we still find the same mist surrounding the question, and the legal atmosphere in no degree clarified. The authorities are widely divergent, and the text writers appear to be unable to agree upon a satisfactory rule by which it may be determined who are fellow servants, or what servants are engaged in a common employment, or, as the statute of this state has it, what servants are employed "in the same general business." Shearman & Redfield, in their work upon Negligence, declare the rule as favorably to the servant as it can be found in any standard work, and that rule is declared in section 236: "Under the generally prevailing rule, fellow servants are engaged in a common employment when each of them is occupied in service of such a kind that all the others, in the exercise of ordinary sagacity, ought to be able to foresee, when accepting their employment, that his negligence would probably expose them to injury." Testing this case by the foregoing rule, the conclusion is irresistible that plaintiff, who was employed to repair the elevator shaft, and Carney, the man who was employed to operate the elevator, were servants of defendant engaged in a common employment, or, as our statute has it, engaged "in the same general business." It was plain to the plaintiff when he began work in repairing the elevator shaft that the negligence of Carney would expose him to great danger. He recognized the fact that danger was present with him, for he instructed Carney not to raise the elevator without a notification to him, in order that he might first remove to a place of safety. The conclusion arrived at in many cases rests upon the principle that, the danger from the negligence of another employé being fairly apparent, it should be held that all other employés assume the risk incident to that danger; and this principle forms the foundation of the rule which we have quoted from Shearman & Redfield.

We will notice a few cases where the facts and principle invoked appear to be similar to those here presented. In Besel v. Railroad Co., 70 N. Y. 177, it is held that a car repairer working upon a car was in common employment with the men in charge of a train not connected with the car upon which the repairer was doing the work. To the same effect is Corcoran v. Railroad Co., 126 N. Y. 673, 27 N. E. 1022, and Campbell v. Railroad Co.

(Pa. Sup.) 2 Atl. 489. In Hasty v. Sears, 157 Mass. 123, 31 N. E. 759, a case identical in its facts with the one before us, the court said: "The plaintiff and the elevator boy were both servants of the defendant at the time of the plaintiff's injury, and, as their employment was a common employment, the negligence of the boy in running the car down upon the plaintiff was an obvious risk which the plaintiff assumed, and for which the defendant is not answerable to him. The plaintiff and the boy were both working to secure the successful operation of the elevator,—the plaintiff in repairing it, and the boy in operating the car; and they were forwarding a common enterprise for the benefit of the defendant, and were in a common employment." In Fagundes v. Railroad Co., 79 Cal. 97, 21 Pac. 437, it is held that a laborer working upon the railroad track is a fellow servant with a conductor and a track walker. In Livingston v. Packing Co., 103 Cal. 263, 37 Pac. 149, it is held that the mate of a vessel and a waiter at the table are engaged "in the same general business," in the sense of those words as used in section 1970 of the Civil Code. The court declared that the general business of the defendant was the carrying of freight and passengers upon its steamer; that in the conduct of that business a waiter was as necessary an employé as a mate, and both were essentially necessary for the profitable conduct of the business. In the case at bar it may be said that the business of defendant was operating and maintaining an elevator. A boy or man to manipulate it was a necessity, and likewise an engineer to handle the engine and furnish the power, and likewise a man to repair the machine itself when out of order. These men, in their respective lines of vocation, were necessary to the operation of the machine, and were assisting in the same general business of operating and maintaining the machine. The man to repair the elevator when it was out of order was as necessary as the waiter to the ship, or the repairer to the car, or the laborer to the railroad track. The allegation of the plaintiff that he was employed by the defendant in the capacity of a carpenter to do certain work for her, and that at the time he received the injury complained of he was doing the work for which he was employed, "under the direction of the defendant," shows that he was not an independent contractor, and precludes him from invoking the principles declared in Bennett v. Truebody, 66 Cal. 510, 6 Pac. 329. The defendant would have been liable to a stranger for any injury sustained by reason of his negligence, upon the ground that he was the servant of the defendant.

It is also claimed that from the face of the complaint it appears that the accident occurred from the negligence of the defendant herself. The pleading does not bear this construction. After stating that the accident occurred by reason of Carney operating the elevator, the pleading then declares that "defendant did thereby negligently and carelessly precipitate, with great force," etc. The complaint further declares that, "by reason of the gross negligence and carelessness of said defendant in operating said elevator as aforesaid, said plaintiff sustained the injuries," etc. It is entirely plain from these allegations that the elevator was being operated by Carney, and that by reason of his negligence in so operating it the accident occurred. By any reasonable construction of the pleading, it contains nothing indicating negligence upon the part of any one except Carney.

It is next insisted that if plaintiff and Carney were fellow servants, and engaged in the same general business, then that fact should be pleaded in the answer. It is sufficient to say that if the facts alleged in the complaint show that the servants are fellow servants, and engaged in the same general business, then that fact may be taken advantage of by demurrer.

It is also declared that it was the duty of the master to warn plaintiff when the elevator was about to start. If there had been an express agreement to that effect made by the master and the servant, the plaintiff, when he was hired to do the work, there might be some force in this contention. Bradley v. Railroad Co., 62 N. Y. 99. But plaintiff went to work without any such agreement, and acted alone upon the confidence he had in a compliance with the request he made to the elevator man, Carney, to give him notice of the starting of the cage. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

WHITEHEAD et al. v. SWEET et al. (L. A. 542.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1899.)
CORPORATIONS—ACTIONS BY STOCKHOLDERS —ILLEGAL ELECTIONS OF DIRECTORS—PLEADINGS—REVIEW.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 315, which provides that, upon the application of any person or body corporate aggrieved by any election held by any corporate body, the district court of the district in which such election is held may inquire into the matters of complaint, and thereupon confirm the election, order a new one, or direct such other relief in the premises as accords with right and justice, a court of equity has jurisdiction of a bill to review an election by a corporation of directors and officers, and oust those elected, if it is not conducted in conformity with the statute.

2. A complaint which states facts which entitle the plaintiff to relief, either legal or equitable, is not demurrable on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

3. Where the complaint in an action by stockholders to review an alleged illegal election of directors, and to oust them from office, alleges that the corporation is controlled by the illegally elected directors, it need not allege a demand on the corporation that it bring the action, and its refusal to do so.

4. Where the complaint in an action by stockholders to review the election of officers of a corporation, and to oust them from office, alleges that defendants are not the officers of the corporation, it need not allege a demand, on persons whom plaintiffs considered the officers de jure, that the corporation bring the action in its name, and a refusal so to do, where it appears that the defendants are exercising the functions of the offices they claim.

5. Stockholders whose stock has been sold to satisfy an assessment thereon, to carry into effect an illegal contract made by a board of directors illegally elected, may maintain an action to review the illegal election and oust them from office, and to have the illegal contract set aside.

6. A complaint in an action by stockholders to review an alleged illegal election of directors is not demurrable for ambiguity, where it refers to them as the "board of directors," when it clearly appears from the whole complaint that the claim is made that they are not the legal board.

7. A complaint in an action by stockholders to review a corporate election, and to oust the illegally elected directors and officers, to set aside a contract made by them, and to cancel an assessment on the stock made by them to carry out such contract, alleged that S., one of the directors illegally elected, had, for a valuable consideration, agreed to give one of the plaintiffs an irrevocable proxy for a large block of stock, to be voted by the transferee for the benefit of the corporation; that S. had violated his agreement, and had himself voted the stock, electing a board of directors which was dominated by him; that such board had entered into a contract whereby they agreed to pay S. a large sum of money for a patent right owned by him; that for that purpose they had assessed the shares of stock owned by each stockholder; and that, in default of payment, plaintiffs' stock had been sold. Held, that the bill was not multifarious.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by H. C. Whitehead and others against H. P. Sweet and others to review an election by a corporation, and to oust the illegally elected directors, to set aside a contract made by them, and to annul an assessment on the corporate stock to carry it out. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Mulford & Pollard, for appellants. Goodrich & Garrison, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal from the judgment, and comes here on the judgment roll. It is not claimed that the findings are not supported by the evidence, but it is sought by this appeal to review the order of the court overruling the defendants' demurrer to the amended complaint. As the court found all the allegations of the complaint to be true, it will be necessary to state the substance of the complaint, in order to make clear the points urged on this appeal. It appears from the complaint, in substance, that the defendant Sweet's Metal Cross-Tie Company was at all times mentioned a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of California, and that the plaintiffs and the other defendants were at all times named stockholders of defendant corporation; that in December, 1893, for a valuable consideration, the defendant Sweet agreed with the stockholders of defendant corporation that he should not control a majority of the stock of said corporation, but that he would transfer to plaintiff Baldwin 2,050 shares of the said capital stock, with proxy irrevocable, authorizing said Baldwin to vote the said stock for the benefit and protection of the corporation for five years from and after June 15, 1892; that at a special meeting, claimed to be a meeting of the stockholders of the corporation, held on the 23d day of April, 1894, without proper notice, and contrary to the by-laws of the corporation (the defendants Sweet, Jeffery, and Pollard, and no other stockholders, being present), there was a resolution illegally passed removing plaintiffs Whitehead, Carter, Mills, and Mariner from the board of directors of said corporation, and electing as directors the defendants Mulford, Pollard, McKoon, Jeffery, and Green; that on the 19th day of June, 1894, at what was claimed to be an annual meeting of the stockholders of the corporation, but held illegally, without sufficient or proper notice, and contrary to the by-laws of the corporation (the defendants Sweet, Mulford, Pollard, Jeffery, and no other stockholders, being present), the defendants Sweet, Pollard, Mulford, Green, and Jeffery, and two of the plaintiffs, Chamberlain and Hunt, were illegally declared to be the directors of said corporation; that after said last-named meeting the defendants Sweet, Pollard, Jeffery, and Green were elected by the so-called board of directors respectively president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer of the said corporation, and the defendants Mulford and Pollard were appointed attorneys for said corporation; that a majority of the so-called board of directors, to wit, Pollard, Green, McKoon, and Jeffery, are under the control of defendant Sweet, who is one of the so-called directors and president of said corporation; that on the 20th day of August, 1894, at a meeting of the board of directors so illegally elected, at which were present defendants Pollard, Sweet, Green, and Jeffery, and none others, and at the instance of defendant Sweet, the said defendants so present at said last-named meeting entered into a contract, as the contract of defendant corporation, and under its seal, with defendant Sweet, and for his benefit, under and by the terms of which the said corporation was bound to pay said defendant Sweet $16,000 for a certain patent, known as "Sweet's Metal Cross-Tie," and for other covenants to be performed by said defendant Sweet; that at a special meeting of the said directors held illegally and without notice on the 29th day of January, 1895, at which were present defendants Green, Pollard, Jeffery, and Mulford, and none others, an assessment of $4 per share on the capital stock of said corporation was illegally levied, and at the time of filing the complaint the stock of said corporation and of plaintiffs was being advertised as delinquent, and for sale under the said illegal assessment; that the said illegal assessment of $4 per share was made for the benefit of defendant Sweet, and for the purpose of paying him the said $16,000 for his said patent, as provided in the said illegal contract; that the defendant corporation is practically free of debt, and that, except for the said illegal contract with defendant Sweet, there would be no necessity for the said assessment of $4 per share on said stock; and that the threatened sale of the said stock and the said contract so made with defendant Sweet will result in great loss and irreparable injury to the plaintiffs and to defendant corporation. By a supplemental complaint filed before the trial, it appears that the capital stock of the plaintiff had been sold under said illegal assessment, and without proper notice. The demurrer to the amended complaint is upon the ground that the same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, that there is a misjoinder of causes of action in several respects, and that the complaint is ambiguous and uncertain in some particulars.

It is urged that there is no jurisdiction in a court of equity to remove corporate officers. It is true that in general a court of equity has no inherent power or jurisdiction to entertain a bill for the purpose of reviewing a corporate election, and ousting the parties who claim to have been elected. It was not part of the original jurisdiction of chancery, and in most of the states of the Union such jurisdiction does not exist. But, in order to avoid the delays and difficulties attending the old remedy of quo warranto, statutes have been enacted in many of the states which give courts of equity the power to review corporate elections, and among such states is our own. Our Code (Civ. Code, § 315) reads as follows: "Upon the application of any person or body corporate aggrieved by any election held by any corporate body the district court of the district in which such election is held must proceed forthwith to hear the allegations and proofs of the parties, or otherwise inquire into the matters of complaint, and thereupon confirm the election, order a new one, or direct such other relief in the premises as accords with right and justice. Upon filing the petition, and before any further proceedings are had under this section, five days' notice of the hearing must be given, under the direction of the court or the judge thereof, to the adverse party or those to be affected thereby." Under the above section it was held in Wright v. Water Co., 67 Cal. 532, 8 Pac. 70, that our superior courts have jurisdiction, as courts of equity, to inquire into the validity of a corporate election, and to set it aside if not in conformity with law. In the opinion it is said: "The constitution of 1879 abolished the district court, but at the same time it created the superior court, and conferred upon it the same equity jurisdiction which had been formerly conferred upon and was exercised by the district court. Sitting as a court of equity, therefore, the superior court had jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of an election, and to set it aside, if it had not been made in conformity to law, whether the statute conferred it or not." The same rule has been laid down in other states having statutes similar in some respects to our own. In re St. Lawrence Steamboat Co., 44 N. J. Law, 529; Ex parte Holmes, 5 Cow. 426; Schoharie Val. R. Case, 12 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 394; People v. Albany & S. R. Co., 55 Barb. 346. Under our Code there is but one form of action, and, if the complaint states facts which entitle the plaintiff to relief, either legal or equitable, it is not demurrable upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. If the facts are such as address themselves to the equity side of the court, the appropriate relief will be granted by the court sitting as a court of equity. White v. Lyons, 42 Cal. 279; Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 528, 24 Pac. 172, and 25 Pac. 64.

It is said that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action because it was the duty of defendant corporation to bring the action, and, if it would not do so upon request, then it becomes necessary for the complaint to show that plaintiffs made a proper demand upon the corporation to bring the action. The complaint alleges that the business and affairs of said corporation are influenced and controlled by defendant Sweet, that said Sweet controls the board of directors, and that for this reason it would be of no avail to make a demand upon the defendant directors to bring such suit. Under the authorities, this was sufficient to excuse the necessity of alleging a demand. 2 Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 741; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 33, 28 Pac. 788; Id., 106 Cal. 331, 39 Pac. 603; Ashton v. Association, 84 Cal. 70, 22 Pac. 660, and 23 Pac. 1091.

It is said the complaint alleges that defendants are not the board of directors, and that it does not avail to allege the reasons why demand was not made upon them, as the theory of the complaint is that their election was illegal, and, if so, they are not directors. The complaint alleges that the directors are influenced and controlled by defendant Sweet, without naming them; but, if it did name them as the parties claiming to be directors, we think it would be sufficient. One of the questions, and the main question, to be determined, is whether or not the defendants, other than the corporation, are legal directors of the corporation, and the plaintiffs would not be required at their peril to determine that question before bringing suit. They have the right to have that question determined by the courts.

Several pages of appellants' brief are devoted to the argument that the suit should abate by reason of the allegations of the supplemental complaint setting forth that the board of directors have caused the plaintiffs' stock to be sold since the commencement of the suit, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs have no further interest in the litigation. There would be some force in this argument if the sale were made by proper authority and were in all respects regular; but the sale is alleged to be void by reason of the illegality of the assessment, and by reason of its having been made by a board of directors who were not such in law. A sale of stock by a board of directors illegally elected, and under an invalid assessment made in violation of law, would not determine the relations of the stockholders to the corporation. The supplemental complaint alleges that the sale was made under a void and illegal assessment. The amended complaint shows that the assessment was illegal, and made by a board illegally claiming to be such. Another answer to the contention is that one of the objects of the action is to have the $16,000 contract with the defendant Sweet set aside, and, after the action is brought to remedy a wrong done to the corporation, all the stockholders, whether plaintiffs or defendants, are equally interested in the result of the suit. 2 Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 737.

The complaint is not ambiguous nor uncertain in the respects claimed by appellants. Although in some paragraphs of the complaint the defendants (other than the corporation) are referred to as the board of directors, it sufficiently appears all through the complaint that the claim is made that they are not the legal board, and that their election was illegal. When a pleading is attacked as being ambiguous or uncertain, the rule is that a general allegation, although it would not have been sufficient standing alone, may nevertheless assist to make the complaint more certain in the particulars named. Hutchinson v. McNally, 85 Cal. 619, 24 Pac. 1071. If enough appear to make the pleading easy of comprehension and free from reasonable doubt, a demurrer on the ground of ambiguity should be overruled. Salmon v. Wilson, 41 Cal. 595.

It is urged that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, and that the complaint is multifarious in several respects. The principal argument of appellants on this ground is that the sale of the stock under the alleged illegal assessment is a matter individual to each of the plaintiffs, and a matter in which the corporation has no interest, and that the revocation of the proxy given by Sweet to Baldwin in no way concerns the corporation. We do not think the complaint is obnoxious to the objections made in these respects. The gist of the action being to declare the election of the board of directors void and illegal, this being established, it follows that the acts by which the assessment was levied, the attempted sale of the stock of plaintiffs, and the contract made with defendant Sweet August 20, 1894, were all done without authority and void. The agreement of defendant Sweet with the stockholders of the corporation to transfer to plaintiff Baldwin 2,050 shares of the capital stock, with irrevocable proxy for five years, for the benefit and protection of the corporation, having been violated, its violation might properly be adjudicated in this suit. A court of equity, having acquired jurisdiction, would administer complete relief, and adjust the case in all its branches. A court of equity abhors a multiplicity of suits. No fixed rule can be laid down by which to determine whether a given bill in equity is or is not subject to the objection of multifariousness. It may be that, for the purpose of preventing a multiplicity of suits, a court of equity will retain a bill against several defendants, although there be no privity of interest between them, and although each may stand in different relations to the complainant from the others. Thomp. Corp. § 3527. Chancellor Kent sustained a bill, the object of which was to set aside fraudulent conveyances of corporate property, as well as to coerce payment of defaulting stockholders. Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. 139. Where a court of equity has once obtained jurisdiction, it will decide the whole case. It will not permit litigation by piecemeal, but will determine the whole controversy, so as to prevent further litigation. Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 529, 24 Pac. 172, and 25 Pac. 64, and cases cited. Where all the parties in interest are, with sufficient pleadings, before a court of equity, it can and will take hold of the entire case, and give effect to their contracts legally made. Cross v. Zellerbach, 63 Cal. 643. It was said in Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 32, 28 Pac. 791, in discussing a demurrer to the complaint in equity: "It is no objection to the complaint that the relief sought is not single. It is often necessary, in order that the plaintiff may obtain full justice, that the relief granted him be as varied and diversified as the means that have been employed by the defendant to produce the grievance complained of. If a trustee is shown to have been unfaithful, the court may not only compel restitution, but may also restrain him by injunction from similar acts, or, if deemed necessary, may remove him from his trust. If he has called to his aid other confederates, they also may be enjoined from further participation in the acts which infringe upon the rights of the plaintiff. A court of equity will always find the means of enforcing its decrees against a delinquent defendant, and its power in this respect is as extensive as the exigencies of the case." On well-understood principles of equity pleading, a bill is not multifarious because the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree in their favor jointly or in solido. It is sufficient, if they are injured in a similar way, that they have common grievances to redress, and that they are entitled to relief of the same kind. 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4602.

Applying the principles above laid down to this case, the complaint does not contain actions improperly joined. It tells one continued story, and alleges wrongs willfully perpetrated by the defendants, and the way in which they were perpetrated. No third parties appear in any way to be involved. If defendant Sweet agreed, for the benefit of the corporation, to transfer his stock, with proxy irrevocable, and has violated his contract, why should he not now, and in this action, be compelled to perform it? A bill in equity is said to be multifarious when distinct and independent matters are joined therein. If the subject-matter in the main relates to one transaction, around which the others cluster, and each party has an interest in some matters in the suit, and they are connected, even though all the parties do not have an interest in all the matters in the suit, the bill is not multifarious. Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 271, 271a; Wilson v. Castro, 31 Cal. 429. The findings refer to the complaint as amended, and to the supplemental complaint. The original complaint was superseded by the amended and supplemental complaint. We think the judgment should be affirmed, and so advise.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

126 Cal. 77

WILLIAMS et al. v. CASEBEER. (L. A. 611.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1899.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—DEMURRER—MISJOINDER OF PARTIES—SEVERAL CAUSES OF ACTION—UNCERTAINTY OF COMPLAINT—EVIDENCE SHOWING MALICE—EVIDENCE OF OTHER DISTINCT ACTS—STATEMENTS IN ABSENCE OF OTHER PARTY—GENERAL EXCEPTION TO INSTRUCTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—ADVICE OF COUNSEL—EXCESSIVE VERDICT.

1. In an action by plaintiff and her husband against defendant for malicious prosecution, a demurrer to the complaint on ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff, in that plaintiff seeks to recover damages for loss of her time, and it is sought in the same complaint to recover on a joint cause of action on the arrest of both plaintiff and her husband, will not lie, as plaintiff in such case could not sue without making her husband a party plaintiff, under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, providing, with certain exceptions, that, when a married woman is a party, her husband must be joined with her.

2. Misjoinder of parties and improperly uniting several causes of action are distinct causes of demurrer, under the Code; and where defendant demurs to a complaint on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff, whereas he should have alleged a misjoinder of causes of action, he will not be permitted to support the latter ground, not alleged, by facts stated in support of the former ground.

3. Where the answer, in an action for malicious prosecution, and the trial, clearly show that defendant could not have been misled to his injury, judgment will not be reversed for uncertainty of the complaint.

4. In an action by husband and wife against defendant for malicious prosecution, the record of two deeds alleged to have been stolen by plaintiffs, one of which was made by defendant to a minor daughter of plaintiffs, and recorded some months before plaintiffs were arrested, the other from a third person to the husband, and recorded at request of defendant, were admissible to show ownership in some person other than defendant, and thus to show that he acted maliciously in charging larceny of property not his own.

5. Where it is alleged that plaintiffs were arrested and prosecuted by defendant for larceny, evidence on the part of defendant of other distinct larcenous acts of plaintiffs is not admissible.

6. Statements made some time before the present action was commenced, and in the absence of plaintiffs, by defendant to his attorney at the time he delivered to him certain papers which he had charged plaintiffs with stealing, is inadmissible.

7. A general exception to special instructions, asked by the parties and given or refused by the court, is sufficient.

8. In an action for malicious prosecution, the jury were instructed that, before defendant could shield himself by the advice of counsel, it must appear that he made, in good faith, a full statement of all the material circumstances within his knowledge to a respectable attorney in good standing, and acted on the advice of said attorney. It appeared that defendant consulted a former district attorney, who testified that he was an attorney at law, and had been engaged in the profession for about 15 years. There was other evidence that he was a respectable attorney in good standing, and nothing to the contrary. Held that, conceding the instruction to be erroneous, in that it puts on defendant and the jury the necessity of trying the respectability and standing of the attorney, it would not justify a reversal, since, from the evidence, defendant could not have been injured by it.

9. Where defendant set up the defense that he acted on the advice of counsel, an instruction that the burden of proof is on defendant to show that he fully, fairly, and in good faith stated to his counsel all the material facts is proper.

10. Where defendant sets up the defense that he acted on advice of counsel, an instruction that the burden of proof is on defendant to show that he fully, fairly, and in good faith stated to his counsel the material facts is not in conflict with an instruction that it is incumbent on plaintiff to show, by preponderance of evidence, that she was maliciously, and without probable cause, prosecuted and caused to be arrested.

11. An instruction requested by defendant that taking the advice of the police judge, particularly where he is also a practitioner of the law, under the same circumstances as heretofore stated, before filing the complaint in the action in the police court, is to be considered in the same manner as consulting an attorney at law, is properly refused, as it assumes that the police judge was a practitioner of the law, and the phrase, "under the same circumstances heretofore stated," leaves in doubt the facts to which the instruction alludes.

12. Where the evidence shows that the arrest of plaintiffs was made after a hasty search for the property alleged to have been stolen, and that the criminal proceeding was prosecuted with much bitterness, and that defendant withheld from the court and the jury the fact that he had found some of the property after the arrest, and had it in his possession at the trial, and there is no evidence of passion or prejudice, a verdict of $2,000 will not be set aside as excessive.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

Action by Kate Sonoma Williams and her husband, Isaac B. Williams, against J. W.

Casebeer for malicious prosecution. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. F. Thomas and J. W. Taggart, for appellant. S. E. Crew and Wm. J. Hunsaker, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for malicious prosecution. Trial by jury, and plaintiffs had the verdict, with damages assessed at $2,000, for which amount and for costs of suit, taxed at $162.80, plaintiffs had judgment. Defendant appeals from the judgment in L. A. 514 (58 Pac. 1116), and from an order denying motion for new trial in this transcript (L. A. 611). The two appeals will be considered in this opinion.

It is sought to have the judgment and order reversed on the grounds: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; (2) that the judgment and verdict are against law; (3) errors of law occurring at the trial; (4) excessive damages, given under the influence of passion and prejudice.

1. Appellant demurred to the complaint for uncertainty, and now urges this as ground for reversal of the judgment. L. A. 514. In the first three paragraphs of the complaint it is alleged that: Plaintiffs are husband and wife. On June 12, 1897, at the city of Santa Barbara, defendant made complaint before the judge of the police court of that city charging plaintiffs with the crime of grand larceny, and then and there procured said judge to issue a warrant of arrest of plaintiffs upon said charge. In making said complaint, and procuring said warrant to issue, defendant acted maliciously and without probable cause. In the remaining portions of the complaint it is charged that plaintiff Mrs. Williams was arrested on said warrant at Los Angeles, on June 14, 1897, by the sheriff of Santa Barbara county, and was imprisoned thereunder in the county jail of Los Angeles county, and was taken thence by said sheriff to Santa Barbara, and was there detained in his custody, under said warrant of arrest, until June 17, 1897, when she was allowed to go without bail, to appear for her examination before said judge upon said charge, until June 18, 1897, on which day her preliminary examination was commenced, and the hearing thereof continued until June 19, 1897, on which last-named day she was fully acquitted. It is then alleged that, by reason of the aforesaid malicious and wrongful acts of the defendant, the plaintiff Kate Sonoma Williams was obliged to expend the sum of $37.50 as attorney's fees in defending said proceeding, was put to loss of time during the time of said arrest and detention to her damage in the sum of $50, and was otherwise damaged thereby in the further sum of $10,000, no part of which sums has been paid. The uncertainty alleged of the complaint is: (1) It is impossible to ascertain therefrom whether the $10,000 damages is by reason of the arrest of Mrs. Williams, or by reason of the filing of the complaint against both Mr. and Mrs. Williams; that it is impossible to ascertain therefrom what portion, if any, of said damages were incurred by reason of filing the complaint against Mr. Williams, and what portion, if any, by reason of the arrest of Mrs. Williams, or whether the damages alleged are by reason of the filing of a joint complaint against both husband and wife, or whether the damage is for the separate arrest of Mrs. Williams; that it is impossible to determine therefrom in what proceeding Mrs. Williams "expended the sum of $37.50 as attorney's fees in defending,—whether said joint complaint against both said plaintiffs or in the matter of the arrest of Kate Sonoma Williams." A misjoinder of parties plaintiff is alleged, in this: That Mrs. Williams seeks to recover $50 damages for loss of time to her, and it is sought in the same complaint to recover on a joint cause of action upon the arrest of both Mr. and Mrs. Williams. The verdict was that the jury "find for the plaintiffs, and assess their damages at the sum of $2,000," and the judgment was that "Kate Sonoma Williams, and her husband, I. B. Williams, have and recover from said J. W. Casebeer," etc.

There was a right of action for malicious prosecution in each of the plaintiffs, but they could not unite their separate causes of action in one complaint and sue jointly. Each was compelled to bring a separate action. But Mrs. Williams could not sue without making her husband a party plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. § 370; McFadden v. Railway Co., 87 Cal. 464, 25 Pac. 681. Damages for personal injury to the wife, when recovered in money, are community property of the husband and wife, and in such a case as this the verdict and judgment may properly be given in favor of the husband and wife jointly. Neale v. Railway Co., 94 Cal. 425, 29 Pac. 954. There was therefore no misjoinder of parties plaintiff.

Appellant contends that he should not lose the benefit of his demurrer as to the $50 item because he alleged a misjoinder of parties, whereas he should have alleged a misjoinder of causes of action. The Code enumerates certain distinct causes for demurrer. Misjoinder of parties is one, and improperly uniting several causes of action is another. The demurrant will not be permitted to support one of these grounds, not alleged, by facts stated in support of another and distinct ground, which is alleged. Upon the ground of uncertainty, there are no particulars stated showing wherein the complaint is uncertain as to this item of $50. We think there is no ground of demurrer to this item sufficiently sustained.

Nor do we think the ground of uncertainty in other respects sufficiently sustained to warrant a reversal of the judgment. The pleader in drawing the complaint was obliged to unite the husband as a party plaintiff. He was also compelled to state, what was the fact, that defendant made a complaint charging them jointly with the alleged larceny, and caused their arrest thereunder upon a single warrant of arrest; and the pleader could not well do otherwise than allege that the complaint was made, and the warrant was issued, maliciously and without probable cause. Thenceforward the complaint in this action deals exclusively with the single plaintiff, Mrs. Williams, and the name of the husband is not again mentioned; and it nowhere appears in the complaint that Mr. Williams was arrested, or an examination had as to him by the police judge. The allegation "that, by reason of the aforesaid malicious and wrongful acts of the defendant, the plaintiff Kate Sonoma Williams was obliged," etc., can, in view of the entire complaint, refer only to the acts as they affected the one plaintiff in whose behalf the suit is brought. The complaint made by defendant and the warrant issued thereon were essential to be alleged and proved; and to avoid the possible objection on the ground of variance, as well as to state the facts as they existed, it was proper, as necessary inducement, to set forth the making of the complaint and the issuing of the warrant just as the facts occurred, and that made necessary the allegations in the first three paragraphs of the plaintiffs' complaint. No one reading the complaint could be misled into the belief that the pleader intended to combine two causes of action, or to state any cause of action other than that sustained by Mrs. Williams by reason of her malicious prosecution. The answer and the trial clearly enough show that defendant could not have been misled to his injury, in which case the judgment will not be reversed for uncertainty of the complaint alone.

The allegation as to the $37.50 paid as attorney's fees shows that the money was expended by Mrs. Williams, and that, in alleging that it was "in defending said proceedings," reference was made to the proceedings upon the preliminary examination as to her. It does not appear in the complaint that her husband was ever arrested or was ever called upon to make any defense.

2. Appellant claims that the evidence does not justify the verdict. This point is not specially relied on, and we do not feel called upon to review the evidence in the case. Counsel for defendant do not, in their brief, attempt to show wherein it is insufficient to sustain the verdict. We have, however, given the transcript careful examination, and think the evidence fully warrants the verdict of want of probable cause for the arrest and the subsequent prosecution of plaintiff.

3. Appellant assigns certain errors of law in the admission or exclusion of testimony. We will notice these briefly. It was competent to prove by the witness Mrs. Williams that defendant admitted at the preliminary examination the authorship of the letter and telegram caused to be written by defendant and sent to plaintiffs, already referred to. The shorthand notes of the examination were not the only competent evidence of the fact. If witness heard defendant make the admission, she could so testify.

Copies of the two deeds alleged to have been stolen were admitted in evidence over defendant's objection. One of these deeds was made by defendant in 1895 to a minor daughter of plaintiffs, the consideration being love and affection, and was recorded some months before plaintiffs were arrested. The other is a deed from one Robinson to L. B. Williams, one of plaintiffs, and was recorded at the request of defendant. It is claimed by defendant that possession alone of the original deeds charged to have been stolen was at issue, and that it was immaterial whether the deeds had been recorded or not. The record of these deeds, which were recorded some time before this trouble, was admissible as tending to show ownership in some person other than defendant,—not conclusive, by any means, but in some degree showing that he acted maliciously in charging larceny of property not belonging to him.

Defendant, as a witness for himself, had testified that he got no answer to his letter and telegram sent plaintiffs June 11th, and added: "I went to the office, and the lady operator told me that it had been delivered." On motion of plaintiffs, the remark of the operator was stricken out as hearsay. Defendant claims that this was error. The answer was not in response to the question, but the objection was not made on that ground. It may be, as claimed by plaintiffs, that, if the evidence was not admissible, the court could, on its own motion, strike it out, though the ground of the objection was not sufficient. But the court did not so act. It granted the motion as made, and, it must be presumed, on the ground stated. We think the evidence was admissible. It in some degree tended to rebut the charge of malice, and also bore upon the question of probable cause. Defendant had informed plaintiffs that he would act upon their failure to reply, and we think it was competent for him to show that before he acted he was informed that the telegram had been delivered. The evidence, however, was not of such significance or importance as that its rejection would warrant a reversal of the judgment. We cannot see that defendant was prejudiced because this fact was withheld from the jury. It appeared by the evidence of plaintiffs that the telegram was received before their arrest, and that plaintiffs did not in fact answer it, and the undisputed testimony of defendant was that he did not lodge his complaint with the police court until after he was led to believe that the message had been delivered, and not until on the next day, and after he had advised with an attorney. Under these circumstances, it would not seem reasonable to assume that the jury were in the slightest degree influenced to defendant's prejudice by the ruling of the court upon the matter in question.

Defendant offered evidence of certain transactions between the parties and their relations 10 years before this arrest. Counsel stated that it was "for the purpose of showing the condition,—a similar condition to that which existed at the time of this occurrence,—thereby showing motive and right upon the part of the complainant in this criminal action to assume that the going was of the same character as of at that time." Defendant claims that this evidence should have been admitted upon the principles laid down in Lyon v. Hancock, 35 Cal. 372. We find nothing in that case warranting the admission of evidence so remote, and relating to entirely different transactions. If it were true that plaintiffs left defendant's house 10 years before this occurrence, and that he had reason to suspect that they then took some of his property, it would not tend to prove guilt at this time, or tend to show that he had probable cause at this time for believing them guilty. What took place so long ago was too remote, and, besides, was collateral, and not relevant to any issue then before the court. We see no reason why the rule where the defendant is on trial for larceny should not apply, which is that evidence of other larcenous acts is not admissible. People v. Hartman, 62 Cal. 562. Evidence of another offense cannot be given unless there is some clear connection between the two offenses by which it may be reasonably inferred that, if guilty of the one, the defendant is guilty of the other. People v. Lane, 100 Cal. 379, 34 Pac. 856.

Defendant's attorney testified that some time after this action was commenced defendant delivered to him certain of the papers he had charged plaintiffs with stealing. The court refused to allow the attorney to testify to statements made by defendant to his attorney at that time in the absence of plaintiffs. The ruling was correct. Defendant could not strengthen his defense in this manner. His declarations to his attorney were self-serving and inadmissible.

4. The exception taken to the instructions given at the request of the plaintiffs was as follows: "To all of which instructions defendant duly excepted." Respondents make the point that the exception was insufficient because it was general. The rule relied upon applies only to the charge of the judge, and does not apply to the special instructions asked by the parties, and given or refused by the court, concerning which a general exception is sufficient. Cavallaro v. Railway Co., 110 Cal. 348, 42 Pac. 918.

5. Appellant questions the correctness of certain instructions given, and objects that a certain instruction asked by him was refused.

Several instructions were given as to the law touching defendant's liability, in view of his having consulted counsel before causing the arrest of plaintiffs. In one of these the court said: "Before the defendant can shield himself by the advice of counsel, it must appear from the evidence that he made, in good faith, a full, fair, and honest statement of all the material circumstances bearing upon the supposed guilt of the plaintiff Kate Sonoma Williams, which were then within the knowledge of defendant, to a respectable attorney in good standing, and that the defendant in good faith acted upon the advice of said attorney in instituting and carrying on the prosecution against plaintiff." Appellant contends that the instruction puts upon the defendant and the jury the necessity of trying the respectability and standing of the attorney; and that the instruction goes beyond the institution of the action, and "requires the same careful disclosure of all the facts in 'carrying on' the prosecution, to a 'respectable attorney of good standing.'" The instruction does not require that defendant shall continue to take advice of counsel during the subsequent prosecution. It requires that he shall subsequently act in good faith upon the advice given, after first having fully and fairly stated to the attorney all the material facts then known to defendant; and this he should do, or the advice will not shield him. Conceding error in other respects,—which we by no means wish to be understood as deciding,—it was without injury; for it appeared that defendant consulted a former district attorney, Mr. A. E. Putnam, who testified: "My occupation is attorney at law. Have been engaged in the profession of attorney at law about fifteen years." He could not be district attorney without having been admitted to practice in the superior court, and, as the Code formerly provided (and now provides), he could not be admitted to practice in the superior court except "upon strict examination in open court, * * * and upon testimonials of good character." Code Civ. Proc. § 276 (prior to the amendment of 1895). It sufficiently appeared that the requirements of the instruction were supplied by the evidence, and, as it was undisputed, we do not think the jury could have been misled to the defendant's injury, even if they understood the instruction to mean what defendant claims for it. There was some evidence tending to show that Mr. Putnam was a respectable attorney in good standing, and, as no other conclusion could be arrived at upon the evidence, the instruction, if error, will not justify a reversal. Pico v. Stevens, 18 Cal. 377.

It was proper to instruct the jury that the burden of proof was upon defendant to show that he "fully and fairly and in good faith stated to his counsel all the material facts," etc. There was no conflict between this instruction and a previous one, where the court had charged that it was incumbent upon plaintiffs to show, by preponderance of evidence, that the plaintiff Mrs. Williams was maliciously and without probable cause prosecuted and caused to be arrested, etc.

Defendant asked and was refused the following instruction: "Taking the advice of the police judge, particularly where he is also a practitioner of the law, under the same circumstances as heretofore stated, before filing the complaint in the action in the police court, is to be considered by you in the same manner, and with the same weight, as consulting an attorney at law." It is claimed upon the authority of Hahn v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 284, 30 Pac. 818, and Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937, that this instruction should have been given. It was held in Ball v. Rawles "that the advice of a justice of the peace, upon the facts stated to him by the complainant that a crime had been committed, and upon which he issued a warrant of arrest, is sufficient to exonerate the complainant from liability for the arrest." If the instruction had been properly drawn to meet the law of the case cited, it should have been given. But it is uncertain in its meaning, and assumes a fact not proven, to wit, that the police judge was "a practitioner of the law." There was no evidence showing that to have been the fact; and, while his advice and the issuance of the warrant as police judge would have been equally available to defendant if he were not a lawyer, it was error to introduce into the instruction a statement of fact which did not exist. The phrase, "under the same circumstances heretofore stated," left in doubt the facts to which the instruction alluded. None were stated in the instruction, and none definitely referred to. The instruction should have been framed upon the same lines as the one relating to the advice of an attorney. The instruction fails to state the important fact that to shield the defendant the advice of the police judge must be based upon a full, fair, and honest statement by defendant of all the material circumstances within the knowledge of the defendant at the time bearing upon the supposed guilt of plaintiff.

6. We do not think the judgment should be reversed as excessive. There is nothing in the evidence which shows the verdict to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. The evidence tends to show that the arrest was made after a hasty and imperfect search for the property alleged to have been stolen, and that the criminal proceeding was prosecuted with much bitterness by defendant, and that he withheld from the court the fact that he had found some of the property after the arrest, and had it in his possession at the trial. He permitted the impression to go out that he had not found the property, and in the course of his examination as a witness he declared with much emphasis: "There is not anything I would not do that would injure them, except to commit perjury." There was evidence tending to show that he had purchased the sewing machine for, and had given it to, his daughter; that the chickens were her own, either bought with her own money, or raised by her; that the deeds to which he attached the value of $4,800 were in his possession before and at the trial of the criminal action, but the fact was withheld from the jury; and it appeared at this trial that he, subsequent to the criminal trial, found the notes and mortgages which he charged plaintiff with stealing. I advise that the order refusing motion for new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order refusing motion for new trial is affirmed.

SALES—CONDITIONAL SALES—CONTRACT—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

A contract which stipulates that the vendee "agrees to sell," and the purchaser "agrees to buy," a stock of goods; that the purchase price is to be paid in future installments; that the vendee shall take immediate possession of it, and use it in regular course of trade, but from time to time shall add to it, so it shall not diminish in value before paid for; that a bill of sale is to be made, and "absolute possession" is to be delivered in the future, after final payment; that, until such payment, the title is to remain in vendor; and that it is to be insured in the vendor's name, at the vendee's expense,—is a conditional sale, valid as to creditors, although the vendee's agreement to buy and pay the consideration is absolute, and although, on condition broken, a sale is to be made, and any surplus obtained is to be paid to the vendee.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Action by Gregory Perkins, Jr., receiver of the estate of A. M. Mealey and Florence Weeks Stetson, co-partners as A. M. Mealey & Co., against C. W. Mettler. Judgment for plaintiff, who, on the denial of his motion for new trial, appeals. Affirmed.

Dillon & Dunning and Curtis & Curtis, for appellant. A. R. Anable and Leonard & Morris, for respondent.

GRAY, C. The above parties named as insolvents and the defendant Mettler entered into a written agreement, of which the following is a copy: "This agreement, between C. W. Mettler, as vendor, and A. M. Mealey and Mrs. C. W. Stetson, partners under the firm name of A. M. Mealey & Company, as vendees, witnesseth: The vendor agrees to sell to the vendees, and they agree to buy from him, all that certain stock of mdse., including a general assortment of hardware, belonging to the vendor, and now in and about the branch store heretofore maintained by the vendor at Colton, together with all furniture and fixtures belonging to the vendor and now in said store. The price to be paid by the vendees to the vendor for all said property is three thousand seven hundred ninety-two and $\frac{82}{100}$ dollars, in gold coin of the United States, to be paid in installments, as follows: There shall be paid during each year, beginning on the 28th day of January, 1896, the sum of one thousand (\$1,000) dollars, with interest on such one thousand (\$1,000) dollars from said date until paid, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, which one thousand (\$1,000) dollars shall be paid during each year in quarterly installments, with interest as aforesaid on each quarterly installment from said date until paid, the first three quarterly installments in each year to be two hundred (200) dollars each, and the fourth to be four hundred (400) dollars, with interest on each as aforesaid. The vendees, at their option, may pay all or any of such installments at any time before maturity. Upon the completion of the payment of the purchase price as aforesaid, the vendor will execute to the vendee a good and sufficient bill of sale of all of said property, or of so much thereof as shall then remain, and deliver to them the absolute possession thereof. The vendor retains the title to all said property until the purchase price shall be fully paid. The vendees shall take immediate possession of all said property, and, so long as they comply with the provisions hereof, they may retain such possession, and may, at their own cost and risk, conduct the business of said store, and may sell any of said property in the usual course of business; provided that they shall from time to time, upon their own account and risk, purchase other goods in lieu of those sold, so as to maintain the stock in said store of substantially the same value as at present, and all goods so purchased by them shall be regarded as taking the place of goods sold by them, and, when placed in said store, shall become the property of the vendor, and be subject to this contract. The vendees shall pay all taxes and assessments levied upon said property during the continuance of this contract. During the continuance of this contract, all said property shall be kept insured at the expense of the vendees, but in the name of the vendor as owner, to the extent of its fair insurable value; and, in case of loss, the insurance shall be retained by the vendor to the extent of the balance then unpaid under this contract, and the surplus, if any, shall be paid to the vendees. All said property shall be at the risk of the vendees, so long as the vendor is not in possession thereof, and no loss thereof or damage thereto, while not in the possession of the vendor, shall relieve them from the payment of any part of said purchase price. If the vendees fail to pay any tax or assessment upon said property when due, or fail to pay for any insurance thereon when due, then the vendor, at his option, may pay the same, and, in that case, the amount of any such payment, with interest thereon at ten (10) per cent. per annum from time of payment, shall be added to the next quarterly installment thereafter becoming due, and shall be repaid to the vendor by the vendees with such quarterly installment. If the vendees fail to make any payment herein provided for within ten days after it shall become due, or fail to comply with the requirements hereof in any respect, or shall suspend the business of said store, then, at any time thereafter, during the continuance of such default or failure or suspension, the vendor may take possession of all said property, and sell the same at public auction in the manner in which sales of like property are made under execution, and after giving like notice as is required by law for sales under execution, and the proceeds of such sale shall be applied—First, to the payment of the expenses thereof; secondly, to the payment to the vendor of the balance then unpaid under this contract; and the surplus, if any, shall be paid to the vendees. At such sale, any of the parties hereto may be purchasers. In witness whereof, the parties hereto set their hands, in duplicate, this 28th day of January, 1896. Mrs. C. W. Stetson. A. M. Mealey & Co. C. W. Mettler."

On the 28th day of June, 1897, the parties to the above contract entered into another contract, wherein they recited that, the purchase price mentioned in the first contract not having been paid, and the other conditions of the contract not having been performed, they mutually released each other from the further performance of said first contract, and that the goods mentioned in the first contract were delivered up, and the book accounts that had accrued in the mercantile business carried on under said contract by Mealey & Co. were assigned, to said Mettler. Within 30 days after the execution of this second contract, and the return of the property to Mettler, the creditors of A. M. Mealey & Co. filed a petition against that firm in involuntary insolvency, and the plaintiff was appointed receiver therein. The plaintiff soon thereafter commenced this action for the recovery of the value of the property hereinbefore mentioned, which was claimed in the complaint to be $3,700. The case was tried with a jury, the plaintiff had a verdict and judgment for $175, and from an order refusing him a new trial the plaintiff appealed. The only errors relied on by appellant are that the court erred in refusing to give the instruction requested by plaintiff numbered 8, and in giving the instruction numbered 7 requested by defendant. Instruction No. 8 reads as follows: "It is the province of the court to construe and interpret the contract (Exhibit A) in evidence between A. M. Mealey & Co. and the defendant, and the court instructs you that said contract operated to vest the title to the property therein mentioned in A. M. Mealey & Co., notwithstanding any terms in said writing to the contrary. And the only interest that defendant had therein was one of lien or security for the indebtedness owing to him thereunder, and the court instructs you that such lien was what the law denominates a secret lien, and was fraudulent and void as against the creditors of A. M. Mealey & Co., and also against their assignee in insolvency." The instruction given (No. 7) reads as follows: "If you should find for the plaintiff in this action, then, in estimating the amount of damages to which he will be entitled by your verdict, you should exclude so much of the property which was received from the defendant on January 28, 1896, as has been shown remained of the original stock on June 28, 1897." It is conceded by appellant that the correctness or incorrectness of the court's action in reference to these instructions depends upon the interpretation of the contract, a copy of which is above set out, and his opening brief is confined to that proposition entirely. His position is that the contract in question "was an attempt to circumvent the chattel mortgage statute in the guise of a conditional sale reserving title in the vendor," and that it had the effect to convey to the vendee named in it the entire ownership of the property. The trial court must have been of the opinion, on the other hand, that the written agreement evidenced a conditional sale, with the ownership of the property in the vendor until performance of conditions. From a thorough consideration of the whole contract, we are constrained to agree with the trial court. The intention of the parties, as disclosed by the whole contract, should govern the court in determining whether the sale was absolute or conditional. Van Allen v. Francis, 123 Cal. 474, 56 Pac. 339. It seems plainly apparent that if the construction is given to the contract that the parties to it intended it should receive, and that they gave to it themselves, it will be treated as a conditional sale. To begin with, the vendor "agrees to sell" and the vendees "agree to buy." This is not the language of a present executed sale. The price is to be paid in future installments. A bill of sale is to be made, and "absolute possession" is to be delivered in the future. Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 455; Hegler v. Eddy, 53 Cal. 597. Express agreements are made that title to all said property shall remain in the vendor, and that the vendee shall at his own expense keep the property insured in the name of the vendor. No stronger words than these could be used to indicate a purpose that the vendor should remain the owner of the property. Rodgers v. Bachman, 109 Cal. 552, 42 Pac. 448. In the case last cited, the contract therein held to be a conditional sale was similar in its terms to the contract herein considered. It contained the clause for a resale of the property on condition broken, and a return to the vendee of any amount obtained on such sale in excess of the amount due the vendee under the original contract of sale. It is true that the contract here contains an agreement on the part of the vendee to buy and pay for the goods, and there was an entire absence of any agreement of that kind in Rodgers v. Bachman, supra, and the two contracts are in that respect different in their terms, but this difference does not necessarily lead to a difference of construction. This is shown by the following quotation from the later case of Van Allen v. Francis, supra, to wit: "Nor can appellants' further contention be sustained, namely, that the fact that Langton's promise to pay is absolute is determinative and conclusive that the sale itself was absolute. In Palmer v. Howard, 72 Cal. 293, 13 Pac. 858, a like circumstance is mentioned, but not discussed. In Rodgers v. Bachman, supra, the same fact is adverted to, but, while such a matter may be a circumstance in determining the nature of the contract, it is a circumstance, and nothing more. It never has been held to be a determinative characteristic, and it cannot be so held without undoing all the law upon the question. There can be no sale at all without an agreement, express or implied, to pay. Lacking such a promise, the contract is a mere option. * * * In truth, the purchaser's promise is usually an absolute promise." In Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 7 Sup. Ct. 51, the agreement to pay for the property was absolute, and yet the transaction was held to be a conditional sale. The provisions of the contract here under consideration are not identical with those in Palmer v. Howard, supra, for in that case there was no agreement for a future bill of sale, nor was there any agreement for a delivery of absolute possession of the property upon the completion of the payment of the purchase price. Such provisions as the above are material, and are to be considered in construing the contract. Kohler v. Hayes, supra. The court, in Palmer v. Howard, based the conclusion that the intention was to vest the substantial ownership in the vendee upon the clause in the contract providing for a resale on condition broken, and a return to the vendee of any surplus obtained on such resale; but the latter case of Rodgers v. Bachman, supra, is an authority to the effect that such a stipulation is not absolutely determinative of the character of the contract. We are satisfied with the construction placed upon the contract by the court below, and advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

METHVIN v. FIDELITY MUT. LIFE ASS'N
OF PHILADELPHIA, PA. (L. A. 720.)¹

INSURANCE—POLICY—CONSTRUCTION—OPERATION—DELIVERY—NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUMS—FORFEITURE—LIMITATIONS—ESTOPPEL.

1. A policy dated July 30th, calling for quarterly premiums, provided that it should not be binding until delivered and its first premium paid. It was not delivered, nor the first premium paid, until September 3d, and insured died in November following. Held, that the policy did not begin to run until September 3d, and was in force for three months thereafter, and hence was not forfeited for failure of assured to pay the quarterly premium, which would have been due October 30th, had the policy taken effect on the day of its date.

2. Where a policy required proof of death to be made on blank forms furnished by the company, and declared that no action should be brought on it after one year from the date of insured's death, without reference to the time of furnishing the proofs of the death, such requirements must be construed together, and, if failure to bring the action within one year was occasioned by the company's refusal to furnish the blanks required, it is not entitled to urge the limitation to defeat plaintiff's recovery.

3. Where a policy declared that proof of death should be made on blanks furnished by the company, and that no action should be begun after one year from assured's death, without reference to the time of furnishing such proofs, the words in the limitation clause, "without reference to the time of furnishing proofs of death," refer only to the time when proofs are furnished, and do not apply to a case where the making of proofs of death was prevented by the company's refusal to furnish blanks.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by J. M. Methvin against the Fidelity Mutual Life Association of Philadelphia, Pa. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Horton, for appellant. McKinley & Graff, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This action is based upon a policy of life insurance. Plaintiff recovered, and the appeal is taken from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial.

Had the policy lapsed and become forfeited at the time of the death of the insured? These are the facts: While the policy was dated July 30, 1895, it was not delivered to the insured until the 3d day of the following September, at which time the first quarterly premium was paid. There is a clause in the policy providing that it would be in no way binding, or of any force or effect, until delivered to the insured and the first quarterly premium paid. It necessarily follows that the contract of insurance went into effect September 3, 1895. A quarterly premium of $24.96 was to be paid for the period of 20 years, on or before the 30th day of July, October, June, and April of each year. Upon this state of facts, it is manifest that when the insured received his policy and paid his quarterly premium he was insured for three months from September 3d, the date when the policy went into force and effect. The insured died in November, 1895, and we see no reason why his policy of insurance was not alive and in full force at that time.

It is claimed that the policy was forfeited eo instanti upon October 30, 1895, because the second quarterly premium was not paid upon that date. This contention is based upon a clause of the policy which declares that this policy "shall be ipso facto null and void if premiums are not paid when due." The construction of the policy here contended for would recognize and approve a harsh doctrine indeed. It would be carrying the doctrine of forfeiture to unconscionable lengths. By payment of the first quarterly premium, the deceased was insured for three months. This was necessarily the contract between the parties. This clause of forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums was never intended to forfeit the privileges of insurance already paid for. No insurance policy ever attempted to do such a thing. This contention, if sound, would not only result in the forfeiture of present paid-up insurance, but would result in the forfeiture of a portion of the premium already paid. Upon rules of construction even liberal to defendant, it cannot be claimed that the forfeiture clause of the policy for nonpayment of premiums was any more than a forfeiture of the policy to take place upon the expiration of the period during which there existed paid-up insurance. The insured died at a time when the policy was in full force and effect, and, there being no forfeiture at that time, his representative has a good cause of action.

It is now insisted that this action was begun too late. This insistence is based upon the following clause found in the policy: "No suit or action hereon shall be begun or maintained after the expiration of one year from the day of death of the member, without reference to the time of furnishing the proofs of death, and such lapse of time shall be a conclusive bar to any recovery hereon, any statute to the contrary notwithstanding." This action was begun more than one year after the death of the insured. It is now claimed upon the part of plaintiff that this provision was waived by defendant. The policy contained a clause to the effect that the proofs of death and claims required shall be made upon the "blank forms furnished by the association." Another clause provided that the insurance money would be paid "within ninety days after receipt of satisfactory proof of death of the said member, and the justness of the claim hereunder, in form required by the said association." Upon the foregoing branch of the case the court found that these blank forms could not be had except from defendant; that in proper time plaintiff requested the defendant to furnish the forms upon which to make proofs of death, etc., but that defendant failed and refused to furnish them; that plaintiff has repeatedly since the death of the insured demanded of defendant such blanks, but has been continually refused and is still refused. The court further found that upon September 21, 1897, plaintiff again demanded of defendant such blanks, but was refused; whereupon plaintiff elected to treat such refusal as a waiver of the right to proofs, and thereupon began this action. Upon the foregoing facts it was held by the trial court that the clause of the policy requiring the action to be begun within one year from death was waived. By one provision of the contract of insurance, plaintiff could not bring his action until 90 days after proof of death. By another clause of the contract of insurance, blanks for this proof of death, and the form of the proof, could only be furnished by defendant. By another clause, plaintiff was bound to bring suit within one year from the death of the insured. This last clause of the contract has no superiority or ruling force over other provisions. They must all be considered together. If plaintiff could not bring his action until proofs of death were furnished defendant, and defendant prevented him from furnishing such proofs, then, clearly, a failure to bring the action within one year was occasioned by defendant's fault rather than plaintiff's, and such failure cannot be urged by defendant to defeat plaintiff's cause of action.

Defendant attaches much importance to the phrase in this limitation clause to the effect, "without reference to the time of furnishing the proofs of death." These words do not deny the conclusion reached. They refer only to the time when the proofs are furnished, and not to a total absence of proofs, as we have in this case. The general principles here involved are fully covered by Case v. Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 473, 23 Pac. 534. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PLACER COUNTY BANK v. FREEMAN et al. (Sac. 529.)

DRAFT—CONSIDERATION—MISTAKE—AGENCY.

1. Where plaintiff bank, having been notified of a deposit, made in another bank in favor of defendant, subject to plaintiff's draft, paid the amount to defendant, taking a receipt, and afterwards, in order to obtain the money, had defendant sign a draft on the bank where it was deposited, such draft is founded on a sufficient consideration.

2. Plaintiff bank, having been notified of a deposit in another bank, subject to its draft, in favor of defendant, paid the amount to defendant, taking his draft on the latter bank, with which plaintiff had had no previous dealings. Held, that plaintiff did not act as the agent of drawee bank, so as to preclude it from recovering from defendant on the draft, after drawee bank had become insolvent.

3. Plaintiff bank, having been notified of a deposit in another bank, in favor of defendant firm, subject to plaintiff's draft, paid the amount to a member of defendant firm, taking his individual receipt, and soon afterwards, in order to obtain the money, asked him to sign a draft with the firm name, which he signed without reading, supposing it to be another receipt. The bank in which the fund was deposited became insolvent, and defendant was sued on the draft. Held that, since the partner signing the draft was negligent in failing to read it, the fact that he signed it under a mistake was no defense.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

Action by the Placer County Bank against W. A. Freeman and another. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John M. Fulweiler, for appellant. Pullen & Wallace and Tuttle & Wright, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff alleges: That defendants delivered to plaintiff, at its date, their certain bill of exchange, reading as follows: "$500.00. Auburn, Cal., Dec. 17, 1896. At sight, pay to the order of Placer County Bank five hundred dollars, value received, and charge the same to the account of Bell & Freeman. To E. S. Dreyer & Co., Chicago." That the same was presented for payment to the drawee December 23, 1896, and payment was refused, and notice of nonacceptance was duly given to defendants, but they have not paid the same. Defendants deny any indebtedness, and as a separate defense plead want of consideration, and set up certain facts in effect showing that they signed the draft believing it to be a receipt only for the money, as to which the findings are substantially as pleaded by defendants. The trial was by the court without a jury. The court found: That one Graves was indebted to Bell and Freeman each in the sum of $250, and being then in Chicago, where he resided, and desiring to transmit the money to them, he drew his check upon Dreyer & Co. in favor of plaintiff. That, to make payment to plaintiff, Graves requested Dreyer & Co. to, and they did, send the following telegram: "Chicago, Ill., Dec. 17, 1896. To Placer County Bank, Auburn, Cal.: We hold five hundred dollars subject your draft for Bell & Freeman. E. S. Dreyer & Co., Bankers." That plaintiff received the telegram, and on the same date paid to Freeman said sum, and Freeman gave plaintiff a receipt acknowledging payment. About 15 minutes later Nichols, plaintiff's cashier, who had made the payment, called Freeman back, and handed to him the instrument set forth in the complaint, and informed him the former receipt was insufficient, and requested him to sign the said instrument for Bell and himself as and for an additional receipt to evidence said payment, and that Freeman signed the same not knowing it was a draft upon Dreyer & Co., but believing it simply an additional receipt. That the draft was presented and dishonored December 23d, and at the time the draft was signed by Freeman for defendants there was no money on deposit with Dreyer & Co. subject to defendants' draft, but said money was deposited subject to the order of plaintiff, and these facts were known to plaintiff at that time. It is further found that no consideration passed from plaintiff to defendants, or either of them, for said draft. As conclusion of law, the court found that plaintiff by the payment accepted the said telegraphic order, and in so doing acted as the agent and trustee of Dreyer & Co., and not of defendants or either of them. Judgment went for defendants, from which, and from the order denying motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. It is claimed that the findings and decision are not supported by the evidence.

It appears from the evidence that Graves had entered into engagements with Bell & Freeman in a transaction relating to the purchase of a mine, and it became necessary that he should pay them $500 on December 17th. He placed the amount in the hands of Dreyer & Co. to be transmitted to Bell & Freeman through the Placer County Bank at Auburn, where Bell & Freeman were. Mr. Wallace, at Auburn, had been acting, as he testified, "as agent between Mr. Graves and Bell & Freeman in relation to this transaction." He had informed Graves of the necessity for sending this money. Mr. Berger, of Dreyer & Co., drew the dispatch and signed it for the firm, and Graves sent it. Mr. Wallace was expecting the remittance, and went to the Placer County Bank to learn if it had been sent, and, being told there was money there for Bell & Freeman, he sent Freeman to the bank. Prior to the sending of this telegram, the Placer County Bank had no relations with Graves or the Chicago bank, or with Bell & Freeman, so far as appears from the evidence. The Placer County Bank was brought into the transaction by this message. The finding that the money was on deposit with Dreyer & Co., subject to the order of plaintiff, and not subject to defendants' draft, is not sustained by the evidence, for the reason that it clearly appears that the money was there on deposit, as the telegram showed, and as was the undisputed fact, for Bell & Freeman, and not for plaintiff, though for the purposes of the transmission it was made subject to plaintiff's draft. Dreyer & Co. had no money belonging to plaintiff, but they had $500 left there to be transmitted for Bell & Freeman. There is some conflict in the evidence as to what occurred in getting the money into the hands of Bell & Freeman.

Nichols testified: "That telegram, at first reading, I took for a direct order to pay money from Chicago, and I took Freeman's receipt for that amount. I gave him five hundred dollars, and took his receipt. It was signed 'W. A. Freeman.' He then went out, and upon examination of the telegram afterwards, as to the meaning of it, I saw that it was not an order, but merely a notification that there was money in Chicago with E. S. Dreyer & Co." He then testifies that he called Freeman back, and told him that he (Nichols) "would have to change the advice in order to get the money." He testified: "I didn't say anything to him about signing a receipt. I said I wanted him to change it; that the paper I had wouldn't do. I don't know whether he read the paper he signed. He had opportunity to do so. I cautioned him particularly to sign it 'Bell & Freeman,' according to the telegram. He raised no objection, and went out. That was the last of it." Upon cross-examination, he testified that he supposed the draft of the Placer County Bank would have been paid, accompanied by the receipt for the money, by Bell & Freeman, but that it would not have been the proper way to do. Freeman's version as to the payment of the $500, and giving a receipt, in the first instance does not differ materially from Nichols'; but as to the second paper, signed "Bell & Freeman," he testified that he did not examine it or read it, although he says he could have done so; that he supposed it was a receipt, and did not know it was a draft; that he understood Nichols to call him back to sign a receipt, and that when he signed the paper nothing was said about a draft. He further testified: "Had I known that instrument was a draft, I would not have signed a draft for Mr. Bell. I might have signed one for myself." It was admitted of record "that in these matters defendant Freeman acted as, and was, the agent of defendant Bell." On rebuttal, Nichols testified: "I told him he would have to change the paper in order to collect the money in Chicago. I said nothing about a receipt. I don't think I mentioned the name of the draft, but I said I would have to have a different paper to collect the money in Chicago." It appears that on December 23d, when the draft reached Chicago, Dreyer & Co. had suspended business, and a receiver was in charge, and for this reason the draft was not paid.

No question of fraud or undue influence, or the existence of any confidential relations between plaintiff and defendants, is presented or claimed by defendants to arise either from the pleadings or the evidence. Defendants' position is stated in their brief as follows: "We do not ask the court to correct a draft and hold it to be a receipt, but we do ask the court to hold that the draft was given without consideration, and that it was obtained by the bank, and was expressly understood by both parties to be, for the better evidencing the payment of the money to defendants, so that plaintiff could the more readily obtain its money from the Chicago bank, to whom it had given the credit." We do not think there was lack of consideration for the only reason urged, to wit, that defendants had already received the money and receipted for it. The draft was part of the same transaction, and as much consideration existed for it as for the receipt. The evidence is that plaintiff had no interest in the matter beyond the usual exchange, and, as we have seen, the money was deposited at Chicago, to be sent to defendants. Nor do we think plaintiff was the agent of the Chicago bank in the sense urged by defendants and as the court found in its conclusions of law. It is true the telegram was authority for plaintiff to draw on Dreyer & Co., but with the direction that it was "for Bell & Freeman." Plaintiff had no authority to draw otherwise. Plaintiff was as much the agent of defendants as of Dreyer & Co.

The real question in the case, we think, is, should defendants, in view of all the undisputed facts, be permitted to avoid the consequences of their voluntary acts? Obviously, the loss in the transaction, by the plaintiff considerations of justice, ought not to fall upon plaintiff, and we think the rules of law call upon us so to hold. The principle governing the case has been applied many times and under a great variety of circumstances. It is this: Where a person enters into an obligation with another upon an equal footing, i. e. where he does so free from any fraud practiced upon him and not being under any undue influence, and there are no relations of confidence and trust, and the means of knowledge are equally open to both, and he executes the instrument without reading it or having it read to him, and without exercising the means of knowledge open to him, neither the courts of law nor courts of equity will relieve him from the effects of his folly. Judge Story, in his Equity Jurisprudence (section 200a), quotes the rule from Kent's Commentaries as follows: "The common law affords to every one reasonable protection against fraud in dealing, but it does not go to the romantic length of giving indemnity against the consequences of indolence and folly, or a careless indifference to the ordinary and accessible means of information." Among other cases found in our Reports upon the question, are Hawkins v. Hawkins, 50 Cal. 558; Senter v. Senter, 70 Cal. 619, 11 Pac. 782; Association v. Esche, 75 Cal. 513, 17 Pac. 675; Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 176, 28 Pac. 222. The judgment and order should be reversed.

DE GREAYER v. FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO. OF NEW YORK. (S. F. 1,417.)

INSURANCE—VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Deceased was overtaken by a policeman while driving, and, in an altercation which ensued, the policeman shot and killed him. After deceased was shot, he fired his pistol at the policeman, but there was no positive evidence that he took the pistol from his pocket until he was shot. His pistol had a white handle, and one witness testified that before the shooting he saw deceased take something from his pocket and threaten to kill the policeman, while another testified that deceased went towards the policeman, unbuttoning his overcoat with his left hand, and that he raised his right when close to him, saying, "You will not stop my horse," and had nothing in his hand that witness could see; that after deceased was shot, and had fired at the policeman, witness saw something white in his hand. Held, that it was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to refuse to set aside a verdict finding that deceased had not voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, within the exception of a policy.

2. In an action on a policy excepting from its operation death by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, an instruction that whether the assured so exposed himself did not depend on his having exercised reasonable care or caution, or that he had been guilty of negligence or unlawful acts, but whether he voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, and death resulted in consequence thereof, is not erroneous, as misleading or confusing.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Harry G. De Greayer, by Septimus De Greayer, his guardian, against the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. C. Pardee, for appellant. Parker & Eells and A. G. Eells, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The plaintiff brought suit by his guardian to recover from the defendant $5,000, the principal sum of a policy of insurance against death from bodily injuries sustained through external, violent, and accidental means, issued to one Harry De Greayer, in which the plaintiff was named as the beneficiary. Said policy contained the exception that it did not cover "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," and the defendant pleaded and relied upon that exception as a defense to the action. A jury trial was had, and a verdict returned for the plaintiff. From the judgment entered thereon, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendant appeals.

1. Appellant's principal contention is that the evidence does not justify the verdict. The general rule, that where the evidence is conflicting the verdict will not be disturbed, is conceded, but it is contended that there is no conflict in the evidence. It is true that all the witnesses called to testify to the circumstances under which De Greayer was killed were called by the defendant, but that fact is not conclusive upon the question of conflict. Many a case has been lost because of differences between a party's own witnesses. Here, however, the defense was based upon an exception in the policy, and the burden of proof was upon the defendant. Under the general provisions of the policy, the defendant's liability is conceded, and it could be relieved from liability only by establishing its special defense by satisfactory evidence,—that evidence which ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in an unprejudiced mind. Code Civ. Proc. § 1835.

De Greayer died from the effects of a pistol shot at the hands of a mounted park policeman named Harper. The homicide occurred about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of January 30, 1892. De Greayer, accompanied by a lady, had been driving in the park, and at the hour named left the main driveway, and was going to the north exit, near the terminus of the car lines, and about opposite Dickey's saloon. Two witnesses were called by the defendant, who witnessed the shooting. One (Rev. O. C. Miller) testified: That he had been walking with his wife in the park, and was also near said north exit, when he heard the swift gallop of the policeman's horse to overtake the buggy driven by De Greayer, and saw him overtake it and seize De Greayer's lines near the bridle and stop his horse. That De Greayer jumped out of his buggy, and, as he was passing round his horse towards the policeman, he "threw up his hand this way [the witness put his hand to his breast],—as I would suppose, to unbutton his coat. Then he went closer to the policeman, and I saw him raise his hand up this way [showing] and he said, 'You will not stop my horse;' and then there was a flash of a pistol, and that flash was down towards the vest of the gentleman, and the gentleman fell or sunk down to the ground, on one knee." That the lady screamed, and the horse turned and ran with the buggy back into the park, and the policeman turned and pursued the horse and buggy, and as he pursued it the gentleman fired one or two shots at the policeman. That, when the gentleman got out of his buggy and stepped towards the policeman, he had nothing in his hand that he (the witness) could see. That while he was unbuttoning his overcoat with his left hand his right hand went up "this way" (showing). That his manner was excited and threatening. The witness was asked whether he saw anything in De Greayer's hand when he shot at the policeman as he pursued the runaway horse, and he replied: "It was getting toward dark, and I only saw something white. It might have been his cuff. I cannot say as to that." Upon cross-examination this witness drew a diagram upon the blackboard showing the roads, and the relative position of himself and the other parties at the time of the shooting; but, as the diagram is not reproduced in the record, we are not aided by it, however much it may have aided the court and jury in understanding and weighing, not only his testimony, but that of the other witness who was called by the defendant to testify to the same circumstances. It does appear from his testimony, however, that the shooting occurred in the park somewhere between the main driveway and the exit, and that this witness could not have been far from the point where it occurred. Alexander McCord, the other witness to the shooting, was at the time on the platform of Dickey's saloon, nearly opposite the exit from the park, and the full width of the street—80 feet—from it. He testified in chief as follows: "He [De Greayer] jumped out of his buggy, and when he got halfway from his horse he unbuttoned his coat. He had a long ulster on, and he pulled his coat open and put his hand back in his pocket here [showing], and pulled something out. I then thought it was a pocket handkerchief. It was something white. And he made the remark, 'Damn you! I will kill you.' He went right up to the policeman. The policeman's horse backed from him,—I don't know whether the policeman pulled his horse away,—and he put his hand up to him like that. [The witness raised his right arm.] Then I heard two reports; a pistol go off twice,—what I supposed was a pistol go off twice; and as the pistol went off the woman screamed, and the horse turned around and went back into the park. The policeman turned quickly and rode right after her and the buggy, and as he did so De Greayer went down on his hands and knees, and as he got up he pulled his pistol out and fired, I think twice, after him, and that is all I saw, and then I left." Upon cross-examination he admitted that he did not testify upon the examination of Harper before the police magistrate that De Greayer said, "I will kill you," but explained that he was not asked to make a statement, but was only asked questions; that De Greayer might have said, "I will not let you stop my horse," but that would not make any impression on his mind; that, at the time the policeman fired, "De Greayer was right up close to the policeman when the first shot took place,—maybe two inches, or maybe four, but very close to him. He was right beside of his horse." It was shown that De Greayer had a white-handled pistol, and that one chamber had been discharged. There was evidence tending to prove that De Greayer was not in the habit of carrying a pistol; that a short time before he was out driving, and saw a horse badly injured in a runaway, and no one had anything to kill him with; that he was a member of the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and carried a pistol for the purpose above indicated. Septimus De Greayer testified that deceased carried his time book and his pocket handkerchief in his hip pocket, and invariably carried cards in his hip pocket.

The point of the controversy upon the evidence was whether De Greayer assaulted the policeman with his pistol. Upon this question there was no positive evidence that he took the pistol out of his pocket until after he was shot, when, according to the testimony of McCord, De Greayer, when he was shot, went down on his hands and knees, "and as he got up he pulled his pistol out and fired, I think twice, after him." True, he afterwards said that as De Greayer passed around the head of his horse when he saw his hand in his pocket, and when he could see the white object, that he could not tell then whether the white object was a pocket handkerchief or a pistol, but it was not cards; it was too large for that, too much of it, and it did not look like cards. The facts were submitted to the jury under full and proper instructions, directing them to take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case, and whether the deceased did or did not, at the time he approached the policeman, exhibit or have in his hands a pistol. The jury saw and heard the witnesses, and knew better than we possibly can the weight that should be given to their evidence. There was not only a direct conflict in their evidence as to what De Greayer said, but Miller, who was much nearer, saw nothing in De Greayer's hand until after he was shot, while McCord says De Greayer, "as he got up, pulled out his pistol and fired." We think the jury were justified in failing to find that De Greayer assaulted the policeman with a pistol, and thereby voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of the exception in the policy, the burden being upon the defendant to prove that fact affirmatively. The learned judge before whom the cause was tried has a much larger discretion in setting aside verdicts than is given to appellate courts, and the real question in this court is whether he abused his discretion in refusing a new trial upon the ground above considered. A doubt on our part, even if entertained, would not justify a reversal.

2. The only other question noticed in appellant's brief is an exception to the following instruction, given to the jury at plaintiff's request: "The question of whether the circumstances of a particular accident bring it within one of the exceptions by which the company has guarded itself against an accident resulting from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger is not a question whether the person insured has exercised reasonable care or caution, nor whether he has been guilty of negligence or of unlawful acts, but it is a question whether or not the insurance company has shown—the burden being upon it to do so—that the insured voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger, and that the death resulted in consequence thereof." I see no error in this instruction. It is said by counsel for appellant that it is misleading and confusing; that, while it is true that "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger is more than negligence," yet the decisions do not hold that it is not negligence. Counsel refutes his own criticism of this instruction when he says that "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger is more than negligence." In other instructions, to which no objection is urged, the court fully and clearly informed the jury what the words "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," as used in the policy, mean. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

VAIL v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (L. A. 640.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 11, 1899.)
CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—UNIFORM OPERATION —CHANGE OF COMPENSATION OF OFFICERS.

1. St. 1897, p. 577, §§ 233, 234, changing the compensation of certain county officers from a per diem fee to a fixed salary, and providing that such change shall apply to incumbents at the time of the passage of the act, and also changing the rate of compensation of other officers already receiving fixed salaries, but providing that such change should not apply to present incumbents, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring all laws to have a uniform operation.

2. Nor does such act violate Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 29, forbidding the passage of special laws affecting the fees or salary of any officer.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by R. M. Vail against San Diego county. There was judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Haines & Ward, for appellant. A. H. Sweet, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Plaintiff here was the duly-elected, qualified, and acting county surveyor in and for the county of San Diego for the term commencing on the first Monday after the first day of January, 1895. When his term began the county government act of 1893 was in force, and by section 145 thereof, which seems to have been applicable to all the counties of the state, it was provided that "the county surveyor shall receive ten dollars per day for all work performed." St. 1893, p. 382. This is an action to recover from said county compensation at said rate for various services rendered by plaintiff, in virtue of his said office, at divers times from June 1, 1897, to October 29, 1897, inclusive. The court below rendered judgment for defendant. The question on appeal is whether on said June 1, 1897, the said provision of section 145 of the act of 1893 was, as regards the county of San Diego, repealed by the county government act of 1897, and replaced by the provision of section 165 of the latter act, to the effect that in counties of the class to which San Diego belongs the surveyor shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum "in lieu of all fees and per diem now allowed by law." St. 1897, p. 513.

By the terms of the act of 1897 the compensation of a considerable number of officers was changed from a per diem for work performed, as provided in the act of 1893, to a fixed salary; in other instances salaries provided in the earlier act were, in the later, directly augmented or diminished or otherwise changed; and the purport of sections 233 and 234 of the act of 1897, so far as they concern the present case, was to put into effect, and render operative upon incumbents then in office, said changes from a daily wage for work performed to a fixed salary, on and after June 1, 1897, while in the case of existing fixed salaries said sections 233 and 234 provided that the changes should not affect the incumbents. Plaintiff's point is that these provisions which purport to make the changes declared by the act of 1897 operative upon incumbents who had previously received a per diem, but not on those who were in receipt of a fixed salary, are in conflict with those clauses of the constitution requiring all laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation (article 1, § 11), and forbidding the passage of special laws affecting the fees or salary of any officer (article 4, § 25, subd. 29), and hence that his right, under the act of 1893, to receive $10 per day for services performed, remains unaffected.

Plaintiff's contention is susceptible of more than one reply. We shall, however, content ourselves with stating the view which seems the more direct answer to his line of argument. Firstly, a statute is uniform in its operation if it applies alike to all persons or objects within the class to which it relates. Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 147, 44 Pac. 915, and 45 Pac. 1057. The general provisions of said sections 233 and 234, by which the act of 1897 was made operative on the compensation of incumbents who previously had been paid "fees or per diem," affected equally all incumbents in that category, and such operation is therefore uniform. Secondly, the mode and measure of paying county officers is, in general, peculiarly a matter of discretion in the legislature. That body certainly may provide that some officers shall receive "fees or per diem," and that others shall receive regular stipends. San Luis Obispo Co. v. Darke, 76 Cal. 92, 18 Pac. 118. Necessarily, then, there must be some regulations which apply to the one class and not to the other. The statute here complained of conforms in a reasonable manner to the diverse circumstances of the two classes of officials. Thus, it may have seemed to the legislature that all those who by the provisions of the act of 1893 had been allowed a prescribed and certain rate of compensation, annexed unqualifiedly as an incident of the title to their respective offices, ought to receive the same unaffected by changes in the law until the end of their terms, and that others, whose emoluments, as in the case of plaintiff, had no such fixity, but were contingent on the public demand for their services, and their own ability to supply it, could with less inconvenience be subjected to the rule of the new law. It follows that the legislation under view does not proceed on a mere arbitrary distinction, but on one founded in intrinsic differences which naturally suggest the propriety of different adjustments of the law. It is therefore not special, within the prohibition of the fourth article of the constitution. Rode v. Siebe, 119 Cal. 518, 51 Pac. 869; People v. Central Pac. R. Co., 105 Cal. 584, 38 Pac. 905; Darcy v. City of San José, 104 Cal. 642, 38 Pac. 500. See, also, McCabe v. Jefferds, 122 Cal. 302, 54 Pac. 897; Cody v. Murphey, 89 Cal. 522, 26 Pac. 1081. Regarding the case of Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142, 8 Pac. 813, on which the plaintiff mainly relies, it is sufficient to say that we have shown that the reasons which controlled the decision there do not exist in the present case. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

BATHGATE et al. v. IRVINE et al. (L. A. 362.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 18, 1899.)

RIPARIAN RIGHTS—PRIOR APPROPRIATION—PRESCRIPTION—NONUSER BY UPPER RIPARIAN OWNER—TAKING WATER BEYOND WATERSHED—RETURNING WATER—FINDINGS—EVIDENCE—NOTICE OF CLAIM OF LOWER RIPARIAN OWNER—DISCLAIMER IN ANSWER—COSTS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

1. A lower riparian owner cannot acquire by prior appropriation the right to all the waters of a stream, as against an upper proprietor who held title to his land before such appropriation was made.

2. Where a lower riparian proprietor takes the water out of the stream at a point on his own land, and uses such water only as the upper riparian proprietor permits to pass down, he can acquire no right to the water by prescription, as such use is not adverse in the sense required to give a right by prescription.

3. Nonuser of the waters of a stream by the upper riparian owner cannot be invoked to strengthen the claim of appropriation or prescription by a lower riparian owner who takes the water out of the stream at a point on his own land, and uses such water only as the upper riparian owner permits to pass down.

4. A riparian owner, under the claim alone of riparian right, cannot, to the injury of another riparian owner, take the water for any purpose beyond the natural watershed of the stream.

5. Riparian rights do not extend beyond the watershed of the stream, and lands so situated are not riparian.

6. Where the lands of upper and lower riparian owners do not join, a finding of the court that the upper riparian owner must return the waters at the upper boundary line or above the lands of the lower riparian owner is sufficient, and it need not be found that the upper riparian owner must return the waters above his lower boundary line.

7. Where the transcript in an action to quiet title to the waters of a certain creek fails to show sufficient evidence to enable the court to find the exact or approximate portion of said waters to which the parties were each entitled, it is proper to render judgment determining whether the parties had any rights or not, with leave to either party at any time to bring another action to determine the proportions of said waters to which each may be entitled.

8. In an action by lower riparian owners against an upper riparian owner to quiet their title to the waters of a creek, evidence that plaintiffs have acquired by prescription all the riparian rights of all the riparian owners below them who are not parties to the suit is properly excluded, where such evidence is insufficient to enable the court to apportion the respective rights of the parties to the waters of said creek.

9. Posting a notice making formal claim to the waters of a creek by lower riparian owners at the point of diversion by them, below the lower line of an upper riparian owner, cannot strengthen their claim to the water by adverse use, nor confer any rights on them as against the upper riparian owner.

10. A notice posted by lower riparian owners on the land of an upper riparian owner, claiming the exclusive use of the waters of a creek flowing at the head of their ditch located below the upper riparian owner's lower boundary line, and forbidding him from diverting the water of the creek, does not add to plaintiff's right to divert it.

11. Mere knowledge by an upper riparian owner that lower riparian owners were using the water of the creek, and claimed the right to use it, is not evidence of acquiescence; nor is it sufficient to establish adverse use, or to create an estoppel.

12. Where an action by lower riparian owners against an upper riparian owner to quiet their title to the waters of a creek is tried on the assumption that defendant was the owner of the land at the time the action was brought, and both parties submit evidence on that assumption, and the point that defendant, in his answer, disclaimed all riparian rights, and alleged that before the court obtained jurisdiction of his person he had parted with his title to the property described in the complaint as belonging to him, is not suggested, until on appeal, it is not error for the court, in its findings, to treat the ownership of the land and the water rights of the respective parties as issues in the case.

13. Where, in an action to quiet title, maps were prepared by experts by direction of plaintiffs alone, and not by order of the court, and were not used by defendant, except as exhibits offered by plaintiffs, it was error to award as costs to plaintiffs the expense of such maps, and expert fees to the witnesses preparing them and testifying in relation thereto.

14. Code Civ. Proc. § 1025, leaving the determination of the question of costs, with certain exceptions, to the discretion of the trial court, does not justify the court in allowing costs not properly chargeable.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county.

Action by William Bathgate and 274 others against James Irvine and others to quiet plaintiffs' title to the waters of Santiago creek, in Orange county, and for an injunction. From the judgment, from an order denying new trial, and from certain parts of the order disallowing plaintiffs' costs, plaintiffs appeal; and from certain parts of the order allowing costs defendant James Irvine appeals. Modified.

White & Monroe, V. Montgomery, and William T. Kendrick, for appellant. E. H. Lamme, J. G. Scarborough, and Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to quiet the title of plaintiffs, 275 in number, to the waters of Santiago creek, in Orange county, and for an injunction. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, from the order denying motion for new trial, and from certain parts of the order disallowing plaintiffs' costs. Defendant appeals from certain parts of this latter order.

Santiago creek takes its rise in high mountain elevations, on government land. It flows by a natural, well-defined channel through and over defendant's land, comprising about 48,000 acres; thence over and through a tract of land, about one mile in width owned by persons not made parties to the suit; thence enters and flows over and through plaintiffs' lands, comprising in all about 2,000 acres. The court found that the predecessors in interest of plaintiffs about the year 1872 diverted and appropriated all the waters of this creek, about one mile below defendant's land, and used the same upon their said lands for irrigation and domestic purposes, and that said waters have been so used on plaintiffs' lands continuously for the past 21 years; that plaintiffs have expended large sums of money in cementing ditches and laying pipe lines from said point of diversion; that all the waters of said creek have been used by plaintiffs during the period for purposes of irrigation, domestic uses, and watering stock, "under claim of right, openly, notoriously, and continuously and uninterruptedly, * * * but said waters have not been used adversely to defendant James Irvine, or his predecessors in interest, * * * and it is not true that the said defendant and his predecessors * * * knew that the plaintiffs * * * used said waters * * * adversely to the said defendant or his predecessors, or that said defendant and his predecessors in interest, or either of them, * * * acquiesced in said diversion and use by said plaintiffs"; that the waters diverted by plaintiffs "continue to be absolutely essential for the proper irrigation and maintenance of plaintiffs' said crops, * * * and the use * * * has been * * * reasonable, and no diversion above said plaintiffs' point of diversion has, during any of the said times, been made by the said Irvine or others except as set forth in plaintiffs' complaint, * * * but that said diversion and use by plaintiffs have not been exclusive or adverse to said Irvine or his predecessors in interest." The allegation of the complaint as to defendant's diversion of the water is that about June 24, 1893, defendant constructed a dam in said stream on his own land about three miles above plaintiffs' lands, and by means of a ditch and flumes wrongfully and without the consent of plaintiffs, and against their objections, diverted the entire surface stream, and carried the water out of the watershed in which said stream is situated, and to a point where the waters do not return to the ancient channel of said stream, and that defendant continues to so divert all of the surface flow of said water, to plaintiffs' great injury. The court further found that plaintiffs are, and have been during all the times mentioned in the complaint, as riparian owners, entitled to a portion of the waters naturally flowing in said creek, but are not entitled to all the waters, and that defendant and his predecessors are and have been entitled, as like riparian owners, to a portion of said waters, "but the court is unable to find from the evidence adduced herein what is the exact or approximate part or portion of said waters to which the parties herein are each entitled"; that about

2,200 acres of defendant's lands through which said creek flows, and lying within the watershed of said creek, are irrigable, but none of said lands have been heretofore irrigated; that it is not true that defendant is estopped from asserting any right to any part of said waters, and it is not true that defendant and his predecessors in interest acquiesced in or encouraged plaintiffs to make the improvements alleged in the complaint, or were grossly careless or negligent in omitting to give notice to plaintiffs that they claimed any interest in said waters adverse to plaintiffs; that plaintiffs were not, by the acts of defendant and his predecessors, led to believe that defendant and his predecessors had no interest in the waters of said creek, and plaintiffs had no reason to so believe, but plaintiffs' rights were exercised in the belief that they had the exclusive right to said waters, and that they had no notice of the claim of defendant and his predecessors, "except such notice as knowledge of the ownership hereinbefore found of the lands of the said ranchos by defendant and by his predecessors in interest * * * imparts, and that plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest had such knowledge, but that said belief on their part was not reasonable; that defendant and his predecessors in interest used the water at any and all times whenever necessary for domestic and stock uses, and have claimed the right so to do, and have during the years 1879 to 1892 used the lands of defendant mainly for pasturing sheep, there being at times thirty thousand thereof, and used the said water as needed for them."

As conclusions of law the court found: First, that plaintiffs and defendant are riparian owners of lands through which said creek flows, and each is entitled to divert, take, and use a portion of said waters for the purpose of irrigating their said lands, and for domestic use and watering stock; second, plaintiffs are entitled to judgment that defendant is not entitled to divert or use the whole of said waters, except for domestic and stock uses, or to divert or conduct any portion of the waters of said creek outside the watershed of said creek, nor to use any portion of said waters upon any lands, except for domestic and stock uses and purposes, from which said waters will not or cannot return to the ancient channel of said creek at or above the lands of plaintiffs as set forth in plaintiffs' complaint, and to an injunction restraining defendant therefrom. Judgment was ordered accordingly, "with leave to any party herein at any time to bring another action to determine the parts and proportions of said waters to which they are respectively so entitled." It was further ordered that plaintiffs and defendant each pay one-half of the fees of the reporter, and that plaintiffs recover their costs incurred in maintaining the issues as to defendant's taking the whole of the water at his place of diversion, and his taking the water out of the watershed for irrigating, and none others.

1. Plaintiffs contend that, as lower riparian proprietors, they acquired the right to all the waters of the creek by prior appropriation, notwithstanding defendant and his predecessors in interest were upper riparian owners long before plaintiffs made their appropriation. We understand the rule to be settled, and is no longer open to discussion, in this state, that such right cannot be thus acquired. Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal. 72, 41 Pac. 18. And it is equally well settled that no right to the water can be acquired by prescription where the lower riparian proprietor has taken the water out of the stream at a point on his own land, and has used such water only as the upper riparian proprietor permitted it to pass down through his land to the lower owner. Such use by the latter is not adverse, in the sense required to give a right by prescription. Id. Nor can the nonuser of the water by the upper riparian owner of land be invoked to strengthen the claim of appropriation or prescription by the lower riparian owner under like circumstances. Id. In appropriating the water which flows across his land, the lower appropriator invades no right of the upper riparian proprietor. The latter has no right of action to prevent such use, for he is in no wise injured, and the former should not be permitted to acquire a right in this manner which the latter is powerless to prevent. The case is quite different where the upper owner appropriates the water. The lower owner is injured at once, and the law gives him a remedy; and, if he fails to avail himself of it, the appropriation may, by lapse of time, ripen into an absolute right. The further claim of plaintiffs is in the nature of estoppel. It is alleged that the predecessors of defendant, with full knowledge that plaintiffs had diverted all the water of the creek and had appropriated it all for proper uses, and were expending large sums of money in constructing ditches and lines of pipe, stood by, without protest or objection, and acquiesced in the use of the water by plaintiffs, and abandoned their rights therein to plaintiffs, and that by their acts they are now estopped from asserting any claim to the water. The court found against plaintiffs upon this branch of the case, and these findings are supported by the evidence.

2. The court found, as conclusion of law, that defendant, as riparian owner, has the right to take water away from the watershed of the creek "for stock and domestic purposes" upon his lands which are riparian to the stream, to a point from which the water will not and cannot return to the ancient channel of the creek, but has no right to so take it for purposes of irrigation. It was said in Chauvet v. Hill, 93 Cal. 407, 28 Pac. 1066, that "no one by virtue of riparian ownership can rightfully divert water beyond the watershed of the stream from which he takes it." It is claimed by defendant that Chauvet v. Hill, supra, is not in point, because in that case the water was taken beyond the watershed for manufacturing purposes, and there would be a surplus, which, of course, should be returned to the stream, whereas, when used for domestic and stock purposes, the reason of the rule would not apply, because there would be no surplus water to return to the stream,—it would all be consumed. For like reason, defendant claims that he may take the water beyond the watershed for irrigation, provided he consumes it all. On the other hand, it is contended that land situated beyond the watershed cannot be said to be riparian, although part of a contiguous tract, some of which is riparian; that land which contributes nothing to the stream by drainage or seepage, but carries all its waters elsewhere to other streams, ought not to have the benefits attaching to lands which contribute by drainage and seepage to that stream; that, if the riparian owner may take water for any one use because he is such owner, his right to so take water for any other use, no matter what, must be governed by the same rule, and, therefore, if he cannot take it beyond the watershed for manufacturing purposes, neither can he for domestic and stock purposes nor for irrigation. The rule of the common law as to riparian rights, in its extreme rigor, has not been found to be adapted to the conditions existing in this state. At common law the riparian owner was limited in the use of the water of a stream to domestic purposes and watering stock, and might utilize it for power. We have added to these purposes that of reasonable use for irrigation (Gould v. Stafford, 77 Cal. 66, 18 Pac. 879, and other cases); but we are not aware that it has ever been held that water could be taken entirely away from the watershed for any of these purposes under the claim of riparian right. It is in evidence here (and the same situation frequently occurs in this state) that there is irrigable land within defendant's tract to which water may be profitably taken from Santiago creek where there is no outlet whatever to any stream, and which is not within the watershed of this creek. Water taken to this land, it is claimed, would be entirely consumed if used for irrigation or for domestic or stock purposes. If it be true, as defendant claims, that, where the water is consumed, it is immaterial whether it be within or without the watershed, the reason may be said to apply as well where the use is for irrigation as where it is for watering stock or domestic purposes. We think the rule should be that under the claim alone of riparian right the owner of the land cannot, to the injury of another riparian owner, take the water beyond the natural watershed of the stream for any purpose, and that riparian rights cannot extend beyond the watershed of the stream, and that lands so situated are not to be regarded as riparian. If it ever was a rule anywhere (which we doubt) that the riparian owner, under riparian right alone, could take the water of the riparian stream to any part of his land contiguous to his riparian land, to the extent of taking the water entirely away from the watershed of such stream, provided he there consumed it all, it is a rule inapplicable to our conditions, and should not be adopted here. The contention of defendant, carried to its logical conclusion, would make all the lands embraced in a large tract riparian to any one or more of the creeks flowing through it, at the pleasure of the owner, regardless of the lateral extent of the land, and regardless of the natural barriers which divide the entire body into distinct and separate drainage systems, each drawing its natural supply of water from distinct and separate sources. Such an interpretation of the law of riparian rights can find no support from any necessity existing in this state, and would, if adopted, lead to grave abuses, and would result in serious injustice to other riparian owners. "The word 'riparian' is defined as relating to the bank of a stream or other water,—river, lake, or sea; as, riparian proprietors, rights, states." And. Dict. The Latin word "ripa" means "shore of a river." Id. Now, can it be said that land whose watershed does not drain into a stream is riparian to such stream? Does it relate to the stream, or in any sense form part of its bank? Can land be riparian to two creeks whose watershed is entirely different and have no drainage connection whatever? "The rights of a riparian proprietor, so far as they relate to any natural stream, exist jure naturæ, because his land has by nature the advantage of being washed by the stream." Lord Selden in Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 1 App. Cas. 662. But it cannot be said that land lying beyond the watershed of the stream has any such advantage. We think the court erred in holding that defendant could take the water of Santiago creek beyond its watershed for domestic and stock uses, and did not err in holding that he might not do so for irrigation purposes.

3. It is said that the court erred in failing to find that the defendant should not divert the water of the creek to a point where it would not flow back to the channel above his lower boundary line; citing Vernon Irrigation Co. v. City of Los Angeles (Cal.) 39 Pac. 768. In that case the upper and lower riparian tracts joined each other, and necessarily the upper owner was required to return the water at or above his lower boundary line. In the case here the court found that defendant must return the waters at the upper boundary line, or above the lands of plaintiffs. This was sufficient, under the facts disclosed in this case.

4. Error is assigned for failure to find the extent of plaintiffs' rights. The court found as to the rights of the parties as riparian owners, but that it "was unable to determine the exact or approximate part or portion of said waters to which the parties herein are each entitled." It seems to be conceded that upon the pleadings the court might have determined this question, but an examination of the transcript fails to show sufficient evidence to have enabled the court to do so. The court could do no more than pass upon the evidence as submitted to it, and if the evidence was insufficient to justify the court in making the proper decree, adjusting all the rights of the parties, it could only do as it did, namely, render judgment "with leave to any party herein at any time to bring another action to determine the proportions of said waters to which each is entitled."

5. There are numerous assignments of error in rulings upon evidence, some of which are disposed of by what has already been said. Evidence was excluded that plaintiffs had acquired by prescription all the riparian rights of all the riparian owners below them. These owners were not parties to the suit. The evidence might have been admissible to show the extent of the plaintiffs' rights, had the evidence otherwise been sufficient to enable the court to apportion the respective rights of the parties to the suit; but, as the evidence in other respects was insufficient for that purpose, we cannot see that plaintiffs were injured. The principal errors complained of relate to evidence touching adverse use, estoppel, and abandonment. Evidence was offered that plaintiffs' predecessors in interest posted a written notice at the point of diversion of the water, about a mile below defendant's lower line, making formal claim to the water of the creek. This notice was excluded upon defendant's objection on the ground of its immateriality, and that there is no evidence that it is a correct copy. This notice bears date August 5, 1878. The ditch referred to in the notice was in fact taken out, and the water was appropriated, and a witness testified that he saw this notice. He also testified that he saw a notice, bearing date November 18, 1878, posted on the door of a house on defendant's land, occupied by one Keith, a tenant of defendant's father, James Irvine. It was directed to James Irvine, George Irvine (who was manager for James), and Henry Keith. It stated, among other things, that "the undersigned claim and have acquired the right to the exclusive use of the water flowing at the head of our ditch in the Santiago creek," and forbade the parties above named from diverting the water above said ditch. This notice was signed by the same persons who signed the formal notice of appropriation first above mentioned. The evidence tends to show that both Keith and George Irvine had knowledge of this notice, but there is no evidence that the then owner of the land, James Irvine, had knowledge of it, or that his manager, George Irvine, had authority to represent him in matters of this kind. It also appeared that this witness went up about a week later to the point where he had before found the water diverted onto defendant's land, and he then found that the water was turned back and was not being diverted, and never was again diverted by defendant's predecessors, or at all, until recently. I think it may be reasonably inferred from the evidence that defendant's predecessor knew that the water was being diverted to and used upon plaintiffs' land, and the court found that no objection was ever made to such use by any one. It appeared also from the evidence that George Irvine was informed that plaintiffs' predecessors in interest claimed the waters of the creek as they were then using them. One of the appropriators of the water was asked, as a witness, what conversation he had with George Irvine with reference to the claim made by plaintiffs to these waters, but the court refused the evidence on the ground that it was immaterial, and that it had not been shown that notice to George Irvine would bind his principal. At another point in the trial a witness was called to testify as to what he heard James Irvine, Sr., say to his attorney in San Francisco some time about 1878, at which time he consulted his attorney "with reference to his right to use waters of Santiago creek. It was simply a conversation stating facts, and speculating as what best to do." Witness was asked the following question by plaintiffs: "Did you hear Mr. Irvine state anything with reference to his intentions in relation to the use or disuse of the waters of Santiago creek?" An objection was sustained to the question as irrelevant and immaterial, and on the further ground that Mr. Irvine was dead (he died in 1886), and it had not been shown that he was fully advised of his exact rights, in accordance with the requirements of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 1853. It was stated by counsel that the purpose was to show that Irvine received certain advice from his counsel "with reference to the use of the waters of Santiago creek, and in respect to his rights in said waters, and that he made certain declarations after having so consulted with his counsel," and that he spoke of the objections which had been made to the diversion by Keith, referred to in the notice of November 18th. Counsel objected on the same grounds, and the added ground that the conversation was privileged, as between attorney and client. As to these matters it is not necessary to speak at length. Posting a notice at the point of diversion by plaintiffs could not strengthen their claim. If it had come to the notice of James Irvine at the time, it was of no more force than notice that plaintiffs had actually appropriated the water. He could no more prevent the one than the other, and neither step conferred any rights against Irvine as the upper riparian owner. And the notice posted on the Keith cabin, forbidding Irvine from diverting water, would not add to plaintiffs' right to divert it. It might have the effect and seemingly succeeded in preventing Irvine from acquiring a right by appropriation, but it could not add anything to any claim of plaintiffs. Nor would knowledge by Irvine that plaintiffs were using the water, and claimed the right to use it, be evidence of acquiescence, or establish adverse use or constitute matter of estoppel. There is no evidence in the record, and none was offered, to show that James Irvine, Sr., or his successors in interest, ever did or said anything which misled plaintiffs in making their diversion, or that they ever expended any money on any representation by Irvine that he would not claim any rights as against them, or had abandoned his rights to them, or had acquiesced in their taking the water to the exclusion of his rights. It may be that Irvine made some declarations to his counsel in the presence of the witness, as already referred to, from which some such inference might be drawn; but we think those declarations, whatever they were, were rightly excluded, if for no other reason than that the court was not informed that they were intended to prove any such state of facts. Before we can say there was error in the ruling, some injury should be pointed out. Counsel should have been more specific in explaining to the court what he desired to prove. We can see no error in the rulings or in the findings as to adverse use by plaintiffs, nor can we see any elements of estoppel in the conduct of defendant or his predecessors.

6. Plaintiff contends that defendant disclaimed in his answer all riparian rights to the waters of the creek, denied all the facts upon which riparian rights depend, and alleged that before the court obtained jurisdiction of his person he had parted with all his title to the property described in the complaint as belonging to him. For these reasons it is urged that the court erred in finding and adjudging that defendant had any riparian rights, or is owner of the property. These matters are made the subject of elaborate argument on both sides. We do not feel called upon to set out the various allegations in the complaint and its amendments and in the answer and its amendments. There is room for argument pro and con of the contention, by reason of apparent inconsistencies and denials in the answer. It appears, however, that the cause was tried on the assumption that defendant was the owner of the land at the time the action was brought. Plaintiffs and defendant submitted evidence on that assumption, and the point was not suggested until upon this appeal. Section 739, Code Civ. Proc., provides, "If the defendant in such action [to quiet title] disclaim in his answer any interest or estate in the property, or suffer judgment to be taken against him without answer, the plaintiff cannot recover costs." It is quite clear that no such disclaimer as is contemplated by this section was made, for plaintiffs had "judgment for their costs herein taxed at the sum of three hundred sixty-three and $\frac{45}{100}$ dollars," and are now contending for a still greater amount. We think the court was justified in treating the ownership of the land and the water rights of the respective parties as issues in the case.

7. Plaintiffs filed a cost bill for $1,599.75, of which the court allowed $363.45. Both parties take exception to the allowance, and have appealed from the order. The cost bill was constructed on the conclusion of law found as follows: "That the plaintiffs and defendant each pay one-half of the fees of the reporter, and that plaintiffs recover of the defendant their costs incurred in maintaining the issues as to defendant's taking the whole of the water at his place of diversion, and his taking the water out of the watershed for irrigating, and none others." Among the items in plaintiffs' memorandum of costs are 50 cents notary fees; $2.75 sheriff's fees; $38.30 clerk's fees; $130.70 fees to H. C. Kellogg, and $130.70 to S. E. Keefer, and $130.10 to J. P. Leslie, attendance as experts; to J. P. Williams, $26.80 as witness; and $433.20 to Kellogg and Keefer, as surveyors, in obtaining data to enable them to compile the maps offered as exhibits by plaintiffs, and for drafting and making said maps, and for persons employed to assist them in the surveys. Defendant moved to strike out all the above items, as well as all the others in the memorandum. The court denied the motion as to the notary's, clerk's, and sheriff's fees, and witness fees of Williams, and reduced the expert's fees of Kellogg and Keefer to $26.70 each, and Leslie's to $27.10, and allowed one-half the item of $433.20 to Kellogg and Keefer, as surveyors, in obtaining data to prepare maps, and granted the motion as to other items. The evidence was that the maps referred to were not made under direction of defendant, but were prepared by direction of plaintiffs alone, and defendant made no use of them, except as exhibits at the trial, offered by plaintiffs. It appeared that the experts were not acting under direction of the court. It also appeared that defendant paid one-half of the reporter's fees in the course of the trial, which was in accordance with the order of the court. The witnesses called by plaintiffs as experts were entitled to fees for daily attendance, and for mileage as witnesses. They were not entitled to be paid as experts, nor for the expenses incurred by them in making surveys or preparing maps. It was therefore error to allow one-half the item of $433.20, and to allow fees as experts. Faulkner v. Hendy, 79 Cal. 265, 21 Pac. 754; Miller v. Ditch Co., 91 Cal. 103, 27 Pac. 536. These are the only items of cost bill called to our attention in defendant's brief, although all the items are included in his motion. In the outcome of the suit, plaintiffs failed in their principal contention, and prevailed upon the question of defendant's right to take water beyond the watershed for irrigation purposes, but failed as to his right to so take it for domestic and stock purposes. Upon these two questions we have held that the trial court was correct as to the first, but erred as to the second. The theory of the trial court in adjusting the cost bill seems to have been to award costs to plaintiffs only for expenditures in maintaining the two issues in which they prevailed. If there were costs also properly chargeable to defendant, arising out of the erroneous ruling of the trial court pointed out in this opinion, they should be given to plaintiffs. It is impossible for us to say from the evidence what these costs should be. Plaintiffs complain that the court struck out a number of items in their cost bill aggregating quite a large amount, and they claim that the evidence of witnesses whose fees are disallowed gave testimony directly bearing upon the issues found in plaintiffs' favor. This may be so, and it may also be true that the survey work done and the preparation of the maps used at the trial contributed materially to a proper decision of the case. But section 1025, Code Civ. Proc., leaves the determination of the question of costs to the discretion of the trial court, and it has been decided here that the prevailing party in a case like this is not necessarily entitled to costs. Abram v. Stuart, 96 Cal. 235, 31 Pac. 44. This section, however, would not justify the court in allowing costs not properly chargeable as such, as in the instance above noted, for surveying and making maps at the instance of one of the parties not acting under direction of the court. The judgment should be modified so as to enjoin defendant from taking water for any purpose whatever beyond the watershed of Santiago creek. As thus amended, the judgment should be affirmed, with directions to retax the cost bill in accordance with the views herein suggested.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is modified so as to enjoin defendant from taking water for any purpose whatever beyond the watershed of Santiago creek. As thus amended, the judgment is affirmed, with directions to retax the cost bill in accordance with the views herein suggested.

HAYS v. PLUMMER et al. (L. A. 532.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1899.)
BILLS AND NOTES—ASSIGNMENTS—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—DEFENSES—WANT OF CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE.

1. Where a negotiable note was assigned to the holder by a separate instrument, and not by indorsement, such holder is not a purchaser of negotiable paper in due course, so as to estop the maker to plead the defense of failure of consideration.

2. Where a note given for buildings to be constructed is assigned without indorsement to plaintiff, with knowledge that the consideration had not been performed, and no notice of the assignment is given to the maker until after the contract has been broken by the payee, the fact that the plaintiff took the note before the payee's actual breach of contract does not prevent the maker from pleading failure of consideration thereto.

3. When a note was given in consideration of an agreement by the payee to erect buildings, and he assigned it to plaintiff as collateral security, but failed to do the work, the fact that there was an understanding between the maker and the payee that the note might be so assigned does not prevent the maker from pleading failure of consideration, as against the holder, as a defense to the note.

4. The payee of a note given for the construction of buildings executed a bond to the maker for the completion of his contract, and, before the work was begun, assigned the note to plaintiff as collateral security. The payee having failed to do the work, the maker recovered a judgment against him on the bond. Held, that since such damages were not connected with the note, and had no relation to the maker's defense of want of consideration in an action thereon, evidence of such recovery was not admissible.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by M. M. Hays against Eugene R. Plummer and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, from an order denying a new trial, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Murphy & Gottschalk, for appellant. Dunnegan & Dunnegan, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. Action upon a note and mortgage made and executed August 5, 1896, by the defendants Eugene R. Plummer and his wife, Maria A. Plummer, to the defendant John P. McCormick, and assigned by him August 14, 1896, to plaintiff. Judgment was rendered in favor of the Plummerts, and from this judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, and also from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment and to enter a judgment for plaintiff under section 663, Code Civ. Proc., plaintiff appeals.

On the said 5th day of August, 1896, the defendant Eugene R. Plummer entered into a written contract with the defendant McCormick, by which the latter agreed to construct and complete certain buildings on a lot owned by the former for a certain sum of money; the buildings to be commenced within 10 days, and finished within 50 days. It was recited in the contract that Plummer had given a note secured by a mortgage on the lot for the amount to be paid for the buildings, and he did give such note and mortgage on said day in consideration of McCormick's promise to construct the buildings. McCormick agreed to give a bond for his performance of the contract. The note was on its face negotiable in form, being payable to McCormick or order; but the mortgage referred to the note, and contained some stipulations which, if expressed on the face of the note, would perhaps have made the latter nonnegotiable. On the 14th of the month plaintiff loaned McCormick $500, for which he took the latter's note; and, to secure the loan, McCormick assigned to plaintiff the note and mortgage above mentioned, and upon which this suit is brought. At the time of the assignment, plaintiff knew all the facts as above stated, and knew that the consideration for the note and mortgage was the promise of McCormick to construct the buildings. McCormick did not construct the buildings within the time mentioned, or at any time. There was no indorsement of the note by McCormick, but the assignment of the note and mortgage was made by means of a separate written instrument. The Plummerts set up a failure of consideration as a defense to the action.

The first question is whether plaintiff is in the position of one who has taken in due course a negotiable instrument before maturity, freed from any equities between the original parties, or whether he merely stands in the shoes of McCormick. Counsel for respondents contends that, even if the note be considered negotiable, as plaintiff knew its consideration when he took it he is liable to defendants' claim of want of consideration, and, moreover, that under our peculiar statutory provision (Code Civ. Proc. § 726), that there shall be only one action for the recovery of a debt secured by mortgage, in which the mortgage must be foreclosed before there can be a personal judgment, a note, though in form negotiable, is in law not negotiable, if secured by a mortgage of even date, which makes it payable primarily out of a peculiar fund, at least as against one having knowledge of the mortgage; but we need not examine these contentions, because, for another reason, plaintiff is not in the position of a holder in due course of negotiable paper. An instrument payable to a certain person or order can take its place in the hands of a subsequent holder with the peculiar qualities and incidents of negotiable paper only where it has been regularly indorsed; and such indorsement can be made only by the writing of the indorser's name on the back of the instrument, if there be room to do so, and, if not, then on a paper so attached to it as in effect to become part of it,—called sometimes an "allonge." Whether or not a name written on the face of the note might not in some instances be an indorsement need not be discussed. At all events, the name must be so written as to become in effect a part of the instrument. This is not only the rule under the general authorities, but it is so declared by our Code. Civ. Code, § 3110. In the case at bar there was merely an assignment of the mortgage and note made on a separate writing, without indorsement on the note. The general rule that such assignment without indorsement did not give plaintiff the rights of an indorser in due course is elementary. In Story on Promissory Notes (7th Ed. § 120), the author, speaking of a note payable to a person or his order, says, "If there be an assignment thereof without an indorsement, the holder will thereby acquire the same rights only as he would acquire upon an assignment of a note not negotiable." Many of the authorities on the point are collated in notes to Rand. Com. Paper (2d Ed.) §§ 788, 789, and the rule is stated in the text as follows: "If a bill is payable to order, and transferred without indorsement, its transfer will be subject to defenses existing against the transferrer. * * *

An assignment, in like manner, unaccompanied by indorsement, is subject to defense. This is true, for instance, where the assignment is contained in an assignment of the mortgage securing the note." Paragraph 788. And in paragraph 789 it is stated: "Unless a bill or note is payable to bearer, its indorsement is necessary, to constitute the holder a bona fide holder in due course of business; and the absence of such indorsement amounts to a notice of equities, and leaves the paper subject to defense in the hands of such holder." Many of the authorities are also cited in Franklin v. Twogood, 18 Iowa, 515, where the rule as stated in the above quotation from Story is declared. Authorities to the point are also cited in Osgood's Adm'rs v. Artt, 17 Fed. 575, where Mr. Justice Harlan says: "It is a settled doctrine of the law merchant that the bona fide purchaser for value of negotiable paper, payable to order, if it be indorsed by the payee, takes the legal title unaffected by any equities which the payor may have as against the payee. But it is equally well settled that the purchaser, if the paper be delivered to him without indorsement, takes by the law merchant only the rights which the payee has, and therefore it is subject to any defense the payor may rightfully assert as against the payee." Plaintiff therefore stands in the shoes of McCormick, and the Plummers have all the defenses against the former that they would have in a suit brought by the latter; and the failure of the consideration for which the note was given is clearly a legal and just defense. The case cited by appellant, where it was held that an absolute and unconditional executed conveyance in fee of land is not invalid because the grantee fails afterwards to pay the purchase price, is not in point. Here there was a mere executory promise to pay, with an incidental mortgage, which is not a conveyance. Nor is there anything in the point that plaintiff took the note before any actual breach of the contract. In the first place, he took it with knowledge that a failure to construct the buildings would be a defense to a suit on the note; and, in the second place, there was no notice of the assignment given to Plummer until the first interest became due, which was long after the breach, and the defense therefore was one "existing * * * before notice of the assignment." Code Civ. Proc. § 368.

The court did not err in ruling out evidence that there was an understanding between Plummer and McCormick that the latter might use the note and mortgage as security for borrowed money. That did not change the fact that plaintiff took the note and mortgage simply for what it was worth as security, having knowledge of the consideration for the note as above stated.

Neither did the court err in sustaining an objection to plaintiff's offer to prove that McCormick had given a bond as provided by the contract, and that Plummer had commenced an action against McCormick and his surety on the bond, and had recovered judgment. The bond provided for in the contract was merely "for the faithful performance of this contract, and for the payment of all labor and material furnished him in the erection, construction, and completion of the buildings erected under this agreement." The bond was a distinct instrument from the note and mortgage, and merely provided for such damages as Plummer might suffer from a failure of McCormick to complete the work, or from his failure to pay for labor, materials, etc.; and a recovery upon such a bond would be for damages not connected with the note and mortgage, and having no relation to a defense of want of consideration in a suit brought upon the note. The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

In re MARCHALL'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,706.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 15, 1899.)
WITNESSES—COMPARISON OF HANDWRITING—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. One who was personally familiar with the handwriting of a deceased person is a competent witness as to such writing, although he was familiar with her signature only.

2. It is immaterial that handwriting which was submitted to a witness as the writing of a certain person had not been directly proven genuine, when such fact was afterwards fully established.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Application for the probate of an instrument presented as the last will of Marea Marchall, deceased. From an order refusing probate, proponent appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. D. Collins, for appellant. John H. Durst and T. J. Lyons, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal is prosecuted from an order refusing admission to probate of a written instrument claimed by proponent to be the olographic will of Marea Marchall, deceased. The document was rejected probate upon the ground that it was not written by the deceased, and the finding of the trial court to this effect is directly assailed as unsupported in the evidence. Erroneous rulings in the admission of evidence are also relied upon to sustain an order reversing the judgment. The court found that the will was a forgery, and under the evidence we are not authorized in disturbing that finding. The evidence is not only substantially conflicting, but it may be said that it largely preponderates in favor of the finding of the court. There is no merit in appellant's second contention as to the erroneous admission of evidence. Le Breton, the witness, was qualified under the law to give an opinion as to the genuineness of the document. He was personally familiar with the handwriting of deceased. The fact that he was only familiar with her signature is not material. Again, the mere circumstance that certain exemplars which were submitted to him had not, at the time, been proven by direct evidence to be the genuine signatures of the deceased, amounts to nothing. Subsequently the fact was established by uncontradicted evidence, and the order in which the proof was placed before the court does not constitute more than technical error, even if it amounted to that. There is no merit whatever in the appeal. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

WHITE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
et al. (S. F. 1,865.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 29, 1899.)

PROCESS—ALIAS SUMMONS—MORTGAGE
FORECLOSURE—DISMISSAL—LIMITATIONS—PROHIBITION.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 408, providing for the issuance of alias summons where original has been lost or returned without being served, a court has no power to issue an alias summons where the original has never been served or returned, and more than four years have elapsed since it was issued.

2. In a mortgage foreclosure the original summons issued was never served or returned. Instead of voluntarily appearing with his co-defendants, the mortgagor procured a third party to pay the mortgage, and to extend the time of payment. The mortgage and cause of action were then assigned to said third party, who waited four years before procuring an alias summons to be issued and served. Held, that the mortgagor was entitled to have the action dismissed as to him, under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 6, providing that all actions shall be dismissed on motion of any party interested unless summons shall have been issued within one year, and served and returned within three years, after the commencement of the action, or unless appearance has been made by the defendant or defendants within said three years.

3. Where a mortgagor has a present right to the dismissal of an action of foreclosure on the ground of plaintiff's failure to serve the summons within three years after the commencement of the action, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 6, a writ of prohibition to arrest the prosecution of such action as to him will be issued, notwithstanding the mortgagor could appeal from the judgment in the foreclosure suit.

In bank.

Petition for a peremptory writ of prohibition by Charles G. White against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and C. B. Hibbard, the judge thereof. Granted.

W. H. Barrows, for petitioner.

BEATTY, C. J. Original proceeding by prohibition. The petitioner made a mortgage of his land. The mortgagee commenced an action to foreclose July 8, 1893, and summons was issued the same day, but the same was never served or returned. Some parties named as co-defendants with the mortgagor, upon the ground that they claimed some interest in the mortgaged premises, voluntarily appeared in the action, but the petitioner never appeared. Instead of appearing in the action, he procured a third party to advance the money to satisfy the claims of the mortgagee, and to give him further time to make payment. Said third party paid the amount due the mortgagee, took an assignment of the mortgages and of the cause of action, and allowed matters to rest in that situation until the 7th of August, 1897, when she filed an amended complaint and procured the issuance of an alias summons. This alias summons was quashed on motion of the petitioner, and a second alias summons issued and served, which was likewise quashed for some informality. At the time of moving to quash the second alias summons the petitioner also moved the court to dismiss the action upon the ground that no summons had been served or returned within three years, and upon the ground that no new or alias summons could issue. The court refused to dismiss the action, and the judge announced that he would order the issuance of a third alias summons upon the payment to petitioner by plaintiff of the sum of $25 costs. Plaintiff tendered that sum, but petitioner refused to accept it, and commenced this proceeding to prohibit the superior court from ordering the issuance of another alias summons.

We do not see how the conclusion can be avoided that the superior court had no power to issue an alias writ (Code Civ. Proc. § 408), and no discretion to refuse to dismiss the action as against the petitioner (see last subdivision of section 581, Code Civ. Proc.). The case is in all essential respects the same as Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 45 Pac. 470, in which this provision of the statute was held to be constitutional and mandatory. Upon the facts set forth in the answer of respondents, their counsel contend that petitioner had actual notice from the very beginning of the pendency of the foreclosure suit, and that it was at his request, and for his benefit, that plaintiff therein failed to procure service of the summons; for which reason they claim petitioner is estopped from alleging the failure to make service and return of the writ. It is true that the affidavits set forth in the answer exhibit the conduct of the petitioner in a very unfavorable light. From a moral point of view, it is wholly indefensible, and we are not surprised that the judge of the superior court should have felt strongly disinclined to dismiss the action against him. But it remains true that he is only claiming what the law commands, and his case is no worse than that of any debtor who pleads the statute of limitations against a just demand. The circumstances relied upon as an estoppel are substantially the same as in the Li Po Tai Case, supra, in which the statute was strictly applied and enforced.

Respondents also claim that, notwithstanding the issuance of an alias summons may be an excess of jurisdiction, still the writ of prohibition should not issue, because the petitioner has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law by appeal from any judgment that may finally be rendered against him in the action. Such remedy by appeal is, perhaps, plain, but can hardly be called speedy, or adequate. Petitioner has a present right to the dismissal of the action as against himself, and the removal of the lien by which his property is incumbered, and such right cannot be protected or enforced by an appeal from a possible judgment in the action to foreclose. We think the case is a proper one for the issuance of a peremptory writ of prohibition, and it is so ordered.

BANK OF COMMERCE OF SAN FRANCISCO. v. SCOFIELD et al. (Sac. 494.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE BY ACTION—OPTION TO DECLARE DEBT DUE—CONSIDERATION FOR MORTGAGE.

1. The commencement of an action to foreclose a mortgage providing that on default in the payment of interest the whole debt should become due at the mortgagee's option is notice of the exercise of the option to treat the whole debt as due, and no previous notice is necessary.

2. The compromise of an action to foreclose a mortgage, brought by one who is in position to claim that he is an equitable assignee of the mortgagee by reason of having paid the debt at the instance of mortgagor's lessees, who had agreed with the mortgagor to pay, is a good consideration for the giving of a new note and mortgage by the mortgagor to such assignee for the debt, with interest and costs.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county.

Action by Bank of Commerce of San Francisco against J. W. Scofield and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. F. Ramage, for appellants. F. W. Street, for respondent.

GRAY, C. Defendants appeal from a judgment decreeing the foreclosure of a mortgage and from an order denying a new trial.

1. The mortgage in this case provided that on default in the payment of any installment of interest as agreed the whole sum of principal and interest should become due, at the option of the mortgagee. The note which the mortgage secured was dated November 29, 1895, and the principal thereof, according to its terms, was payable "on or before five years after date," and interest at 10 per cent. per annum was payable annually. This action was commenced on December 28, 1896. It was alleged in the complaint that no part of the interest had been paid, and that the principal and interest mentioned in said note and mortgage were due and unpaid from defendants to plaintiff. The commencement of the action was notice of the exercise of the option to treat the whole amount of the note as due on default in the payment of the first annual installment of interest, and no previous notice or demand was necessary. Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 5, 28 Pac. 93. The complaint, therefore, was not defective in the respect claimed by appellants, as it appeared therefrom that the mortgage debt was due.

2. The findings fully dispose of the defense set out in the answer that the note and mortgage were given without consideration. The facts as the court found them to be are recited, and it is, in substance, stated in the findings that the note and mortgage sued on herein were given in compromise of a pending action based on a note and mortgage of defendants to one W. W. Hall, and assigned to D. W. and J. J. Scofield, and that the note and mortgage upon which the present action is based were given for the "sum of $1,494.60, being the amount due said D. W. Scofield on account of the payment made by him to said W. W. Hall of his said mortgage, with interest thereon, and costs of plaintiffs in said action."

3. The third and last contention of appellants is that "there was no consideration moving between appellants and D. W. Scofield to support the note and mortgage" on which this suit is brought. The plaintiff sues as the assignee of D. W. Scofield, who is a son of appellants. O. B. and J. J. Scofield, two other sons of appellants, some three or four years before the execution of this mortgage to D. W. Scofield, entered into an oral contract with their father and mother whereby they leased the premises described in said mortgage for five years, agreeing, among other things, to pay off a mortgage for about $1,300, which appellants had previously made upon a portion of said lands to one W. W. Hall. By the terms of this oral agreement, appellants were to deed to their sons, J. J. and O. B. Scofield, a certain 160 acres of the said lands, as alleged in appellants' answer, or one-half of all the said lands as the contract was understood by D. W. Scofield. After J. J. and O. B. Scofield had been in possession some 3½ years under the lease, Hall demanded payment of his mortgage, and, the sons announcing their inability to comply with their agreement and pay the mortgage, the father and mother went to San Francisco, and procured $1,300, the amount due on the mortgage, to be forwarded to Modesto for the purpose of discharging the mortgage debt. In the meantime J. J. and O. B. Scofield had applied to their brother, D. W. Scofield, for help, and at their request D. W. Scofield paid Hall $1,300, and took from him a satisfaction of the mortgage. The evidence shows that he did not procure a written assignment of the Hall mortgage. D. W. Scofield, expecting that the appellants would deed one-half of the land to J. J. Scofield, requested them to do so, that he might have a mortgage from J. J. Scofield securing him for the money paid to Hall. Appellants refused to make the deed as requested, and thereupon D. W. and J. J. Scofield, as assignees of W. W. Hall, commenced an action against the appellants to recover a balance of $1,341, together with interest due on the Hall note, and to foreclose the mortgage given by appellants to secure the same. The action came to trial, and a recess was asked, and by the court granted, for the purpose of compromising and settling the case. A meeting of the parties and their attorneys was had in the office of the attorney for J. W. and S. L. Scofield, the outcome of which was the giving by the appellants of the note and mortgage upon which the present suit is based, and the dismissal of the action then on trial. The question is, was that compromise a good consideration for the note and mortgage in suit here? We think this question will have to be answered in the affirmative. Though there was no written assignment of the mortgage, yet it appears that D. W. Scofield had paid out $1,300 of his own money, and that the appellants had received the benefit thereof in the extinguishment of a lien for that amount on their real estate. He was then in a position to claim in good faith, or at least without subjecting himself to the charge of bad faith, that he should be treated, in equity, as the assignee of Hall, and should be subrogated in the action to all the rights which Hall had in the note and mortgage at the time he executed the satisfaction. It is not necessary that his claim should have been one that he was entitled to recover on beyond any question. Though the claim is doubtful, and may be held insufficient to support an action, yet, if the action on it is brought bona fide, with any ground on which to base a fair argument that plaintiff ought to succeed, a compromise of such action is a good and valid consideration. McClure v. McClure, 100 Cal. 339, 34 Pac. 822; Pitkin v. Noyes, 48 N. H. 294. The court, on sufficient evidence, found against appellants on the issues of duress, fraud, and undue influence. For the foregoing reasons, we advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

ROGERS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF RIVERSIDE COUNTY. (S. F. 1,889.)

APPEAL—STAY—PROCEEDINGS ON JUDGMENT—DISSOLVING INJUNCTION.

In a suit to restrain an irrigating company from shutting off water, the decree provided that defendant be perpetually enjoined from shutting off the water, but that he might, on certain conditions, move to have the injunction set aside. Pending a motion to vacate the injunction, plaintiff appealed, whereupon the court denied the motion. Held, that the injunction went into effect on the rendition of the judgment, and as it could not be dissolved except by a motion, which would be a proceeding on the judgment, it was within Code Civ. Proc. § 946, providing that an appeal stays further proceedings on the judgment from which it is taken.

In bank. Application for writ of mandamus by I. D. Rogers against the superior court of the county of Riverside. Writ denied.

E. W. McGraw, for petitioner. John G. North, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate commanding the superior court of Riverside county to entertain the motion of petitioner to vacate and set aside an injunction granted by decree in the case of J. S. Smith and others against Stearns Ranchos Company et al., and, if it shall appear that petitioner has presented to each of the plaintiffs a certain bill or statement, "then to vacate and set aside the injunction granted," etc. Suit was brought by numerous plaintiffs against the Stearns Ranchos Company, a corporation, and I. D. Rogers, for an injunction to restrain defendants from depriving the plaintiffs of water from a certain canal by reason of nonpayment of assessments levied by defendants upon water rights of plaintiffs in the North Riverside and Jurupa canal, situated in San Bernardino and Riverside counties. In their complaint said plaintiffs asserted that each plaintiff owned the right to a specified amount of water, and of such portion of the canal as would carry such water; also, that plaintiffs owned in severalty certain tracts of land planted with fruit trees and vines, which were irrigated from said canal, and that defendants claim the right to levy and collect assessments for maintaining and repairing said canal, and threaten to turn off the water for nonpayment of certain assessments so made by them. The assessments contain, plaintiffs contend, many improper charges. Issues were made by defendants, and the case was tried, and decree entered February 21, 1899. It was found and adjudged that neither of plaintiffs owns an undivided interest in the canal, but each is an owner of an easement therein to have carried the amount of water alleged as to each of the plaintiffs, "subject to the payment thereof of the proportion of expense of maintaining and repairing said canal as the number of inches of carrying capacity held by each bears to the entire amount of water flowing in said canal from time to time," and that I. D. Rogers, as lessee of the corporate defendant, has the sole right to levy assessments. It was also found that the assessments made were correct and proper, except as to one item "for abstracting," amounting to $135. It was further ordered as follows: "That the defendant I. D. Rogers, his servants, agents, and employes, be, and they are, perpetually enjoined from shutting off from plaintiffs, or either of them, for nonpayment of the assessment heretofore named, the water which said plaintiff is entitled to receive: provided, however, that said defendant I. D. Rogers may, at any time he may desire, make out and present to each and every of said plaintiffs herein a statement, claim, or bill for and on account of their proportion of the expense of the maintenance and repair of said canal during the times hereinbefore mentioned, eliminating therefrom the charge above named of one hundred and thirty-five dollars for abstracting, and that thereafter the said defendant I. D. Rogers may apply to this court to have this decree vacated and set aside as to the injunction hereinbefore granted; and upon sufficient showing to this court that such statement, claim, or bill eliminating said charge for said abstracting has been so made out and presented to plaintiffs, then said defendant I. D. Rogers shall be entitled to have this decree, so far as it grants an injunction against said defendant, vacated and set aside." Rogers complied with the terms of the decree, and made a motion, upon notice, to vacate and set aside the injunction, in pursuance of the permission given in the decree. Upon the hearing some objections were made to the proceeding, the plaintiffs contending that Rogers had not made such a showing as would entitle him to the order. The motion was taken under advisement, and before it was decided the plaintiff appeared and gave a bond on appeal. Thereafter the superior court made the following order: "The motion to dissolve the injunction heretofore argued and submitted is denied." The petitioner contends that the motion was denied solely upon the ground that the court concluded that it was deprived of jurisdiction by the appeal. Practically, this is admitted by the answer of respondent in this proceeding, in which it is stated: "The said superior court, defendant herein, in making the said order considered fully all the matters set forth in the aforesaid affidavits and briefs of counsel, and entertained said motion, and denied the same" because an appeal had been perfected to this court. It is quite forcibly argued that this return shows that the court has not refused or failed to pass upon the motion, but has acted in the matter by denying the motion, and therefore petitioner is remitted to his remedy by an appeal. As I think the mandate must be denied on other grounds, this contention need not be determined. Conceding that the court refused to entertain the motion because of the appeal, I think the action of the court must be sustained.

The parties seem in entire accord as to the law applicable to the case, but they differ as to the construction of the judgment or decree entered in the suit for an injunction. On one side it is contended that a final decree was entered granting a perpetual injunction, with a provision that on certain conditions the court would vacate the judgment, but that it was not an interlocutory order which implied another and final decree. The petitioner contends that the decree was a conditional dissolution of the injunction,—a judgment to take effect when the defendants in that action should make it appear that they had remitted the improper charge of $135. If it be admitted that the judgment entered is final, in the sense that an appeal may be taken from it, the consequences, so far as affects this application, will be the same, whichever view is adopted. Section 946, Code Civ. Proc., contains the following: "Whenever an appeal is perfected, as provided in the preceding sections of this chapter, it stays all further proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from, or upon the matters embraced therein." Certainly the injunction was in effect at once upon the rendition of the judgment. No condition was imposed upon the plaintiffs, to be performed before it became operative. When the existence of the judgment affords all the relief awarded, and there is no proceeding to be had under it, the stay provided for in section 946 does not apply to it. That section does not provide that the judgment shall be suspended, but that no further proceedings shall be had upon the judgment, or upon the matters embraced therein. The motion of petitioner to have the injunction dissolved, made in pursuance of the permission contained in the decree, was a proceeding upon the judgment and upon the matters embraced therein.

Petitioner contends that the judgment, being for an injunction, is not suspended by the appeal, and that by the terms of the decree the right to the injunction is made conditional. His injunction continues, notwithstanding the appeal, and its continuance must still be subject to the condition that it may be ended. The following cases are cited: Mining Co. v. Freemont, 7 Cal. 130; Bliss v. Superior Court, 62 Cal. 543; Heinlen v. Cross, 63 Cal. 44. In the first case Judge Burnett says the purpose of a stay is to prevent any future change in the condition of the parties. If it dissolved an injunction it might have an opposite effect. The stay, therefore, will not affect an order restraining a party from doing an act, to obtain which restraint a bond has been given. The stay only suspends that part of a judgment which commands something to be done. The language of the Code conforms to this. It stays the lower court from proceeding upon the judgment, or on the portion appealed from. In Bliss v. Superior Court it was held that an appeal from an order refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction will not deprive the superior court of jurisdiction to try the case pending the appeal. The stay is limited to the matter appealed from. In Heinlen v. Cross the question was whether, during an appeal from a judgment awarding an injunction, the lower court could proceed to punish a party for its violation during that period. It was properly held that it could. The judgment for an injunction required no writ for its execution. It was a self-executing judgment, and there were no proceedings upon it to be suspended by the appeal. Until reversed, it stands as a valid judicial command, and its violation is a contempt of court, which should be punished. The effect of the decision is that to punish for such a contempt is not a proceeding upon the judgment. The relief asked for by the petitioner cannot be granted, except by a proceeding upon the judgment. The petitioner does not, and could not successfully, contend that the decision is not of the nature of a final decree from which an appeal may be taken. As already stated, there is no condition precedent to the judgment becoming operative. No fact is to be ascertained before the court can advisedly determine the rights of the parties. It is more like a decree of specific performance, which is executed under the immediate supervision of the court. It finally determines the rights of the parties, and grants the appropriate relief. Perhaps it would have been a better decree, under the circumstances, if the court had limited the injunction to the collection of the illegal charge. But, if that be so, the decree actually made cannot be modified in this proceeding.

PEOPLE v. WESTLAKE. (Cr. 529.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 18, 1899.)

CRIMINAL LAW—REVIEW—INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE.

Where the record shows that the evidence was insufficient to support a judgment of conviction, it will be reversed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county.

Charles L. Westlake was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. Reversed.

For former opinion, see 57 Pac. 465.

C. F. Lacey and George A. Dougherty, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

COOPER, C. The defendant was indicted by the grand jury of Monterey county on the 16th day of October, 1897, for the crime of embezzlement, charged to have been committed by him as tax collector of said county, by unlawfully and feloniously appropriating to his own use on the 1st day of July, 1897, the sum of $201, which said sum is alleged to have been paid over to defendant as tax collector between the 1st day of July and the 1st day of August, 1897. He was found guilty, and sentenced to a term of five years in the state prison. This appeal is from the judgment, and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. It is claimed that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. The appellant, in his brief, has pointed out in detail the evidence of some 13 witnesses, showing the amounts paid by each to the tax collector between the dates mentioned in the indictment, and that no other moneys were paid in during said time. The amount so paid in was $272. The prosecution proved that on August 2, 1897, the defendant paid to the county, at his settlement for licenses, the sum of $297, which was $25 more than it had been proven came into his hands. The attorney general, in his reply brief, admits these figures to be correct, and says: "The case must have been very peculiarly tried, or there must have been some very important testimony omitted from the transcript."

* * * We are satisfied that as a matter of fact the defendant embezzled money from the county, but, figure as we will, we cannot find evidence which will belie or refute the statement in appellant's brief that defendant turned over to the county of Monterey on August 2d more money than it is alleged he received during the time charged in the indictment." If the learned attorney general cannot "figure" out sufficient evidence to support the verdict, it cannot be expected that this court will do so. As the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict, it is not necessary to discuss the many other points raised by appellant. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed.

In re TAYLOR'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,897.)

WILLS—CONTINUOUS DOCUMENT—EVIDENCE.

A will written upon two separate sheets of paper, dated at the beginning, and duly signed, was admitted to probate; the evidence showing that the testatrix had written both sheets, though the handwriting of the second sheet was different in style from that of the first. Held, that the probate will not be set aside on evidence showing that testatrix had re-examined the will some months after it was written, and some expert testimony to the effect that the two sheets were written at different times.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

This was an action to set aside the probate of the will of Deede Margaret Taylor, deceased. There was a judgment refusing to set the will aside, and an order denying a motion for new trial. From the judgment and from the order, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Haven & Haven, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment refusing to set aside the probate of the will of Deede Margaret Taylor, deceased, and from an order denying a new trial. The will is olographic in character, written upon two separate sheets of paper, dated at the beginning, and signed at the end. The mere fact that the will is found upon two separate sheets of paper is immaterial. But appellant insists that the second sheet and signature were written some three months after the first sheet was written, and that therefore the will, as a whole, or as to its parts, is void as an olographic will. This contention is largely based upon the claim that, the two sheets being written at different times, the first sheet, therefore, is not signed by the deceased, and the second sheet, therefore, is not dated. For present purposes alone appellant's position as to the correct rule of law applicable to such a state of facts may be conceded. Yet, upon such assumption as to the law, we conclude the facts of the case fail to support it. Upon this point the court made the following finding: "That the document admitted to probate as the last will and testament of said Deede Margaret Taylor was and is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of said Deede Margaret Taylor herself, and is the last will and testament of said Deede Margaret Taylor, deceased; that the said will was written upon two sheets of paper, but that said will is one continuous instrument, and is a single document." Appellant attacks the foregoing finding as not supported by the evidence, and contends that the first sheet of the will was written in December, 1897, and the second sheet written in the following March. In view of the fact that the testatrix knew exactly what she was doing when she attempted to make her will, and did all that was done freely and voluntarily, wrote every word of the document, dated it, and signed it, the court will be slow to set aside a finding of fact to the effect that the will was her will, and was "one continuous instrument and a single document." It appears that deceased wrote her will in December. In the following March she asked for it, from a trunk where it had been kept, and at that time broke the seal of the envelope in which it was inclosed, called for ink and paper, did some writing, tore up some written papers, and returned the will, inclosed in the envelope, to be replaced in her trunk. These facts appear from the evidence of the nurses attendant at her bedside. At this time the testatrix may have changed her will by writing and substituting a second sheet in lieu of the original second sheet. She may have done this, but it is mere conjecture and speculation. There is nothing pointing directly to that conclusion. To be sure, the second sheet, when compared with the first, appears to have been written with a different pen, and possibly a different ink, but this is a circumstance of the slightest importance. It is a matter of common experience that different pens and different inks are used in the writing of a single document. In addition to the foregoing evidence, we have the testimony of an expert upon handwriting, who declares that the two sheets of paper composing the will were not written at the same time. The witness makes no attempt to definitely fix the difference in time occurring between the writing of the respective sheets. He does not even say which was written first. He does say that the person who wrote the first sheet "has her muscular movement in good condition," while the second sheet indicates that "she is completely wrecked,—nervous." From these two different physical conditions of deceased, diagnosed by an examination of her handwriting, he concludes, as an expert upon handwriting, that some considerable time intervened between the writing of one sheet and the other. The trial court weighed this expert evidence, and we are not at all disposed to impeach the accuracy of those weights. It does not amount to much. As to the length of time required for a person to pass from a condition of healthy muscular movement to a condition where he would be completely wrecked,—nervous,—or the reverse, would be a matter more satisfactorily established by the opinion of doctors than of experts upon handwriting. It may well be said that it needs neither doctors nor handwriting experts to tell us that it does not necessarily take a long time to pass from one of these conditions to the other, but that such change of condition may occur within the minute. Conceding the use of a different pen and ink was not the primary cause of the difference in the general style of writing of deceased, as exemplified by the respective sheets of the will, but that the cause was attributable to a change in her physical condition, still we are not at all prepared to say but that this physical change took place at the very time she was engaged in the laborious task of writing her own will. At least, upon the evidence before us, we are well satisfied that the finding of fact made by the trial court, to the effect that this will was "one continuous instrument and a single document," should not be set aside. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

SWEASEY v. SWEASEY. (S. F. 796.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—DESERTION—HUSBAND'S PROVISION FOR WIFE—EVIDENCE.

1. Where a wife brings action for separate maintenance under Civ. Code, § 137, which provides for separate maintenance on grounds of desertion, and a judgment in her favor is found under Id. § 136, which provides for separate maintenance where divorce is denied, such judgment will not be reversed, where the findings are in the wife's favor, although the judgment might have been founded upon the section under which the action was brought.

2. Civ. Code, § 136, which provides that where, in a suit for divorce, judgment is denied, the court may decree separate maintenance, is not repealed by Id. § 137, which provides an action for separate maintenance without seeking divorce.

3. Where defendant in an action for separate maintenance denies that he had deserted plaintiff, evidence of his relations with another woman is properly admitted.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Action by Sarah Sweasey against Thomas W. Sweasey for separate maintenance. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chamberlin & Wheeler and Frank McGowan, for appellant. J. N. Gillett and J. F. Coonan, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The parties are husband and wife, and the action was brought by the wife to secure a separate maintenance, under section 137, Civ. Code, charging desertion on the part of the husband. The defendant in his answer denied the alleged desertion, and also filed a cross complaint, in which he asked for a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. A great many acts on the part of plaintiff are specifically alleged, consisting mostly of false and slanderous charges with reference to him, well calculated, if believed, to degrade him in the community, and of filthy and obscene language addressed to him, or to others in speaking of him. These charges were generally denied by plaintiff, who, in her answer to the cross complaint, made numerous counter charges by way of recrimination. The court found that the parties intermarried in 1854, that they had $5,000 worth of community property, and that plaintiff had no separate estate. They were keeping a hotel at Hydesville, the hotel and furniture apparently constituting the bulk of their property. It was found that defendant had deserted the plaintiff, as charged in her complaint, but that defendant had not failed or refused to provide for plaintiff, and per consequence, as a conclusion of law, that "plaintiff is not entitled to permanent support and maintenance under the provisions of section 137 of the Civil Code, as prayed for in her complaint." The desertion consisted in the fact that "the defendant has willfully and without cause refused to sleep with plaintiff, or to eat his meals with her, or to talk with her, and during the whole of that time has refused to have the ordinary social and matrimonial intercourse with her that usually exists between husband and wife." The wife lived at the hotel, or at a private cottage in the village. She took her meals at the hotel, and availed herself of the credit of the defendant to buy whatever she needed or desired. Upon the charges contained in the cross complaint the court found that many of the specific charges of cruelty were true, but as to some that, though the charge was true, serious mental suffering was not caused thereby; as to other specific charges, that, although true, they "were provoked and caused by reason of the misconduct of the defendant in associating with Miss Kate McAtee." Whether they also caused grievous mental suffering to defendant was not determined. The divorce was denied to defendant, but it was decided that defendant should pay plaintiff for her maintenance, under the provisions of section 136 of the Civil Code, the sum of $35 per month.

Section 136 is: "Though judgment of divorce be denied, the court may in an action for divorce provide for the maintenance of the wife and her children, or any of them, by the husband." It is obvious that the action in which the provision for a separate maintenance is to be made, under this section, is the action in which the divorce was denied, and that the maintenance is for the person to whom such divorce was denied. If the husband sues for divorce, the wife may, by a cross complaint in that action, ask for, and in a proper case have made for her, provision for such maintenance under section 137. Section 136 would have no application to such a case. In the cross action of the husband the wife set up no such claim, unless by a curious and unnecessary retroversion her complaint can be made to perform that office. But such speculations are not required. Independently of the contention as to the sufficiency of the evidence, the question is, do the findings warrant the judgment entered? The conclusion of law that the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief under section 137, Civ. Code, but is under section 136, may be regarded as a reason for the judgment rendered, and, if that be sustained by the findings, it will not be reversed for the bad reason given. The grounds upon which the court may require the husband to provide for the wife would not be enlarged by the fact that the husband asked for a divorce, and I think the real issue here is whether the court found as a fact that the husband had made provision for his wife, or, more properly, whether the wife needs such provision. Upon this subject there is a very explicit finding: "That the plaintiff has no separate property, is without means of support, and is getting too old to earn a living by work; that the sum of thirty-five dollars per month would be a reasonable sum, under the circumstances, to be provided by the defendant for the maintenance of the plaintiff." There is no other express finding upon the subject, but apparently plaintiff resides at a cottage which belongs to the community, and gets her meals at the hotel, and, if she chose, could live at the hotel. And the finding that the desertion does not consist in the living apart from the wife, but in refusing social and matrimonial intercourse with her, seems to imply that, if she is willing to endure such treatment, she may still reside as a stranger in his house, and provide herself with necessaries upon his credit. It is said that the learned judge was of the opinion that under such circumstances the necessities of the wife were not shown, and therefore he held that she was not entitled to a provision under section 137, Civ. Code. But, if it were conceded that she could be provided for under section 136, why there should be any difference in regard to proof of her necessities is not obvious.

In this connection appellant contends that section 136 was repealed by the amendment to section 137, which gave to a wife the statutory right to apply for her separate maintenance without asking for a divorce. If we are not embarrassed by decisions, I find no difficulty in giving operation to both sections. Formerly, in England, a wife, though not entitled to a divorce, was not compelled to live with her husband who was guilty of extreme cruelty, or who had committed adultery. She could sue for a divorce a mensa et thoro, and, as a consequence, if her suit prevailed she was allowed to live in separation, and, if she needed it and the husband had the means for it, provision was made for a separate maintenance from the estate of the husband. The divorce simply authorized her to live apart from him and to refuse him conjugal rights. The maintenance was a mere incident, and was not made when by marriage settlement or otherwise the wife was already provided for. If a provision for the wife under section 137 authorizes the wife to live in separation and to deny the husband conjugal rights, a judgment to that effect has all the elements of a divorce a mensa et thoro. I presume such a decree would not have that effect, but the relation would be still subject to the provisions of section 102, Civ. Code, and, if the desertion had not continued long enough to entitle the wife to a divorce, the husband could return and re-establish the relation and rid himself of the judgment. If the lapse of time would interfere with his right to return, it is the statute and not the decree which has that effect. In that respect his condition is no worse for the decree. But if the husband has been guilty of all the offenses described in section 92, Id., except desertion, and it is found upon a re-criminatory plea in defense that the wife has deserted the husband and therefore cannot have a divorce, the court would hardly send her back to live with her husband, and, I think, under section 136, might, in its discretion, compel the husband to provide for her. Something of the kind is intimated by Judge Field in Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 249. He says: "The true rule which should govern the court in the exercise of its discretion in this respect is this: that, to entitle to a decree of absolute divorce from the bonds of matrimony, the applicant must be an innocent party,—one who has faithfully discharged the obligations of the marriage relation, and seeks relief because aggrieved or injured by the misconduct of the other; and, on the other hand, where there are circumstances showing a disregard of those obligations, though not carried to such a degree as to constitute itself a ground of divorce, the decree should only be a divorce from bed and board." The statute then in terms authorized a partial divorce, as in effect it still does, if the allowance may be made under section 136 when the husband has not been guilty of desertion. Parties partially divorced may become reconciled and renew their relations without remarriage, but the husband cannot of his own volition resume his rights. I think it was intended by section 136 to enable the court to do just what it was said in Conant v. Conant could be done, and it matters not whether the decree effects a divorce a mensa, or a legal separation with a provision for the support of the wife. It is purely a matter of words. But in section 137, the wife having a good cause for a divorce may, if her circumstances require it, and her husband has deserted her, apply for a separate maintenance without seeking for a divorce. A husband who wishes to be freed from a deserted wife cannot starve her into the necessity of suing for a divorce, which his guilt and her innocence would alike prevent him from obtaining. If the trial court did, as surmised, rule that plaintiff could not have a provision made for her in her own suit because she can live at the hotel, and has not been prevented from the use of his credit to obtain necessities, this was plainly error. A wife who is left otherwise unprovided for may always use his credit to obtain necessities. It needs no decree of court to secure that right, but she may be entitled to more than what is absolutely necessary, and she is not compelled to rely upon his whim and temper for them. She is entitled to an allowance, and security for its payment, or an execution to enforce its payment, or perhaps to have a receiver appointed, as provided in section 140, Civ. Code. This is the nature of the provision which the statute authorizes. Her necessities and the husband's faculties are sufficiently found, and the proper judgment is entered, which must be affirmed.

Appellant complains of some findings against him in his cross action for divorce. If these are well founded, appellant is still not injured, for it was found that he was guilty of desertion, and no complaint is made that this finding is not sustained by the evidence. He could not, therefore, have obtained a divorce, even though the court had found in his favor upon those issues. The rulings complained of in regard to the admission of evidence all have reference to issues which, by reason of the findings of desertion, became immaterial.

The evidence of the relations between defendant and Miss McAtee was properly admitted under the issue made by defendant's denial that he had deserted plaintiff.

The temporary alimony was, until the further order of the court, to provide for plaintiff until the judgment became final and could be enforced. We will not presume that it will be continued after plaintiff can have the benefit of her judgment. The judgment is affirmed.

WESTALL v. ALTSCHUL. (S. F. 876.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET ASSESSMENTS—VALIDITY—APPEAL—REVERSAL—INCONSISTENT DEFENSES.

1. St. 1889, p. 167, provides that, where it shall appear by final judgment that a suit to foreclose a street-assessment lien has been defeated by reason of some defect therein, a party in interest may within three months after the entry of final judgment obtain a new assessment. Held, that where plaintiff's assignor recovered judgment on an assessment, which was reversed for invalidity, and a new trial ordered, and the assignor obtained a new assessment, and plaintiff commenced an action thereon before the former suit had been dismissed, plaintiff was not entitled to recover, since such assessment was not made after the entry of final judgment declaring the former one invalid.

2. The reversal on appeal of a judgment and order denying a new trial does not operate as a final judgment against either party, but merely vacates the judgment rendered, and leaves the case standing for trial.

3. Where, after the reversal of a judgment in an action on a street assessment, a new assessment is made, and action brought thereon before the dismissal of the former action, defendant is not precluded from a defense that the subsequent assessment was not made within the time required, by setting up other inconsistent defenses, denying the making of such assessment, and that the former suit was still pending, no final judgment having been entered therein.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Joseph Westall against Ludwig Altschul. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. W. S. Goodfellow, Gunnison, Booth & Barnett, and J. C. Bates, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. Action to foreclose a street-assessment lien. Altschul, who was the owner of the lot, appeals from a judgment against him, and from an order refusing a new trial.

James Ryan, the assignor of plaintiff, and the contractor, brought suit upon a prior as-essment, in which he recovered judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, Altschul appealed; and in this court the judgment and order were reversed, and a new trial ordered. A new assessment having been made, plaintiff, as assignee of Ryan, brought this action, in which he recovered judgment, from which, and from an order refusing a new trial, this appeal was taken.

Several points are made, but two of which it will be necessary to notice, and they may be considered together. After the remittitur was received and filed in the case of Ryan v. Altschul, no new trial was had, but that case was finally dismissed on motion of the plaintiff. Before such dismissal, however, the new assessment was made, and this action to foreclose the lien was commenced. It is now contended that no new assessment could be made until after final judgment had been entered in the suit upon the first assessment, and, further, to justify a new assessment it must affirmatively appear from the judgment roll that such action was defeated by reason of some defect, error, informality, omission, irregularity, or illegality in the assessment. St. 1889, p. 167. The statute reads: "Whenever it shall appear by any final judgment of any court of this state that any suit brought to foreclose the lien," etc., has been defeated by reason of such defects, "any person interested therein may, at any time within three months after the entry of said final judgment, apply to the superintendent of streets" for another assessment. It is certainly a very crude, and, so far as I can see, a very unwise law. It would not necessarily appear by a final judgment that the suit was defeated on that ground, rather than on some other objection made by defendant; and why, after the assessment had been finally adjudged void, should the plaintiff be required to prosecute his action to an inevitable judgment against himself, before he is entitled to a new assessment? And yet it is so plainly written in the law, and the special limitation begins to run from "the entry of said final judgment." If the statute were less explicit, we should endeavor to conclude that the determination of this court, although a new trial was awarded, was such final adjudication. It certainly was final upon the only material matter,—the validity of the assessment. But here we are precluded from applying such a rule, for plainly the assessment cannot be made until after the final judgment, and the plaintiff or his assignor did not dismiss the former suit, thereby acquiescing in the decision, and making the determination end in a final judgment before the assessment. Until then we cannot say that the plaintiff did not hope, by new evidence, to show an assessment which would be valid, and the new assessment was not made within three months after the reversal of the judgment in the supreme court

The respondent contends that defendant in his answer avers that the assessment was defeated by final judgment in the supreme court. There is no such averment in the second defense, as respondent inadvertently asserts. But, if there were, we should construe the reversal of a judgment and of an order refusing a new trial according to its legal effect, which is to vacate the judgment and leave the case standing for trial. The third separate answer and defense was intended to meet the possible position that the judgment in the supreme court was a final judgment, within the meaning of the statute, and it avers that no assessment was made within three months after its rendition. It is a plea of the special limitation provided in the statute. If in that separate answer the defendant avers that the judgment of the supreme court was a final judgment, this does not deprive him of the benefit of the other inconsistent allegations set up in separate defenses. In the first defense he attempts to deny that an assessment had been made. In the second he sets up the first suit, and avers that it is still pending, and that no judgment has been entered therein. The averment in the third defense does not answer these issues. It follows that the assessment was void, and the judgment and order are reversed.

DRAINS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—VALIDITY OF STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

1. Though St. 1881, p. 15, entitled "An act to provide a system of drainage," etc., and St. 1885, p. 204, entitled "An act to promote drainage," deal with the same subject-matter, namely, the drainage of surplus water injurious to land, the later act is not so inconsistent with the provisions of the earlier act that it operates as a repeal thereof, nor is the later act a revision of the earlier act.

2. The drainage act of 1881 (St. 1881, p. 15), providing that when "two or more owners shall petition the supervisors for a ditch, drain or other water course," a day for the hearing shall be appointed, and notice given, and, if the supervisors shall find that the ditch would be conducive to the "general welfare" of the petitioners, the work is to be done, costs apportioned upon the lands benefited, and private property condemned for ditch purposes, etc., violates Const. art. 1, § 14, which provides only for the taking of private property for "public use" after compensation paid.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by F. P. Nickey against the Stearns Ranchos Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. E. Keech, for appellant. E. W. McGraw, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought, under the authority of an act of the legislature entitled "An act to provide a system of drainage for agricultural, swamp and overflowed lands" (St. 1881, p. 15), to condemn lands of the defendants for the purpose of constructing a ditch. The complaint set forth the proceedings taken in accordance with the statute under which it is asserted that the right to prosecute this action was acquired. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and judgment entered for defendants.

In support of the demurrer the respondents insist that the act of 1881, above referred to, even if it be a constitutional act, was superseded by a later act passed in 1885, entitled "An act to promote drainage." St. 1885, p. 204. But, while the two acts deal with the same subject-matter,—that is to say, the drainage of surplus water which is injurious to land,—we do not think that the later act in its terms is either so repugnant or inconsistent with the provisions of the earlier act as to force the conclusion that a repeal by implication must follow. Nor do we think that the later act is designed as revisory of the earlier act, or as a later expression of the legislative will and intent upon the same subject-matter. The two acts are not inconsistent the one with the other. The later does not cover the ground occupied by the earlier, and therefore should not be held to supersede it. Both may be allowed to stand, and be given full force and effect, without doing violence to either, or to any canon of statutory construction.

It is further insisted, however, that the demurrer was properly sustained because the proceedings which are the foundation of this condemnation suit were had under an unconstitutional statute. This contention we think is sound. The act of 1881, under which these proceedings were taken, provides that when "two or more owners shall petition the board of supervisors for a ditch, drain or other water course," the supervisors shall appoint a day for a hearing, and give notice. Upon the hearing, "if the supervisors shall find that the construction of the ditch would be conducive to the general welfare of the landowners so petitioning," surveys are to be made, stakes set, the work to be ordered done, and the cost apportioned upon the lands benefited and private property condemned for ditch purposes. But in this state private property may not be taken or damaged for private use at all. It may be taken only for public use after just compensation made or paid. Const. art. 1, § 14. It is beyond question that the digging and maintaining of ditches and drains across private lands is a taking of property.

This statute may be read in vain to discover any expression or intimation that the taking in this case is for a public use. The proceedings may be initiated by two men. They are required to be landowners, but so loosely is this statute drawn that it is not required that the land which they own shall be so situated as to be affected by the proposed ditch. As authority for initiating the work, and for taking the land of a private owner for the indicated purposes, the supervisors have but to find, not even that the construction of the ditch will benefit the lands of the petitioners, but merely that it will "conduce to their general welfare." It is nowhere in the act expressed or contemplated that the interest or convenience of the public or of any community is to be subserved. Yet, excepting for these purposes, private property may not be taken. To the contrary, the very language of the statute negatives the idea that public interests are in consideration, since it imposes upon the supervisors the duty of ordering the work when they shall find that its construction will be conducive to the general welfare of the two or three or four persons who petition. Nor may this act be saved from condemnation because, while providing that only two landowners need petition, it contemplates that more may do so. It is not a question for the courts to say whether a petition by three or four or five or six or ten should be held to indicate that public necessity or convenience is involved. It is for the legislature in the first instance to show that the consideration for the taking of private property is a consideration of public necessity or convenience. Johnson v. Schmidt (Wis.) 63 N. W. 288. We are not unmindful that this statute was attacked in Holley v. Orange Co., 106 Cal. 420, 39 Pac. 790, and that its constitutionality was there upheld; but the points here presented were not in that case raised or considered. That determination was a decision, not generally as to the validity of the act, but merely that it was valid against the specific grounds of attack urged. It is of no binding force in this action, between different parties, and upon propositions neither presented to nor considered by this tribunal in the former action. In re Central Irr. Dist., 117 Cal. 382, 49 Pac. 354; City Council v. Fowler (S. C.) 25 S. E. 900. The judgment is affirmed.

MORTGAGE ON INCREASE OF SHEEP-CONSTRUCTION - ERRONEOUS DECISION - REVERSAL-IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACTS.

1. A mortgage (made under the authority of Civ. Code, § 2955) on the "increase" of sheep includes their offspring, merely, and not the wool grown thereon.

2. Where contracts have been made in reliance on a decision erroneously construing a statute, a reversal of the decision is not prohibited, as a law impairing contracts.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Action by Peter Alferitz against H. L. Borgwardt, Jr., for conversion. From a judgment entered on a general demurrer to the complaint and a refusal to amend, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lyman I. Mowry and Ahern & Bennett, for appellant. M. L. Short, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon a general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, and upon his refusal to amend. In the complaint it is averred: That on the 17th day of November, 1893, one F. B. Dagany executed and delivered to plaintiff his promissory note for $9,000, with interest, due six months after date, and, to secure payment of the same, gave him a chattel mortgage, executed and recorded as required by law, upon "five thousand five hundred sheep and the increase thereof, said eighteen horses and the increase thereof, and twenty-four head of neat cattle and the increase thereof." The note is unpaid. On the 30th of April, 1897, defendant converted to his own use, and wrongfully deprived plaintiff of the use and possession of, 40 bales of wool, "which said wool was and is the increase of the five thousand five hundred sheep so mortgaged to plaintiff by F. P. Dagany as aforesaid, and was sheared from said five thousand five hundred sheep and the increase thereof." This is followed by proper allegations of damage, and prayer for judgment.

It is assumed on both sides that the wool was not taken from the actual possession of the plaintiff. If any doubt could exist as to the sufficiency of the demurrer to raise the question presented, the point is waived by appellant, who states in his opening brief, "The only question involved in the demurrer is, does a chattel mortgage of sheep and the increase thereof cover the wool, the product of the sheep?" In considering the question thus submitted, the statute authorizing chattel mortgages is of primary importance. Does it authorize a mortgage upon sheep and the wool to be thereafter grown upon and sheared from them by the mortgagor? Not all personal property can be so mortgaged, but only certain specified classes. Section 2955, Civ. Code, so far as material here, reads as follows: "Mortgages may be made upon the following personal property, and none other: * * * Sixteenth. Neat cattle, horses, mules, swine, sheep, goats, and the increase thereof." Is wool to be sheared from the sheep by the mortgagor in possession included in this list? If not so included, and plainly included, when the words are given their general and unrestricted meaning, the lien would not attach to wool, even if it were so nominated in the bond.

In addition to the fact that the presumption is against the right to mortgage personal property, and permission so to do must be clearly found in the statute, it must be admitted that the word "increase," although variously used, has acquired a special meaning when applied to domestic animals. So applied, unless expressly qualified in the context, it invariably means the young of such animals. Counsel has not found, and, I venture to say, cannot find, in legal literature or elsewhere, (save perhaps in the mortgages of this class, and in Alferitz v. Ingalls, 83 Fed. 964), an instance where the unqualified use of the word, as applied to such animals, included anything more or meant anything other than the offspring, progeny, or young of such animals. The word is often used in the decisions, and always refers, so far as I can find, to the offspring, and to nothing else. In Shoobert v. De Motta, 112 Cal. 215, 44 Pac. 487, the word is repeatedly used in reference to such animals, and in every case it means offspring. In that opinion many cases are cited in which the word is similarly used. In many places it is evident that the word would not have been used had the writer been conscious that it comprehended anything other than the young. Turning to Cobby, Chat. Mortg. § 365 et seq., I find that the author uses the phrase "offspring of mortgaged animals" and "increase of mortgaged animals" interchangeably, and the same use prevails in the numerous cases cited in the notes. In 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, under "Animals," I find the word similarly used. The author speaks of "offspring or increase." Numerous cases are cited to the proposition that "increase follows the dam," and "the increase of the increase ad infinitum," and also as to the increase as between the mortgagor and mortgagee. It is true that these cases do not directly bear as authority upon the issue here, but such use of the word would be very inaccurate if it were as comprehensive as appellant contends, and if it were not true that the word is always so used in reference to domestic stock. In some of the cases cited the mortgages include the "wool and increase." See Cox v. Beck, 83 Fed. 269. It is also to be presumed that, when the mortgagor retains the possession of the sheep, he expects to make a profit from the sheep in the meanwhile. He certainly expects to make a living from such use, and to pay his debt from it,—as much so as one who mortgages his farm and retains possession. Upon the subject of use the intentions are the same. This idea is expressed in Shoobert v. De Motta, and it is said that, where the increase is not mentioned, the mortgagee might as well claim the wool as the lambs, as each may be the annual profit which the mortgagor in possession is entitled to retain unless the contrary intent is expressed. This reasoning equally applies to the statute. The same clause also authorizes a mortgage upon a dairy. Did the legislature intend by this language to authorize a mortgage upon butter and cheese to be thereafter produced? I see no difference in principle. Each is in some sense manufactured, and each becomes a merchantable commodity, to be sold separately from the mortgaged property. If the lien extended to it, there might be difficulty in determining when it became divested. Would it adhere after the product was sold by the mortgagor and had reached the hands of the consumer? I think there is much difference between the application of the mortgage to the lambs and to the wool. The lambs became at once a part of the flock, and the mortgage may be held to impart notice. Not so as to the wool. When this wool was taken by defendant, it may have been in a warehouse with much other wool, and defendant may have purchased from the mortgagor in good faith, unless the mortgage imparts notice. The word "increase," from "cresco," to grow, originally meant growth. It has acquired other meanings by use, but some are figurative, and others, which at first seem not to be growth, upon examination will be seen to be strictly so. When we speak of the "earth's increase," meaning the annual crops, it is evident that the word is used figuratively. If we speak of interest on money as increase, we refer to the sum of money at interest which is thereby increased. This is growth. Similarly, when we refer to rents, profits, and other gains as increase, it is the fortune of the owner which thereby is made to grow. When we speak of the increase of a herd of cattle or a flock of sheep, we refer to growth of the herd or flock by addition of new members. The natural increase can only mean the addition of new members by birth. Natural increase is intended by the lease when it speaks of "the increase thereof." The lease does not expressly speak of a flock of sheep, but evidently that was what was meant. If not, the description of the property is clearly insufficient. Otherwise, the lessor is provided with an adjustable description which will fit any band of sheep he may wish to save from creditors. Whether the description is good, even on that theory, I do not decide. The wool does not increase the flock of sheep. Quite possibly, because domestic animals are so frequently considered as herds, the word "increase" has acquired this partially specialized meaning in respect to them, although now it is so understood even when a single animal is spoken of. I think, therefore, whether we consider the statute or the language of the lease alone, the conclusion would be against the appellant.

Appellant further contends that the title to the property passed to the mortgagee under the terms of his mortgage. At the date of the execution of this mortgage, section 2888, Civ. Code, read as now: "Notwithstanding an agreement to the contrary, a lien, or the contract for a lien, transfers no title to the property subject to the lien." But in 1883, when this law was also in force, this court, in discussing the validity of an attachment of personal property which had been thus mortgaged, said: "The title to the furniture passed to the plaintiffs. Under the chattel mortgage, it continued vested in them until it was reinstated by the performance of the mortgage conditions." Berson v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 550. No allusion is made to section 2888, but it is contended that such section was thereby construed to mean exactly the opposite of its express and unambiguous declaration. Certainly, it was not a construction, but a failure to note the statute. But appellant contends that it states the law upon the subject, and that law was not changed until the decision of Shoobert v. De Motta, in 1896, and in the meantime his mortgage was made. It is said that to apply the rule declared in the last case, rather than that laid down in the first, would be to impair the obligation of contracts. Douglas v. Pike Co., 101 U. S. 687, and many other cases are cited. In the case named it is said: "After a statute has been settled by judicial construction, the construction becomes, so far as contract rights acquired under it are concerned, as much a part of the statute as the text itself, and a change of the decision is to all intents and purposes the same in its effect on contracts as the amendment to the law by means of a legislative enactment." No rights are acquired here under a statute, in the meaning of that line of authorities which seem to refer to laws authorizing the government or some subdivision or department thereof to contract certain obligations. Beyond this the cases cited do not go. I hardly think the rule will be applied to decisions of state courts in regard to general rules of law, although they may affect contract rights. At the best they but lay down a rule for the federal courts as to how far they will be governed by decisions of the state courts in the construction of state statutes. Laws are not made by judicial decisions. The court simply determines the rights of the parties to the action in that particular controversy. It is no part of its purpose even to declare the law. It simply applies to the controversy the law as it exists when the alleged rights or liabilities accrued. The decision has never been thought to have the force and effect of law, except in that special controversy. In other suits it is authority more or less persuasive according to the reasonableness of the rule. Courts have never thought themselves bound by it as they are by a valid statute. And, if it is manifestly wrong, the community does not act upon it. A lawyer who would have advised a client to rely upon the Berson Case in making a loan would show his incapacity. No doubt an appellate court assumes a very grave responsibility when it reverses a former decision which has become a rule of property or the law of contracts, and whenever this is done it must be understood that the court has not only considered the objections to the former decision, but the evils which may follow from its reversal. The matter is ably discussed in Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, and the views there expressed have been frequently affirmed. The mere fact that an error has been made in a decision of the supreme court is no reason for perpetuating it, but in a given case to correct it may be productive of more evil than to permit it to stand; and, as stated in the above case, justice is not always on the side of him who claims under the erroneous decision. Why should one who has honestly acquired property according to the law of the land lose it because a judge, relying upon imperfect presentation, has erred? Or why should the policy of the government, adopted upon great deliberation, be so defeated? And especially so under a system where a decision was never deemed to have the force and effect of an absolute law. Kent says that a decision solemnly and deliberately made should not be set aside, "except for very cogent reasons, and upon a clear manifestation of error." 1 Kent, Comm. 476. And, we may add, the rule should not then be changed unless the court, after due deliberation, shall conclude that in the interest of justice and of the public the error should be corrected. And, as the court can only determine the law as applicable to existing or past contracts and rights, this is a conclusion that existing controversies and rights under past transactions should be governed by the law as declared in the later decision. If the supreme court of the United States shall finally go with the appellant here, in holding that the courts are prohibited from reversing an erroneous construction of a state statute because such decision is a law which impairs the obligation of contracts, then the courts can never change the erroneous construction; for a court can only pass upon existing rights, and must always look to the past for its law, and, so far as it declares the law, declares what it was and is, but cannot enact what it shall be. I do not think that august tribunal will adopt this view, which, if adopted, can result only in the perpetuation of error. The judgment is affirmed.

"Section 1. After the passage of this act, all property which shall pass, by will or by the intestate laws of this state, from any person who may die seized or possessed of the same while a resident of this state, or if such decedent was not a resident of this state at the time of death, which property, or any part thereof, shall be within this state, or any interest therein or income therefrom which shall be transferred by deed, grant, sale or gift, made in contemplation of the death of the grantor or bargainor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after such death, to any person or persons, or to any body politic or corporate, in trust or otherwise, or by reason whereof any person or body politic or corporate shall become beneficially entitled, in possession or expectancy, to any property, or to the income thereof, other than to or for the use of his or her father, mother, husband, wife, lawful issue, brother, sister, the wife or widow of a son, or the husband of a daughter, or any child or children adopted as such in conformity with the laws of the state of California, and any lineal descendant of such decedent, born in lawful wedlock, or the societies, corporations, and institutions now exempted by law from taxation, by reason whereof any such person or corporation shall become beneficially entitled, in possession or expectancy, to any such property, or to the income thereof, shall be and is subject to a tax of five dollars on every hundred dollars of the market value of such property, and at a proportionate rate for any less amount, to be paid to the treasurer of the proper county, as hereinafter defined, for the use of the state; and all administrators, executors and trustees shall be liable for any and all such taxes until the same shall have been paid, as hereinafter directed: provided, that an estate which may be valued at a less sum than five hundred dollars shall not be subject to such duty or tax."

Section 4 reads: "All taxes imposed by this act, unless otherwise herein provided for, shall be due and payable at the death of the decedent, and if the same are paid within eighteen months no interest shall be charged and collected thereon, but if not so paid, interest at the rate of ten per centum per annum shall be charged and collected from the time said tax accrued; provided that if said tax is paid within six months after the accruing thereof a discount of five per centum shall be allowed and deducted from said tax. And in all cases where the executors, administrators, or trustees do not pay such tax within eighteen months from the death of the decedent, they shall be required to give a bond, in the form and to the effect prescribed in section 2 of this act, for the payment of said tax, together with interest." In another section it is provided that if litigation becomes necessary, or because of other unavoidable cause for delay the estate cannot be settled at the end of 18 months, then only 7 per cent. should be charged. The tax paid over to, or collected by, the county treasurer is by him required to be paid into the treasury of the state for the use of the state school fund.

After the appeal herein was perfected, this court, in Re Wilmerding's Estate, had occasion to consider the nature and character of this collateral inheritance tax, and therein, also, held the act in question to be constitutional. 117 Cal. 281, 49 Pac. 181. In the opinion in that case it is said: "Similar statutes have been enacted in other states, and, with the exception of New Hampshire, have been sustained by the courts in those states, upon the ground that the charge thus imposed is in the nature of an excise tax, or a tax upon the right of succession, and is within the constitutional power of the legislature. [Citing a number of cases of the various states.] The principles upon which the tax is upheld have been so fully and clearly elaborated in the above cases that it is necessary to do no more than to refer to the cases. The right of inheritance, including the designation of heirs and the proportions which the several heirs shall receive, as well as the right of testamentary disposition, are entirely matters of statutory enactment, and within the control of the legislature. As it is only by virtue of the statute that the heir is entitled to receive any of his ancestor's estate, or that the ancestor can divert his estate from the heir, the same authority which confers this privilege may attach to it the condition that a portion of the estate so received shall be contributed to the state, and the portion thus to be contributed is peculiarly within the legislative discretion." And again: "As this tax is not upon property, but upon the right of succession, the constitutional provision that all property shall be taxed according to its value is inapplicable. The right of the legislature to impose an excise tax includes the right to select the subjects upon which it shall be imposed." In Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 83, 32 N. E. 1097, cited by appellants, that court, in speaking of this question, says: "The precise definition of the nature of this tax is not essential, if it is susceptible of exact definition. Thus far in this court we have not thought it necessary in the cases coming before us to determine whether the object of taxation is the property which passes or not, though, in some, expressions may be found which seem to regard the tax in that light. [Referring to a number of cases in that state.] The idea of this 'succession tax,' as we may conveniently term it, is more or less compound; the principal idea being the subjection of property, ownership of which has ceased by reason of the death of the owner, to a diminution, by the state reserving to itself a portion of its amount, if in money, or of its appraised value, if in other forms of property."

The decision in the Wilmerding Case would have disposed of this appeal were it not that the act in question was amended by the legislature of 1897. The act of 1897 is entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a tax on collateral inheritances, bequests and devises, to provide for its collection, and to direct the disposition of the proceeds,' approved March 23, 1893." It amends section 1 of the act of 1893 by including among those who are exempt from the tax the niece or nephew when a resident of this state, along with certain classes of corporations, of which the above named university is one. Such amendatory act contains an independent section, numbered 2, reading as follows: "The exemptions contained in this act shall apply to all property which has passed by will, succession or transfer, since the approval of the act of which this act is amendatory, except in those cases where the tax has been paid to the treasurer of the proper county." It is claimed on the part of the appellants that the appeal herein must be determined in accordance with the act of 1893, as amended, referring, in support of such contention, to Bank v. Henderson, 101 Cal. 307, 35 Pac. 899, and other cases in the same line. Such decisions are to the effect that in certain cases where, subsequent to the appeal, matters arise affecting the same, upon proper suggestion and proof of such matters they will be considered by the appellate court; especially is this so when the action is of a penal character, as it was in the Henderson Case. On the other hand, it is contended upon the part of the respondent that the amendatory act in question, so far as it attempts to relieve these appellants, and other beneficiaries similarly situated, from the conditions or obligations contained in the act of 1893, being in effect a relinquishment to them of the sums due the state under said act, is unconstitutional and void. It will be seen by the express terms of the act of 1893 all taxes imposed thereby "shall be due and payable at the death of the decedent"; and also that such taxes "shall be immediately due and payable to the treasurer of the proper county." By section 25, art. 4, of the constitution, it is declared: "The legislature shall not pass local or special laws in the following enumerated cases, that is to say: * * * Fifteenth. Refunding money paid into the state treasury. * * * Seventeenth. Releasing or extinguishing, in whole or in part, the indebtedness, liability or obligation of any corporation or person to this state, or to any municipal corporation therein." In answer to the foregoing provisions of the constitution, it may be claimed that the act in question is not local or special legislation, and in form it may not be so. But the framers of the constitution, and the people who adopted it, did not hedge about the legislature with such restraints in the matter of conferring favors, or making gifts or donations by special and local legislation, and at the same time leave the door wide open for similar abuses to enter under the guise of general legislation. By section 22 of the same article, the legislature is prohibited from making any grant or donation of property to any institution not under the exclusive management and control of the state, except institutions conducted for the care and support of orphans and half orphans, and aged indigent persons, and in such excepted cases reserving to the state the right of visitation. By section 31 of said article it is declared, among other restrictions imposed upon the legislature: "Nor shall it have the power to make any gift, or authorize the making of any gift, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation whatever: provided, that nothing in this section shall prevent the legislature granting aid pursuant to section twenty-two of this article."

In answer to the contention on the part of the respondent that by the amendatory act of 1897 it is attempted to give or donate public money or thing of value, appellant's counsel say "that the state never had possession of any part of the 'accumulations or acquisitions' of Leland Stanford, deceased; * * * and he [respondent] has not shown how the state could give away what it never had." In other words, it is claimed that one not in the possession of property is not the owner of it. The law of 1893 repeatedly declares that the portion coming to the state "shall be due and payable at the death of the decedent." And it is further provided that from that time, until paid over in the course of administration, the sum so due the state shall bear interest, and interest shall be paid on the sum so due the state. It would be absurd to exact interest for the detention or use of money or property not belonging to the party who demands it. It is elementary law that the right of inheritance, including the designation of heirs and the portions which the several heirs shall receive, as well as the right of testamentary disposition, are entirely matters of statutory enactment, and within the control of the legislature. It is only by virtue of the statute that an heir is entitled to receive any of his ancestor's estate, and the legislature can provide that the whole or only a portion shall go to the heirs or other beneficiaries upon the death of the ancestor. This being so, and the legislature in this case having determined that 95 per cent. of the decedent's estate may go to his heirs and beneficiaries, and that 5 per cent. be retained to the state, it is too clear for argument that this 5 per cent. vested in the state at the same time that the 95 per cent. vested in the heirs or other beneficiaries. "An estate is vested when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment, or a present fixed right of future enjoyment." 4 Kent, Comm. 202. The state here, from the death of the decedent, had a present fixed right of future enjoyment to the 5 per cent. of his estate. This is property or a thing of value belonging to the state.

The following from the Civil Code is merely reciting the common law: "The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others. In this Code the thing of which there may be ownership is called property." Section 654. "There may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or of manual delivery; of all domestic animals; of all obligations; of such products of labor or skill, as the composition of an author, good will of a business, trade marks and signs; and of rights created or granted by statute." Section 655. It is therefore not the possession alone, but the right to possess, which constitutes the ownership; and ownership may be "of rights created or granted by statute," as the case here. It would be altogether a new definition in the law to hold that one who had not obtained possession of a thing or had parted with its possession could not be the owner of such thing. This would be contrary to the teachings of elementary law, which recognizes a right in action as well as a right in possession. The rule contended for would make ownership depend altogether upon strength and agility in obtaining and holding possession of things. The purpose of the act of 1897, as appears by its title, was merely to amend the act of 1893. Section 1 of the latter act amends section 1 of the act of 1893 by re-enacting said section at length, as required by the constitution. Thereafter is added to the act of 1897 the independent section 2, which attempts to release the payment of the taxes imposed by the act of 1893, except such as have already been paid over to the treasurer of the proper county.

Passing consideration of the question whether this section is not invalid, because not embraced in the title of the act, and for the further reason that it in effect amends other sections of the act of 1893 without re-enacting them, it would strike the ordinary mind as a strange piece of legislation. The one who had been prompt in complying with the law, and paid into the county treasury what belongs to the state, is punished for his good conduct by retaining the money so paid; whereas, he who has refused to obey the law is rewarded by giving or releasing to him that which belongs to the state, and which he unjustly withheld. The object of this unjust discrimination is apparent. To take public funds from the treasury, and give them away, would be a more bald and palpable violation of the constitution than to arrest such funds in transit and return them or give them away. The latter, however, is only an indirect mode of accomplishing the same result; but in law that which cannot be done directly may not be done indirectly. The funds in question here were never in the possession of the appellants, but in the possession of the administratrix of the estate, as an agent under the law to hand them over to the state as the owner thereof.

It is said, however, on behalf of appellants, that the legislature may not only amend, but repeal the law altogether, in which case there would be no means of obtaining possession of the sums due the state not already turned over. The legislature might, perhaps, abolish or repeal all laws for the collection of debts. This, however, would not have the effect of paying or discharging the debts, or in the least impair the obligation to pay them. Property rights and obligations would remain as before. These, by fundamental law, are placed beyond the reach of legislative interference. In substance, if not in form, to turn over the fund in question belonging to the state to the appellants would be to make a gift or donation of the same, and the law regards substance rather than form. We are therefore of the opinion that to give retroactive effect to the law of 1897 would conflict with the provisions of the constitution prohibiting the legislature from making any gift or donation of any public money or thing of value. The amendatory act of 1899 (St. 1899, p. 101), passed after the rehearing was granted herein, has no application in this case. By its terms it applies only to such property as has passed since the first amendatory act. We quite agree with appellant's counsel that "an heir or legatee must take his estate on such conditions as at the time the state may have imposed," and that subsequent legislation could not affect such vested right; and this rule, as already held, applies equally to the state, whose right to the fund in question accrued under the act of 1893. Order affirmed.

FRANZ et al. v. BIELER. (S. F. 745.)

CONTRACTS—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint, in an action on a contract not to set up a rival business, providing for the payment of a certain sum in case of a breach, by alleging the establishment of a rival business shows a breach of the contract, and an allegation of nonpayment of the money is unnecessary.

In bank. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 56 Pac. 249.

BEATTY, C. J. The judgment of the superior court in this case was reversed by a decision in department upon the ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, because it contained no allegation of nonpayment. All other points involved in the appeal were ruled in favor of the respondent. After rehearing, we readopt the opinion of the department, except as to the point upon which the judgment was reversed. We think the complaint was sufficient without an allegation of nonpayment. The contract of defendant was not simply for the payment of money. It was, on the contrary, a contract not to set up a rival business, and the agreement to pay $2,000 in case of the breach of the principal covenant was merely incidental. When the plaintiff alleged the establishment of a rival business, he showed a breach of the contract and a cause of action, and was not required to allege nonpayment. Beasley v. Gillespie, 4 Bibb, 314; Hughes v. Houlton, 5 Blackf. 180. The decisions of this court cited in the commissioners' opinion are not in point, for the reason that they all relate to contracts for the payment of money only,—contracts, that is to say, which could be broken in no other way than by nonpayment. The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

CONTRACTS—ACTION—EVIDENCE OF ACCEPTANCE—PLEADING—AMENDMENT AFTER NONSUIT.

1. Where plaintiff, suing for the contract price for the construction of a ditch, relies upon a substantial performance of the contract, he need not show an acceptance of the work by defendant.

2. An order granting a nonsuit will be sustained, if the record shows valid grounds therefor, although such grounds were not stated in the motion for nonsuit.

3. After a nonsuit and judgment for defendant, it is proper to refuse plaintiff leave to amend his complaint.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Action by T. J. Gilliam against Andrew Brown and others. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying plaintiff's motion to amend, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. Rousseau, for appellant. B. Brandage, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. Action to recover $1,000 for the construction of a certain cut or ditch under an alleged contract between plaintiff and defendants. A jury was impaneled to try the cause, but after plaintiff had introduced his evidence the court granted a nonsuit, and judgment went for defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and order denying a new trial, and also from an order denying his motion to amend the complaint. The case was here before, and, as its main features appear in the opinion on the former appeal, they need not be noticed now in detail. 116 Cal. 454, 48 Pac. 486.

In the complaint, after averments of the contract and the completion of the ditch by plaintiff, it is further averred that the defendants "accepted said ditch so constructed"; and on the former appeal a judgment for plaintiff, which seems to have been based entirely upon the alleged acceptance of the ditch by defendants, was reversed on account of an erroneous instruction, and because there was not in the record "any evidence whatever of an acceptance of the work." But it was not held that acceptance was necessary to a recovery. On the other hand, this court said: "By the terms of this contract, as shown by the proposal for bids, plaintiff was entitled to his money when a cut was made sufficient in capacity and grade to carry all the waters of Whitney creek at all times. * * * He was not required to wait for two years, and then show that the ditch had carried all the water at all times, to enable him to recover." But at the second trial, which gave rise to this present appeal, the court below seems to have acted upon the theory that evidence of an acceptance was necessary to plaintiff's recovery. As to the matter of the nonsuit the record shows the following: "Nonsuit. The defendants' counsel here move for a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff has averred upon a written contract, and there is no evidence before the court of a written contract between the plaintiff and the defendants; (2) that there is no evidence of any acceptance of the work,—which motion was granted on the second ground by the court, and plaintiff's counsel excepted." From this it appears that the nonsuit was granted upon the sole ground of want of evidence of acceptance. The first ground was certainly not tenable; for plaintiff introduced a written proposal for bids to do the work,—copied in the opinion on the former appeal (116 Cal. 455, 456, 48 Pac. 486),—and a written bid by plaintiff, and his bond for the performance of the work as provided for in the proposal; and these constituted a written contract. Of course, if the record showed any other valid ground for the nonsuit, the order granting it would be maintained here, although such ground was not stated in the motion for nonsuit; but no such other ground appears. If, for instance, the plaintiff had not introduced any evidence to the point that he had done the work as provided by the contract, the nonsuit might be maintained on that ground; but it is really not seriously argued by defendants that he did not introduce such evidence. Defendants' brief deals almost entirely with the proposition that there was no evidence of "acceptance." The plaintiff, in his evidence in chief, did not undertake to prove an acceptance; but, upon the cross-examination of plaintiff when on the witness stand, the defendants asked some questions tending to show that there had not been an acceptance, and, against the objection of plaintiff, succeeded in introducing certain written reports of a meeting of the defendants, and motions and resolutions there passed, tending to show that defendants had not accepted the ditch as constructed by plaintiff; and this documentary evidence was certainly inadmissible on cross-examination. The plaintiff clearly relied upon proof that he had constructed the ditch in accordance with the contract; and his own testimony as a witness, together with the testimony of other witnesses introduced by him, certainly constituted material and strong evidence to the point that he constructed the ditch in accordance with the contract. Plaintiff was undoubtedly entitled to go to the jury upon such evidence on the issue that he had done the work in accordance with the requirements of the contract. It is true that the defendants set up in their answer a contract somewhat different from the one alleged in the complaint; but there was no evidence that there was any contract different from the one claimed by plaintiff, and as plaintiff proved the contract which he had alleged, and had introduced evidence strongly tending to prove a compliance with it, he would have been entitled to a judgment if the jury had found that there was such compliance, and the issue of compliance was, under the evidence introduced by plaintiff, one for the jury to determine. We do not deem it necessary to state here in detail the evidence introduced by plaintiff, for the reason that the court below has not held that evidence insufficient to go to the jury, but has evidently determined the case wholly upon the theory of want of proof of acceptance by defendants. For these reasons we think that the court erred in granting the nonsuit.

At the time the appellant made his motion for a new trial he moved the court to allow him to amend the complaint by striking out the averment that defendants "accepted said ditch so constructed," and the court denied the motion, and from the order denying the motion plaintiff also appealed. Under the foregoing views, this appeal is immaterial at the present time; but, the motion not having been made during the trial of the cause, we cannot say that the court erred in denying it, and therefore this order appealed from is affirmed. We think, however, that, if plaintiff before another trial should ask for such amendment, it should be allowed. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial; appellant to recover his costs on this appeal.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by D. W. Edelman against A. A. McDonell and W. F. McDonell. From a judgment in favor of defendant A. A. McDonell, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Max Lowenthal, for appellant. Borden & Carhart and Anderson & Anderson, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought upon a medical bill for services rendered by Dr. Edelman and Dr. Lasher in the treatment of defendant W. F. McDonell. All material allegations of the complaint are denied, and the court finds, in effect, that A. A. McDonell is the father of the other defendant, who was, however, not a minor when the medical services commenced. It is found that the services consisted of divers consultations, house visits, office visits, surgical operations, and surgical dressings, extending over a period of six months, and were rendered in pursuance to the request of W. F. McDonell, made on the 23d day of February, 1894, "while the first of said consultations was in progress; and said plaintiff then and there undertook the treatment of said W. F. McDonell." After plaintiff had so undertaken the treatment, on the said 23d day of February, 1894, and at divers times thereafter during the treatment, A. A. McDonell "made statements to the plaintiff and to said George W. Lasher which led them to believe, and from which they did believe, that he, the said A. A. McDonell, intended and would pay for the treatment of said W. F. McDonell, and for their said services"; and they relied upon said statements, and gave credit to A. A. McDonell "as well as to defendant W. F. McDonell." The court further found that at divers times during the course of said treatment A. A. McDonell agreed to pay for the services rendered, but the statements and promises were not in writing. The court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff against W. F. McDonell, but also against plaintiff and in favor of A. A. McDonell. Plaintiff appeals from this portion of the judgment which is in favor of A. A. McDonell upon the judgment role.

The judgment must be affirmed. It is clearly found that W. F. McDonell contracted for the services, and that plaintiff and Dr. Lasher undertook the treatment on that employment. Afterwards the other defendant made statements which caused plaintiff and his assignor to believe that he would pay. It is not shown that such statements were made as would justify such belief, or that A. A. McDonell intended that they should so understand, or that they would not have rendered the service had such statements not been made. Perhaps the statements consisted in expressions of interest in the case, or were express oral guaranties of his son's solvency. There is nothing in that part of the finding which can help plaintiff.

It is not found what services were rendered after the promises to pay were made at divers times during the treatment. The first contract of employment having been made with W. F. McDonell, these promises were only to pay the debt of W. F. McDonell. There is no finding that the service would have been discontinued but for the promises; much less that they were made in view of a withdrawal from the case unless A. A. McDonell would be responsible.

It does not appear that W. F. McDonell was living with his father, or was being supported by him. For aught that appears, they may have been living apart for years, and the son may have his own family and business. Had the father been taking care of him, and actually supporting him as though he were still a member of his family, as minor children generally are of their parents' family, the presumptions might be very different.

I understand that a contract which a physician makes with his patient whose case he undertakes is usually one contract for the entire work, but it is immaterial in this case, for, if the alleged promises were sufficient to make A. A. McDonell responsible for the visits made after such promises, still it does not appear what service was rendered after the promises, or the value of such service. We must presume that there was no proof from which such finding could be made.

The bill of particulars throws no light upon the case, and it is improperly in the transcript. Not being a part of the judgment roll, it can only be brought here by a bill of exceptions. For many purposes a bill of particulars, when made in response to a statutory demand, is an amplification of the complaint. It makes plaintiff's demand more specific, and limits his proof to the items set out. The statute requires that it shall be delivered to the adverse party, and not a copy thereof, and does not require, or expressly authorize, it to be filed. The mode of its authentication in this case is entirely unwarranted. We have no legal evidence that such bill was ever demanded by or delivered to the adverse party. Judgment affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR—STAY BOND—FILING IN SUPREME COURT.

The supreme court may order a stay of proceedings on a judgment appealed from on the filing of a sufficient bond for the protection of the respondent.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by McClatchy & Co. against Sperry & Hutchinson. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Application for leave to file a stay bond. Granted.

H. G. W. Dinkelspiel, for appellants. L. T. Hatfield, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In this case exception was taken to the sureties on the stay bond filed by appellants at the time the appeal was taken. There was a failure to justify the sureties within the time allowed by law, and we think such failure is hardly excused by the showing now made in support of the application for leave to file a stay bond here and for a supersedeas. But the respondents do not object to the supersedeas, provided they can be secured by a bond filed in this court, and at this time. It is well settled that we can order a stay upon the filing of a sufficient bond in this court. Hill v. Finnigan, 54 Cal. 493, established the practice, and it has been followed in numerous subsequent cases. Of course, it is necessarily implied that a bond so filed will protect the respondent. The bond tendered by the appellants will be approved and filed, subject to any exceptions that the respondent may take within 10 days after notice of this order. In the meantime, and until the further order of the court, all proceedings upon the judgment appealed from are stayed.

CITY OF TULARE v. HEVREN et al. (Sac. 540.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 29, 1899.)
SUPERIOR COURT — JURISDICTION — LIQUOR BOND—CITY ORDINANCE—PLEADING—CORPORATION'S ACT—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Deering's Gen. Laws, p. 873, provides that the city recorder's court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions for the recovery of any fine, penalty, or forfeiture prescribed for the breach of any ordinance, and of all actions founded on any obligations or liability created by any ordinance. Const. art. 6, § 5, provides that the superior courts shall have jurisdiction in all cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to $300. An ordinance of a city provided that a liquor seller should, before a license was issued to him, give a bond to the city in the sum of $1,000, conditioned to conduct his saloon in a quiet, orderly, and reputable manner. Held, that the superior court has jurisdiction of an action to recover the penalty of such a bond.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 459, which provides that in pleading a private statute, or a right derived therefrom, it is sufficient to refer to such statute by its title and the day of its passage, a complaint which attempts to plead an ordinance as "that certain ordinance of said city of T. known as 'Ordinance No. 66.'" does not sufficiently plead the ordinance.

3. Under Const. art. 4, § 25, which provides that the legislature shall not pass local or special laws regulating the practice of courts of justice, or in any case where a general law can be made applicable, Mun. Corp. Act § 765, which provides, in regard to cities of the fifth class, that it shall not be necessary in any action to plead or prove the existence or validity of any ordinance thereof, and that courts shall take judicial cognizance thereof without proof, is unconstitutional, for the reason that a general law requiring a uniform practice in regard to cities of all classes is readily applicable to the subject.

COOPER, C. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and plaintiff declined to amend. Judgment was thereupon entered for defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The complainant shows substantially: That Ordinance No. 66 of the plaintiff requires all parties desiring to obtain a license for the purpose of conducting the business of selling spirituous liquors at retail in the city of Tulare to file with the board of trustees a recommendation by parties owning real estate within the block where the business is to be conducted, to the effect that the applicant is a person of good moral character, and a suitable person to conduct a place where spirituous liquors are sold. That, as a further condition precedent to issuing such license, the applicant shall give a sufficient bond in the sum of $1,000, conditioned that he shall conduct the business in a quiet, orderly, and reputable manner, and not permit any disturbance of the public order or decorum by any noisy, riotous, or disorderly conduct. On November 4, 1895, the defendant Hevren filed his recommendation and bond in the form and as prescribed by said ordinance, and the defendants Gerhardy and Finegan became sureties on said bond. A license was thereupon issued to defendant Hevren. The bond is in the sum of $1,000, and provides that Hevren shall conduct the said business in a quiet, orderly, and reputable manner, and shall not permit any disturbance of the public order or decorum by any noisy, riotous, or disorderly conduct, and that, if Hevren fails to comply with said conditions in any respect, the bond shall be in full force and effect. That after the issuance of the said license and the execution of said bond said Hevren did not conduct the business as provided for in said bond and ordinance, but conducted said business "in a riotous and disorderly manner, and so that his place of business was the scene of frequent broils, quarrels, and fights and disturbances of the public order and peace, and a place of gathering of boisterous crowds to such an extent as to obstruct travel about the place." That such disturbances and noisy and disorderly conduct became a nuisance. That a complaint in writing was filed by the city marshal, alleging such misconduct on the part of Hevren; and the board of trustees of plaintiff, after duly notifying said Hevren, and hearing witnesses, found and determined, by a resolution entered on the records of the plaintiff, that such charges were fully sustained by the evidence, and thereupon the said board of trustees duly revoked the license of Hevren, and declared the said bond forfeited to the plaintiff. The complaint asked for the recovery of $1,000 against defendants upon the said bond. The defendants demurred to the complaint upon various grounds. No questions are argued here except those raised by the demurrer, and no others will be discussed.

1. The first point urged by defendants, and upon which it is said the court below sustained the demurrer, is that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action. We are cited to no authority in support of the proposition except section 806 of the municipal corporation act (Deering's Gen. Laws Cal. p. 873), which provides that the city recorder's court "shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions for the recovery of any fine, penalty or forfeiture prescribed for the breach of any ordinance of such city of all actions founded upon any obligations or liability created by any ordinance and of all prosecutions for any violation of any ordinance." It does not appear to us that this case is within any of the provisions above quoted. It is not an action to recover a fine, penalty, or forfeiture for the breach of an ordinance of the plaintiff. It is not founded upon any obligation or liability created by any ordinance, and is not a prosecution for the violation of an ordinance. It is an action to recover upon the contract made by defendants with the plaintiff. The jurisdiction of the superior courts is given by the constitution, and cannot be taken away by the legislature, even if they had attempted to do so, by the provisions of said section 806. Under the constitution of this state superior courts have jurisdiction "in all cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars." Const. art. 6, § 5. It has long been settled that the amount claimed in the complaint is the test of the jurisdiction of the superior court. The amount claimed in the complaint in this case being $1,000, and upon a written contract, the superior court had jurisdiction. Section 753 of the said municipal corporation act gives the board of trustees the power to fix the amount of the bonds to be given, respectively, by the clerk, treasurer, city attorney, and marshal; and if the amount of the bond should be fixed at $300 or more, if defendants' contention is correct, then the superior court would not have jurisdiction of any suit brought upon such bond, when the amount so fixed was $300 or over. The board of trustees of such city has power, under section 764 of the said act, to purchase real estate for municipal purposes, to contract for supplying the city with water and electric lights, to build bridges, to lay out and repair streets, to construct sewers, and to purchase fire engines, besides many other things. If the contention of defendants is correct, the superior court would have no jurisdiction in any of said matters where the amount of the obligation so incurred would exceed $300. We do not think such is the law.

2. It is claimed that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that it is uncertain, for the reason that the said ordinance is not referred to either by its title or the date of its passage, and not set out in hæc verba; and we think the claim will have to be sustained. The ordinance is attempted to be pleaded by referring to it as "that certain ordinance of said city of Tulare known as 'Ordinance No. 66.'" It is provided in our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 459): "In pleading a private statute, or a right derived therefrom, it is sufficient to refer to such statute by its title and the day of its passage." See Pen. Code, § 963. In this case we have no allegation as to the title nor the day of the passage of the ordinance. The ordinance is not set forth, nor the substance of it given, and therefore is not sufficiently pleaded. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 346; Ex parte Davis, 115 Cal. 447, 47 Pac. 258. The plaintiff does not deny the general proposition, but claims that it was not necessary to plead the ordinance by reason of the provisions of section 765 of the municipal corporation act, which provides in regard to cities of the fifth class (to which plaintiff belongs): "It shall not be necessary in any action, civil or criminal, to plead or prove the * * * existence or validity of any ordinance thereof, and courts shall take judicial cognizance thereof without proof." The portion of the section quoted is broad enough to include this case, but it is challenged as being unconstitutional for the reason that it is special legislation. Our constitution (article 4, § 25) provides that the legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases: "Third. Regulating the practice of courts of justice. * * * Thirty-Third. In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." We think the portion of the section of the municipal corporation act is obnoxious to both constitutional objections. The general municipal corporation act provides for the incorporation as a municipal corporation of any portion of a county containing not less than 500 population, and divides and classifies the municipal corporations that exist or that may be created under the act into six classes, according to population. It is conceded that the provisions of section 765 hereinbefore quoted do not apply to any other than the fifth class of municipal corporations. It relates to pleading in courts of justice, and applies only to the few municipal corporations of the state that may belong to the fifth class. If the rule laid down is a good rule of pleading, why not give the other five classes of municipal corporations of the state the benefit of its privileges? If it is a pernicious rule, why should corporations of the fifth class alone be burdened with it? No reason occurs to us, and none is suggested by counsel, why a general law could not be made applicable in regard to pleading an ordinance of a municipal corporation, no matter to which class it may belong. It was the object of the framers of our constitution to prevent vicious legislation for private ends, and not for the public interest. A vicious measure might often be passed in an apparently harmless provision of a local or private statute. It was also intended that the laws for the protection of the citizens of the state and the protection of their property should be made uniform, consistent, and harmonious, that privileges given to one should be enjoyed by all, and burdens should be placed on all alike. With these objects, among others, the framers of our constitution in their wisdom adopted the salutary provisions above quoted, and legislatures are not at liberty to disregard them, and, if they do, the duty of the court is manifest. It has been uniformly held that the legislature may classify the counties of the state by population, in order that the legislation may be adapted to the needs of the people. It may also provide for the incorporation of towns and cities, and classify them according to population. But all laws of a general nature should apply to each class of such corporations, unless there is some reason why it should not. In Cullen v. Water Co., 113 Cal. 503, 39 Pac. 769, it was held that a part of the fourth section of the act of March 16, 1889, supplemental to the act generally known as the "Wright Act," which provided that in a proceeding to confirm the organization and bonds of an irrigation district "a motion for a new trial must be made upon the minutes of the court," was a special law regulating the practice of courts of justice, and therefore unconstitutional. In City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 233, 27 Pac. 604, it was held that section 870 of the municipal corporation act of 1883, requiring cities of the fifth and sixth classes to make an effort to agree with the owners of land sought to be condemned before instituting condemnation proceedings, is unconstitutional and void. In the opinion it is said: "It seems to us perfectly clear that the clause of the incorporation act requiring cities of the fifth and sixth classes to make an effort to agree, while all other persons are exempt from such condition, is in plain and direct conflict with both of these constitutional inhibitions. It destroys the uniform operation of a general law, and is special in a case where a general law not only can be made applicable, but in which a general law had been enacted, and in which there is no conceivable reason for discrimination." In the present case there is no conceivable reason why a corporation of the fifth class should not be subject to the same general rules in regard to pleading as all other persons and municipal corporations in the state. It does not seem to us that the ordinances of a municipal corporation of the fifth class are so sacred and of such high authority that courts will take judicial notice of them, while in all other classes of corporations the ordinances are of so little consequence that they have to be pleaded. In Darcy v. City of San Jose, 104 Cal. 643, 38 Pac. 500, it was held that an act of the legislature, requiring all cities containing a population of not less than 10,000 nor more than 25,000 inhabitants to fix by ordinance the compensation of the policemen of the city at not less than $100 nor more than $125 per month, was unconstitutional. In Bloss v. Lewis, 109 Cal. 493, 41 Pac. 1081, it was held that section 195 of the county government act, providing different clerks' fees to be paid to the county clerk in estates of deceased persons in counties of the thirty-third class from that provided for the other counties of the state, was unconstitutional. See further, Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 620, 28 Pac. 834, and 29 Pac. 1092; Rauer v. Williams, 118 Cal. 401, 50 Pac. 691; Denman v. Broderick, 111 Cal. 97, 43 Pac. 516; Turner v. Siskiyou Co., 109 Cal. 332, 42 Pac. 434; Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142, 8 Pac. 813; Welsh v. Bramlet, 98 Cal. 224, 33 Pac. 66. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

MEYER v. WIDBER, Treasurer (BOHEN, Intervener. S. F. 1,435).

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1899.)

MUNICIPALITIES — SINKING FUNDS — BONDS — DEMAND — PRIORITIES — PAYMENT — TAXATION — DUTY OF COUNTY TREASURER.

1. Under Act March 23, 1876 (St. 1876, p. 439, § 13), authorizing San Francisco to widen Dupont street, and to issue bonds in payment of damages to abutters, and providing for a "Dupont Street Fund," to be paid out only in payment of the bonds, etc., it is no defense to mandamus to compel payment of a bond that other bondholders had made prior demands, which had been refused for want of funds, as the prior demandants did not thus acquire any right of priority of payment out of the fund.

2. Pol. Code, § 3753, requires the tax collector to settle with the county auditor each month for moneys collected, and to turn the same over to the county treasurer. Section 4217 requires the auditor to settle the accounts of all persons indebted to the county, and certify the amount to the treasurer. Held that, where the collector deposited with the treasurer certain sacks containing money received on taxes generally, the treasurer was not required to segregate the amount to be credited to a certain fund, or pay it out to those entitled to the fund, until the collector had settled with the auditor, and the latter had certified the amount to the treasurer.

Beatty, C. J., and Temple and Henshaw, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Mandamus by Albert Meyer against A. C. Widber, treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco; George T. Bohen, intervener. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rosenbaum & Sheeline, for appellant. H. T. Creswell, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Mandamus to compel the payment of certain Dupont street bonds and coupons. Under the act of the legislature approved March 23, 1876 (St. 1876, p. 433), the city of San Francisco was authorized to widen Dupont street, and to issue bonds in payment of damages to owners of property on said street. The bonds were each for the sum of $1,000, and the coupons called for $35 each. Plaintiff was the owner of 12 of these bonds and 408 coupons. Intervener, Bohen, was the owner of 16 bonds and 32 coupons. Plaintiff made his demand for payment upon defendant, July 3, 1897, and upon his refusal to pay brought this action the same day. Intervener, Bohen, made his demand July 28, 1897, and filed his intervention September 15, 1897. It is somewhat difficult to state precisely from the facts found the dates when funds were paid in and became applicable to demands made upon them by bond and coupon holders and the amounts thus applicable at different dates. As we think the judgment and order must be reversed, it will apparently serve all practical purposes to decide the questions of law presented.

1. When plaintiff made his demand there was money to the credit of both the bond and coupon funds which might have been applied in payment thereof, but defendant refused payment because prior to plaintiff's demand other holders of bonds and coupons had made demand and had been refused. The claim of defendant seems to be that the first presentation of bonds or coupons after he had received money belonging to the Dupont street fund gave to the said party a preferred claim against the fund which continued indefinitely, whether or not upon being refused payment he followed up his demand by repeating it or by instituting legal proceedings to enforce it. The judgment of the court rests in part upon its adoption of this theory. And the court held that, although there was a considerable amount of money to the credit of these funds on and after January 1, 1897, and at the time plaintiff made his demand, it could not be used to pay plaintiff, because prior to January 1st other demands had been made and were refused, and stood as valid and preferred claims against the funds. There is nothing in the Dupont street act giving preference to holders of bonds or coupons in the order of their presentation to the treasurer, whether there be or be not at the time money on hand to pay them. Section 13 of the act provides that: "When collected the said money shall be paid over to the treasurer of said city and county to constitute a part of the 'Dupont Street Fund,' and to be paid out by said treasurer only in payment," etc.

The demand upon the treasurer, when he had funds applicable for the purpose, gives the parties demanding, upon refusal of their demand, the right to a mandate against him. Meyer v. Porter, 65 Cal. 67, 2 Pac. 884. But these first demandants have never brought any action to enforce their claims. Perchance they never will. It may be that their claims have been abandoned, or it may be that they have been satisfied through some other channel. The law itself provides other ways by which their claims may be satisfied. There is money in the fund which has been there at least six months. The first demandants do not attempt to get it, and, as we have seen, probably do not want it. If other demandants may be found at the expiration of each respective four years equally as complainant, then the money never can be taken from the treasurer, even though this plaintiff and this intervener were ready and anxious at all times that it should be applied to the payment of their bonds. It is not just nor right to compel these parties to wait four years before the law will allow them to ask that this money be applied to the payment of their bonds and coupons, and thus be deprived of its use for that length of time. We know of no law that stamps a portion of this fund as sacred for four years to a party who makes demand for the payment of his bonds, simply by the mere force of the demand itself. The Dupont street statute does not say anything of the kind, but does say, in effect, that the entire issue of bonds stands alike and is entitled to be paid at the same time. It was distinctly held in Meyer v. Porter, supra, that the fact that there were other creditors interested in the fund, who have not demanded payment, is no answer to the petition of a creditor who makes application for payment. We cannot see that such creditor improved his situation under the act in question by demand alone. Such demand was the condition precedent to the bringing of the action. The demand gave him the right to bring the action against the treasurer, and nothing more. There is no law requiring a record to be kept of the respective dates when demands may be made upon the treasurer for the payment of these bonds. The treasurer succeeding the present incumbent will have no knowledge whatever of any demands outstanding against the bond fund when he assumes his office. And at that time, if there be money in the fund, and demand be made upon him for the payment of certain bonds, we cannot see how he would be justified in refusing to apply these moneys to the payment of such bonds. We conclude that the court erred in holding that plaintiff could not be paid because of these outstanding and unenforced obligations. Who these creditors are, or when they made demand, we do not know. It is only found by the court that they made their demands before January 1, 1897, and it does not appear that they at any time thereafter took any steps to enforce their claims.

2. At the time plaintiff made his demand certain money had been deposited with the treasurer by the tax collector. A portion of this money was collected on account of the Dupont street fund, but it was unsegregated, and had not yet been placed to the credit of that fund, and the court held it not applicable to plaintiff's demand. Plaintiff claims that this was error. The evidence as to this money was that from May 19, 1897, to July 3, 1897, sundry sums at different times were deposited in the treasury by the tax collector with the treasurer, in certain bags, "and contained, among other tax moneys, sums collected by him [the collector] for and on account of said Dupont street fund." The above sums of money were "contained in sacks, mingled with and unseparated from the other moneys collected by said tax collector on the same days as and for general taxes of said city and county unrelated to said Dupont street fund; * * * the only mark on said deposits * * * being a tag affixed to each sack, stating the quantity and character of the money in such sack contained"; and receipt was accordingly taken. These deposits remained "undisturbed and without segregation until the 27th day of July, 1897. On July 26, 1897, the said tax collector made his report to and settled with said treasurer and auditor for all his transactions and receipts of taxes since his preceding report and settlement thereof." The report thus settled showed "that, of all deposits made by him in said treasury, * * * the sum of forty thousand five hundred and eighty-nine dollars and twenty-six cents contained therein had been collected by him for and on account of said Dupont street fund. That report conveyed * * * to said treasurer the first knowledge or information of the contents of said bags, * * * that they contained any moneys belonging to said Dupont street fund; * * * but said treasurer, by inquiring, could have ascertained from the tax collector's books how much money belonged to said Dupont street bond and coupon funds, and said tax collector's books contained said facts." In these bags were certain coupons aggregating $6,545, surrendered by the collector as money under the acts, which, deducted from the $40,589.26, "left in money $17,132.07 in said coupon fund, and $16,912.19 in said bond fund," and receipts were accordingly exchanged, and the receipts for the sacks taken up. The court held that this money was not applicable to the payment of plaintiff's bonds and coupons, but was applicable to the payment of Bohen's, and we agree with this contention.

The question of law presented by the second proposition under discussion is, was this money, which was deposited by the tax collector in bags with the county treasurer, money which the treasurer was authorized at the time of the demand to use in the payment of Meyer's bonds? In other words, was it at that time, in the eyes of the law, money in the Dupont street fund? We are clear that it was not such money. The money in these bags was held by the treasurer simply as a quasi special deposit. The treasurer had no authority to pay it out at the demand of anybody, or at the expense of any fund. Section 3753 of the Political Code provides: "On the first Monday in each month the tax collector must settle with the auditor for all moneys collected for the state or county, and pay the same to the county treasurer, and on the same day must deliver to and file in the office of the auditor a statement under oath, showing: (1) An account of all his transactions and receipts since his last settlement; (2) that all money collected by him as tax collector has been paid." Section 4217 provides: "The auditor must examine and settle the accounts of all persons indebted to the county, or holding moneys payable into the county treasury, and must certify the amount to the treasurer, and upon the presentation and filing of the treasurer's receipt therefor give to such person a discharge, and charge the treasurer with the amount received by him." It will thus be seen that all moneys passing from the tax collector to the treasurer must go via the auditor's office. It is only upon the certificate of the auditor that the treasurer may receive money which may be used in the payment of claims against the city and county. And it is only upon the receipt of the certificate accompanied by the money that the treasurer is authorized to place it to the credit of the various funds. Section 4145 of the Political Code declares in terms that the treasurer "must receive no money into the treasury unless accompanied by the certificate of the auditor provided for in section 4217." It is from the face of this certificate that the treasurer obtains the information which enables him to physically separate the money into the respective amounts to which the various funds are entitled. When the demand was made in this case the bags of money were sealed. Probably the treasurer had not even the right to break those seals; but even conceding he had the right to break them, and had exercised that right, it was not possible for him to even then say that a particular part of the money was money belonging to the Dupont street fund. He did not know that fact, and could not know it until the auditor's certificate showing a settlement with the tax collector had been presented to him. He was not called upon to undertake an investigation looking to the sources from which the money held in those bags came. He was not required to take anybody's word for it. Neither was he required to rely upon another officer's books for the information. Reduced to its simplest form, the proposition may be stated that no moneys held in the county treasury by the treasurer are subject to the payment of demands unless those moneys have come into the county treasury upon the certificate of the auditor. The money in these bags did not come that way. The fact that the tax collector delayed for three months to make his settlement with the auditor is not material here. Meyer, before making his demand upon the treasurer, could have readily required the tax collector to make his settlements, as expressly demanded by the law.

It appears from the record that certain other actions were brought by various persons, the judgments in which depend more or less upon the decision in this case. We are unable, from the facts found, to clearly define the rights of these persons. It seems, however, to be conceded that a decision upon the two points already noticed will enable the learned judge to easily dispose of the remaining cases as well as the case appealed. The judgment and order should be reversed, with direction to the court below to take such further proceedings as will be in accordance with this opinion. It is so ordered.

We concur: VAN DYKE, J.; HARRISON, J.; McFARLAND, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. The grounds upon which the judgment of the superior court are reversed are, in my opinion, absolutely inconsistent with the fundamental proposition upon which appellant's right of action is based. He proceeds by mandamus, and therefore assumes, and must maintain, that his demand for payment of his bonds and coupons cast upon the defendant the duty to pay them as far as the funds in his hands would suffice. But if a demand upon the treasurer made it his legal and imperative duty to pay, then it was his legal and imperative duty to pay those who presented the first demands, and, as their demands were more than sufficient to exhaust the fund, it could not be his duty to pay to appellant the identical money which he was already bound to pay to others, unless they had in some manner forfeited their rights. It devolved upon the appellant, therefore, to show that when he commenced this proceeding those who had made prior demands upon the treasurer had in some way lost the right of action which accrued to them when their demands were refused; for, if their right of action remained,—if it was still the duty of the treasurer to pay them,—it could not be his duty to pay the appellant. How, then, and at what time, did those other parties lose their right of action? This question the appellant has essayed, but failed, to answer. It is not pretended that it was barred by any statute of limitations, but it is said that they were guilty of inexcusable laches, because they waited six months without commencing proceedings by mandamus. No authority is cited by the court which has the remotest tendency to support this position, and those cited in the brief of appellant are decidedly against him. They show undoubtedly that the right to proceed by mandamus may be forfeited by laches, but they also show that in determining what will be deemed laches the courts are guided by the analogies furnished by the statutes of limitations, which in this case would permit a delay of four years in commencing the proceeding after the right accrued. The general doctrine, and the grounds of it, are briefly stated in section 87 of Merrill on Mandamus, as follows: "The courts require those who would avail themselves of the assistance of this writ to be prompt in demanding the enforcement of their rights. By lapse of time the necessary evidence is lost, and third parties may acquire rights growing out of the existing state of affairs. Where the parties have been guilty of unreasonable delay in applying for this writ the courts have not hesitated to refuse such relief, unless the delay was accounted for to their satisfaction. In determining what will constitute unreasonable delay, regard should be had to the circumstances which justify the delay, to the nature of the case, and the relief demanded, and to the question whether the rights of the defendant or of other persons have been prejudiced by such delay."

To apply this doctrine, let us consider the nature of this case, and the only relief which the holders of the coupons and bonds could have demanded. In cases where an action will lie on such obligations, the action is barred by the statute in four years, and, by the analogy of the statute, a mandamus to enforce payment would be defeated by a delay of four years. If, under the circumstances, the lapse of a shorter time involved the loss of material evidence, or if rights of third parties were adversely affected, relief might be denied on that ground. But here is no pretense that any evidence was, or could be, lost in six months or six years. Nor was any right of any third party adversely affected. It was no injury to Meyer or any other claimant upon the fund if those who had secured the first right to the money then on hand chose to let it lie in the treasury. They alone were injured by the delay. The city and county was not injured, because it is in no event liable for any part of the debt. The fund was not depleted, and could not be, for the coupons are not bearing interest (Bates v. Gerber, 82 Cal. 550, 22 Pac. 1115), and nothing is paid out of the bond fund except the face of the bonds. The court, however, holds, against the clear result of the authorities, that six months' inaction on the part of these claimants has worked a forfeiture of their rights. But if six months is fatal, why is not six weeks fatal? Or six days? Or one day? Where will the line be drawn, and upon what principle is the distinction to rest? After how short a delay in bringing suit will we conclude that perchance the party will never sue, or that his claim has been abandoned or paid through some other channel? These presumptions in which the court indulges are without anything in the record to sustain them, and are against all probability, as they are against the correctness of the judgment of the superior court.

Nor has it been pointed out how the law itself (the Dupont street act) has provided other ways by which their (the prior demandants') claims may be satisfied. Nor have I been able to see, as the court does, that they probably do not want their money. Is it upon such fanciful suppositions as these that a judgment of this court can be securely rested? The truth is, the doctrine of this case, carried to its logical conclusion, will permit the custodian of a fund in the position of this defendant to pay or refuse to pay those who make demands as his fancy inclines. As long as he is not sued, he may refuse one and pay another, irrespective of the order of their demands, or he may refuse them all until some favored claimant serves him with a writ of mandate. The doctrine is, in my opinion, without reason to support it, and is pernicious in its consequences.

HEVREN v. REED et al. (Sac. 512.)

PROHIBITION—PETITION—LIQUOR LICENSE—REVOCATION—POWER.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1102, which defines a writ of prohibition to be the counterpart of a writ of mandate, and its function to arrest the proceedings of any tribunal, corporation, board, or person, where such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, corporation, or person, a writ of prohibition will not issue to arrest the action of a number of persons assuming to act as a board of trustees, where the petition for the writ alleges that the persons whose actions are sought to be restrained are neither in law or in fact a board of trustees.

2. A petition for a writ of prohibition to restrain the board of trustees of a town from revoking a liquor license, under an ordinance passed by it authorizing the license, must show that the ordinance does not authorize the board to revoke a license issued under it, as otherwise such power will be presumed.

3. Authorities authorized to issue liquor licenses have power, for good cause, to revoke the same.

4. A liquor license is neither property nor a contract, in any constitutional sense, but is subject at all times to the police powers of the state.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Petition by W. H. Hevren against D. J. F. Reed and others, purporting to be acting as a board of trustees, to prevent revocation of liquor license. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer and dismissing the petition, plaintiff appealed. Affirmed.

G. W. Martin and Power & Alford, for appellant. C. R. Scott, E. T. Cooper, and C. L. Russell, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This appeal is from a judgment dismissing a petition for a writ of prohibition after a demurrer had been sustained to said petition. The petition alleges that the petitioner is a citizen and taxpayer of certain territory described therein; that certain proceedings were taken before the board of supervisors of Tulare county, but without proper petition, order, notice, or other essential required by law, and by virtue of such illegal proceedings, and without authority of law, the said board of supervisors declared the said territory to be a municipal corporation of the fifth class, under the name of "City of Tulare"; that on the 4th day of October, 1889, a certain pretended board of trustees of said pretended city unlawfully and wrongfully, and without color of right, assuming to act as a pretended board, passed a pretended license ordinance numbered 66; that on the 4th day of November, 1895, the said pretended city, acting by its said pretended board, issued to plaintiff a permit or license to conduct the business of retailing spirituous liquors; "that defendants are not in fact the board of trustees of said city or of any city;" that defendants, without any authority whatever, assuming to act as a pretended board of trustees, are about to, and will, unless prohibited, revoke plaintiff's permit, and declare his license forfeited. Judgment is prayed that defendants, as such pretended board of trustees, be prohibited from revoking said license. The petition was demurred to upon the ground, among others, that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

We think the demurrer was properly sustained. The writ of prohibition is for the purpose of, and can only be granted for, arresting proceedings without and in excess of the jurisdiction of some inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person. Code Civ. Proc. § 1102. The complaint or petition in any case in a proceeding against a board of trustees of a city would have to show that the persons against whom the writ was sought were a "board" either de facto or de jure, and that the proceedings were in excess of the jurisdiction of the board as a body. In this case the complaint must be taken as true, and it is the universal rule that upon demurrer the court below will consider the applicant's case to be such as he has stated in his pleadings, without investigation or inquiry touching the merits of the action. High, Extr. Rem. §

767b. The petition upon its face states and shows that defendants are not the board of trustees of the pretended city of Tulare, either in law or in fact. We know of no law authorizing the writ to issue to individuals when not acting as a board nor judicially. Our writ of prohibition is the writ as known to the common law, and its office is to restrain subordinate courts and inferior judicial tribunals from exceeding this jurisdiction. Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 289. In this case, if the complaint or petition is true, the defendants are not the board of trustees of Tulare city, and the ordinance under which the license issued is void. If the defendants revoke a void license, what damage can it cause the plaintiff? The defendants, according to the petition, not being a board, and having no right, under the law, to revoke a void license or to grant a valid one, cannot be prohibited from such contemplated act. Purdy v. Sinton, 56 Cal. 133.

If it be conceded that the defendants are the legal and acting board of trustees of the city of Tulare, and that ordinance No. 66 is a valid ordinance, and that defendants, as such board, are about to revoke the license to plaintiff, still there is not enough alleged in the petition to show that petitioner is entitled to the writ asked. We must presume that ordinance No. 66 authorized the board of trustees to revoke or declare forfeited any license that might be issued under it, for the reason that the complaint does not allege or show to the contrary. If the board have the power to revoke a license under any circumstances, as a judicial act, this writ will not lie. It is only in cases where the inferior tribunal is about to do some act unauthorized by law that the writ will lie. High, Extr. Rem. § 764a; Murphy v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 595, 24 Pac. 310; Powelson v. Lockwood, 82 Cal. 615, 23 Pac. 143. The general rule in the American courts is that the authorities authorized by law to grant a retail liquor license have the power, for good cause, to revoke the same. Board v. Barrie, 34 N. Y. 666; People v. Board, etc., of City of Brooklyn, 59 N. Y. 95; Com. v. Moylan, 119 Mass. 109; Hurber v. Baugh, 43 Iowa, 514; State v. Cooke, 24 Minn. 247; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25; La Croix v. Commissioners, 50 Conn. 321. In the latter case it is said: "But, aside from this consideration, if anything can be settled by legal authorities, the doctrine is too well established to be longer called in question that a license of this character, whether revocable in terms or not, is neither a contract nor property, in any constitutional sense, but is subject at all times to the police powers of the state government." We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

ROHRER v. BABCOCK. (Sac. 490.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 29, 1899.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—CROPPING CONTRACTS—DIVISION OF CROPS—TENANTS IN COMMON—RETENTION OF CROPS BY TENANT.

1. Where a cropping contract provides for a division of the crops between the parties, they are tenants in common of all crops raised under the contract until they are divided.

2. Under a cropping contract, whereby the landlord's half is to be stacked in a certain place, a stacking of half of it in that place is a complete division of it, and places the ownership in him.

3. Where, by a cropping contract, the landlord is to pay for certain pasturage, the tenant cannot retain his share of the crop until he pays the amount due therefor, if the contract gives no lien on the crop for the pasturage.

4. Where a landlord's right of possession of his share of the crops does not depend on his performance of certain stipulations in the contract, he need not allege or prove their performance to entitle him to recover.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county.

Action by Elizabeth J. Rohrer, as executrix of the will of John B. Rohrer, deceased, against A. L. Babcock. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Warren & Taylor, for appellant. Jas. F. Farraher, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This action was brought to obtain a judgment decreeing the estate of John B. Rohrer, deceased, to be the owner of certain hay, and plaintiff to be entitled to the possession thereof. Plaintiff also prayed for and obtained a temporary injunction restraining all interference with said hay pending judgment herein. An appeal was heretofore taken from an order refusing to dissolve said injunction, and said order was affirmed. Rohrer v. Babcock, 114 Cal. 124, 45 Pac. 1054. Thereafter the case was tried before the court without a jury, the plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals from the same, and from an order denying a new trial.

The hay in controversy was grown, cut, and stacked by defendant on the lands of said estate under a cropping contract theretofore entered into between plaintiff and defendant. The contract provided, as to the hay in controversy, that the second party to said contract (the appellant here) "will stack, in the stackyard on the lower place, the one-half of the second-quality hay grown each year on the said hereby-leased premises; * * * It being, however, mutually agreed that, in the event of said first party desiring to have her said one-half of said second quality of hay stacked in the stackyard on the upper place, * * * said second party shall * * * haul said one-half * * * to said upper stackyard. * * * The division of hay to be stacked hereunder shall be made in the manner hereinafter mutually agreed upon by the said parties hereto. * * * That all the property to be delivered by said second party hereunder to said first party is to be delivered and division had each year, to the end that there may be a complete settlement each year covered by this lease." The contract also provided for the delivery of a share of the other crops grown on the premises to the party of the first part (the respondent herein), and that said first party should place the fences in repair, and furnish material to keep them in repair, and to construct any new fences that might be decided upon. The respondent was also to have the right part of the year to the pasturage of a portion of the premises, she to pay $10 a year therefor. Under this contract, in the cropping season of 1895, the appellant stacked one half the hay referred to in the above stipulations of the contract in the lower stackyard on said premises, and the other half thereof was stacked in another stackyard (presumably the upper one). Some time after the hay had been so stacked the appellant requested J. B. Rohrer, the son of respondent, to assist in dividing the hay; telling him, according to Rohrer's testimony, to look the hay over, and take his choice between the two yards of hay. Rohrer made measurements, and selected the hay in one of the yards as his mother's share, and informed appellant of such selection. It does not appear from the evidence which yard he selected, but, looking at the pleadings, I think it sufficiently appears that he selected the hay in the lower stackyard. About 10 minutes after this, as appellant was getting ready to leave the place, he pointed out two stacks in the yard selected by Rohrer, and forbid him to touch them, claiming that there was money due him for pasturage under the terms of the lease, and that he proposed to hold those two stacks until he was paid. Thereafter appellant commenced to haul away and feed out these two stacks of hay; whereupon this suit was begun, as we understand it, to determine the ownership and right of possession to said two stacks of hay.

We think this case was properly decided in the trial court. The parties to this suit were tenants in common of all the crops raised under the cropping contract until such crops were divided. Baughman v. Reed, 75 Cal. 319, 17 Pac. 222. After a division, each party owned that portion of the crops set apart to him. Crocker v. Cunningham, 122 Cal. 547, 55 Pac. 404. The contract between the parties did not contemplate anything as to the delivery of the hay to be grown, other than that respondent's share of it should be stacked in a certain place, to wit, in the lower stackyard, unless respondent should signify her option to have it stacked in the upper stackyard. The stacking of this hay in two places, the half of it in each place, would seem to constitute a complete division of it, and place the ownership of the hay of that season, stacked in the lower stackyard, in the estate of the decedent; but, if that be not so, surely, after the respondent had, through her agent, selected the hay at the lower stack-yard, in response to a request from appellant that she make a selection, there could be no further question that a division of the property had been effected.

There was no agreement in the cropping lease or elsewhere reserving or giving to appellant any lien on any interest in the hay. His claim, therefore, that he could hold the hay, or any portion of it not belonging to him, until he was paid whatever might be due him under the lease, is without foundation. The ownership and right to possession of a share of the crops does not depend upon the performance of those agreements in the contract to pay for pasturage and to furnish certain materials, and it was not necessary to allege or to prove the performance of those agreements to entitle respondent to recover in this action. We advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

EDE v. CUNEO et al. (S. F. 905.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET WORK—SECOND ASSESSMENT.

Under Street Improvement Act, § 9, as amended by St. 1889, p. 167, providing that whenever it shall appear that any suit to foreclose the lien of an assessment for street work "has been defeated by reason of any defect, error, informality, omission, irregularity, or illegality in any assessment," or in the "recording" or "return thereof," any person interested may, within three months after final judgment, apply to the superintendent of streets, and have another assessment issued "in conformity to law," a superintendent of streets has no authority to make a second assessment for street work when the plaintiff's failure to recover on the first assessment was not by reason of any infirmity in the "assessment," but by reason of the absence of a certificate of the city engineer, and of a record thereof.

Beatty, C. J., and Van Dyke, J., dissenting.

In bank. Affirmed.

For opinions in department, see 55 Pac. 388, 772.

HARRISON, J. Action upon a street assessment. The complaint is in the ordinary form for the foreclosure of the lien of a street assessment, and alleges that the contract for doing the work was entered into August 13, 1890, and completed within the time fixed therefor, and that an assessment for the work was issued July 6, 1896. It also alleges that on December 6, 1894, the superintendent of streets made and issued an assessment for the same work, upon which an action was brought in the superior court May 29, 1896, and that on the 15th of June, 1896, that court rendered a final judgment therein that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on said assessment; and that it appears by said final judgment that the plaintiff was defeated by reason of the fact that the city engineer of said city and county had never made any engineer's certificate of said work, and that the assessment, diagram, warrant, and purported engineer's certificate were never "duly or properly or legally" recorded in the office of the superintendent of streets, and that by reason thereof no lien was created by said assessment. A demurrer to this complaint was sustained by the court, and judgment entered in favor of the defendants, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

Section 9 of the street improvement act, as amended in 1889 (St. 1889, p. 167), provides: "Whenever it shall appear by any final judgment of any court in this state that any suit brought to foreclose the lien of any sum of money assessed to cover the expense of any street work done under the provisions of this act has been defeated by reason of any defect, error, informality, omission, irregularity or illegality in any assessment hereafter to be made and issued, or in the recording thereof, or in the return thereof, made to or recorded by said superintendent of streets, any person interested therein may at any time within three months after the entry of said final judgment apply to the superintendent of streets and have issued to him another assessment in conformity to law." Proceedings for the improvement of streets are purely statutory, and the rights and obligations of the parties to be affected thereby are to be determined by the terms of the statute. The right to an assessment, as well as the lien created thereby, exist only by virtue of the statute, and can be brought into existence only in accordance with its terms. Prior to the amendment of 1889 it had been held that, when a contractor failed in his suit to foreclose the lien by reason of certain defects in the assessment, he was entitled to another assessment, freed from these defects, and that there was no statutory limitation of time for its issuance. Himmelman v. Cofran, 36 Cal. 411; Dyer v. Scalmanini, 69 Cal. 637, 11 Pac. 327; Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, 18 Pac. 766. If, however, the original assessment was in conformity with law, the superintendent had exhausted his power therein, and until that assessment was legally vacated or set aside he had no authority to issue another. By the above amendment, however, the legislature fixed the conditions upon which a second assessment might be issued, and the time within which an application therefor should be made. It must be assumed that the legislature intended thereby some change in the law as it previously existed, for if, notwithstanding the amendment, the superintendent can still issue a second assessment at any time, and under any conditions, the amendment would cease to have any operative effect. But it is evident from the terms of the amendment that the object of the legislature was to limit the time within which a second as-essment might be made, as well as to prescribe the conditions under which the superintendent would be authorized to issue it. The contractor is not required, after the completion of his contract, to accept from the superintendent an incomplete or imperfect document, but may still demand of that officer that he issue to him an assessment in conformity with law, and, in case of his refusal, may even compel him to issue one that shall meet all the requirements of the statute. If, however, instead of insisting upon such an assessment, he, without objection, accepts such documents as that officer elects to deliver to him, and thereafter brings an action thereon, and is defeated, he is not entitled to another assessment, unless he brings himself within the terms of the amendment of 1889. The jurisdiction of the superintendent of streets is limited, and can be exercised only within the period of time therein named, and under the conditions therein expressed; and the final judgment of a court is made the sole evidence upon which the superintendent may determine whether these conditions exist. In Gray v. Lucas, 115 Cal. 430, 47 Pac. 354, it was said: "Under this provision of the statute the right to a second assessment does not exist unless it 'appear' by the final judgment in a suit upon the prior assessment that the suit was defeated by reason of some infirmity in the 'assessment,' or in the recording thereof, or in some manner connected with the return of the warrant." The complaint herein does not allege that the former "assessment" was in any respect invalid, or that the failure to recover thereon was by reason of any infirmity in the "assessment," but alleges that the plaintiff was defeated by reason of the absence of a certificate of the city engineer, and of a record of such certificate. It thus appears that the conditions under which the superintendent could issue a second assessment are not shown to have existed. The statute does not authorize its issuance in a case where the plaintiff was defeated in an action upon the former one by reason of a defect or absence of the engineer's certificate, or upon the ground that no lien had been created upon the property. The contractor could have refused to accept the assessment from the superintendent, without the certificate, but if he did accept it, and brought his action thereon, and was defeated upon this ground, the statute does not authorize the issuance of another assessment. The legislature might have authorized the issuance of a second assessment in case of the failure to recover upon the ground of any defective document, but it has not done so, and we are not at liberty to add to the statute terms or conditions which the legislature has not seen fit to include therein.

The contention of the appellant, that it was the intention of the legislature to authorize a second assessment whenever the contractor failed to establish a lien upon the property by reason of a defect in any of the documents upon which such lien depended, is untenable. Aside from the fact that such construction of the statute is at variance with its language, a consideration of the terms used indicates very clearly that it was only for some infirmity in the assessment or in its record that the legislature intended thereby to authorize a second assessment. The documents essential to the creation of the lien are distinct in themselves, and are so regarded in the various provisions of the statute. Section 7 gives specific directions for the form of the assessment, varying according to the nature of the work done; and section 8 provides that the superintendent shall "make" an assessment in conformity with the provisions of section 7, and that the assessment shall have "attached thereto" a "diagram" exhibiting the street on which the work was done, and the lots assessed therefor; and section 9 provides that a "warrant," whose form is prescribed, shall also be "attached" to said assessment, and that these three documents, together with the certificate of the city engineer, shall be recorded in the office of the superintendent, and, after being recorded, shall be delivered to the contractor. Each of these documents essential to the creation of a lien is separate and distinct, and is to be complete in itself, and the foregoing amendment to section 9 authorizes the superintendent, under the conditions there named, to make and deliver a new "assessment, diagram, and warrant." By the Vrooman act, as originally enacted in 1885, as well as by the various statutes for street improvements previously in force in this state, the superintendent of streets was required to record the assessment before delivering it to the contractor, and it was held at an early day (Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441) that, unless recorded, and the record thereof properly authenticated, the assessment created no lien. It is reasonable to suppose that the legislature had in view this interpretation of the statute when it provided that the superintendent might make a second assessment if there was any defect in the record of the original one; and it is also reasonable to assume that, inasmuch as the provision for recording the engineer's certificate was made a part of the statute at the same time with the foregoing provision for a second assessment, if the legislature had intended that a second assessment might be made, in case there had been a defect in the record of the certificate when the former one was issued, it would have expressed such purpose in definite terms. It is a familiar rule of interpretation that a word which is used several times in the same section of a statute shall receive the same construction, unless there is something in the context indicating a different meaning. But there is nothing in the section under consideration which demands different constructions to be given to the word "assessment" in the different places in which it is used. The phrase, "any assessment hereafter to be made and issued," must refer to the assessment as distinguished from the other documents, and the term "issued" is not predicable of any action by the superintendent of streets in reference to the certificate of the engineer. The antecedent to the clause "or in the recording thereof" is the noun "assessment" in the previous clause of the same sentence, and the "assessment" which the contractor is authorized to apply for, as well as the "new assessment, diagram, and warrant" which are to be made and delivered to him, can have reference to no other documents than those to be made and issued by the superintendent. The entire scope of the provision is limited to some document made by the superintendent, and cannot be extended to matters independent thereof, or incidental thereto, and which are not named in the statute, although they may be essential to the creation of a lien.

The allegation in the complaint that the prior assessment, diagram, warrant, and purported engineer's certificate were "never duly or properly or legally recorded" in the office of the superintendent of streets is the averment of a legal conclusion, and not of a fact. This allegation imports that these documents were recorded, but whether they were "properly" or "legally" recorded was to be determined by the court upon facts shown in reference thereto, and the opinion of the plaintiff as to the effect of these facts could not be substituted for the judgment of the court. He should have pointed out the defect in the record upon which he relies, in order that the court might determine whether it impaired its sufficiency. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; TEMPLE, J.; McFARLAND, J.

VAN DYKE, J. I dissent. I am unable to agree with the prevailing opinion in the construction it places upon the amendment of the street law of 1889. To limit the operation of the amendment to such errors, irregularities, and illegalities as affect only the assessment as such, as contradistinguished from either of the other instruments, to wit, the diagram, warrant, and certificate of the city engineer, which are required to be recorded by the superintendent of streets, with the assessment proper, in order to constitute the lien, is, in my opinion, too strict and technical. It is true that a proceeding to enforce a lien under the street law is in invitum, and that the rule in such cases requires a strict compliance with all the provisions of the law in relation thereto. But in the construction or interpretation of the statute itself no such rule applies. The street law itself declares, "This act shall be liberally construed to effect the ends of justice." Section 12. Further, the amendment in question is remedial in its character. The purpose of the amendment evidently is to afford a remedy where a party who has fulfilled his contract is defeated in a suit to enforce a lien on property benefited by his labor, in consequence of errors, irregularities, or illegalities in any of the proceedings necessary to constitute a valid assessment. Such a statute "must, therefore, be construed liberally, and when the meaning is doubtful it must be construed to extend the remedy." White v. The Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 462; Cullerton v. Mead, 22 Cal. 96; Sedg. St. & Const. Law, 559-561. As said by Sawyer, C. J., in Himmelman v. Cofran, 36 Cal. 412: "The case does not fall within the principle of a certain class of cases which hold that when a power is conferred, which, in the nature of things, cannot be but once exercised, a defective execution exhausts the power. In this case the statute makes it the duty of the superintendent, after the fulfillment of the contract to his satisfaction, to make an assessment to cover the sum due for the work performed, in accordance with the provisions of the act, and afterwards to issue a warrant thereon. No time is limited within which the assessment must be made. Time is, therefore, not of the essence of the power." In Shepard v. McNeil, 38 Cal. 75, the court say: "It is not material in what form he originally signed the assessment, provided that it was afterwards properly signed in due time to constitute a lien, which is the material thing to be done. * * * If the superintendent 'originally' fails to authenticate his record by his official signature, it is his duty afterwards to make a valid assessment." Dyer v. Scalmanini, 69 Cal. 637, 11 Pac. 327, was an appeal from the judgment rendered on a second assessment, and the court say: "If it were true, as matter of law, that such first assessment was void, then the superintendent aforesaid could have made another assessment for the work actually authorized, and if, in doing so, he complied with the statute,—as was the case in the assessment in controversy here,—that would have been valid, since the law under which he made it does not prescribe the time within which it must be done after the work was performed." Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, 18 Pac. 766, was an appeal from a judgment awarding a writ of mandamus to compel the countersigning of a street-assessment warrant. The court below found that no valid assessment had previously been issued, and in affirming the judgment it is said: "If there was a previous assessment, which was invalid, that would not, of itself, be a reason why a valid assessment should not be made, if the prior proceedings were sufficient to support it." As stated in Rauer v. Lowe, 107 Cal. 234, 40 Pac. 339: "The statute requires four things to be recorded in order to constitute the one thing called a lien, viz. the assessment, warrant, diagram, and engineer's certificate; and these are intended to constitute one record, and should be found together. Before the amendment of the statute in 1889, these certificates formed no part of the assessment record, and, as they were intended only for the information of the superintendent of streets, the custom of placing them in a separate record was proper, though not required by the statute. That fact, however, emphasizes the intention of the statute that they should be recorded in the assessment record, of which they are an essential part." And in Gray v. Lucas, 115 Cal. 430, 47 Pac. 354, it was held that the assessment, warrant, and diagram should be attached together, but the law did not require that a certificate should be attached, but only that it "should be recorded in connection with the record of the assessment." When, therefore, there is a defective certificate, or no certificate at all, recorded, there is a defect, informality, omission, irregularity, and illegality in the assessment, because the law requires the certificate to be recorded together with the assessment, diagram, and warrant; in other words, they are parts of one assessment record. It is a harsh rule of law that defeats the party, without fault on his part, but through the blunders or negligence of a public official, from recovering the fruits of his labor; and, unless the language of the statute be so plain and mandatory as to leave no doubt as to its meaning, it ought not to be so construed as to work that result.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. The complaint, fairly construed, shows that actions on the first and second assessments were successively defeated upon the ground that the superintendent not only failed to record those assessments "together with" the engineer's certificate, but recorded them at a time when no engineer's certificate had ever been made. The statute requires the assessment to be recorded "together with" the certificate, and this court has decided on the former appeal in this case, and in Rauer v. Lowe, 107 Cal. 233, 40 Pac. 337, that the making of the assessment and the recording of the assessment are utterly vain and nugatory acts unless, together with the assessment, diagram, and warrant, the certificate of the engineer is also recorded. If this law is obeyed, its object is accomplished, a lien is created, and the contractor can enforce payment of the value of his work. If it is disregarded, the whole object of the statute is frustrated; the whole proceeding is void. This being so. It is, to my mind, simply impossible to hold that there is neither defect, nor error, nor informality, nor irregularity, nor illegality in the act of the superintendent in recording the assessment in the absence of any engineer's certificate, and when no such certificate has ever existed. On the contrary, I should say that his act was characterized by every one of these bad qualities, and that the right to demand a new assessment was absolutely clear and undoubted. And, even if the plaintiff were not within the very letter of the law, he certainly is within the meaning and object, and it would require very little of the liberality of construction usually accorded to remedial statutes to give him the benefit of its provisions.

DAVIS v. CLARK. (Sac. 544.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 29, 1899.)

DISMISSAL OF ACTION—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE WITH DILIGENCE—SUBSTITUTION OF PLAINTIFF.

On August 19, 1891, V. sued C. for the possession of certain grain. On August 26, 1891, C. demurred to the complaint, and his demurrer was overruled May 21, 1892. By stipulation, time to answer was extended to July 11, 1892, when an answer was filed. On October 11, 1893, A. was substituted as V.'s attorney. On September 20, 1897, V. moved to substitute D., the assignee of the cause of action, as plaintiff, which motion was heard September 26, 1897, and granted October 4, 1897. October 8, 1897, D. filed a supplemental complaint. On October 18, 1897, the court made an order granting C. 30 days in which to answer or demur, or to take such other action as he might be advised. On November 17, 1897, C. served a motion to dismiss, which was heard November 22, 1897, and granted on February 1, 1898. It appeared that V.'s claim was assigned to D., who was the real party in interest, on December 5, 1891; that the cause of action accrued about June 12, 1891; and that the case was at issue for more than five years without being placed on the trial calendar. Held, that the case was properly dismissed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Glenn county.

Action by J. T. Davis, substituted, against P. H. Clark. From an order dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. Albery, for appellant. R. C. Minor and B. F. Geis, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Motion of defendant to dismiss the action for failure to prosecute. Action ordered dismissed, and plaintiff appeals.

On August 19, 1891, E. C. Vancil filed his complaint in the superior court of Glenn county to recover possession of certain wheat and barley, or its value. On August 26, 1891, defendant appeared by demurrer, which was overruled May 21, 1892, and by stipulation the time to answer was extended to July 11, 1892, when answer was duly filed. On October 11, 1893, H. M. Albery, Esq., was substituted as attorney in place of plaintiff's attorneys. On September 20, 1897, plaintiff, by his attorney, K. Albery, served notice of a motion to substitute as plaintiff J. T. Davis, assignee of the cause of action, in place of Vancil. The minutes of the court recite that the motion came on to be heard September 26, 1897, and was taken under advisement, and an order was entered making the substitution October 4, 1897, and on October 8, 1897, Davis served and filed a supplemental complaint. On October 18, 1897, the court made an order granting defendant 30 days from that date within which "to appear, answer, and demur, or to take such other action therein as he may be advised." On November 17, 1897, defendant served notice of motion to dismiss the action upon K. Albery, Esq., which was filed November 18, 1897, and was supported by two affidavits made by two different attorneys for defendant. On November 22, 1897, the motion came on to be heard, plaintiff's attorney, K. Albery, Esq., being present, and, no testimony being offered, except the affidavits for defendant, the motion was submitted, and taken under advisement, and on February 1, 1898, the court entered its order dismissing the action. In due time plaintiff's attorney, K. Albery, Esq., gave notice of appeal on the ground that "the order is against the evidence, in this: That the record discloses that the plaintiff was vigorously pressing said action to a trial upon the merits long prior to and at the time said motion to dismiss said action was noticed, filed, or heard by said court."

Appellant urges the point that defendant expressly waived the laches of Vancil for the reason that he permitted plaintiff Davis, unchallenged, to incur costs and expense in bringing the cause to trial, from September 20, 1897 (when the notice of substitution was filed), to November 17, 1897 (when the notice to dismiss the action was served and filed), a period of two months, during which time the motion for substitution was heard, and the supplemental complaint was prepared, served, and filed, and an extension of time given defendant within which to answer; all of which shows plaintiff's commendable diligence in the prosecution of the action after he became plaintiff. The contention is that no part of the delay while Vancil was plaintiff should be considered, but that the cause should be treated, for the purposes of the motion, as having been brought at the time Davis was substituted. It appears from the undisputed evidence that Davis became the owner of Vancil's alleged claim against defendant on December 5, 1891, and that Vancil died December 31, 1891, and that Davis' true name is Mordecai Vancil, and that he is a son of said E. C. Vancil; that Davis was the attorney in fact of E. C. Vancil to the time of the latter's death, and that the action, though brought in Vancil's name, was in fact the action of Davis, and that the cause of action accrued, if at all, about June 12, 1891; that the cause of action was at issue of fact for more than five years; "and that neither said E. C. Vancil nor said J. T. Davis, either as the attorney in fact of said Vancil or for himself, have sought to have said cause placed upon the trial calendar of said court, and without reason or excuse have not prosecuted said action with any diligence whatever." It further appeared that defendant, who, at the time the action was brought, was sheriff of Glenn county, ceased to be sheriff in 1894. We do not think there was any waiver of laches. The motion must be considered as though no substitution was made. The order of the court extending the time to appear to the supplemental complaint was that defendant might "take such other action therein as he may be advised." The court had power to make the order, and the only question is, did it abuse its discretion in so doing? McLaughlin v. Clausen, 116 Cal. 487, 48 Pac. 487. Plaintiff made no counter showing whatever, except as it may be derived from the pleadings in the action. We cannot say that the court abused its discretion, and therefore advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

SHEEHAN v. SULLIVAN et al. (S. F. 917.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 23, 1899.)

TRUSTS—FINDING—DEED—PROCUREMENT BY FRAUD OR UNDUE INFLUENCE—PRESUMPTION—HUSBAND CONVEYING TO WIFE—PAROL EVIDENCE.

1. A finding that one took property in trust for another during his lifetime, and "that after his death she continued to hold, and now holds, said real and personal property in trust for [his heirs]," is too uncertain, indefinite, and vague to show the nature and character of the trust.

2. No presumption that a deed alleged to be intended to create a trust was procured by fraud or undue influence arises from the fact that it was from a husband to his wife.

3. Oral testimony, to justify a determination that an absolute deed was intended to be in trust, must be clear, convincing, and conclusive, and something more than the modicum of evidence which might be held to establish a fact provable without overthrowing a clearly-expressed deed.

4. Testimony that, before a husband executed an absolute deed to his wife, she said to one of the children that she had asked him about it, and that she wanted him to give a deed to her, and she would take care of the property for all of them while they lived, and that after the deed was executed she said she would give this child her share when the property was divided up, and that she afterwards said she would not give her anything, is not inconsistent with the character of the deed, and is wholly insufficient to show that the deed was intended as a trust deed for the benefit of the children.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action by Ellen Sheehan against Margaret Sullivan and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, all defendants except Margaret Sullivan appeal. Reversed.

Jackson Hatch, for appellants. Morehouse & Hambly, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to have a certain alleged trust declared, and to enforce its execution. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendants other than Margaret Sullivan appeal from the judgment and from an order denying the motion for a new trial. Margaret also appealed, but her appeal is brought here in another transcript, designated as "S. F. No. 918" (58 Pac. 1115), and exactly the same questions arise in the two appeals.

Michael Sullivan, who died intestate, November 8, 1898, was the father, and the defendant Margaret Sullivan is the mother, of plaintiff. The other defendants, six in number, are brothers and sisters of plaintiff, except James M. Sheehan, who is a brother-in-law, and they are made defendants upon the averment that they refuse to join the plaintiff in maintaining this action. All the defendants answer, denying that plaintiff has any cause of action. It is averred in the complaint that on September 14, 1887, the said Michael, since deceased, conveyed to his wife, Margaret, plaintiff's mother and defendant herein, as above stated, a certain described piece of land, containing about 114 acres, and at about the same time transferred to her certain personal property, consisting of certificates of deposit in banks, moneys, live stock, etc. It is averred that Margaret solicited her husband to make the conveyance and transfer, and there are averments indicating that she used undue influence to procure the same, and violated the confidence reposed by him in her; but, as the court does not find any of these averments to be true, they may be dismissed from consideration. The main averments to be considered are that the land and the personal property were conveyed and transferred by him to her "upon the express understanding and agreement between them" that she was to hold the same in trust; and the trust averred was that she was to hold the same "in trust for said Michael during his life, and after his death for the use and benefit of herself and the last-mentioned children," being all the children except Mary K. Sheehan, and that "within a reasonable time after his death" she would "divide and distribute two-thirds" of the property, share and share alike, to all of the children except said Mary K., and reserve to herself one-third.

Possibly, the averments of the complaint as to the disposition to be made of the property to the children after the death of Michael might be held as "indicating with reasonable certainty" the nature and purpose of the alleged trust, within the meaning of section 2221 of the Civil Code (see Wittfield v. Forster, 57 Pac. 219); but a trust as thus averred was not found by the court. The only finding of a trust is in finding 6, wherein it is stated that at the date of the deed Michael Sullivan "was in failing health, and in order to avoid the responsibility of caring for and managing his property, and for the better protection of the same," he executed the deed to his wife, and transferred to her the personal property, "to have and hold the same by said Margaret in trust for the use and benefit of said Michael," and that she took the property in trust as aforesaid, and not absolutely or otherwise, and then "agreed to take and hold the same in trust for her said husband, and not otherwise." This is the only finding of fact as to the creation of a trust. The finding says nothing whatever about a trust for the plaintiff or the other children, which latter alleged trust is the only one of importance here. It is true that among the "conclusions of law" there is a statement that she took the property in trust for Michael during his lifetime, and "that after his death she continued to hold, and now holds, said real and personal property in trust for the heirs of said Michael"; but if this, by any stretch of leniency, could be considered as a finding of fact gone astray among conclusions of law, it is too uncertain, indefinite, and vague to constitute the declaration of a trust. The duration of the estate of the trustee, the nature and quantity of the interests of the alleged beneficiaries, what duties were imposed on the trustee, what she was to do with the property, how and when she was to dispose of it, if at all, and the manner in which she should execute this supposed trust, are all left undeclared. Wittfield v. Forster, supra. Moreover, there is no finding that, as to the land, the alleged trust was created in either of the two ways in which alone a trust in relation to real property can be created, to wit, by a written instrument or by operation of law. Civ. Code, § 852. The deed in question here is upon its face an absolute conveyance of the land from Michael to Margaret, without any hint of a trust, or any condition or limitation whatever, and there is no pretense—or finding—that any other instrument in writing was ever executed, by either of said parties, referring in any way to the deed or the land. Therefore the trust contended for was not created by an instrument in writing. Neither is there any finding that Margaret got the property by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, or any other wrongful act, by which, under section 2224 of the Civil Code, she became an involuntary trustee,—nor any finding of any other facts or fact which would constitute her a trustee by operation of law. See Barr v. O'Donnell, 76 Cal. 471, 18 Pac. 429, and cases there cited. No presumption that the deed was procured by fraud or undue influence arises from the mere naked fact that it was from a husband to his wife, and no fraud or undue influence is found. Tillaux v. Tillaux, 115 Cal. 663, 47 Pac. 691. The findings, therefore, do not warrant the judgment.

But as the case may be tried again, when there may be different findings, while the evidence may or may not be the same, it is proper to say that, waiving all the questions above discussed, the evidence disclosed by the transcript on this appeal was not sufficient to warrant the court in finding that the deed, which is on its face an absolute conveyance of the land in fee simple, was intended to be something else, namely, a conveyance in trust. The authorities are uniform to the point that to justify a court in determining from oral testimony that a deed, which purports to convey land absolutely in fee simple, was intended to be something different, as a mortgage or trust, such testimony must be clear, convincing, and conclusive,—something more than that modicum of evidence which appellate courts sometimes hold sufficient to warrant a finding where the matter is not so serious as the overthrow of a clearly-expressed deed, solemnly executed and delivered. Language used by different courts in declaring how strong such evidence must be may be seen in the notes to Mahoney v. Bostwick, on page 180 of 31 Am. St. Rep. (s. c. 30 Pac. 1020). Some of the expressions there quoted are: "Must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing;" "clear and satisfactory;" "clear and convincing;" "very satisfactory;" "strong and convincing;" "clear, unequivocal, and convincing;" "clear, explicit, and unequivocal;" "so clear as to leave no substantial doubt;" "sufficiently strong to command the unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind." In Becker v. Howard, 75 Wis. 422, 44 N. W. 759, the court said: "To convert a deed absolute into a mortgage, the evidence should be so clear as to leave no substantial doubt that the real intention of the parties was to execute a mortgage." Similar declarations on this subject have been frequently made by this court. See Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 53, 30 Pac. 1020, and cases there cited; Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 Pac. 797. In most of these cases the attempt was to show by parol evidence that an absolute deed was a mortgage under a statutory provision which expressly declares that this may be done, while there is no such statutory provision as to a trust. While in many of the cases cited the court below had found against the asserted mortgage or trust, and the judgment was affirmed, still they clearly declare that the rule as above stated should govern trial courts, and that, where an absolute deed has been found to be something else, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding should be considered by the appellate court in the light of that rule. In Wilson v. Parshall, 129 N. Y. 223, 29 N. E. 297, the court say: "The security of titles and sound public policy require that a party alleging that a deed absolute in form is, nevertheless, a mortgage, should show it by very satisfactory evidence; and, where he attempts to show it by oral evidence, his proof should amount to more than a mere guess or surmise, or even inferences which are just as consistent with one theory of the deed as the other." Fisher v. Witham, 132 Pa. St. 488, 19 Atl. 276; Coyle v. Davis, 116 U. S. 108, 6 Sup. Ct. 314. Moreover, courts have not infrequently reversed judgments declaring such deeds to be mortgages or trusts, where there was considerable evidence supporting them. In Cake v. Shull, 45 N. J. Eq. 208, 16 Atl. 434, and also in Langer v. Meservey, 80 Iowa, 158, 45 N. W. 732, a judgment deciding a deed to be a mortgage was reversed for want of sufficient evidence, and in each of those cases the evidence in support of the finding was vastly stronger than in the case at bar.

In this case there is no pretense of evidence that at the time the deed was executed there was any declaration or expression of any kind by the grantor or the grantee that it was intended to be anything else than what it purports on its face to be. The conveyancer who prepared the deed, and who was present at its execution, testified that he read it carefully to the grantor, and that the latter expressed himself as fully understanding it, and said that it was all right. Other members of the family, including the grantee herself, were present at the time of the execution of the deed, and there was no intimation by any one at that time of a trust, or that the deed was intended to be other than it purports to be. It was acknowledged on the same day, and recorded shortly afterwards. None of the brothers and sisters other than plaintiff swear to anything like a trust, and one of them testifies that on the very day of the execution of the deed his father told him that he was going "to deed everything right over to her," and the defendant Margaret, the grantee, testified to the same effect. The plaintiff introduced no evidence of any agreement as to a trust or any declaration of a trust at the time of the execution of the deed. The only evidence that can be fairly considered as tending at all to establish a trust such as is averred in the complaint is the testimony of plaintiff herself, when on the witness stand, as to a certain conversation, about the date of which she was very uncertain, which she says she had with her mother before the execution of the deed, and one or two other conversations with her mother after her father's death, and of course long after the execution of the deed. She testified that, having heard from her husband of the contemplated deed, she asked her mother about it; and her own language as to the conversation, given by her in her testimony, is as follows: "When I went up I asked her about it, and she said she had asked him about it, and she wanted him to give a deed to her, and she would take care of the property for us while he lived." A close examination of all the testimony given by plaintiff will show that her language above quoted is the sum and substance of all her mother is asserted to have said bearing in any way upon the trust here contended for, and it would be beyond all reasonable conclusion to hold that this loose and indefinite statement of the mother is sufficient to turn an absolute deed made afterwards by the father into a trust sufficiently certain and definite to be declared and enforced by a court. The declarations of the grantee, Margaret, testified to by the plaintiff as occurring after the execution of the deed and the death of Michael, were, of course, not competent for the purpose of proving the trust, and were admissible only in corroboration of plaintiff's witnesses; but, under any view, they were of little consequence. The plaintiff testified that, after the death of her father, "I asked her if she would give me my share; that I wanted to release my land; and she said she would rather leave it in the bank, and draw interest,—the bank would take better care of it. She was afraid my husband would get away with it in case she redeemed the land." Her counsel then asked her the leading question, "Did she tell you at that time that she would give you your share?" to which she answered: "Yes, sir; she promised she would give it to me, and keep it for me. She would give me my share when it was divided up." She testified that on other occasions she asked her mother for her share, and that finally, a few months before the commencement of the action, her mother positively told her that she would not give her anything, and ordered her and her husband out of the house, after which she had no further communications with her mother. All this tends to show that she repudiated the alleged trust, rather than that she acknowledged it. According to the conversations testified to, it certainly appears that she always refused to give plaintiff what the latter called her "share." All that she is asserted to have said is entirely consistent with her position that the property was all hers absolutely, to dispose of as she pleased, and that she would probably allow it to go, according to the law of descents, to the children at her death, and might possibly give a portion of it to some of the children during her life. In her testimony she denied all these conversations; but, considering them independently of her denials, they contribute nothing towards sustaining the finding here in question.

The only other evidence claimed by the respondent as tending to support the finding is the testimony of plaintiff's husband as to a statement made to him by Michael, some time before the execution of the deed, to the effect that some of the family wanted him to make the deed, and made certain threats if he did not make it. This, at best, would tend only to show that the deed was procured by fraud or undue influence; but the court does not find any facts of that kind, and, under all the evidence, could not properly have done so. The judgment really rests upon the theory of an express agreement between the parties that the deed should be considered as a trust. This witness also testified that, after the deed was made, Michael told him that "they got me drunk, and I didn't know what I was doing," and that he must get it back; but there is no finding that the deed was not properly executed, or that it was procured by any artifice of this kind, or that he was in any way incompetent to make a deed. This is not an action to set aside a deed upon the ground that it was procured through fraud or undue influence, and the judgment was not rendered upon any such theory.

Our conclusion is that the evidence was not sufficient to support the finding of a trust. The question here is not really one of conflict of evidence. The evidence introduced by plaintiff, leaving out of view the fact that it was all contradicted, is not in itself sufficient to show the declaration and creation of the trust as averred in the complaint or as found by the court. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

Ex parte CLARKE. (Cr. 572.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 29, 1899.)

CONTEMPT—ORDER FOR PRODUCTION OF BOOKS—VALIDITY—DISCHARGE ON HABEAS CORPUS.

1. The violation of an order compelling a defendant to produce all his books for inspection on a mere suspicion, against positive evidence to the contrary that they might contain some evidence favorable to plaintiff, will not warrant a commitment for contempt, as it is clearly unauthorized.

2. A party who has been committed for contempt in violating an unauthorized order compelling him to produce all his books for inspection may be discharged on habeas corpus.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Petition for habeas corpus by Robert S. Clarke. Granted.

J. J. Burt and Jas. A. Louttit, for petitioner. E. B. Young, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The petition herein sets forth that while a certain cause entitled "Charles Erickson, Doing Business Under the Name of Charles Erickson & Co., Plaintiff, vs. Stockton & Tuolumne County Railroad Company, a Corporation, Defendant," was on trial in the superior court, the petitioner herein was called as a witness for the plaintiff in said cause, and testified that he was the secretary of the defendant therein, and had charge of said defendant's books; that the issues in said cause were those presented by the pleadings therein, which are attached to and made a part of the petition; that petitioner, as secretary of said defendant, upon notice served by plaintiff, had produced on the trial the minute book of defendant, which contained all the meetings and proceedings of the board of directors and stockholders of said defendant; that petitioner had testified what other books said defendant had, to wit, a ledger, a journal, a stock ledger, a stock journal, a stock certificate book, and a petty cash book, and that there was nothing in said books showing that the defendant had anything to do with the grading of a certain roadbed, which was the subject of the action; that thereupon the attorney for the plaintiff in said action requested the court to instruct the petitioner herein to bring into court all of said books, and that the said attorney, being asked by the court what he expected to prove by the books, said "that he expected to prove by said books that said corporation had been engaged in grading said roadbed on its own account," but that "no evidence was offered or introduced, or any showing made in said action, to the effect that any of said books, or any part thereof, were or was material or pertinent to any of the issues in said action"; and that thereupon "said court, as requested aforesaid, instructed your petitioner to produce all of said books in said court." It further appeared from the petition that the petitioner declined to produce said books, and stated that he had been instructed by the directors of said corporation and its president, Mrs. Annie Kline Rickert, not to take any books of said defendant out of its office, and also stated that, if plaintiff's attorney would designate what parts of any of said books he desired to introduce in evidence, he would give certified copies of such parts as were material or pertinent; and that thereupon the court adjudged the petitioner guilty of contempt for not producing said books, and committed him to the custody of the sheriff of the county, Henry S. Martin, until he should produce said books; and that he is deprived of his liberty by said Martin under said order. The return to the writ shows substantially the facts set out in the petition, except as to the declared purpose of the attorney of the plaintiff in requiring the books. The commitment, which is part of the return, recites that the attorney for plaintiff moved for the books "for the purpose of proving by said books the general course of business of said defendant corporation, and for the purpose of proving by said books that the said Annie Kline Rickert, president of said defendant corporation, had full power and authority to make contracts for and on behalf of said defendant corporation, and as its agent, and for the purpose of further proving who were the stockholders of said defendant corporation at all times since its organization, and more particularly on the 5th day of March, 1898." It merely appears that the counsel for plaintiff "moved for an order." There was no affidavit upon which the order was founded, nor does anything appear as the foundation of the order, except the testimony of Clarke, the petitioner himself, while he was a witness for plaintiff; and his entire testimony is before this court in accordance with the stipulations of the parties that it might be used on the hearing of this writ so far as it could be looked into by this court.

Under the views which we take of the case, we do not think it necessary to consider the petitioner's contention that, as the statute requires that the books of the corporation should be kept in its office, the petitioner could not be required to remove them from such office, as was held in La Farge v. Insurance Co., 14 How. Prac. 26. Neither will we consider whether or not petitioner, as a mere officer of the corporation, could be compelled, as against the orders of the authorities of the corporation, to produce its books in court, nor how a corporation could be proceeded against upon its refusal to produce a document which it ought to produce. For the purposes of this case, we will consider the petitioner as if he were bound to produce the books of the corporation in a proper case, as if he stood in the place of any individual or business firm who was a party to the action, and as if the question were whether a party to an action could be deprived of his liberty for violating such an order as that here presented for consideration. The question here presented is of great importance to all citizens, for it involves the constitutional right of the people to "be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable seizures and searches." State Const. art. 1, § 19. To compel a person to deliver his books and papers to another who does not claim any ownership in them is to violate the sanctity of most important private rights, and is not to be tolerated except when warranted by some law clearly not inconsistent with the constitutional provision. As was said by Lord Camden in the celebrated case of Entick v. Carrington, 19 State Tr. p. 1066, which was an action to recover damages for breaking into a private house and seizing private papers: "Papers are the owner's goods and chattels. They are his dearest property, and are so far from enduring a seizure that they will hardly bear an inspection; and though the eye cannot, by the laws of England, be guilty of a trespass, yet, where private papers are removed and carried away, the secret nature of these goods will be an aggravation of the trespass." The privacy of private books and papers is not only of inestimable value to the owner on account of various personal and sentimental reasons, but is of the greatest value also from mere business considerations. The exposure of a man's methods of business would frequently be highly injurious to him, and, although really solvent, might produce such embarrassments as would ruin him. His right, therefore, to the sole possession and knowledge of his private books and papers is not to be violated except where the power to do so clearly appears. In many of the states there are statutes on the subject of the production of books and papers in court during a trial, and providing in detail under what circumstances orders for their production may be made. In this state about all there is on the subject is to be found in sections 1000 and 1985 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 1000 provides for an order, in certain cases, upon notice, that a party to a pending action may have an "inspection" and copy of accounts in any book, or of a document or paper "containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or the defense therein," and prescribing a certain penalty for a refusal; and there is a provision at the end of the section that it shall not be construed "to prevent a party from compelling another to produce books, papers or documents when he is examined as a witness." But the proceeding in the case at bar was not under that section, and, moreover, it is applicable only to proper cases; for no one would claim that it gives unbridled license for the examination or production of all such private papers as the caprice, or curiosity, or ulterior design of a party might suggest. Section 1985 provides for what is usually called a "subpoena duces tecum," by which a witness is required to bring with him any books, documents, etc., "which he is bound by law to produce in evidence"; but the proceedings in the case at bar were not under that section, and, moreover, it does not prescribe what things he is "bound by law to produce." It may be assumed, however, that (although we have no express affirmative statutory provisions on the subject) when a witness is in court, no matter how brought there, and discloses the fact that he has a paper, document, or book which would be evidence in favor of the party desiring it, he may, in a proper case, be rightfully ordered to produce it. But it is evident that we must look to general principles of law applicable to the subject when it is to be determined in what instances a court has the power to compel a witness to give up his books and papers, and disclose his private business to the world. And the question raised here is one of power in the court, and may be inquired into on habeas corpus. Indeed, there is no other way in which a party deprived of his liberty as petitioner was could recover his freedom. The same principle applies as when a witness has been imprisoned for contempt for not answering a question not legal or pertinent, and it has been held by this court that in such a case he will be discharged. In Ex parte Brown, 97 Cal. 83, 31 Pac. 840, the petitioner had been ordered to produce a package of tickets, and had been sent to jail for refusing to do so, and this court discharged him on habeas corpus, and said that "It is the settled law of this state that no court or judge has power to punish as a contempt the violation or disregard of an unlawful order." In Ex parte Zeelandelaar, 71 Cal. 238, 12 Pac. 259, the petitioner had been imprisoned for contempt for not answering as a witness a question not legal or pertinent to the issue, and he was discharged on habeas corpus. Several concurring opinions were delivered in the case, and it was held not only that the petitioner could not be punished for refusing to answer the question, but that the commitment must show affirmatively that the question was legal, and pertinent to the issue. See, also, Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 181. And a witness can no more be lawfully imprisoned for refusing to produce papers and books which he cannot be legally required to produce than he can be for refusing to answer questions not proper to be asked.

In the case at bar we are satisfied that the order in question was unauthorized. There was no showing, by affidavit or otherwise, that the books in question contained any evidence material to plaintiff's cause. The only evidence on the point was the testimony of petitioner when on the witness stand as plaintiff's own witness, and that showed that they did not contain such evidence. In Morrison v. Sturges, 26 How. Prac. 179, the court say: "It is not enough that the party believes or is advised that the paper contains material evidence. Facts must be shown to support such belief." Moreover, it was, in effect, a general omnibus order for the production of all defendant's books, which has always been held to be unauthorized; for, while it named certain books, yet those constituted all of defendant's books, as appears from plaintiff's examination of petitioner as to what books the defendant had. Again, the order was in the nature of what Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, over a century ago, called "a mere fishing bill," and such bills have been universally condemned. It is quite evident that these books were not required to be produced for the direct purpose of introducing them in evidence. Plaintiff would not have offered them, or any part of them, in evidence, unless he found something in the part offered that was relevant and material in support of his side of the case; and, indeed, they would not have been otherwise admissible. He merely intended to draw his dragnet of inspection through all these books under the ostensible motive of trying to catch something which his witness had testified was not there. In the meantime all the private business of the defendant—all its dealings with persons other than plaintiff, its methods of conducting its affairs, perhaps its financial condition, and other matters vitally important to its welfare—would have been exposed. There is no warrant in the law for such a forcible wholesale violation of a person's privacy upon such a showing as was made in this case. A man does not lose all his civil rights because he is brought into court as a party to a suit. As was said by Lord Hatherby: "A court is bound to protect the defendant against undue inquisition into its affairs" (7 Ch. App. 97, and notes); and it would be difficult to imagine a more striking instance of such "undue inquisition" than an order compelling a defendant to produce for inspection all his books upon the mere suspicion—against positive evidence to the contrary—that they might possibly contain some evidence favorable to the plaintiff, and without pointing to any particular part of all these books over which this suspicion was supposed to hover.

The authorities on the subject are innumerable. Many of them arose out of discussions of the old "bill of discovery," and many out of later statutory provisions; but the principles which they declare are clearly to the point that such an order as is here under review is unauthorized. Originally, an order for the production of a paper, document, or book was made only when the document was one declared on in the bill, or set up as a defense; or where the party asking for it had an interest in the document itself,—as where it was a contract between the parties, and there was only one copy of it, which was in the hands of the opposite party; or where the instrument was, in the very nature of things, material evidence,—as where it was alleged to have been forged or altered, and that it would, on its face, show the fact alleged; or where books belonged to both parties, and would necessarily contain evidence of the issues pending,—as in case of a suit between partners, or generally between principal and agent, or trustee and beneficiary. See 2 Phil. Ev. (Cow. & H. and Edwards' Notes) c. 4, *p. 321, and notes. Afterwards such orders were undoubtedly extended so as to include other grounds for production of papers, and were in many states, as hereinbefore noticed, regulated by statutes and rules of court; but the principles applicable generally to the forced production of papers are declared in the authorities as above stated, and we have been referred to no case warranting such an order as the one now under review. The subject, in all its bearings, both at common law and under recent statutes, is fully discussed in 2 Wait, Prac., commencing at page 522, where a very large number of authorities touching the question are cited. Many cases are there cited to the point that there must be a substantial showing that the document or book sought for contains material evidence in support of the cause of action or defense of the party asking for it, and that such a mere suspicion as appeared in the case at bar will not warrant an order for the production. But the principle which is determinative of the invalidity of the order involved in the case at bar is stated on page 533, where the author says: "The right given by statute to discover books, papers, and documents relating to the merits of a pending action does not entitle a party to enter into a mere fishing examination of all the books, papers, and documents of his adversary. An inquisitorial examination was not contemplated by the framers of the statute,"—citing authorities. In Hoyt v. Bank, 8 How. Prac. 93, the court said: "He has no right to have a general inquisitorial examination of all the books, papers, and documents of his adversary, with a view to ascertain if, perchance, something cannot be found which will probably aid him." There are numerous other authorities to the same point. In the case at bar, if we were to confine ourselves entirely to the commitment itself, the conclusion above stated would be the same. It was recited there that the plaintiff moved for the books for the purpose of proving by them "the general course of business of said defendant corporation," and this is as complete an expression of an intent to go upon a general fishing expedition as could possibly be imagined. Another recital is that the books were wanted for the "purpose of proving" that Mrs. Rickert had "full power and authority to make contracts for and on behalf of said defendant corporation as its agent," but there is no evidence that the books sought for would have afforded any evidence of that kind, and plaintiff had already introduced from the minute book a resolution of the board of directors to that effect; and, moreover, the averment of the complaint was that the defendant in the case held out Mrs. Rickert as their "ostensible agent." The other recital was that plaintiff wanted the books for the purpose of proving "who were the stockholders of said defendant corporation at all times since its organization, and more particularly on the 5th day of March, 1898," but the suit was against the corporation, and not against the stockholders, and it was immaterial who the stockholders were, and it was unimportant to plaintiff to know who the stockholders were, unless it desired the information for the purpose of a future suit, which is in no case allowable. Moreover, the order is not confined to the stock book.

For the reasons above stated, we are of the opinion that the order for the violation of which the petitioner was imprisoned was void, and that, therefore, he should be discharged from custody. This conclusion is based entirely upon the order here reviewed. Under what circumstances a proper and authorized order could be made for the inspection, or for the production at the trial, of a paper, document, or book, is a question not now before us. The petitioner is discharged.

Ex parte RICKERT. (Cr. 571.)

CONTEMPT—WARRANT OF COMMITMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a warrant of commitment for a contempt, not committed in the court's presence, is not in compliance with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1211, 1212, requiring the warrant in such cases to be preceded by affidavit showing the facts constituting the contempt, or by a citation or notice to show cause, the prisoner will be discharged.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Petition by Annie Kline Rickert for habeas corpus. Granted.

J. J. Burt and Jas. A. Louttit, for petitioner. E. B. Young, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This proceeding is akin to Ex parte Clarke (this day decided) 58 Pac.

546; but the alleged contempt of this petitioner, Mrs. Rickert, consisted in instructing Clarke not to produce in court certain books which he had been ordered to produce, and in doing certain other acts to prevent the production of said books. These acts were not done by the petitioner "in the immediate view and presence of the court or judge at chambers," and the warrant of commitment was not preceded by an affidavit showing the facts constituting the contempt, or by a citation or notice to show cause, as required by sections 1211 and 1212 of the Code of Civil Procedure. For this reason the petitioner must be discharged from custody, independent of the views upon which Clarke himself was discharged. The petitioner is discharged from the custody of the sheriff.

EXECUTORS — DISTRIBUTION — ORDER — VACATION—REVERSAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTION OF FACT.

1. Where an order for partial distribution vacating a prior order denying a petition therefor is reversed on an appeal from the entire order, the vacated order comes into full force and effect.

2. An order denying a petition for partial distribution is not vacated merely by a subsequent order granting the petition, since it is final so far as the hearing on the petition is concerned, and is appealable.

3. Where the bill of exceptions purports to present all the facts, a fact not contained therein will not be presumed.

4. That an order denying a petition for partial distribution denied it "without prejudice to making another application" did not make the order in any way less effective, and it was unnecessary to preserve a right to another application.

5. Unless notice of an application for an order for partial distribution to a part of the legatees is given by posting, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1633, the order is unauthorized.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county.

In the matter of the estate of John W. Mitchell, deceased. From an order for partial distribution to legatees the executors appeal. Reversed.

Jas. F. Peck, for appellants. Earl H. Webb and C. A. Stonesifer, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Appeal by the executors of the testator's estate from an order making partial distribution to certain legatees, and directing a certain sum to be paid to the county treasurer of Stanislaus county as collateral inheritance tax. The cause was here on a former appeal, and the facts are quite fully stated in the opinion on that appeal, and need not be repeated at this time. In re Mitchell's Estate, 121 Cal. 395, 53 Pac. 810. Briefly, the court below had, by an order dated September 11, 1896, denied the petition of certain legatees for a partial distribution, the hearing of which was duly noticed. Subsequently the legatees served personal notice upon the executors, but upon no others, of a motion to vacate the order denying the petition and to grant the petition. The executors objected to the hearing on the ground that no notice had been served upon other interested parties, and on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction. The court granted the motion, and made an order vacating the first order denying the petition, and also ordered the distribution prayed for. This order was made February 27, 1897. The executors appealed from this last order, and it was reversed here, and "the cause remanded for further proceedings." The reversal was ordered on account of two errors, specifically pointed out, to wit: (1) That the order relieved the legatees from the necessity of giving any bond; and (2) it ordered "the whole of the legacies paid, as shown by the will, without deducting therefrom the sum of $1,166.66%, paid to each of the legatees after the original hearing and before the final hearing." The point raised as to the sufficiency of the notice of the motion to confer jurisdiction to make the order was remarked upon by Mr. Commissioner Searls, who wrote the opinion, but in promulgating the decision the question as to the sufficiency of the notice was not decided. One of the judges especially disclaimed expressing any opinion upon it, and another judge concurred in the judgment simply. The question was, we think, left open. Remittitur went down August 8, 1898. On August 10, 1898, the attorneys for the legatees served notice on the executors (which was filed August 11, 1898) that they would, on August 23, 1898, move the court for an order of partial distribution, "in conformity with the decision of the supreme court * * * made and filed on the 7th day of July, 1898. Said motion will be made upon the said decision now on file herein, and the papers, records, and folios herein." No notice of this motion was served otherwise than upon the executors personally. It was stipulated that the motion might be heard August 29, 1898, the executors "reserving all rights to said executors to make objection to the jurisdiction of the court to hear the motion, and to such other objection as goes to the right of the petitioners to have distribution made to them in the present proceedings." The motion was heard August 29th, the executors making objection to the jurisdiction. The petitioners introduced the remittitur, and the opinion filed by this court July 7, 1898, whereupon the motion was submitted, and the court made an order of the date of the hearing granting the petition and ordering the distribution prayed for. The two errors pointed out in the opinion of this court on the former appeal were corrected, but otherwise the order was, in effect, about the same as the order of February 27, 1897. It is from this last order the executors now appeal.

When the order of February 27, 1897, was reversed, it no longer had any vitality or force, and the result was to leave the proceeding where it stood before that order was made. 2 Freem. Judgm. § 481. The order of September 11, 1896, denying the petition, thereupon came into full force and effect, and it has never been vacated or set aside. The subsequent order granting the petition did not operate to vacate the order of September 11, 1896, denying the petition. 1 Freem. Judgm. § 104a. As was said in Nuckolls v. Irwin, 2 Neb. 60: "When a judgment is once entered of record, it must stand as the judgment until it is vacated, modified, or disposed of by some means provided by law. Entering additional judgment entries is not one of them." We do not think the situation was such as to justify the rule sometimes applied by which the subsequent judgment by implication is held to vacate the former judgment. A judgment, when pronounced, must stand until set aside or reversed on appeal. Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 443. We do not think the cases of Paige v. Roeding, 96 Cal. 389, 31 Pac. 264, and Water Co. v. Swartz, 99 Cal. 278, 33 Pac. 878, can aid respondents, for the bill of exceptions presents all the facts, and we cannot presume that the court vacated the first order before proceeding to hear the last motion. Assuming that the court had jurisdiction to make an order vacating this first order, we do not see under what rule or by what authority the court afterwards, while this original order remained in force, and without taking any steps to vacate it, proceeded, by motion merely, and upon no notice other than to the executors, to hear the original petition a second time, and make an order granting it. When the first order was made, it was final so far as the hearing upon the petition at that time was concerned, and it was an appealable order. That part of the order vacating the first order may not have been appealable if that had been its only purpose. In re Hickey's Estate (Cal.) 53 Pac. 818. But it also ordered distribution, which was an appealable order. The appeal was taken from the entire order, and when reversed the reversal operated to reverse that part of the order vacating the first order. As the record now appears, the court heard and determined the petition a second time, reversing its former judgment while that judgment stood unappealed from, and after it had withstood the only attack made upon it by the motion to vacate it. It is true the first order denied the petition "without prejudice to making another application," but this saving clause did not make the order less effective in determining the issues as then presented; and, as to preserving any right in the legatees to make another application, it was unnecessary. While the order was final and appealable so long as it stood unassailed in that proceeding, there was nothing in it to prevent another petition being filed and heard whenever the legatees might believe a more favorable showing for them could be made, or it was by them thought probable that the court might take a different view of the matter, or the condition of the estate had changed so as to make the distribution proper.

2. But, aside from this view of the matter, the objection to the order of February 27, 1897, as well as to the order of August 29, 1898, from which this appeal is taken, already briefly referred to, stands in the way of affirming the latter order. The notice of the motion to vacate the order of September 11, 1896, and the notice of the second motion to hear the petition, were served only upon the executors. No notice was given by posting as prescribed by section 1633, Code Civ. Proc. After the order of September 11, 1896, denying the petition, was made, and the legatees, by their motion to vacate that order, had failed, and the order was left in force, there was no way open to them to have their petition heard except by pursuing the statutory method requiring notice to be posted. Service of the notice of the motion upon the executors alone was not sufficient. There were other legatees and there were creditors. The first order, denying the petition, was favorable to them; but the subsequent order, granting the petition, was adverse to their interests. They should have had an opportunity to be heard, and we do not think that notice to the executors gave them such opportunity, for the executors did not represent them. Section 1633 requires notice to be given by posting, presupposing that others than the executors might have an interest adverse to the petition. It is true that they did not appear in response to the first notice of the hearing, which was duly served, and they would be and are bound by the order then entered. But, after the legatees had failed to appeal from that order, and had also failed in their attack upon it by motion, we think the court lost jurisdiction to further act, except after new notices had been given as required by the statute. The legacies bequeathed to other legatees amounted to about $300,000; there were unsecured creditors of considerable amount; and, although apparently the estate was solvent, these other legatees and the creditors had an interest adverse to the petitioners, who asked for payment at a time when all could not be paid, and were thus to be preferred in point of priority of payment. We advise that the order be reversed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; COOPER, C.

BYRNE v. HOAG et al. (L. A. 555.)¹

APPEAL AND ERROR—ORDERS AFTER JUDGMENT—MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE.

Where, under Code Civ. Proc. § 728, providing that when, in a mortgage foreclosure suit, the debt is not all due, only sufficient property to satisfy the amount due must be sold, and, as often as more becomes due, the court may, on motion, order more to be sold, plaintiff in a foreclosure suit obtains a judgment for interest due, and an order of sale, and subsequently moves for a sale to satisfy interest accruing since the decree, which is granted, such action is an "order," and not a judgment, from which an appeal, to be available, must be taken within 60 days.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by Olive A. Byrne against Abram Hoag and others for the foreclosure of a mortgage. A judgment was entered for accrued interest, and sale directed to satisfy it, and from a subsequent order directing a sale to satisfy interest accruing after the former judgment the defendants appeal. Dismissed.

Chas. R. Gray, for appellants. Purrington & Adair, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The appellants executed to the respondent their promissory note for $2,000 April 27, 1892, payable three years after date, with interest payable semiannually, and as security for its payment executed at the same time a mortgage upon certain real property, with a provision therein for its foreclosure in case of default in the payment of the note, or of any installment of interest when due thereon. There was no provision that the note should be deemed to have matured in case of any default in the payment of interest. October 6, 1893, the first installment of interest not having been paid, the respondent commenced an action for the foreclosure of the mortgage; alleging in her complaint that the entire amount of the sum named in the note, both of principal and for interest, was due. The defendants in their answer denied that any part thereof was due thereon, except for the interest then accrued upon the principal sum. Judgment was entered November 27, 1893, for the amount of the interest then due, and directing the sale of the mortgaged premises, or so much thereof as should be necessary to satisfy said amount. No provision was made in the judgment in reference to the amounts subsequently to fall due upon the note. No sale was made under this provision of the judgment, nor was the amount thereof paid. In April, 1897, the plaintiff served upon the defendants, and presented to the court, her affidavit of these facts, and also that since the entry of the judgment the principal sum named in the note, with interest thereon that had accrued since the entry of the judgment, had become due, and had not been paid, and moved the court for an order and decree directing a sale of the property described in the decree of November 27, 1893, to satisfy the amount which had become due on the note since the rendering of said decree. The court granted her motion, and on October 12, 1897, caused to be entered an order entitled "Decree of Foreclosure and Order of Sale," by which it determined the amount that had become due upon the promissory note since the entry of the decree of November 27, 1893, and directed a sale of so much of the mortgaged premises as should be necessary to satisfy the same. The defendants have appealed therefrom.

The respondent contends that this court cannot consider the appeal, and that it must be dismissed, for the reason that it was not taken within 60 days after the entry of the order appealed from. This involves a determination of the character of the direction of the superior court from which the appeal is taken,—whether it is to be regarded as an order or as a judgment. If it is to be considered as a judgment, the appeal therefrom could have been taken within 6 months from its entry, whereas, if it is an order, it should have been taken within 60 days after its entry.

Section 726, Code Civ. Proc., declares, "There can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real estate or personal property, which action must be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter." In the present case there has been only one action brought for the foreclosure of the plaintiff's mortgage, and in that action the court by its judgment in 1893 established the validity of the note and mortgage, and directed a sale of so much of the mortgaged premises as should be necessary to satisfy the amount then found to be due. This action was brought to foreclose the mortgage for the entire amount for which it was given, but the note and mortgage were set forth at length in the complaint, from which it appeared that only the interest that had accrued prior to the commencement of the action was due, and the judgment that was rendered therein was limited to directing a sale of enough property to satisfy this amount. Bank v. Godfrey, 77 Cal. 616, 20 Pac. 143, was similar to the present case, and the court there said: "The real issues in the case, as presented by the pleadings, were whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the note, and to a foreclosure of the mortgage, according to their terms. The fact that plaintiff treated the whole amount of the note as being due did not make it so, as against the terms of the note, set out in, and made a part of, the pleading; nor could the issues be thereby confined to the mere question whether the note was then due or not." The omission to provide in the judgment for a subsequent sale of any portion of the mortgaged premises in the case of default in the payment of the note or interest thereon as it matured is supplied by section 728, Code Civ. Proc., which provides that, in such case, "as often as more becomes due for principal or interest, the court may on motion order more to be sold." This was the course pursued by the plaintiff herein. After the maturity of the note she presented a "motion" to the court for an order directing the sale of the mortgaged premises to satisfy the amount that had fallen due on the note "since the rendering of the decree," and the court made an "order" accordingly. This action of the court was in accordance with the provisions of section 728, Id., and was also in sequence of its judgment previously given, and was substantially in accordance with the procedure sanctioned in Bank v. Godfrey. It was taken upon a motion of the plaintiff, and after notice to the defendants, in a case in which a judgment had been entered which was still in force, and was based upon an affidavit setting forth matters that had occurred subsequent to the entry of the judgment. Such action of the court is denominated an "order." Section 1003, Code Civ. Proc. It was an order after judgment, and the appeal therefrom should have been taken within 60 days after its entry.

We are the less reluctant to dispose of the appeal upon this question of practice, for the reason that, if we were at liberty to consider it upon the merits, we should be compelled to affirm the action of the superior court. The grounds chiefly urged in support of the appeal are that the failure to reserve in the judgment of 1893 the right to direct any further sale of the premises deprived the court of such power, that this judgment was a final determination of the rights of the parties to the action, and that the court could render no further judgment therein. As seen above, section 728, Code Civ. Proc., supplies this alleged omission in the judgment, and the action of the court was not a further judgment in the case, but was an order subsequent to judgment, which it had authority to make until the entire mortgaged premises had been sold in satisfaction of the debt. The character of the court's action or direction is to be determined by the nature of the action itself, considered in the light of the authority of the court in the premises, rather than by what it has been designated by the court. The defendants had an opportunity to controvert the facts set forth in the plaintiff's affidavit, but offered no evidence therefor, and these facts must be considered as admitted by them. As they chose to rely for their defense upon technical rules of procedure, they cannot complain that similar rules are invoked against them. The proceedings on the part of the plaintiff may not have been conducted with the most strict regard to the provisions of the statute, but, as was said in Bank v. Godfrey, supra, "it is evident to our minds that the appellant is seeking the aid of this court to avoid the payment of a just obligation, and we hold that the statute has been substantially complied with and the proper result has been reached." The appeal is dismissed.

FREEMAN v. SEITZ. (Sac. 509.)

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM—CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF CONTRACT—JURISDICTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 437, providing that defendant's answer may contain a statement of any new matter constituting a counterclaim, and section 438, providing that such counterclaim may be set up in actions arising on contract, where plaintiff sues in the superior court on a demand arising on contract defendant may set up as a counterclaim a demand also arising on contract with plaintiff, though his demand is insufficient in amount to give the court jurisdiction in an independent action.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county.

Action by J. E. Freeman against F. J. Seitz. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. D. Soward, for appellant. Frank R. Wehe, for respondent.

COOPER, C. The plaintiff brought this action against defendant to recover $1,560.36 for beef furnished by plaintiff to defendant at his request. The defendant answered, and, without denying any of the allegations of the complaint, alleged as a counterclaim that at the time of the commencement of the action the plaintiff was indebted to defendant in the sum of $110.89 for beef furnished by defendant to plaintiff at his request. The plaintiff filed a demurrer to the defendant's answer upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, for the reason that the counterclaim amounts to less than $300. The court sustained the demurrer, and defendant declined to amend. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of plaintiff for the amount claimed in his complaint. This appeal is by defendant from the judgment.

The sole question here is as to the order sustaining the demurrer. We think the order was erroneous. Our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 437) provides that the answer of the defendant shall contain a statement of any new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim, including (Id. § 438) "in an action arising upon contract, any other cause of action also arising upon contract and existing at the commencement of the action"; that (Id. § 440) "when cross-demands have existed between persons under such circumstances that, if one had brought an action against the other, a counter-claim could have been set up, the two demands shall be deemed compensated, as far as they equal each other." This action is one arising upon contract, and the counterclaim is also one arising upon contract, and existing at the commencement of the action, and is clearly within the provision of the Code above quoted. The law abhors a multiplicity of actions, and the evident intent of the legislature in passing the Code provision was that all matters that may be the subject of litigation between the parties within the limitations prescribed shall be settled in one action. If the ruling of the court below is correct, the defendant would have to bring suit in a justice court upon the cause of action set forth in his counterclaim, and, if he obtains judgment, take the chances of collecting it from the plaintiff. He might apply to have it set off against the plaintiff's judgment, provided the plaintiff's judgment has not been paid or assigned by plaintiff to some third party. The law does not require such circuitry of action in a plain case, where all matters may in the same action between the same parties by the one judgment be at once finally settled and determined. Pomeroy (Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 730), in speaking of our Code provisions, says: "It is clear that if the plaintiff's action was on a contract and for a debt,—for the more extended language of the statute describes only a debt,—and the defendant held another debt due from the plaintiff personally, and existing in his own favor, and which did so exist at the commencement of the action, he could plead such demand as a set-off." And in section 795 the same author, in speaking of the counterclaim mentioned in subdivision 2 of section 438, Code Civ. Proc., says: "This is substantially the definition of 'set-off' given in the codes of the second group. The language of this clause plainly includes all cases of counterclaim based on contracts when the plaintiff's cause of action is also on contract." In Bank v. Gay, 101 Cal. 289, 35 Pac. 877, this court said: "'Counterclaim,' as used in our Code, 'includes both recoupment and set-off, and is, strictly speaking, a pleading by which matters arising out of recoupment or set-off are averred. It may be used by defendant to plead as against the plaintiff (1) a cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the cause of action; (2) in an action arising upon contract, any other cause of action arising also upon contract, and existing at the commencement of the action.'" In the case of Hart v. Cooper, 47 Cal. 77, plaintiff brought suit upon a promissory note for $365.55. The defendants, in their answer, were allowed to plead as a set-off an indebtedness of $235.30 due them upon account. It appeared at the trial that the true amount due defendants on the account was $35.80, which was credited by the court below on the amount due plaintiff on the note, and this court affirmed the judgment. Counsel for plaintiff point out that the defendant in his answer prays for judgment against plaintiff for the amount named in the answer, and argues from this that the answer was seeking to obtain an affirmative judgment for less than $300. Taking the answer as it reads, it is quite plain that such was not intended to be its effect. It admitted the amount of plaintiff's claim as pleaded, but, by way of counterclaim, sought to have the claim of plaintiff reduced $110.89. The prayer is not a very material part of the answer. Counsel for plaintiff in his brief has stated the rule which we think very properly may be applied here: "Perhaps the just rule would be to treat the pleading as a defense, or a counterclaim, according to its nature, considering the facts alleged." The case apparently relied upon by plaintiff (Griswold v. Pieratt, 110 Cal. 260, 42 Pac. 820), is not in conflict with what has been here said. That was an action brought by plaintiff to recover of defendant the sum of $858, as damages for the negligent performance of a contract by defendant to bud a quantity of fruit trees. Defendant denied the negligence and damages. Then, for a counterclaim, he pleaded a balance due him upon settlement amounting to $192, and asked judgment for the amount. The lower court found in favor of defendant, and awarded him an affirmative judgment for the amount claimed by him. It was properly held by this court that the facts stated in the answer were not the subject of a counterclaim, that they did not arise out of the transaction set forth in the complaint, and that the amount of the defendant's demand against the plaintiff was not within the jurisdiction of the superior court, so as to justify affirmative relief to the defendant. In the opinion the correct rule is laid down which applies to this case. It is said: "Of course, what is here said on the subject of jurisdiction has no application to the counterclaims provided for in the first subdivision of section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The amount of the cross demand under that subdivision is of no moment for jurisdictional purposes. Our remarks are to be understood as confined to the unconnected causes of action mentioned in the second subdivision of that section, and limited also to cases presenting the substantial features of the present. If the set-off, less than three hundred dollars in amount, exclusive of interest, held by a defendant, is pleaded by him as purely defensive matter in reduction or extinguishment of the claim of the plaintiff in an action triable by the superior court, it may well be that the court can properly entertain the same. Such was the case in Hart v. Cooper, 47 Cal. 77. It is, under the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 440), perhaps as much a matter of defense merely as would be a plea of payment of a like sum." We advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the answer.

We concur: BRITT, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

TROVER—PLEADING.

1. In an action of trover, an allegation in the complaint of the amount due on a certain chattel mortgage covering the goods, and a claim for that amount, is sufficient to support a judgment for the value of the goods, when it is less than the mortgage debt.

2. Where it is alleged that defendant released the "mare named 'Mollie' and the mare named 'Pat,'" the property is sufficiently described by the finding that "those two certain horses named 'Molly' and 'Pat' were released."

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kings county.

Action by W. L. Troxler against W. V. Buckner. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dixon L. Phillips, for appellant. Cosmer B. Clark, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Trover. Plaintiff had judgment for the sum of $220, from which defendant appeals on the judgment roll alone. The pleadings are verified. The court found as facts that defendant was sheriff of Kings county during all the times mentioned in the complaint; that plaintiff was the owner and holder of a certain chattel mortgage executed by one M. P. Troxler on certain horses therein described, to secure the indebtedness of the latter to plaintiff, and that said mortgage had been duly recorded in the records of said county; that afterwards, to wit, on May 20, 1897, defendant, as sheriff, "without paying or tendering to plaintiff the amount of plaintiff's said mortgage debt and the interest due thereon, and without depositing said amount thereof with the county clerk or treasurer, as required by the provisions of section 2969 of the Civil Code of the State of California, as such sheriff and acting in that capacity, levied upon, seized, and took and carried away the whole of said mortgaged property," except a horse called "Medium," and said taking was by virtue of a writ of attachment in a certain suit wherein the Bank of Oroville was plaintiff, and M. P. Troxler and Sarah A. Troxler were defendants; that on May 24, 1897, plaintiff served a written notice upon defendant, duly verified, of the existence of said mortgage, and demanded that defendant pay to plaintiff the amount of said mortgage debt due plaintiff, or that he release said property from said attachment; that defendant refused to do the one or the other, and still refuses, or to deposit the sum due with the county clerk or treasurer, or to tender plaintiff said amount, or to release said property so taken, "excepting those two certain horses named 'Molly' and 'Pat,' which were released"; that the amount of the mortgage debt was $732.94, and interest thereon $4.06; "that the value of said personal property so taken by defendant was at the time of the taking and is of the value of $220." As conclusion of law, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to judgment for $220, and judgment for that sum was accordingly entered.

1. Appellant contends that the complaint is fatally defective in failing to allege the property to be of any value; citing Irwin v. McDowell, 91 Cal. 122, 27 Pac. 603. It was held in that case, upon the question of the measure of damages, that plaintiff's recovery should be "the full amount of the mortgage debt, if the property is worth enough to pay it; if not, then such amount only as it is worth." No question of pleading arose in the case or was decided by it. Plaintiff here alleged in his complaint the amount due upon the mortgage, and claimed damage for that amount. We think this was sufficient to support the judgment for the value, which was much less than the mortgage debt. If the property in fact was of less value, it was matter of defense. Civ. Code, §§ 2969, 3338; Irwin v. McDowell, supra. Defendant alleged the value of the property to be no more than $100. This allegation was deemed to be controverted, and the issue of the value of the property was thus presented.

2. There is nothing in appellant's point that the court failed to find upon the issue raised by the allegation of the answer that defendant did release the "mare named 'Mollie' and the mare named 'Pat' immediately after they were attached." The finding is that "those two certain horses named 'Molly' and 'Pat' were released." There were no other horses or mares thus designated in the chattel mortgage. We think it sufficiently clear that the court intended by the finding to refer to the identical animals described in the answer and the complaint. The term "horse" is generic, and includes, ordinarily, the different species of the animal, however diversified by age, sex, or artificial means. And. Dict. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

HARVEY et al. v. BARKER et al. (L. A. 490).¹

PUBLIC LANDS—MEXICAN GRANTS—RIGHTS OF INDIANS.

1. Under Act Cong. March 3, 1851, a claim of title or right to property derived from the Mexican government must be presented for confirmation to the board of land commissioners there provided for; and a failure to present a claim shall be regarded as an abandonment thereof, and the lands covered by it shall become public lands.

2. The decision of land commissioners appointed under Act Cong. March 3, 1851, that certain land derived from the Mexican government was, at the time it was granted, vacant and subject to alienation, is final and conclusive.

3. Defendants, mission Indians, claimed a prescriptive title to certain lands included within the boundaries of a Mexican grant, which grant was confirmed by the United States and a patent thereto issued to plaintiff's grantor. Defendants did not present their claim to the land commissioners for confirmation. Held, that said grant was not subject to any right or interest in the defendants, but was hostile thereto, and no trust relation existed between the grantee and said defendants.

4. Where a grant of land from the Mexican government is confirmed by the United States, and a patent issued thereto, such patent is conclusive evidence of title, as against Indians claiming a prescriptive title to the same land.

Beatty, C. J., and McFarland and Temple, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by J. Downey Harvey and others against Alejandro Barker and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Shirley C. Ward and Frank D. Lewis, for appellants. White & Monroe, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. Plaintiffs claim title to the property in controversy through a patent of the United States issued to J. J. Warner, January 16, 1880, pursuant to the provisions of the act of congress of March 3, 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the state of California." Defendants claim a possessory right as mission or pueblo Indians, and by their answers form three groups, describing severally the tracts of land alleged to be occupied by them; the first consisting of 1,907 acres; the second, 266.43; and the third, 120 acres. They base their right of possession to such tracts of land upon the claim that their ancestors were mission Indians, and that they have been in continuous occupancy, use, and possession of said premises from time immemorial, and were in such possession at the time the rights of the plaintiffs' grantor accrued under the Mexican government. At the trial the plaintiffs introduced in evidence the United States patent to Warner, and it was thereupon stipulated that the lands described in said patent included the premises in controversy, and that plaintiffs had succeeded to all the rights of the patentee, and had paid all taxes levied or assessed upon said premises since the patent issued. Thereupon, in support of the claim on behalf of the defendants, there was offered in evidence the expediente of two grants of the Mexican government; the first being made June 8, 1840, to José Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of California, and the second made November 28, 1844, to Juan José Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor general of California. The grant to Pico was of the "land known by the name of 'Agua Caliente,' bounded by the ranch of San José Valle, * * * subjecting himself to pay for the place of worship and other improvements that be there belonging to the San Luis Rey Mission, and not molest [prejudicor] the Indians that thereon may be established, and with the approbation of the most excellent assembly of the department, and the conditions following: First. He is allowed to fence it in, without interfering with the roads, cross roads, and other usages [servidumbres]. He will possess it fully and exclusively, turning it to agricultural or any other use he may see fit, but within a year he shall construct a house thereon and live in it. Second. When the property shall have been confirmed to him, he shall petition the respective judge to give him possession thereof by virtue of this order, and shall mark out the boundaries on whose limits he shall fix the landmarks,—some fruit and wild trees that may be of some utility. Third. The land of which donation is hereby made is of the extent mentioned in the plan which goes with the expediente. The judge who should give possession thereof shall have it surveyed according to law, leaving the residue that may result to the nation for their purposes. Fourth. If he should fail to comply with these conditions, he shall forfeit his title to the land, and it will be denounced by another."

Accompanying the grant to Warner of 1844, offered on behalf of the defendants, are the following papers:

The petition of Warner for the place known by the name of "Valle San José," which he alleges is vacant and situated east of the pueblo of San Diego, distant about 20 leagues, and surrounded by mountains:

"To the most R. P. Vincent Olivas: With the object of soliciting in property the place known by the name 'Valle de San José,' formerly occupied by the mission under your charge, I beg of you to be so kind as to inform me if at the present day the mission of San Diego does occupy the said land, and, if not, how long since it has been abandoned. Juan J. Warner."

"The Valley of San José can be granted to the party who petitions for it, inasmuch as the mission of San Diego, to whom it belonged, has no means sufficient to cultivate and occupy it, and it is not so necessary for the mission. Fr. Vincent P. Olivas. Mission of San Diego, August 5, 1844."

"Office of the First Justice of the Peace, San Diego. In view of the petition which the party interested remits to this office, I beg to state that the said Valle San José is, and has for the past two years been, vacant and abandoned, without any goods nor cultivation on the part of San Diego; but said place belongs at the present time to the said mission, and at petitioner's request I sign this, in San Diego. Juan Ma Marron. August 6, 1844."

The secretary forwarded the papers to the governor, as follows:

"Governor: The land which is petitioned for, it seems that there is no objection to its being granted, according to the information which I inclose from the Rev. P. F. Vincent Olivas, and from the judge of San Diego, Juan Marron. The petitioner is a naturalized citizen, and is a person of good qualities, so that, if your excellency does not dispose otherwise, you can accede to his petition. Manuel Jimeno. Monterey, September 2, 1844."

(Same date.) "Extend to him the title, and I order that he be obliged to procure the plan thereof within four months from this date, and should he fail to comply with such obligation within said term this title will be null and of no value. So it ordered and decreed. Micheltorena."

The desefo or sketch accompanying the petition describing the property includes the entire San José valley. The grant of Gov. Micheltorena recites that whereas one José Warner had petitioned for the land known by the name of "Valle de San José," giving the boundaries thereof, and "having previously complied with the notices and investigations on such matters, as prescribed by the laws and regulations, exercising the powers conferred on me, in the name of the Mexican nation, I have resolved to grant him the said land, declaring it by these presents his property, subject to the approbation of the most excellent assembly of the department, and to the conditions following, to wit." The conditions are similar to those contained in the grant to Pico, with the exception that it omits entirely the clause "not to molest [prejudicor] the Indians that thereon may be established." Thereupon Warner addressed the governor, stating that he would proceed under the grant, and subsequently commissioners were appointed to make an examination and report. In their report they say: "And, it appearing from the said examination that the said concession in favor of Juan J. Warner was made in perfect conformity with what the laws prescribe in this particular, * * * the concession is hereby approved in favor of Juan J. Warner, of the place named 'Valle de San José,' adjudicated in property by the government of this department." This report was subsequently approved by the departmental assembly.

There was also offered on behalf of the defendants the petition of Warner to the land commission, under the act of congress, asking confirmation of his title to the lands in controversy, which it is claimed was based on the two grants referred to. But Warner in the petition says that he claims, by virtue of grants from the Mexican nation, a tract of land in the county of San Diego known as the "Valle de San José and Agua Caliente"; that so much as is known by the name of Agua Caliente was granted in 1840 to José Antonio Pico; that the same had become vested in the petitioner; that the remainder of the tract was subsequently granted to the petitioner in 1844 by Micheltorena;

"that said second-named grant was approved and confirmed to the claimant by an act of the departmental assembly of California passed on the 17th day of June, 1845. The claimant has no knowledge whether such first-named grant has or has not been so confirmed." By the decree of confirmation recited in the patent it is adjudged that "the land described in the grant" is a good and valid claim, and that said land is "known as the 'Valley of San José,' and is bounded and described in the original grant and map to which it refers, copies of which grant and map are on file with the papers in this case as follows, to wit: On the east by the entrance from San Felipe and the mountains; on the west by the mountains and defile of Aguando; on the north by the mountains; the southern limits being the canal and the mountains to the extent of six square leagues, provided said quantity of six square leagues be contained within the boundaries." The patent contained the usual recitals that the said decree had become final, and a survey of the premises thereafter made and approved, and closing with the usual granting clause.

There were offered also on behalf of the defendants certain depositions and oral testimony to the effect that the defendants and their ancestors were mission Indians, and they had formerly been under the charge of the San Luis Rey Mission, and had been in the exclusive use, occupancy, and possession of the premises in controversy continuously since a time prior to the inception of the plaintiffs' title from Mexico, and had always claimed and exercised the right to so use said property.

To these several offers made on behalf of the defendants, plaintiffs interposed objections on the ground that the evidence offered was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that the patent was conclusive as to the title of the patentee. The court reserved its ruling upon such objections, and thereafter sustained the objections and excluded the testimony, to which ruling the defendants excepted. Judgment went for the plaintiffs, and the defendants subsequently moved for a new trial, which motion was denied. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

The position of counsel on behalf of the appellants may be summarized as follows: (1) That the patent under which plaintiffs claim specified that it "shall not affect the interest of third persons," and it is claimed defendants are third persons, and are not thereby concluded. (2) That the object of the act of congress of March 3, 1851, was accomplished by presenting, confirming, and patenting Warner's claim to the land in question so as to relieve these defendants of the necessity of presenting their claim to the board of land commissioners. (3) That the decision of the board of land commissioners was not conclusive, except against the claimant and the United States government and parties claiming under the United States government by title subsequent, as it was not the province of such tribunals to pass upon conflicting titles as between individuals; that they were left just as they existed at the time of the change of sovereignty. (4) That under the Mexican law Warner held the legal title subject to the easement of the Indians' possessory rights, and that the confirmation of the legal title and issuance of the patent in no way changed the character of such title, nor freed it from the easement in favor of the defendants. (5) That in order to constitute one a "third person" under the act of March 3, 1851, it is not essential that he should deraign his title through the same specific grant as the party whose title was presented and confirmed; that it is only essential that the party claiming to be a "third person" should have a superior and anterior title to that confirmed, and the fact that his claim is hostile to the claim confirmed does not preclude the existence of a trust in his favor created by operation of law. (6) That it was not required that the title of the Indians should rest upon a specific grant, but their rights were protected by the general law of the land. (7) That the United States assumed both by its treaty and by the law of nations to protect and preserve all existing private property rights within the ceded territory, which it is claimed includes the rights of these defendants.

To sustain such claims the appellants rely upon Byrne v. Alas, 74 Cal. 628, 16 Pac. 523. It was stipulated in that case that the defendants were mission or pueblo Indians; that their ancestors and predecessors had been in the continuous, open and notorious, peaceable and exclusive, possession, occupancy, and use of the premises in controversy, claiming adversely to all the world, ever since and for a long time prior to the establishment of the Mexican republic, and that their claim had not been presented for confirmation under the act of 1851; and that the premises were included within the exterior boundaries of the Mexican grant of the San Jacinto rancho, and patented to Estudillo, from whom plaintiff derives title, and it was expressly provided in that grant that "he [Estudillo] shall in no way disturb or molest the Indians who are established or living thereon at the present time." In the opinion of the court in that case it is said: "The patentee and his grantee under the law and the terms of the grant took the fee, subject at least to the right of occupancy by the Indians; and those rights are still preserved unless the Indians forfeited them by failure to present their claims to the board of land commissioners appointed by the act of March 3, 1851." After reviewing the history of the Indians under the Spanish and Mexican governments, and their treatment by such governments, particularly mission or pueblo Indians, the opinion proceeds: "It becomes necessary to inquire to what extent, if at all, the confirmation of the Estudillo grant and the United States patent affected the claim of these defendants. The fifteenth section of the act of March 3, 1851, provides that the decree or any patent issued under the act shall be conclusive between the United States and claimants only, and shall not affect the interests of third persons. Under this clause the rights of the Indians were preserved without presenting their claims. * * * The patent therefore passed the legal title to the patentee, burdened with whatever equities existed at the time of the cession of California in favor of third persons. Under the treaty the government of the United States stood in the place of the Mexican government. Its patent confirmed the grant, proclaimed it to be good, neither added to nor detracted from it in any way. It left the title of Estudillo just as it was at the time of the treaty, so far as the Indians were concerned, and it remained thereafter as to them just as it would have remained if the treaty had not been made. If the Indians were entitled to possession before the date of the patent, they were entitled to it afterwards, so long as any of the community remained in actual possession. So far as we have been able to learn, nothing remained for them to do, under the laws of Spain or Mexico, to complete their rights of possession. Neither was there any act or writing required on the part of the government. Their right was therefore complete." Referring to section 16 of the act of March 3, 1851, which reads "that it shall be the duty of the commissioners herein provided for to ascertain and report to the secretary of the interior the tenure by which the mission lands are held, and those held by civilized Indians and those who are engaged in agriculture or labor of any kind, also those which are occupied and cultivated by pueblo or rancheros Indians," the court adds: "This language indicates that congress did not intend that the rights of the Indians should be cut off by a failure on their part to present their claims, but that it should be the duty of the commissioners to ascertain and report the tenure by which they held their lands."

The case under consideration, it will be seen, differs materially from that of Byrne v. Alas. Here it is shown that by the investigation of the Mexican officials and their reports, together with the grant to Warner, the land, some portions of which had formerly been occupied, was vacant and unoccupied at the date of the grant, and in the grant the clause in reference to the rights of the Indians is omitted entirely. At the time of the Pico grant, four years before, there may have been some mission or pueblo Indians at the Agua Caliente, covered by that grant. The later grant, as already stated, embraced the whole valley; and this was the grant which was confirmed and patented, as clearly appears from the papers offered in evidence on the part of the defendants. This is also shown by the case of Pico v. Warner, 73 Cal. 17, 14 Pac. 377. In the opinion in that case it is said: "The findings are in substance as follows: On the 8th day of June, 1840, the governor of California granted to José Antonio Pico a tract of land known as the 'Agua Caliente,' to the extent of four square leagues; the same being a part of the Valle de San José, which contains about ten square leagues, and is now situated in San Diego county. On the 28th day of November, 1844, the governor of California granted to the defendant J. J. Warner the tract of land known as the 'Valle de San José' to the extent of six square leagues." The court further say that the Pico grant was rejected, and the Warner grant confirmed, and add: "In pursuance of the confirmation of the Warner grant the United States on the 20th day of February, 1880, issued to Warner its patent for the premises described in the complaint, including the Agua Caliente tract and other lands not embraced in the Pico grant."

It is useless for counsel on behalf of appellants to contend that the Warner grant is the same as the Pico grant in reference to the rights of the Indians. Not to interfere with roads and other usages (servidumbres), under the circumstances, cannot be tortured into the equivalent of a reservation in the grant to "not molest [prejudicar] the Indians that thereon may be established." The grant to Warner neither reserved nor preserved any possessory or other right or supposed right in the Indians; and the reason of the difference between the two grants in this regard is obvious. The record shows that before the Warner grant was issued an investigation was had by the proper Mexican officers, who reported "that the said 'Valle San José' is, and has for the past two years been, vacant and abandoned," and could be granted, "inasmuch as the Mission of San Diego, to whom it belonged, had no means sufficient to cultivate and occupy it, and it is not so necessary for the mission." Any arguments based upon the asserted rights of the mission or pueblo Indians under the Spanish or Mexican régime—and much of the argument on the part of the appellants is on this line—is entirely irrelevant in this case, as the grant under consideration did not interfere with any such alleged rights. Therefore, if it were permitted to go behind the patent to the grant itself, there was no defense on the part of the appellants to the plaintiffs' action. But we are not permitted to go behind the patent in a case like this, and in the light of more recent decisions, both by this court and by the United States courts, Byrne v. Alas can no longer be considered as authority, more especially as to the consequences resulting from the nonpresentation of claims of title to land arising under the laws of Spain or Mexico, and the scope and effect of patents based upon such claims of title. In Minturn v. Brower, 24 Cal. 644, it was held that claims founded on perfect titles—that is, such titles as require nothing further to be done at the date of the change of sovereignty—need not be presented for confirmation, under the act of congress of 1851. And this seems to have been the theory up to the time of Byrne v. Alas. In consequence it is there held that an Indian title, such as this is claimed to be, namely, the right for themselves and descendants perpetually to possess, use, and occupy the land,—without, however, the right of alienation,—was a right or title prior and superior to any grant, and could be asserted successfully against such grant, or the patent issued thereon. The court say: “Under the treaty the government of the United States stood in the place of the Mexican government. Its patent confirmed the grant, proclaimed it to be good, neither added to nor detracted from it in any way.” At the time of, or just prior to, the decision in Byrne v. Alas, Phelan v. Poyoreno, 74 Cal. 448, 13 Pac. 681, and 16 Pac. 241, was also decided. In that case the plaintiff claimed under a patent issued upon a confirmed Mexican grant, and the defendants under a grant which was alleged to have conveyed a perfect title, but it had not been presented for confirmation. The judgment below went for the plaintiff, but this court held the unconfirmed grant to be superior in right to the patent, and reversed the judgment. The court there say: “Holders of titles to lands in the ceded territory which were perfect at the date of the treaty could, if they so elected, present them to the commission for confirmation, but were not bound to do so.” At the same term Dominguez v. Botiller, 74 Cal. 457, 16 Pac. 241, was decided “upon the doctrine enunciated, and for the reasons given, in Phelan v. Poyoreno, 74 Cal. 448, 13 Pac. 681, and 16 Pac. 241. This latter case, by a writ of error, went to the supreme court of the United States; the error assigned being that this court erred “in holding that under the said act of congress of March 3, 1851, it was not necessary for each and every person claiming lands in California by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican governments to present such claim to the board of land commissioners under said act.” After a full and thorough discussion of the questions involved, the judgment of this court was reversed. Botiller v. Dominguez, 130 U. S. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. 525.

In Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478, the contention was similar to that of the appellants, and the court there say: “The position of the defendants is that, as against them, the patent is not evidence for any purpose; that, as between them and the plaintiff, the whole subject of title is open, precisely as though no proceedings for the confirmation had been had, and no patent for the land had been issued. Their position rests upon a misapprehension of the character and effect of the patent issued upon the confirmation of a claim to land under the laws of Spain and Mexico. In the first place, the patent is a deed of the United States. As a deed, its operation is that of a quitclaim, or rather a conveyance of such interest as the United States possessed in the land, and it takes effect by relation at the time when the proceedings were instituted by the filing of the petition before the board of land commissioners. In the second place, the patent is a record of the action of the government upon the title of the claimant as it existed upon the acquisition of the country. Such acquisition did not affect the rights of the inhabitants to their property. They retained all such rights, and were entitled by the law of nations to protection under them, to the same extent as under the former government. The treaty of cession also stipulated for such protection. The obligation to which the United States thus succeeded was, of course, political in its character, and to be discharged in such manner and on such terms as they might judge expedient. By the act of March 3, 1851, they had declared the manner and terms on which they will discharge this obligation. They have there established a special tribunal before which all claims to lands are to be investigated; required evidence to be presented respecting the claims; appointed law officers to appear and contest them on behalf of the government; authorized appeals from the decisions of the tribunal, first to the district and then to the supreme court, and designated officers to survey and measure off the land when the validity of the claims is finally determined. When informed, by the action of its tribunal and officers, that a claim asserted is valid and entitled to recognition, the government acts, and issues its patent to the claimant. This instrument is therefore record evidence of the action of the government upon the title of the claimant. By it the government declares that the claim asserted was valid under the laws of Mexico; that it was entitled to recognition and protection by the stipulations of the treaty, and might have been located under the former government, and is correctly located now, so as to embrace the premises as they are surveyed and described. As against the government this record, so long as it remains unvacated, is conclusive. It is equally conclusive against parties claiming under the government by title subsequent. It is in this effect of the patent as a record of the government that its security and protection chiefly lie.” The court further defines the meaning of “third persons,” mentioned in the fifteenth section of the act of 1851, whose rights are reserved in all patents issued under such act, as follows: “The term ‘third persons,’ as there used, does not embrace all persons other than the United States and the claimant, but only those who hold superior titles, such as will enable them to resist successfully any action of the government in disposing of the property.” The opinion in this case has been frequently quoted and approved in subsequent cases by the same court. In Knight v. Association, 142 U. S. 201, 12 Sup. Ct. 271, “property” is defined: “And by the term ‘property,’ as applied to land, all titles are included, legal or equitable, perfect or imperfect.”

In Houston v. City and County of San Francisco, 47 Fed. 337, Justice Field, in rendering the opinion of the court, said: "The alleged grant, if one ever existed, was not presented for examination and confirmation to the board of land commissioners for the settlement of private land claims in California, under the act of congress of March 3, 1851. The land embraced within the alleged grant thus became, by the express declaration of congress in that act, which was passed to carry out our treaty obligations with Mexico, and by the decisions of the supreme court of the United States thereon, public land, no longer subject to any private ownership by virtue of the grant."

In More v. Steinbach, 127 U. S. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. 1070, after referring to the act of congress, and quoting former decisions in reference to Mexican grants, the court say: "The doctrine invoked by the defendants, that the laws of the conquered or ceded country, except so far as they may affect the political institutions of the new sovereign, remain in force after the conquest or cession until change be made, does not aid their defense. That doctrine is not applicable to laws concerning the alienation of any portion of the public domain, or to officers charged under the former government with that power. No proceedings affecting the rights of the new sovereign over public property can be taken, except in pursuance of his authority on the subject."

In this case, therefore, if any rights whatever can be conceded to the appellants, under the former Mexican government, such rights were in the nature of private property, or a right dependent upon the will and pleasure of the state or nation. If, as claimed, it were a right to possess, occupy, and use land, that amounted to a title to property. It being a title or right to property, whether in fee simple or possessory merely, derived from the Mexican government, under the act of congress of 1851, as repeatedly held, a claim to that right was required to be presented for confirmation. If, on the other hand, it were a mere license at the pleasure of the former government to occupy the land, such right would not prevent that government from granting the land unincumbered with such right. This was the case in reference to pueblos under the former régime. The pueblos held title in trust for the use of the inhabitants, not conferred by special grant, but under the laws and regulations of Spain and Mexico; and there were many cases where such governments made specific grants within the territorial limits of the pueblos which were, after the change of government, confirmed and patented by the United States under the act of congress of 1851. The United States, succeeding to all the rights and sovereignty of Mexico, had such power to grant all public lands,—that is, all lands not claimed by private parties; and if owned or claimed by private parties, and not presented for confirmation, the claims were waived or forfeited, and such lands thereafter became public lands. "The ascertainment of existing claims was a matter of vital importance to the government in the execution of its policy respecting the public lands; and congress might well declare that a failure to present a claim should be deemed an abandonment of it, and that the lands covered by it should be considered a part of the public domain." Again: "The power to decide upon the validity of any claim presented to land in California by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican government, as matter of original jurisdiction is by the act of 3d of March, 1851, exclusively conferred upon the commissioners appointed under the first section of that act." Further: "The effect of the inquiry and decision of these tribunals upon the matter submitted is final and conclusive. If unfavorable to the claimant, the land 'shall be held and considered as a part of the public domain of the United States'; but, if favorable, the decrees rendered by the commissioners or the courts 'shall be conclusive between the United States and the claimants.' These acts of congress do not create a voluntary jurisdiction, that the claimant may seek or decline. All claims to lands that are withheld from the board of commissioners during the legal term for their presentations are treated as non-existent, and the land as belonging to the public domain." And: "Claims, whether grounded upon an inchoate or a perfect title, were to be ascertained and adequately protected." U. S. v. Castellero, 2 Black, 17; Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761; More v. Steinbach, supra; Botiller v. Dominguez, supra. Appellants' counsel, to ward off the effect of these decisions,—particularly the Botiller Case,—characterize much of the language used in such opinions as pure dictum. But the opinion in this latter case, as well as the others quoted, have been referred to and adopted by the same court in subsequent cases. In Knight v. Association, supra, the court say: "The patent, being thus conclusive, can only be resisted by those who hold paramount title to the premises from Mexico and antedating the title confirmed." De Guyer v. Banning, 167 U. S. 723, 17 Sup. Ct. 937. When unable to meet and answer opinions of the court, it is a custom of counsel, which would be "more honored in the breach than the observance," to characterize the language used as mere dictum. The answer to such criticism is well stated in the Botiller Case itself: "We are unable to perceive any sufficient reason for calling these expressions of the court, whose judgment must be final on the subject, dicta; for we feel bound to say that they were observations pertinent to the matter under consideration, and seem to have met the entire approbation of the court in whose behalf they were uttered, and, as they embrace a very considerable period of time, during which a contrary opinion would have saved much labor to the court, we must believe that the opinions thus expressed without variation were the well-considered views of this court when they were delivered."

Many of the questions raised here were presented in the case of Milling Co. v. Thompson, 117 Cal. 594, 49 Pac. 714. The plaintiffs there relied upon a patent issued on the confirmed grant of the Ex-Mission San Fernando. The defense offered to show that the grant was void for the reason that it was an attempted grant of mission lands reserved from, and not subject to, grant under the laws and regulations of the Mexican government, and that the board of land commissioners had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and that the decree of confirmation was therefore void. Upon the objection of the plaintiff the evidence was excluded, and this ruling of the court was the principal error assigned. This court, in affirming the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, reviews to some extent the cases already referred to, and says: "The board of land commissioners was authorized to adjudicate upon the validity of every claim for land in California which purported to be derived from the Spanish or Mexican government. The validity of the claim included the authority of the governor to make the grant, as well as the existence or effect of the laws of Mexico concerning the same, and the jurisdiction of the board extended to the determination of each of these questions as fully as to determining whether there had been a compliance with the forms of law in making the grant, and its judgment thereon cannot be collaterally assailed on account of any error it may have committed in reference thereto." This case, aside from the cases from the United States courts already referred to, affords a complete answer to the contention that the land, being occupied by the Indians, could not be granted under the laws of Mexico. But it is claimed that Warner took his title subject to the trust or right of the Indians. Neither the grant nor the patent contains anything to support this contention, and there is no privity between them and the grantee, or anything from which a trust could arise in their favor as against his grant or the patent issued thereon. They are not third persons, within the meaning of the fifteenth section of the act of 1851, as already shown, but are mere strangers to the record. But it is contended that, if the Indians are not third "persons," within the meaning of section 15 of the act of 1851, they are protected by section 16 of that act. By that section it is simply made the duty of the commissioners to report the status of the mission Indians to congress, so that that body might be able to provide for their future government, and to treat them equitably and in accordance with the general policy of the United States. It would appear from that section that the Indians were treated as dependent upon the care and generosity of the government, and were not classed as Mexican citizens who held rights to property. The presumption is that the proper inquiry or investigation was had and reported by the proper officers, as required by law, prior to the confirmation of the Warner grant.

From the foregoing it follows (1) that the decision of the land commissioners, and other appropriate officers of the government of the United States, holding to the effect that the land in question was, at the time it was granted, vacant and subject to absolute alienation, is conclusive on the defendants and all others; (2) that the grant to Warner of the Valle de San José was not subject to any right or interest in the defendants, but that he claimed and held the land granted in hostility to the defendants' pretensions, and there is no trust relation existing between Warner and the said Indians; (3) that the patent issued to Warner upon the confirmed grant to the premises in controversy is conclusive against the defendants. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. The case presented by this record cannot, in my opinion, be distinguished in any material respect from Byrne v. Alas, 74 Cal. 628, 16 Pac. 523. It is true, the grant to Warner, under which the appellant claims, did not contain the provision quoted from the Estudillo grant (74 Cal. 635, 16 Pac. 526), that "he shall in no way disturb nor molest the Indians who are established or living thereon at the present time"; but it was an express condition of the Warner grant that he should not interfere with the roads or other "servidumbres," and it appears from the authorities cited by appellant that the word "servidumbres" had a meaning in Spanish law broad enough to include the servitude corresponding to the right of occupancy claimed by these defendants as successors of the Christianized mission Indians, who, according to the evidence excluded by the superior court, were established and living upon some, at least, of the lands in controversy, long before the date of the Warner grant. The claim that our decision in Byrne v. Alas has been overturned by subsequent decisions of the supreme court of the United States is, I think, unsupported by the cases cited by counsel; and, in the absence of controlling authority, I am unwilling to depart from the doctrine established here upon mature consideration.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. In addition to what is said in the dissenting opinion of the Chief Justice, I think that the privileges of the Indians would have been preserved even if in the grant to Warner there had been no express words of reservation which could be construed as including them,—if there had been no express reservation whatever. I think that under the general law applicable to the subject,—written and unwritten,—running back through Mexican and Spanish dominion to the sixteenth century, the legal title to the lands like those in question here always passed subject to the right of the Indians to occupy them as they had been accustomed to, “in such manner as that they shall not stand in need of the necessities of life.” See Byrne v. Alas, 74 Cal. 628, 16 Pac. 523, and the authorities there cited. I do not think that they were required to present their claims to the land commission, or that they are even to be charged with knowing that there was such a commission, or with a knowledge of the law generally. They are mere wards of the nation, and it is to be presumed that the nation has always recognized and protected their customary rights, and that all its grants are made with the understanding that the grantees know those rights, and take subject to them.

CITY OF SAN LUIS OBISPO et al. v. FITZGERALD, City Treasurer. (S. F. 2,000.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ORDINANCES—ELECTION—CHANGE IN BALLOT.

1. An ordinance passed under St. 1889, p. 399, which provides that a city may fix by ordinance the time and manner for holding certain elections, has the same power and effect, and is to be interpreted as a part of, the statute itself.

2. Although it was not required of the clerk of a city that he send the voters a sample ballot before election, where he does so the voters have the right to assume that the ballots furnished them at the voting booth correspond to the sample.

3. Where a city ordinance calls for a special election, setting forth the propositions to be voted upon, stating that “each voter shall indicate his wish by writing ‘Yes’ or ‘No’ on the right-hand margin on his ticket, opposite the proposition on which he may desire to vote,” and the ballots used at the election had the word “Yes” printed in the right-hand margin opposite each proposition, such change is a material departure from the provisions of the ordinance, and renders the election void.

In bank. Petition by the city of San Luis Obispo and another for a writ of mandate against A. F. Fitzgerald, as treasurer of the city of San Luis Obispo. Writ denied.

S. M. Swinnerton, for petitioners.

VAN DYKE, J. This is an original application to this court for a writ of mandate to compel the treasurer of the city of San Luis Obispo to accept from the said D. J. Harris the purchase money for certain bonds of said city, and to issue to said Harris said bonds. The defendant's refusal is based upon the ground that the election held for the issuance of said bonds was illegal and void. Any city, town, or municipal corporation is authorized to incur indebtedness to pay the cost of any municipal improvement requiring an expenditure greater than allowed by the annual tax levy, whenever the legislative authorities of said city or town, by a two-thirds vote of the members thereof, shall determine that the public interest or necessity requires the same. Act March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 399). The act in question prescribes that an ordinance be passed by said city or town as therein specified, calling a special election to submit to the qualified voters thereof the proposition of incurring the debt for the purpose set forth in the ordinance, and provides that no question other than such proposition shall be submitted at that election; and it further requires that the votes of two-thirds of all the voters voting at such special election shall be necessary to authorize the issuance of the bonds provided for. The city of San Luis Obispo, March 20, 1899, passed an ordinance, numbered 107, set forth in the petition herein, requiring a special election under the act referred to, submitting to the voters of said city the proposition of incurring a debt and bonding the city for certain municipal improvements, namely, waterworks and sewers. Section 6 of the ordinance reads as follows:

“The manner of holding said election shall be as follows: (1) As provided by law for holding elections in said city; (2) as provided by the general election laws of this state, except where such general laws may conflict with the state law for elections of the kind hereby called, or with this or any ordinance of this city; and (3) as provided for in this ordinance. The voting for and against said indebtedness shall be as follows: Tickets must be of ordinary election ticket paper, 6x12 inches (variations in size permitted as in said general election law). The heading of such tickets must be, ‘Bond Election, City of San Luis Obispo.’ Each proposition set forth in section 2 of this ordinance shall be voted on separately, and must be printed on such tickets as follows:

“(1) Bonding for City Water Works, $80,000.00.

“(2) Bonding for Sewer Improvement, $36,000.00.

“Each voter shall indicate his wish by writing, or causing to be written or printed, ‘Yes’ or ‘No’ on the right-hand margin on his ticket, opposite the proposition on which he may desire to vote.”

The statute delegates to the city the power to fix by its ordinance the time of holding the election, and the duty of prescribing the time and mode of voting for and against the proposition submitted. Such ordinance, passed in pursuance of the statute, has the force and effect of a law of the state, and is to be construed as if its terms had been incorporated in the statute itself. Murphy v. City of San Luis Obispo, 119 Cal. 624, 51 Pac. 1085. The ordinance in question was published as required therein, and, as shown by the petition, the clerk issued a notice for such election, and mailed to the registered voters of said city sample ballots. These sample ballots were in accordance with the ordinance, and were as follows: "Each voter shall indicate his wish by writing, or causing to be written or printed, 'Yes,' or 'No' on the right-hand margin of the ticket, opposite the proposition on which he desires to vote.

BOND ELECTION.
CITY OF SAN LUIS OBISPO.

1. Bonding for City Water Works $80,000.00
2. Bonding for Sewer Improvement $36,000.00

The ballots, however, furnished to the voters to be used, and which were used, at the said election, were as follows:

BOND ELECTION.
CITY OF SAN LUIS OBISPO.

1. Bonding for City Water Works $80,000.00	Yes
2. Bonding for Sewer Improvement $36,000.00	Yes

It will be seen the ticket to be voted has added the affirmative of the proposition to be voted upon. But it is claimed on behalf of petitioner that the sample ballot is not required in an election of the character in question, and it was, therefore, immaterial whether the ballot furnished corresponded with the sample ballot or not. Still the voter had a right to assume that the ballot which was furnished him as he passed into the voting booth conformed to the sample ballot. The very purpose of a sample ballot, when required or furnished to the voter, is to instruct him as to the matter and form of the ballot he is about to cast. In this case the sample ballot, instead of being a guide to the voter, would have a tendency to deceive him. The ordinance plainly indicated, aside from the sample ballot, that the proposition submitted to the voter was whether he would insert "Yes" or "No" after each of the propositions, and left him entirely at liberty to exercise his preference, without being influenced or handicapped by any preference being indicated on the ticket one way or the other. It is said the voter might, while in the booth, erase the "Yes" and insert "No." In Murphy v. City of San Luis Obispo, supra, the ordinance, as in this case, directed that the voter should indicate his wish by writing, or causing to be written or printed, "Yes" or "No" on the right-hand margin of his ticket, but the ticket as furnished provided for a stamp or cross in the square of the right hand. It was held in that case that such departure from the directions of the ordinance rendered the election invalid, the court saying, "Whatever the statute requires the form to be is mandatory." See, also, Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 101, 41 Pac. 454. Under the statute, and the ordinance in this case, passed in pursuance thereof, it was the right and privilege of the voter to express his choice by inserting the word "Yes" or "No" at the right hand of the proposition placed on his ticket, entirely free and untrammelled from outside interference by writing or printing thereon any direction or suggestion as to how he should vote. It was, therefore, not only highly improper and irregular to have the tickets printed and furnished the voters as they were in this case, but it was a substantial departure from the provisions of the ordinance in a material matter, and hence rendered the election void. Writ denied.

HIGGINS et al. v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO
et al. (L. A. 577.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 13, 1899.)

CHANGE OF VENUE—INTEREST OF JUDGE—PREJUDICE—AFFIDAVIT—INFORMATION AND BELIEF—APPEAL.

1. A water company had a claim against a city for the use of its plant, contingent on there having been funds in the treasury from which it could have been paid as it accrued. Held, that under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, disqualifying a judge having an interest in the litigation, a judge was not disqualified merely by reason of being a taxpayer, though the judgment might become the foundation of a special tax to meet it, or by some other means payment might be enforced, the judge's interest in any event being too remote.

2. The interest of a judge as taxpayer, being made a special ground of disqualification, cannot be considered in support of the ground of bias.

3. The fact of a continuous controversy between a city and a water company, engendering much feeling between the company and its consumers, including the judges, does not show ill feeling on the part of the judges indicating prejudice sufficient to disqualify them from trying an action between the company and the city.

4. A controversy between a water company and one afterwards a judge, in which both aired their grievances in the papers, and the company shut off the judge's water, and he threatened to proceed to forfeit the company's charter, does not show prejudice of the judge disqualifying him from trying an action in which the company was a party.

5. The fact that, in a former application for change of venue, applicant's attorney made an insufficient affidavit, and that the judge became offended, and censured the attorney, and intimated that he might be guilty of contempt, does not show prejudice of the judge disqualifying him to adjudicate the client's case.

6. The fact that in another litigation the attorney incorporated in his brief matter reflecting on the judge, which the latter resented, does not disqualify the judge.

7. Where counsel made no objection at the time to the court's examination (on motion for change of venue) of a witness as to prejudice, and submitted their motion on the evidence as it went in, they cannot on appeal urge the invalidity of such action.

8. Affidavit on information and belief as to bias is not sufficient to authorize a change of venue, where the sources of information, though readily obtainable, were not brought forward.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by T. J. Higgins and others against the city of San Diego and the San Diego Water Company. Appeal from an order refusing a change of venue. Affirmed.

Works & Works, for appellant. H. E. Doolittle and T. L. Lewis, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiffs bring the action for themselves and all other taxpayers of the city of San Diego. Certain defendants answered the complaint, and the defendant the water company filed a cross complaint. Upon the filing of the answer the plaintiffs dismissed their action, "leaving the contest to be waged between the water company on one side and the city and its officers on the other." The issues are fully stated in the opinion of the Chief Justice on the first appeal (118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824, and 50 Pac. 670), from which it will be seen that the cause was tried upon the issues presented by the cross complaint of the water company. The court held that the water company could not recover, except for the reasonable value of the use of its plant during the time it had been used and held by the city. The demand of the water company is for a money judgment, the amount of which is the only question to be determined. This amount will depend upon whether the claims of the water company accrued at a time when there were unappropriated revenues to meet them, and the answer to the question, when did the claims of the water company equal the amount of unappropriated revenues for the respective fiscal years during which the city had the use of the water company's plant? In the opinion filed by the court on rehearing, the principle that no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the ordinary income and revenue of any future year, as held in McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 Pac. 358, and other cases, was reaffirmed; but it was suggested that "future provision might be made for the payment of a debt, although there might be no revenues of the fiscal year in which the debt was incurred out of which it could be satisfied, —as, for instance, by the adoption by the people of a proposal to pay it, or by other methods that might possibly be suggested." The opinion first rendered was also modified in this: that it was held that the court could not order judgment upon the findings for the reasonable value to the city of the water company's plant and of the water supplied, "because it does not appear that the claims of the water company all accrued at a time when there were unappropriated revenues for the respective fiscal years during which the city had the use of the water company's plant."

The plaintiffs having dismissed their action, and this court having decided that the portion only of the cross complaint of the water company counting on quantum valebat presented any ground for relief, the cause came on for hearing before the Honorable J. W. Hughes and E. S. Torrance, judges of the superior court, sitting in bank, upon the motion of the water company for an order that the judges of this court secure the services of some other judge of another county to preside at the trial of said cause, or that the judges of this court change the place of trial of the said action to some other county. The motion was heard upon the affidavit of J. M. Howells, president of the defendant water company, in its support, and upon the counter affidavit of H. E. Doolittle, Esq., one of the attorneys for the city, and upon the oral examination of affiant Howells, called as a witness by the city. The court made an order denying the motion, from which the water company appeals. The grounds of the motion were: (1) The judges were disqualified by reason of pecuniary interest in the result of the action; and (2) that they were disqualified by reason of bias and prejudice entertained towards appellant.

1. Upon the question of interest, the undisputed statement in Howells' affidavit is that there are but two judges of the superior court in San Diego county, and that they "are, and each of them is, and was at the times mentioned in the pleadings in this action, resident property owners and taxpayers in said city of San Diego, and their, and each of their, property in said city will be liable to taxation for any amount that may be found due the water company, if it shall be held that a tax shall be levied therefor," and said judges are therefore disqualified to try the action. The inquiry to be made is whether there were unappropriated revenues to meet the water company's claim, and to ascertain, "as the basis of its judgment against the city, just when the claims of the water company * * * equaled the amount of unappropriated revenues for the respective fiscal years during which the city had the use of the water company's plant." The question as to the liability of the city has already been determined on the first appeal, contingent upon the fact that when the claim accrued there were funds in the treasury applicable to its payment. The water company will be entitled to a general judgment, and it was so ordered by this court, should the facts show the legal basis, whether or not the funds are still available to pay it. The amount of the judgment—that is, the reasonable value of the use of the water company's plant—must be determined by the trial court, and the further fact as to the basis of the liability. In such state of the case, is the judge disqualified because he is a taxpayer?

The rule was thus stated in Meyer v. City of San Diego, 121 Cal. 102, 53 Pac. 434: "Where, in any litigation, there is any certain, definable, pecuniary, or proprietary interest or relation which will be directly affected by the judgment that may be rendered, in every such case, without exception, so far as an exhaustive examination of the authorities goes, the disqualification of the judge is held to exist." In City of Oakland v. Oakland Water-Front Co., 118 Cal. 249, 50 Pac. 268, the court said: "In our opinion, the word 'interested,' as used in the section of the Code relied on [section 170, Code Civ. Proc.], embraces only an interest that is direct, proximate, substantial, and certain. * * * We cannot conceive that the legislature meant to declare that the mere contingent possibility that some future supposable financial condition of a municipality might in a slight degree affect a judge as a taxpayer would strip him of all his personal judicial qualities." In Mining Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315, it was said that the Code provision "should not receive a technical or strict construction, but, rather, one that is broad and liberal"; and the meaning of the court was shown by its adoption of what was said in Stockwell v. Board, 22 Mich. 350, namely, "The court ought not to be astute to discover refined and subtle distinctions to save a case from the operation of the maxim, when the principle it embodies bespeaks the propriety of its application." In further statement of the rule the court said in the Keyser Case: "Undoubtedly the prohibition does not extend to cases where the interest is simply in some question or questions of law involved in the controversy, or when it is indirect and remote." These expressions fairly state the rule, and the spirit in which it must be applied.

Appellant relies on Meyer v. City of San Diego, supra, as decisive of the question. In that case the plaintiff sought to set aside as void a contract between the city and the water company, defendant, involving an expenditure of $1,500,000 of the city's moneys, to be obtained by the sale of bonds which had been voted at a special election, and to enjoin their issuance. The law under which the bonds were to be issued enjoined on the municipality the duty of levying and collecting a special annual tax sufficient to pay interest and provide a sinking fund for the ultimate redemption of the bonds. The court said: "The disqualification does not spring from the fact that the judge is a citizen, inhabitant, and taxpayer of the city of San Diego, nor yet from the fact that the municipality is a party litigant in the action. It arises from the circumstance that he owns property within the city which may or may not be liable for the burden of a special tax for the period of forty years, as he shall decide. * * * The judgment which he renders in the case will be binding upon his rights and his property. His interest is in the outcome of the litigation, and it is a direct, measurable, pecuniary interest." The Oakland Water-Front Case, supra, was distinguished from the Meyer Case by the broad fact that in the Oakland Case, even if the city had succeeded, it was doubtful whether the control of the lands involved would result in profit or loss to its finances, and it was still more doubtful whether the management of the lands would affect the tax rate of the city in any degree; and it was held that under such circumstances the interest was remote, contingent, and speculative, and did not work the disqualification of the judge. We are to apply the foregoing principles, as illustrated by the cases cited, to the facts in the present case. That the water company has a claim for some amount seems to be reasonably certain, contingent only upon there having been funds in the treasury from which it could have been paid from time to time as it accrued. This is not a contingency which applies to the interest of the judge, but is, rather, one of the facts upon which the liability depends. With this contingency supplied by the facts, the water company will be entitled to a judgment, whether or not the funds once applicable have since been used properly or improperly for other purposes, or, if not used at the time, have been carried over to other years, and have been used, or are now beyond the reach of the judgment. If the funds for the fiscal years which might have been applied to the payment of the claim are still on hand, they must be applied to the payment of the judgment; and to that extent, it is urged, the treasury will be depleted, and must be replenished by taxation on the property of the city, including that of the judges. It is also contended that, if there is no money applicable to the payment of the judgment which may be rendered, there will rest a liability upon the city, nevertheless, which may become the foundation for the imposition of a special tax to meet it, or by some other means payment may be enforced, as was suggested in the former appeal of this case; and, in any view of the probable outcome of this litigation, there will result a liability of the city, which, if ever met, must be met by either taxing the property of the inhabitants, or by appropriating funds already raised from taxation.

Conceding all this to be true, still it seems to us that the interest of the judge is too remotely involved to come within the rule. If there are funds now available to meet the judgment, it does not follow by any means that a tax levy would be necessary, or would ever be levied, to replenish the fund so appropriated. It has often been held that judges, as taxpayers, are not disqualified to try damage suits against a municipality, where the judgment is to be paid out of the treasury of such municipality. If in this case it should turn out that there are no available funds with which to pay the judgment, the question remains, how or when will it ever be paid? To say that the people may vote a special tax for that purpose is to look far into the future, and to a very remote and uncertain contingency; and besides it would then be the act of the people, and not of the judge. It is true that his judgment would be the foundation for such possibility, but we cannot believe that the rule goes so far as to preclude a judge from hearing a cause where the enforcement of his judgment is so remote, uncertain, and problematical, and, if ever enforced, must be through some agency independent of the court. Besides, the judgment does not necessarily involve a tax levy at all. It goes no further than to determine that an indebtedness exists, but the contingency remains that it may never be paid. The decision in the Meyer Case was supported in part by City of Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 520, 22 S. W. 668, 960, which was in most respects similar to the case here. But that case has since been distinguished in City of Dallas v. Peacock, 89 Tex. 58, 33 S. W. 220, and in Thornburg v. City of Tyler, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 439, 43 S. W. 1054. The ground of the distinction, as stated in the latter of these cases, was that "the Nalle Case directly involved the levy of a tax, and the legality of bonds supported by a tax levy already levied, and was to prevent the issuance of bonds for the payment of which it would be necessary to levy a tax before they could have been issued"; and the court said, "In that case tax levies were directly involved, while in this case the suit is a simple suit for the recovery of a money judgment upon the obligation of the city." The court repeated what was said in Peacock's Case, supra,—"that there is no disposition to extend the disqualification of a judge beyond the rule announced in City of Austin v. Nalle." The Thornburg Case was an action to recover of the city of Tyler upon 250 bonds, of the value of $100 each, issued in aid of a railroad. Plaintiff objected to a trial before Judge McCord, who was a taxpayer in the city of Tyler, and he was held qualified. The Peacock Case was an action against the city for personal injuries caused by a broken and defective sewer negligently left open by defendant. In that case the judges raised the question of their qualification on their own motion, two of whom owned residences in the city of Dallas, and all three of them were taxpayers therein. It was held that a judge, as a taxpayer, has no interest in a suit against a city which does not involve a tax. The court said: "There exists a possibility that, where a judgment is given against a city, it may result in an increased levy of taxes, and so the recovery of a judgment by a city may in some cases bring about a reduction of taxation. In the case of State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 54 Me. 564, it is said, 'The interest of the judges is not only extremely minute, but is contingent, and dependent entirely upon the decision of another tribunal.' So in the present case a judgment against the city cannot in any way affect primarily any one of the judges of the court of civil appeals, except upon two contingencies: (1) That the city council have not already levied taxes beyond the limit of their power; and (2) that they may order an increased levy in order to pay the judgment. This seems to us a remote contingency." In the Meyer Case, supra, the validity of the bonds was involved. By that judgment the judge was to place upon his property, or to refuse to do so, a certain, direct, definable, pecuniary burden, capable of mathematical ascertainment; and it was for this reason the judge was held to be disqualified. But such is not the case here, and we do not think the rule should be extended beyond the boundaries defined in the Meyer Case. The action here is on an implied contract for the reasonable value of the use of the water company's plant, and may be tried by a jury. We can see no difference between this case and ordinary cases involving liabilities upon contract generally, where judgments may be entered against cities, counties, or the state. To hold that no taxpaying judge could sit in such cases would render the administration of justice in the courts nearly impossible.

2. The matters relating to the alleged bias and prejudice of the judges are mostly stated on information and belief. The facts claimed to have been stated positively on which appellant relies are (1) that both judges are property holders and taxpayers in the city; (2) that there has been long and continued controversy between the city and water company, which has engendered much feeling between the water company and its consumers, including said judges; (3) that there was a personal controversy between the company and Judge Hughes, both parties resorting to the newspapers to air their grievances, and the company shut off the water from the judge's premises, whereupon he threatened to resort to proceedings to forfeit the company's charter, and that his threats found their way into the newspapers; (4) that shortly before this application was made a similar one was made upon an affidavit held insufficient, and that the judges became offended, and censured the attorney of the company for presenting the same, and said that, unless the affidavit was made through inadvertence, its presentation would be a contempt of court; and (5) that in certain other litigation an application had been made for a change of venue from Judge Torrance's court, which he refused, and that on the appeal the attorneys of the company filed a brief in which it was claimed that said judge was disqualified, and that the circumstances were such that the said judge should, on his own motion, have called in another judge without an affidavit having been filed. As to specification 1, it is sufficient to say that interest is made a special ground of disqualification, and we do not think it should be considered in support of the ground of bias, which is made a distinct and separate ground. The facts under specification 2 do not, we think, show such ill feeling on the part of the judges towards the company as to indicate prejudice sufficient to warrant us in saying that they are disqualified to try the case. The personal controversy referred to in specification 3 would not disqualify Judge Torrance, even if it could be said to have that effect as to Judge Hughes. But it appeared that the controversy arose before the latter became superior judge, and was not of such nature as would justify us in holding that he carried this old grudge, if he had any, with him on the bench; and, besides, it appeared that the basis of these charges was largely hearsay, and they were stated on information and belief. We can see nothing to justify appellant's conclusion that disqualifying bias exists in the minds of these judges from the episode as to the insufficient affidavit. The judges might without just provocation have thought the attorneys guilty of contempt, and might have said so; but we cannot say that for this reason they would be disposed to bear down upon the attorneys' client, or unduly favor the city. Nor can we so far impeach the sense of fairness and justice which it is presumed rests in the conscience of every judge as to say that, because the attorney has incorporated distasteful and even scandalous matter in a brief reflecting upon the judge, therefore the judge would punish the offense by mulcting the innocent client. If we must presume bias and prejudice towards the client because of ill feeling towards the attorney, it would establish a dangerous rule, by which the attorney through his own fault could have his case transferred to another judge by quarreling with the court. We prefer to believe that a judge may, with or without cause, cordially dislike and even distrust an attorney, and yet be capable of doing exact justice towards his client. The matters conceded to have been stated on information and belief fail to convince us that there exists in the minds of either one of these judges such animosity towards the company as would disqualify him from meting out evenhanded justice in the case. Appellant complains that the affiant, Howells, was put upon the witness stand, and was made to undergo a rigid examination by the judges as to the hearsay statements in the affidavit affecting their feeling towards the water company; and it is claimed that this examination was unauthorized, and his evidence should be disregarded. Counsel made no objection at the time, but submitted their motion on the evidence as it went in. We do not think they can now be heard to object. Upon information and belief it is stated that Judge Torrance became offended because of the brief filed in the supreme court by the attorneys in this case in another action, and complained to that court of the same; that a certain newspaper owned by opponents of the water company was the especial champion of Judge Torrance, and defended him, and "attacked the company and its attorneys in a violent and virulent way"; that there was a strong feeling of friendship between said judge and the opponents of the company; and that said judge entertained feelings of personal animosity towards the company, its managers and officers. We do not think the evidence warrants the conclusion (for it is but a conclusion, and cannot be received as a fact because so stated by affiant) "that the judge entertained feelings of personal animosity towards the company, its officers and managers." The facts, as drawn out, fail to justify the conclusion. It should be added that affidavits based upon information and belief, especially where the sources of the information are readily obtainable, as was the case here, but were not brought forward, have but weak probative force as ground for change of place of trial. The court has in many cases so held, and in some of them it has been held that a statement upon information and belief, standing alone, is not sufficient to authorize the change to be ordered. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 379; People v. Williams, 24 Cal. 31; People v. Shuler, 28 Cal. 490. We have given the proofs submitted careful scrutiny, for the reason that appellant's counsel are at some disadvantage because of the strained personal relations between them and the judge before whom the case is pending. But we cannot bring ourselves to believe from the evidence that this judge is legally disqualified to go forward with the hearing. The order should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. STONE v. JEFFERDS et al.
(Sac. 427.)

ACTION—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE—DISMISSAL—LACHES.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subds. 3, 4, prescribing the circumstances under which an action may be dismissed, is not the sole source of power to dismiss an action for failure to prosecute, but such power exists independent of the Code.

2. In an action by the state, on the relation of an individual, against an irrigation district, formed under the statutes of the state, to have such district declared to have no legal existence, laches may be imputed to plaintiff for failure to prosecute with due diligence, so as to authorize dismissal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county.

Action by the people, on the relation of C. E. Stone, against William M. Jefferds and seven others, claiming to be directors of the Brown's Valley irrigation district, and said district, to have said district declared to have no legal existence. From an order dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Ford and C. W. Cross, for appellant. Forbes & Dunsmore, W. H. Catlin, and M. E. Sanborn, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution. The suit was brought in the county of Yuba to have the Brown's Valley irrigation district declared to have no legal existence. The original complaint was filed January 3, 1891, and was signed by Atty. Gen. Johnson. The defendants, except the defendant corporation, filed demurrers January 16, 1891, which were amended March 28, 1891, and as amended were, on June 16, 1891, sustained, on the ground that said defendant corporation should be made a party to the action. On September 2, 1892, plaintiff filed an amended complaint, signed by Atty. Gen. Hart, to which all the defendants, including the defendant corporation, demurred on September 23, 1892. Nothing further was done in the case, so far as the court minutes show, until December 7, 1896, when W. G. Murphy, Esq., of counsel for plaintiff, served upon defendants a notice that plaintiff would move the court on December 26, 1896, at 2 o'clock p. m., "to have a day set for the hearing of the demurrers of defendants to the plaintiff's amended complaint." The minutes of the court show that on December 26, 1896, said motion last above set forth "was, on motion, continued until called up," but upon whose motion does not appear by the minutes. On March 30, 1897, a notice of motion, and an affidavit in support thereof, to dismiss said action for want of prosecution, were served and filed by defendants' then attorneys. This motion came on to be heard April 9, 1897, all parties being represented by counsel; whereupon the attorneys for plaintiff objected to the consideration of the motion on the ground that plaintiff's motion to have a day set for hearing the demurrers should be first heard and determined, which objection was overruled. Plaintiff's attorneys thereupon moved that the demurrers be taken up and heard or a day fixed to hear the same. The court sustained defendants' objection to an immediate hearing of the demurrer, and reserved its ruling as to the other branch of the motion until after it had determined the motion to dismiss the action. Affidavits on behalf of plaintiff and counter affidavits on behalf of defendants were then presented, the motion to dismiss was heard, and on April 13, 1897, was granted. The appeal is from the order dismissing the case.

Appellants make the following objections: (1) That the court had no authority to dismiss the action; (2) that laches are not imputable to the state; (3) the case cannot be dismissed unless it be shown that those in whose behalf the action is prosecuted have themselves been negligent; and (4) that the court abused its discretion.

1. It is contended that section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides the only authority for the court to dismiss an action, and that this case does not fall within the terms or meaning of that section, and therefore the order was unauthorized. That section prescribes the circumstances under which an action may be dismissed. The subdivisions applicable, if any, are as follows: "(3) By the court, when the plaintiff fails to appear at the trial and the defendant appears and asks for a dismissal. (4) By the court, when, upon the trial and before the final submission of the case, the plaintiff abandons it." The contention is that under these provisions the plaintiff must either fail to appear at the "trial," or he must abandon the case upon the "trial" and before the final submission.

The learned attorney general and his associate in the brief of appellant say: "In support of this point, we are compelled to attack a number of decisions of this court, which, we respectfully submit, were inadvertently made." Grigsby v. Napa Co., 36 Cal. 585, and Chipman v. Hibberd, 47 Cal. 638, are given as examples. It is suggested that these decisions do not refer to any statute authority, and that they must have been decided upon the theory "that the plaintiff had practically abandoned his cause of action." It is further suggested that "the later cases simply follow the earlier cases, without going into the reason upon which the earlier cases were based." Counsel then proceed to argue that the Code has laid down the only grounds for dismissal, and the circumstances under which alone the court can exercise the power, invoking the maxim, "expressio unius, exclusio alterius est." In a nutshell, the contention is that the plaintiff "must either fail to appear at the 'trial,' or he must abandon the case upon the 'trial,' and before its final submission." It is hence argued that, as the case never came to trial, the plaintiff did not "fail to appear on the trial," nor did he "upon the trial, and before the final submission of the case, abandon it," and therefore there was no authority to dismiss the case. We have re-examined the cases, in view of this challenge of their correctness.

In Hassey v. Association, 102 Cal. 611, 36 Pac. 945, it was said: "The power of the court to dismiss an action under section 581, Code Civ. Proc., or independent of that section, has been too often exercised and upheld by this court to leave the question an open one." See, also, McLaughlin v. Clausen, 116 Cal. 487, 48 Pac. 487; Bank v. Nason, 115 Cal. 626, 47 Pac. 595.

Section 148, subs. 3, 4, Prac. Act, read as do the same subdivisions of section 581, Code Civ. Proc., and section 149, Prac. Act, provided as does section 582, Code Civ. Proc., to wit: "In every case, other than those mentioned in the last section, the judgment shall be rendered on the merits." It was said in Grigsby v. Napa Co., 36 Cal. 585, that, on an appeal from an order dismissing the action for want of prosecution, "it has not been the practice of this court to interfere, except where the district court has abused the discretion which it necessarily exercises in this class of cases, and in invoking the aid of this court it is incumbent on the appellant to establish affirmatively that there has been such abuse of discretion. Until the contrary appears, the presumption is the discretion of the district court was rightfully exercised."

In Dupuy v. Shear, 29 Cal. 238, upon motion, the complaint was stricken from the files for want of prosecution. The court said: "We do not think such a case is provided for in sections 148 and 149 of the practice act; but the court, having got possession of the case by the commencement of the suit, must have some power to dispose of it when the plaintiff declines or neglects to proceed." Here was an express recognition of the power to dismiss notwithstanding the statutory provisions. See, also, Carpentier v. Minturn, 39 Cal. 450, where sections 148 and 149 of the practice act were cited in the briefs.

In Pardy v. Montgomery, 77 Cal. 326, 19 Pac. 530, it was decided that "the court had power to dismiss the action for want of prosecution (see Code Civ. Proc. § 581), and, there being no showing to the contrary, we must presume that the court below exercised its power properly and within the rules prescribed by law." The circumstances were not shown in the report of the case, and possibly it is not in point.

Saville v. Frisbie, 70 Cal. 87, 11 Pac. 502, was a case where the power was exercised, but no reference was made to the Code section in the opinion. And so in Kornahrens v. His Creditors, 64 Cal. 492, 3 Pac. 126. In Simmons v. Keller, 50 Cal. 38, the cause was at issue of fact by answer filed December 21, 1870. In March, 1873, defendant gave notice of a motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution. Plaintiff resisted the motion on a showing that the defendant had pleaded the statute of limitations, and that there was another case pending in the supreme court in which the statute was pleaded, and which was like the case at bar, and that plaintiff had desired to wait until such case was decided, in order to know whether the statute was a valid defense,—a situation similar to that found in this case. In plaintiff's brief, sections 581, 582, Code Civ. Proc., were cited, and the point was made, as it is now made, that the maxim, "Expressio unius," etc., applies. The court said: "A similar question was presented in Chipman v. Hibberd, 47 Cal. 638, where we affirmed the order of the district court dismissing a pending action for the failure of the plaintiff to prosecute within a reasonable time. We think there was no abuse of the discretion of the court in this case." See, also, Kubli v. Hawzett, 89 Cal. 638, 27 Pac. 57.

Conceding that appellant's reading of section 581 is correct, it does not follow that the power to dismiss an action for lack of prosecution does not reside in the court except upon a showing in conformity with the provisions of that section. It was pointed out in People v. Latham, 53 Cal. 386, that the power to dismiss an action was first exercised by equity courts. For a long period, however, courts of law have exercised the authority as part of their inherent powers, and the same rules now apply to a dismissal at law or equity, under code procedure. 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Pl. & Prac. p. 910, and cases cited.

The cases are numerous where this court has been called upon to decide as to the correctness of orders made upon motions to dismiss for failure to prosecute. I do not find any case where the power was distinctly referred to subdivision 3 or 4 of section 581, or to the same provisions in the practice act. Dupuy v. Shear, supra, however, is direct authority for dismissing an action where the plaintiff has neglected to proceed, and where he had not failed to appear at any trial (subdivision 3), and where he had not at any trial, before final submission of the case, abandoned it (subdivision 4). As late as Hassey v. Association, supra, this court said that the power existed "independent of that section." We are unwilling to believe that the rule was founded in error, and that its frequent reaffirmance has been by inadvertence. The court has, rightly we think, refused to regard the Code provisions as the sole source of the power to dismiss for failure to prosecute the action.

2. It is urged that Brown's Valley Irrigation district is a quasi public corporation, and, representing, as it does, the interests of the people of the state, that laches cannot be imputed to the corporation. We are cited to People v. Holden, 28 Cal. 124, where, in an action to try the right to an office, it was suggested as doubtful (but not decided) whether counsel for the relator could bind the state by a stipulation. Also to Weber v. Commissioners, 18 Wall. 57-71, where the presumption arising under the statute of limitations as applicable to the state was held not to arise in the case of the wharves and other rights of the state in the harbor of San Francisco, which the legislature had directed the board of state harbor commissioners to take into their possession. It is a rule that statutes are construed as not including the sovereign except the construction is compelled by express terms or by necessary implication, as, for example, statutes of limitations; but it was held in Re Royer's Estate, 123 Cal. 614, 56 Pac. 461, that the University of California, though a public corporation and a state instrumentality, is not clothed with the sovereignty of the state, but is included in the statute (Civil Code, § 1313), which limits the amount of any bequest in its nature charitable. We do not think an irrigation district, formed under the statutes of the state, is clothed with the sovereignty of the state or is the sovereign. If appellant's contention be sound, we can see no way by which an action brought in the name of the people could ever be brought to trial unless the plaintiff was disposed to allow it to be done. There is no reason why, in a case like this, the plaintiff should have immunity from the operation of rules of practice and rules of law applicable to other litigants. No permanent injury can come to the state by the dismissal; for, if the defendant corporation is illegally exercising a franchise, the order is not a bar to another action. The continued exercise of a franchise without right is a continuously renewed usurpation, on which a new cause of action arises each day. People v. Stanford, 77 Cal. 360, 18 Pac. 85, and 19 Pac. 693. The state was in this case also protected against costs by an undertaking.

3. Appellant's point, that those in whose behalf the action was brought must be shown to have themselves been negligent, rests upon the reasons advanced in support of the point just considered, and need not be further noticed.

4. Appellant suggests that there was an abuse of discretion, but the point is not argued nor insisted upon. Reliance seems to have been placed wholly upon the objections already considered. We will therefore not undertake to present the evidence upon which the court acted. In the judgment the learned judge who heard the motion has stated quite fully the facts and the reasons impelling his decision. We are not shown wherein these facts were not supported by the evidence, nor can we say that his conclusions indicate an abuse of the discretion with which he was clothed. I advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—INJURIES FROM DEFECTS IN STREETS—NEGLIGENCE—ACTION—JOINDER OF PARTIES.

1. An action for damages for injury caused by a defective highway will lie against a town marshal acting ex officio as street commissioner, whose duty it is to keep the highway in repair, and the board of town trustees, where the duty of maintaining the safety of highways is correlative with the right accorded them by charter, of opening, lighting, and keeping in good repair the highways of the municipality.

2. It is proper to join as defendants in an action for damages for injury resulting from a defective highway the town marshal, his bondsmen, and the board of town trustees, when the injury resulted from the separate, but concurrent, negligence of the marshal and trustees.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county.

Action by A. Hope Doeg against F. S. Cook and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

B. F. Thomas, for appellant. Shepherd & Eastin and Blackstock & Ewing, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff by falling into a culvert on a public highway of the town of San Buenaventura. The defendants are the town marshal, who is also ex officio street commissioner, his bondsmen, and the individuals composing the board of town trustees. The charge in the complaint is that the marshal and the trustees, whose duty it was to maintain the highway in good repair, negligently suffered and permitted the culvert to remain in an open and dangerous condition, without railing or protection, and they permitted a railing, which had been erected to guard against the dangers of the culvert, to be removed, and failed, negligently, to replace it. The plaintiff upon a dark night fell into the culvert and sustained injuries, in compensation for which he brings this action. By the charter of the town it is declared that "the trustees have the power to provide for the opening, lighting and keeping in good repair streets and alleys," etc. St. 1875-76, p. 535, § 17. By section 10 of the same act, the marshal "shall perform the duties of street commissioner, and be governed by the provisions of this act, and such regulations or ordinances as the board of trustees may adopt relative thereto." Plaintiff further pleaded an ordinance of the town by which the street in question was declared to be a regularly graded, open, and accepted public street, "and it is hereby declared to be the duty of the street commissioner to keep the same open and in good repair as such." This complaint was demurred to upon grounds both general and special. The demurrer was sustained, and from the judgment entered thereon plaintiff appealed.

It is first insisted in support of the demurrer—and this may be said to be the principal question in the case—that the complaint states no cause of action, because an action will not lie against public officers such as these for injuries resulting from their mere negligent omission. It is well settled in this state that generally an action will not lie against a municipal corporation for the misfeasance, malfeasance, or nonfeasance of its officers (Huffman v. San Joaquin Co., 21 Cal. 426; Wimbler v. Mayor, etc., 45 Cal. 36; Chope v. City of Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 21 Pac. 364; Arnold v. City of San José, 81 Cal. 618, 22 Pac. 877); and, if the position of respondents is sound upon this contention, it must result that an injured party under circumstances such as these has no redress whatsoever. Upon the question thus presented it must at once be conceded that there is a conflict in authority, but the very decided trend of modern decision is to hold such officers liable for acts of nonfeasance, or for the negligent performance of a duty when the duty is plain, when the means and ability to perform it are shown, and when its performance or nonperformance, or the manner of its performance, involves no question of discretion. In short, where the duty is plain and certain, if it be negligently performed, or not performed at all, the officer is liable at the suit of a private individual especially injured thereby. Shear. & R. Neg. (3d Ed.) § 156, thus states the rule: "The liability of a public officer to an individual for his negligent acts or omissions in the discharge of an official duty depends altogether upon the nature of the duty to which the neglect is alleged. Where his duty is absolute, certain, and imperative, involving merely the execution of a set task,—in other words, is simply ministerial,—he is liable in damages to any one specially injured either by his omitting to perform the task, or by performing it negligently or unskillfully. On the other hand, where his powers are discretionary, to be exerted or withheld according to his own judgment as to what is necessary and proper, he is not liable to any private person for a neglect to exercise those powers, nor for the consequences of a lawful exercise of them, where no corruption or malice can be imputed, and he keeps within the scope of his authority." In Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, the question is considered at length, and many cases reviewed. It is there said: "In Adsit v. Brady, 4 Hill, 630, the broad rule is laid down that 'when an individual sustains an injury by the misfeasance or nonfeasance of a public officer, who acts or omits to act contrary to his duty, the law gives redress to the injured party by an action adapted to the nature of the case.' This is a healthful rule, sound entirely in public policy, if as a rule of law it can be questioned. As a rule of law, as there applied, it has stood for nearly a quarter of a century, and I think should continue." Without further quotation of authorities upon the question, it will be sufficient to refer to the instructive note to Commissioners v. Duckett, 83 Am. Dec. 557, where the liability of road officials for negligence in repairing and maintaining public highways is elaborately considered, and to Whart. Neg. §§ 285, 286; Elliott, Roads & S. p. 506. We conclude, therefore, that in proper cases—and this assuredly is one—such liability upon the part of a public officer exists. Further, we think that the circumstances under which such liability will attach are sufficiently shown by this pleading. The duty upon the part of the trustees to keep the highways in repair is correlative with the right accorded them by the charter to provide for the opening, lighting, and keeping in good repair the streets of the municipality. Upon the part of the marshal, it appears that he was ex officio street commissioner, charged with the duty of street commissioner under the law, and with such duties as might be imposed upon him by the board of trustees of the town, and that by the ordinance the special duty was imposed upon him of keeping this particular street in good repair.

Further grounds of demurrer were improper joinder of parties defendant, and the misjoinder of causes of action. Herein it is urged that the trustees' negligence, if negligence could be imputed to them, was not joint with the negligence of the marshal; that the marshal and the trustees were in no sense fellow delinquents or joint tortfeasors, and the causes of action were separate. Still further it is urged that, while it was permissible to join the marshal's bondsmen in an action against him for official negligence, the trustees were improperly joined as defendants with those bondsmen. It is unquestionably the rule that an action cannot be maintained against several defendants jointly for damages when there has been no concert of action or unity of design among them. But, upon the other hand, where direct personal injury is occasioned by the separate but concurrent negligence of two parties at one and the same time, an action will lie against one and all of them, and it is such an action as is here being prosecuted. Tompkins v. Railroad Co., 66 Cal. 163, 4 Pac. 1165; Colegrove v. Railroad Co., 20 N. Y. 492; Klauder v. McGrath, 35 Pa. St. 128; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 602, 603. It has been settled in this state since the case of Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 194, that a plaintiff need not first recover judgment against an official before proceeding against the sureties upon his official bond, but that the official and his sureties may be joined in the same action. Since in this case it was proper for plaintiff to unite the marshal with the trustees, and since, also, it was proper to unite the sureties with the marshal, it is not perceived that either the trustees or the sureties have any just cause of complaint because they are both impleaded. If the result of the litigation should be to exonerate the trustees, the presence of the sureties as defendants would not affect them. If, upon the other hand, the result of the litigation should be to hold the trustees liable and exonerate the marshal, the sureties would go out of the case with their principal, and this could not affect the trustees. If, again, judgment should be rendered finding both the marshal and the trustees liable, there could be but one satisfaction, and, so far as the sureties are concerned, the recovery would be limited to the amount of their official bond, but it could not be injurious to the trustees to have the judgment to the extent of the bondsmen's liability satisfied by them.

It is unnecessary to discuss the question of the validity or invalidity of section 23 of the Vrooman act (St. 1885, p. 161), since, as has been said, the duty of the defendants, as trustees and as street commissioner, is clearly established by the charter. The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court to overrule the demurrers.

I concur: TEMPLE, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment and in the opinion of Mr. Justice HENSHAW. It is to be said, however, that this is a case of marked negligence on the part of respondents, and that a street commissioner or road overseer could be held to the exercise of only a reasonable degree of care, and would not be liable for accidents caused by slight imperfections in a highway.

PEOPLE v. HURLEY. (Cr. 547.)

BRIBERY—OFFER TO RECEIVE—DELEGATE—ELECT—MEMBER OF A POLITICAL CONVENTION—EVIDENCE.

1. Under Pen. Code, § 57, which provides that every person who gives or offers a bribe to any member of a political convention, and every member of such a body who receives or offers to receive any such bribe, is punishable with imprisonment in the state prison, one who offers to receive a bribe, with intent to influence his vote, is guilty, though no offer of bribery is made to him.

2. One elected as a delegate to a political convention not yet organized is a member thereof, within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 57, which provides that every person, a member of such a convention, who receives or offers to receive a bribe, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison.

3. In a prosecution for offering to accept a bribe, evidence that defendant offered to accept a bribe from a candidate other than the one referred to and charged in the indictment is not admissible, where there is no connection between the two offers.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Napa county.

Patrick Henry Hurley was convicted of offering to accept a bribe, and appeals. Reversed.

E. L. Webber, Webber & Rutherford, and Geo. E. Caldwell, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

HAYNES, C. The defendant was indicted by the grand jury of Napa county for offering to accept a bribe, was tried, convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of one year, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. The defendant demurred to the indictment, and his demurrer was overruled. After conviction, and before sentence, he moved in arrest of judgment; and, that motion having been denied, he moved for a new trial, and that motion was also denied.

The defendant was indicted under section 57 of the Penal Code, which is as follows: "Every person who gives or offers a bribe to any officer or member of any legislative caucus, political convention, committee, primary election, or political gathering of any kind, held for the purpose of nominating candidates for offices of honor, trust or profit, in this state, with intent to influence the person to whom such bribe is given or offered to be more favorable to one candidate than another, and every person, member of either of the bodies in this section mentioned, who receives or offers to receive any such bribe, is punishable by imprisonment in the state's prison not less than one nor more than fourteen years." The indictment charged, in substance, that at a primary election held in the Veterans' Home precinct on September 14, 1898, the defendant was elected a delegate to the regular Republican county convention to be held on September 22d for the purpose of nominating candidates for the various county offices of said county, among which was the office of superintendent of schools; that John A. Imrie was a candidate for the nomination to said office by said convention; that on the 21st day of September, 1898, the defendant, as such delegate and member of such convention, did unlawfully and feloniously offer to receive from said John A. Imrie, as such candidate for said office, a bribe of $10, with the willful, unlawful, and felonious intent that it should influence him, said Hurley, to be more favorable, as such delegate, to said Imrie, as such candidate, than to any other person seeking said nomination. Appellant contends "that, before he could have been guilty of any crime, Imrie, the candidate, must have offered appellant a bribe, and appellant must have received or offered to receive such bribe." This construction cannot be sustained. It is, in effect, that a delegate to a nominating convention may, without violating this statute, offer to receive money in consideration of his vote or influence in favor of a candidate, if the candidate has not offered to bribe him, and that he violates it only when a candidate offers him a bribe for his vote or influence, and the delegate offers to accept the offered bribe. It may be assumed as a general rule that, when the transaction arrives at the stage of mutual offers to give and receive, it does not halt long enough to permit a prosecution for the offense of offering to give or receive a bribe. Counsel seem to think the words "such bribe," in the last clause of the section, refer to the bribe offered or given to any officer or member of a political convention, and that the offense described in the last clause consists in offering to accept it. If Imrie, the candidate, had approached the defendant and offered to give him $10 for his vote, or for his influence as a member of the convention, he (Imrie) would have been guilty of offering a bribe, under the first clause of the section; whereas, if the defendant offered his vote or influence in favor of Imrie if Imrie would pay him $10, the defendant would be guilty under the last clause,—the words “such bribe” referring to the intent in the first case to secure the influence or vote of the delegate in favor of the candidate, and in the second case to an offer by the delegate to receive a bribe for such or the like vote or influence.

The nominating convention was to be held on the 22d day of September, and the offer to receive the bribe charged in the indictment was on the day before the convention met; and it is argued on behalf of appellant that he was not, at the time the alleged offer was made, a member or officer of any convention, and was therefore not guilty of any offense under said statute. This construction would leave the delegates to a nominating convention free to indulge in bribery with perfect security up to the moment of the organization of the convention, and in many cases permit coin to dictate nominations that otherwise would never be made. It cannot be assumed that the legislature intended to shut the door against corruption only during the sitting of the convention, and to leave it conveniently open until the moment of its organization. Such construction of the statute cannot be indulged unless its language requires it. Its language is, “and every person, member of either of the bodies in this section mentioned, who receives or offers to receive any such bribe.” The primaries for the election of delegates to the convention were held on the 14th of September, and the defendant was elected that day; and the question is whether he then became a member of the convention, within the meaning and for the purposes of the statute. No oath of office or bond or other formality is required to complete his qualification as a member. The fact of his election is all that is required. He is then the representative of his constituents, and his obligation to them to honestly and faithfully represent them commences at that time. The power of the convention only extends to the ascertainment of the fact of his election as a representative of his precinct, and adds nothing to his qualification as an officer or delegate. His offense was primarily and principally against his constituents, though affecting injuriously the people of the whole county. In speaking of the rule in regard to the strict construction of penal statutes, Judge Sutherland, in his work on Statutory Construction (page 441), says: “Nor does it preclude the application of common sense to the terms made use of in the statute to avoid an absurdity which the legislature ought not to be presumed to have intended. Though a statute may be of a class which must be construed strictly, it is nevertheless to be so construed as to effect the intention of the legislature. Effect is to be given to the plain meaning of the language, and strict construction is to be applied only where the effect is reasonably open to question. The rule that penal statutes are to be construed strictly is not violated by allowing their words to have their full meaning, or even the more extended of two meanings, where such construction better harmonizes with the context.” One of the definitions of the word “member” given by the Century Dictionary is: “A person considered in relation to any aggregate of individuals to which he belongs,—particularly one who has united with or has been formally chosen as a corporate part of an association or public body of any kind.” So we often speak of members of the legislature or members of congress, though the body of which the person is such member is not organized or in session. This contention of appellant is not sustained.

The points already discussed dispose of the two requests made by the defendant to instruct the jury, and they need not be specially considered. They were each properly refused.

A witness called by the prosecution testified that she was a candidate for the office of county superintendent of schools, and had a conversation with the defendant, after he was elected a delegate, in regard to her candidacy, and was asked to state what that conversation was. The defendant objected that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, unless the prosecution connected Imrie with it. The district attorney stated that defendant made certain statements to the witness to the effect that he wanted money for his vote, and that the evidence would tend to show whether or not he approached Imrie. The court said: “If it tends to prove another crime, it perhaps would not be admissible; but, if it simply tends to show that he was announcing a proposition to make a demand for money from candidates, it perhaps would be,—if it is with a view of tending to show whether he may have approached Imrie, who he says approached him.” The objection was overruled, and the witness testified, in substance, that she called on the defendant the day after the primaries, and informed him that she was a candidate for county superintendent of schools; that defendant took a paper out of his pocket, and showed her a list of the names of the men whom he had on his ticket at the primary, and talked some time, and finally said: “Well, don’t you understand what I mean?” Witness said, “No;” and he said: “Well, if you get the office, you will live on beefsteak; and what am I going to live on,—hash?”—that she could not repeat all his words, but that his vote would be had for some equivalent. The court erred in receiving this testimony. There was no connection between the interview with Miss Thomas and that with Mr. Imrie. Its only effect would be merely to show that he was likely to ask other candidates for a consideration for his vote or influence, or, as said by the district attorney, "it will tend to show whether or not he approached this other candidate"; but, if it had that tendency, it was only because he had shown himself capable of perpetrating such offenses. There was no necessary or logical connection between the two cases. "That evidence of a distinct and substantive offense cannot be admitted in support of a charge of the commission of another offense is a general rule laid down by all the authorities." People v. Lane, 100 Cal. 385, 34 Pac. 856. See, also, Whart. Cr. Ev. § 29.

The demurrer to the indictment and the motion in arrest of judgment were properly overruled, but for the error in overruling the defendant's objection to the evidence of Miss Thomas the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed and a new trial granted.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial granted.

HAZEN v. NICHOLLS et al. (Sac. 517.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 19, 1899.)
MORTGAGES — REDEMPTION — TITLE — PLEADING — UNCERTAINTY.

1. One who alleges that he is the owner of land, but does not show that he derived his title through the mortgagor, has no interest that will support an action to enjoin a foreclosure sale, or to compel an accounting to ascertain the amount of the mortgage debt, so as to permit him to redeem.

2. A complaint in an action to enjoin a mortgage foreclosure sale, and for an accounting between plaintiff and the mortgagee, which alleged that the trust deed was given "to secure the payment of $10,370 and interest, and matters incidental to said trust," and then alleged "that no other or different sum than said $10,370 is, or ever has been, due or payable, or chargeable against said land," without disclosing any fact to show why, if the principal sum is due, the interest and matters incidental are not, is demurrable for uncertainty.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county.

Action by P. J. Hazen against W. & P. Nicholls and another to enjoin a foreclosure sale, and to compel an accounting. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

P. J. Hazen, in pro. per. C. W. Eastin, for respondents.

BRITT, C. It is in substance alleged in the complaint in this action, which was filed January 30, 1897, that plaintiff is the owner of several tracts of land described; that on July 1, 1893, one Vivian, who was then the owner of said land, executed to certain of the defendants, as trustees, a deed and conveyance thereof as security for the payment by Vivian to the defendants W. & P. Nicholls "of the sum of ten thousand three hundred and seventy dollars and interest, and matters incidental to said trust; * * * that no other or different sum than said ten thousand three hundred and seventy dollars is or ever has been due or payable, or chargeable against said land, under the terms of said instrument or otherwise"; that defendants claim that there is due and unpaid on said security the sum of $13,613.74, with interest thereon from December 24, 1896, and have advertised the land for sale under the terms of said trust deed, and intend to sell it to raise that amount; that plaintiff has demanded of defendants an account and statement of their claim, which they have refused; that the land is of the value of $20,000; that plaintiff is ready and willing to pay any sum which is legally or equitably a lien on the land, but by reason of said unfounded claim of defendants he is prevented from redeeming it by such payment. The prayer is that defendants be enjoined from further proceeding under such trust deed, that the sum payable thereunder be ascertained, and that plaintiff may redeem the land on payment thereof. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that it states no cause of action, and for uncertainty in several particulars. The court sustained the demurrer, and judgment passed for defendants.

The plaintiff does not show himself to be entitled to redeem the land from the alleged lien, or to demand an account of the debt of Vivian to W. & P. Nicholls. Although he avers that he is now the owner of the land, yet he in no way connects himself with the title formerly held by Vivian. For anything stated in the pleading, the alleged title of plaintiff may have accrued to him as purchaser at a tax sale, or by other means in hostility to Vivian. A stranger to the title of a mortgagor—one who claims no subsisting interest under him, and who does not act by his authority—has no right to make a tender of the debt, or otherwise intermeddle in the relations created by the mortgage. "Nothing is plainer," said Judge Cooley, "than that such a person has no right of redemption." Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 339, 16 N. W. 672. And so are all the cases. See Jones, Mortg. §§ 1055, 1055a, 1059. The rule must be the same in cases like the present, and for reasons perhaps yet stronger; for the trustee himself holds for security not merely a lien, but the legal title of the debtor. Bateman v. Burr, 57 Cal. 480. Plaintiff having failed to connect himself by his allegations with the rights of Vivian, those rights certainly can afford him no cause of action. The case of More v. Calkins, 85 Cal. 177, 24

Pac. 729, relied on by plaintiff, affords no support to the pleading here.

The complaint is also uncertain. It is first charged that the deed was made to secure payment of the sum of $10,370 "and interest, and matters incidental to said trust"; but further it is alleged that "no other or different sum than said ten thousand three hundred and seventy dollars is or ever has been due or payable, or chargeable against said land," without disclosing any fact to show why, if the alleged principal sum is due, the said "interest and matters incidental" are not also due. The demurrer was rightly sustained, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

EAST RIVERSIDE IRR. DIST. v. HOLCOMB, Sheriff, et al. (L. A. 537.)

JUDGMENT—ACTION TO ENJOIN EXECUTION—PARTIES DEFENDANT—CROSS COMPLAINT—SETTING UP NEW MATTER.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 442, providing that when defendant seeks affirmative relief relating to the contract on which the action is brought, or affecting the property to which it relates, he may file a cross complaint, is primarily applicable to the person whom plaintiff had originally made defendant; and, before any other person can take advantage of the statute, he must have been made a defendant, and his cross complaint must be such as will warrant the court to order him brought in for the purpose of filing it.

2. In an action to enjoin a sheriff from executing a judgment in an action in which plaintiff was not a party, the persons in whose favor the judgment was rendered may be made defendants, under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, providing that, when a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must then order them to be brought in.

3. In an action to enjoin a sheriff from executing a judgment in an action in which plaintiff was not a party, the person in whose favor the judgment was rendered cannot file a cross complaint, setting up a new cause of action against plaintiff, independent of the judgment on which execution is issued, and which the original defendant has no interest in, and which cannot be affected by a judgment against the sheriff.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Action by East Riverside Irrigation District against F. L. Holcomb, sheriff, and others, to enjoin the execution of a judgment. From a judgment in favor of defendants and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Chas. R. Gray, for appellant. Jas. A. Gibson, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The cross complaint of certain persons, who may be designated as Fox and others, and who were brought in as defendants, against the objection of plaintiff, by order of court, and the findings of the court, are very voluminous, and deal with a great many matters which would be difficult to briefly state; but these matters need not be noticed with any great detail, because, in our opinion, the court erred in allowing the cross complaint to be filed, and in dealing with the issues which it sought to raise. The purpose of the action, as stated in plaintiff's complaint, is merely to enjoin the defendant Holcomb, as sheriff, from forcibly cutting a hole in a large water pipe of plaintiff's, and placing or causing to flow in said pipe certain water. The complaint merely states facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief sought. It is averred that the sheriff was about to cut the pipe as aforesaid, at a point considerably below its head, and at an elevation 60 feet lower than said head, and that said threatened act of the sheriff would utterly ruin plaintiff's water system, and prevent the water from flowing by gravity through the pipe to points below, where the water was supplied to customers. It was averred that the sheriff was about to do this thing by virtue of a writ of execution issued upon a judgment in a certain action brought by one Lewis against the said Fox and others, defendants, wherein, after various answers and cross complaints and the bringing in of new defendants, a judgment was entered in favor of said Fox and others against Mary W. Armstrong, P. A. Raynor, and others, decreeing that, as against said last-named defendants, Fox and others had the right to have 30 inches of water put into and carried through said pipe; that in the case at bar the sheriff threatens to do the acts complained of under the execution issued upon said judgment; that the present plaintiff was not a party to that action, and is in no way bound thereby; and that the threatened acts of the defendant Holcomb, sheriff, would be, as against plaintiff, a willful and unlawful trespass. Therefore the only issue tendered by the complaint is the right of the sheriff to proceed under said writ of execution to do the threatened acts. The defendant Holcomb asked to have Fox and others brought in and made defendants. To this the plaintiff objected, but the court ordered them to be brought in, and plaintiff excepted to the order. Fox and others filed an answer in which some of the averments of the complaint were denied, and which may be construed, perhaps, as asserting the right of the sheriff to proceed under the execution. But, in addition, they filed a cross complaint in which, leaving out of view the right of the sheriff to proceed under the execution, they set out an entirely new cause of action against the plaintiff, averring that, by a certain written contract with another party called the "Vivienda Water Company," and by various other facts set up, they had acquired a right to run 30 inches of water through the plaintiff's pipe, and also an additional 10 inches of water, and prayed for a decree declaring their right, as against the plaintiff, to run 40 inches of water through said pipe. This cause of action is entirely separate from and independent of the judgment in the said case of Lewis against Fox and others. It constitutes, indeed, a new action, in the shape of a suit to quiet title, and leaves entirely out of sight the right of the sheriff to execute the writ, to prevent which was the only purpose of plaintiff's complaint. The plaintiff moved to strike out the cross complaint, but his motion was denied, and the court entered into a full examination and determination of all the issues made by the cross complaint, and entered judgment quieting the title of Fox and others to 40 inches of water to be run into and through said pipe. Plaintiff excepted to the order of the court compelling Fox and others to be brought in as defendants, and to the order refusing to strike out the cross complaint.

The questions here presented involve, not only section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which refers to cross complaints, but also section 389, which deals with the matter of bringing in new parties, and section 387, which deals with the matter of intervention. Section 442 provides that when "the defendant" seeks affirmative relief "relating to or depending upon the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought, or affecting the property to which the action relates," he may file a cross complaint. In the case at bar the cross complaint certainly did not relate to, or depend upon, the transaction upon which the action was brought, namely, the execution under said judgment, and it is doubtful whether it could be considered as "affecting the property to which the action relates." But it is primarily applicable only to the defendant; that is, the person whom the plaintiff had originally made defendant. Before any other person could take advantage of the section, he must have been made a defendant for the purpose of filing a cross complaint, and his cross complaint must have been of such a character as would warrant the court to order him brought in for the purpose of filing it.

The first questions presented, therefore, are: (1) Could Fox and others, against plaintiff's will, be brought in as defendants at all, for any purpose? and (2) could they be brought in for the purpose of allowing them to file their cross complaint, and thus inaugurate practically a new action?

1. While it can hardly be said that, for any purpose, they were necessary parties, under section 389, still, as the writ which the sheriff was about to execute was in their favor, and they were interested in resisting the attempt of the plaintiff to enjoin its execution, it was not improper to allow them to appear and assist the sheriff in defending the suit, upon the same principle that a landlord may be allowed to defend for a tenant, or one who has indemnified a defendant against damages for an act for which he has been sued may come in as a defendant to assist in the defense. Moreover, the plaintiff could not have been injured by such a course. Fox and others could, perhaps, have thus assisted the sheriff as effectually if they had not been made nominal defendants; and, as long as they made no defense other than that which the original defendant could have made, plaintiff was not prejudiced.

2. But allowing Fox and others, by a cross complaint, to set up new matters and causes of action not involved in the original suit,—not defenses to the action, and not available at all to the original defendant,—raises entirely different questions from the one first noticed. Decisions dealing directly with modern statutory cross complaints, and declaring what parties may use them, and for what purpose they may be used, are quite meager, and we have been referred to none which bear directly upon the question arising in the case at bar. The principles which govern are, however, to a great extent those which apply to interventions and counterclaims and the bringing in of new parties, and those which would apply to cross bills under the old equity practice. The general rule is that a plaintiff may select those whom he desires to make defendants, and that new parties brought in against his will cannot be allowed to set up against him defenses and affirmative causes of action which the original defendant could not have set up; and this is specifically so where the granting of the relief sought by the original complaint would not have prejudiced the other causes of action which the new parties seek to have adjudicated. Peculiar circumstances may make exceptions to the rule, but the general principle is as above stated. Fagan v. Barnes, 14 Fla. 56; Andrews v. Hobson's Adm'r, 23 Ala. 239; Daniel v. Morrison's Ex'r, 6 Dana, 182; Insurance Co. v. McKay, 21 N. Y. 191; Chapman v. Forbes, 123 N. Y. 532, 26 N. E. 3. In Daniel v. Morrison's Ex'r, supra, it is said, "A cross bill can be sustained only upon matters growing out of the original bill;" in Andrews v. Hobson, supra, that "it is well established that a cross bill is a mode of defense to the original bill, and must be pertinent to that suit"; and in Fagan v. Barnes, that "the general rule is that the court will not order new parties defendant to be brought in against the will of the plaintiff, unless the presence of such new parties is necessary to the determination of the action." The case, however, of Curran v. Car Co., decided by Thayer, J., in the United States circuit court, and reported in 32 Fed. 835, is more nearly in point than any other which we have found. There the plaintiffs sued the defendant, the car company, to restrain an alleged infringement of certain letters patent, the alleged infringement consisting of using a certain apparatus for drying lumber. The Boston Blower Company asked to be made a party defendant, upon the ground that it was the manufacturer of and had sold to the original defendant the alleged infringing apparatus,—that is, the one single machine which it was using,—and was under obligations to protect it from suits for infringement; and the blower company was allowed, upon this ground, to come in as a defendant, and assist in making the defense. But it also asked to file a cross bill in which it was alleged, in substance, that the plaintiffs were sending out circulars wherein they charged that the apparatus manufactured by the blower company was an infringement of their patents, and threatened suits against all persons buying or using the same; and it was prayed that plaintiffs be enjoined from sending such circulars, bringing suits, etc. But the court refused to allow the cross complaint, and said: "In this case it will be observed that the corporation originally made a defendant could not maintain a cross bill of this nature, because it is only a vendee of one machine, and not entitled to the relief prayed for in the cross bill. In my judgment, waiving any decision of the question whether the cross bill presents grounds for equitable relief, the court ought not to permit a third party to come in as a defendant, and then file a cross bill which the original defendant could not maintain, even if it desired to do so. For that reason I shall deny the application of the Boston Blower Company for leave to file the cross bill in question. I will permit it, however, to come in, and be made a party defendant, and to defend the claim that is preferred by Curran & Co. against the St. Charles Car Company. To that extent I think their motion should be granted, and they will have leave to be made a party defendant for that purpose."

In view of the foregoing principles and authorities, the court erred in the case at bar in refusing to strike out the cross complaint. For the purposes of the cross complaint, Fox and others were neither necessary nor proper parties to the action. The original defendant had no interest in any of the matters which they sought to set up, and could not have availed himself of them as a defense or for any purpose. The judgment against him, restraining him as sheriff from executing the writ, would not have prejudiced any right or title of the cross complainants which was independent of the judgment in Lewis against Fox and others; and to allow them, against the plaintiff's desire, to be brought in as new parties, for the purpose of interjecting their new causes of action, with all the questions which they involved, into a simple suit to restrain the sheriff from executing a writ on one certain judgment, would be not only to violate plaintiff's rights, but to tolerate a confusion of pleading and practice not sanctioned by any authority to which our attention has been called. If the cross complainants have any cause of action against the plaintiff not based on the Lewis judgment and execution, they can properly assert it in an independent action. For these reasons the judgment and order denying a new trial must be reversed, and when the case goes down the court should strike out the cross complaint, and, if the judgment in Lewis against Fox and others be still in existence, the court should try and determine the single question whether the writ of execution issued on that judgment is enforceable against plaintiff; and, in determining that question, the rights of the parties which grow out of, and are based on, that judgment and execution should alone be considered. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, with directions to the court below to take further proceedings as indicated in this opinion.

NEGLIGENCE—STREET RAILROADS—LEAVING CARS IN STREET—INJURY TO CHILD—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—CAPACITY OF CHILD TO COMPREHEND DANGER—OBVIOUS DANGER—INSTRUCTIONS—SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES.

1. In an action against a street railroad to recover for injuries to a boy, sustained by him while playing on certain cars left by defendant in the street at the end of its line, an instruction "that plaintiff was not a passenger, nor entitled to the rights of a passenger, at the time of the injury," where the jury were not told what defendant's liability was to passengers, is not erroneous, unless it tended to mislead the jury.

2. In an action against a street-railroad company to recover for injuries sustained by a boy in being run over by a car left in the street at the end of defendant's line, and which the boy's companions had released, and set in motion, while he was trying to run in front of it, an instruction "that there is no presumption of law that plaintiff did not have capacity to understand that it was dangerous for him to go in front of the car, and, unless the evidence shows that he did not have such capacity, contributory negligence on his part, if shown by the evidence, is a good defense," is not erroneous.

3. In an action for injuries sustained by an infant in being run over by one of defendant's street cars, which it had left in the street at the end of its line, and on which plaintiff and his companions were playing, an instruction that whether the cars should have been permitted to stand on the track in the street when they were not needed for carrying passengers was a question to be determined by the city authorities, and was wholly irrelevant, is not misleading, in connection with another instruction that the manner of leaving the cars and the place where they were left were to be considered by the jury in determining whether defendant was negligent.

4. In an action to recover for personal injuries sustained by an infant in being run over by one of defendant's street cars, which it had left in the street at the end of its line, and which was set in motion by children while playing thereon, plaintiff cannot complain that an instruction was inconsistent with another, given at his request, if it properly states the law, though not as favorable to plaintiff as the former.

5. In an action to recover for personal injuries sustained by a boy in being run over by a street car, which defendant had left in the street at the end of its line, and which was set in motion by children playing thereon, the plaintiff cannot recover if the element of danger was not a hidden one, but was open to observation, and could have been comprehended by a boy of plaintiff's age, with average intelligence, and the cars were held by brakes of the ordinary kind, which were set so as to hold the car where it was left unless some one loosened them.

6. The submission of special interrogatories to the jury to be answered, in addition to the general verdict, lies in the discretion of the trial court.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Otis George, a minor, by his father, against the Los Angeles Railway Company. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appealed. Affirmed.

T. E. Gibbon and J. H. Krimminger, for appellant. Bicknell & Trask, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for personal injuries. The jury found a general verdict for defendant. Against plaintiff's objection, the court submitted certain questions to the jury, the answers to which were favorable to defendant. The appeal is from an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial.

The evidence disclosed the following facts: The defendant was, at the time of the accident, engaged in operating a street railway on Pasadena avenue, in East Los Angeles. For two days preceding the accident the defendant had left seven or eight small cars, commonly known as "trailers," at the end of said line at the junction of Pasadena avenue and Daly street. It was the custom of the company to use these cars during the hours of time when there was the heaviest travel, and during the interval were left, for convenience, at said point. Pasadena avenue was the most generally used public thoroughfare in East Los Angeles. One of the public schools of the city was within one block of this point, and another within three blocks, and fully one-half of the pupils at these schools passed this place in going to and from these schools. These trailer cars were left at the point in question by the employés of the defendant after being used by them in the morning, and were pushed up to the end of the line, beyond the point where the cars turned back; and the brakes were properly set to hold them, and were the only means taken to hold the cars in place. The brake was operated by turning a crank with a short arm and handle, to be turned by one hand, and was held by a "dog" that caught in a ratchet wheel on the top of the floor of the platform of the car. A kick with the foot against the "dog" would easily loosen the brake. The persons engaged in operating the regular cars came to this point about every 15 minutes during the day. On the day of the injury a number of boys, including the plaintiff, left one of the public schools a few minutes after 3 o'clock p. m., and, on arriving at the cars, began to play with them by pushing them a short distance up the track, starting them down the grade, and jumping on and riding back. After they had been playing about half an hour, they started down, as usual, with two cars, the plaintiff standing on the step running along lengthwise on the side of the front car. He rode down part of the distance in this way, when he jumped from the step of the car to the ground, and ran from 10 to 20 feet ahead of the car, and started to cross the track in front of it, when his foot was caught by a splinter of wood projecting above the ground from one of the cross-ties, which caught in his shoe, throwing him to the ground, and before he could extricate himself he was caught and run over by the forward car. Plaintiff had not been on the cars in question before the afternoon on which the injury occurred, and one of the boys testified that he warned plaintiff to keep off the cars. The grade at the point in question was very slight, and the cars, when started back, came very slowly, and he would have had ample time to get across the track before the car overtook him if he had not been thrown down by the splinter catching in his shoe. Plaintiff was of the age of 9 years and 9 months. About 2:45 or 3 o'clock p. m., and before the accident, the employé of defendant in charge of the trailer cars was at the cars, and found two boys playing with them, and that the brake of one of the cars was unloosened, but all the other brakes were set. He made the boys leave the cars, and he set the loose brake.

Appellant confines his argument exclusively to alleged erroneous instructions. The court gave six instructions as asked by plaintiff, with some modifications as to two of them, not now objected to. These instructions were quite favorable to plaintiff, and we do not understand that plaintiff questions their correctness. His contention is that the court gave certain instructions at request of defendant, two of which (11 and 12) are contradictory of and inconsistent with the instructions given for plaintiff, and do not correctly state the law; that instructions 1 and 2 are outside the issues; that instruction 10 is misleading, and that instruction 8 does not state the law correctly.

Defendant's instructions 1 and 2 were that "street-railway companies are not required to use the same care to avoid injuring persons who are not passengers as they are to avoid injury to persons who are passengers"; and that "the plaintiff was not a passenger, nor entitled to the rights of a passenger, when the injuries of which he complains were received." We suppose these instructions were given because there was evidence that plaintiff was riding on the trailer cars. The jury were not told what the defendant's liability was to passengers, and to inform the jury that plaintiff was not entitled to the rights of passengers left the instruction incomplete.

It was apparently outside the issues. Still we cannot see how it could have misled the jury, especially as they were fully instructed as to the law applicable to the facts in the case. The rule invoked by plaintiff does not go so far as to make all irrelevant instructions error. It must appear that they at least tended to mislead.

Instruction 8 was as follows: "There is no presumption of law that plaintiff did not have capacity to understand that it was dangerous for him to go in front of a moving car; and, unless the evidence shows that he did not have such capacity, contributory negligence on his part, if shown by the evidence, is a good defense to the action." We are asked to hold to the rule of the common law that minors under the age of 14 years are presumably without discretion and judgment, and that evidence is necessary to remove the presumption. It was proper to leave the question of contributory negligence to the jury, free from any presumption as to plaintiff's incapacity. The only testimony as to the fact was given by the plaintiff's mother, who said that he "was not a particularly bright or intelligent child." The law upon the point is stated in Studer v. Southern Pac. Co., 121 Cal. 400, 53 Pac. 942.

Instruction 10 was as follows: "Whether the defendant's trailer cars should have been permitted to stand on the track in the street during the hours of the day when they were not needed for carrying passengers was a question to be determined by the city authorities, and is a wholly irrelevant and immaterial question in this case." It is objected that this instruction was confusing and misleading to the jury, because they had been previously told that the questions of the manner of leaving the cars, the place where they were left, etc., were to be considered by them in determining whether defendant was negligent or not. It seems to us that this particular instruction was intended to show simply that the city authorities alone could determine whether the cars should be permitted to be left on the street for the convenience of defendant. It is true that the right to so use the street must come from the city, and in so saying to the jury the court did not weaken the force of the other instructions as to the care defendant should exercise in so occupying the street.

Instruction 11 was as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that any element of danger connected with the defendant's trailer by which plaintiff was injured was not a hidden or concealed danger, but was open to the observation and could be comprehended by a boy of average intelligence, of the age of plaintiff; and if you further believe that the trailer, when left on the track by defendant's employes the day of the accident, was held by brakes of the ordinary kind, and that the brakes were set in a manner to hold the cars where they were unless some one should loosen the brakes,—the plaintiff cannot recover." The jury had been told "that the fact, as shown by the evidence, that the brakes of the car in question were set when the cars were left on the track in the way in which such brakes were usually set or fastened, or according to the usual custom of defendant, is a matter to be considered by the jury in passing upon the question as to whether the defendant exercised ordinary care in the way it placed and maintained said cars at the place in question; * * * and they should consider the danger, if any there was, attending the leaving of the cars at the place in question, whether said cars were of a dangerous nature, likely to cause an injury of the kind complained of, and were likely to attract children thereon for amusement and play; the manner in which they were fastened; the publicity of the place; whether defendant, in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, should have securely fastened them, or, if that was impracticable, whether in the exercise of such diligence it was its duty to leave them in charge of an attendant," etc. It is claimed that these instructions are contradictory of instruction 11, supra, and irreconcilable with it. If the last instruction is a correct statement of the law,—as we think it is,—plaintiff cannot complain, even if it was inconsistent with the instructions which were manifestly more favorable to plaintiff. If the jury had given their verdict for plaintiff, the defendant might have complained. Plaintiff contends, however, that instruction 11 was not a correct statement of the law because it violates the principles laid down in the "turntable cases," which, it is claimed, apply here. The rule in these cases as held by this court will be found in Barrett v. Southern Pac. Co., 91 Cal. 296, 27 Pac. 666. In a later case—Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 47 Pac. 114, 598—it was said: "The rule of the turntable cases is an exception to the general principle that the owner of land is under no legal duty to keep it in a safe condition for others than those whom he invites there, and that trespassers take the risk of injuries from ordinary visible causes; and it should not be carried beyond the class of cases to which it has been applied. And the cases to which the rule has been applied, so far as our attention has been called to them, are nearly all cases where the owner of land has erected on it dangerous machinery, the consequences of meddling with which are not supposed to be fully comprehended by infant minds." The cases illustrating the principles of the turntable cases are quite fully set forth in the opinion, and need not be restated. The recent case of Kaumeier v. Railway Co., 116 Mich. —, 74 N. W. 481, is very similar to this one, the principal difference in its facts being that in the Michigan case the car had no brakes. It was testified by the conductor in charge of the cars in that case that, when the flat car was left at the point where the accident happened, "he blocked the wheels with a stone and a stick, which could be removed by the kick of a small boy, if he hit it hard, and that he always blocked this car every time he left it." The court, in its decision, gave the question very careful consideration, reviewing the turntable cases from the first one,—Railroad Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657,—and reached the conclusion that they do not furnish the rule by which such a case as this is to be determined. It was held, upon the undisputed facts, that the court should have instructed the jury to find a verdict for the defendant. Speaking of Railroad Co. v. Stout, the court said: "It is difficult to see how that case can be likened to the present. In that case a dangerous piece of machinery was left open, exposed, and unguarded, to the knowledge of defendant. The turntable itself was dangerous. The car in question in the present case was not dangerous in its construction. It was a plain car, with four wheels, with no machinery about it. It had no brake, but was a small platform car. It is true that it stood upon a track where it might be removed by several children applying their united strength. Several children might, in the same way, move a wagon or carriage left beside the highway. We apprehend that no claim of negligence could be sustained against the owner of such a vehicle if one of the children climbing on it should fall off, and be run over, even if the wheels were left without blocking."

It is not contended that these trailer cars were objects dangerous to children, and it has been held that cars are not "dangerous machines," within the meaning of the rule, in some of the turntable cases (Elliott, R. R. v. R. § 1260); but it is urged, as it was urged in the Michigan case, that, because the cars were left in a condition which made it possible for children to loosen the brakes and push the cars along the track, the cars became dangerous, and, being attractive objects to children, they were likely to move them, and thus be put in danger. It will be observed that the court instructed the jury that if they believed, from the evidence, that the element of danger connected with these trailers was not a hidden or concealed danger, but was open to the observation, and could be comprehended by a boy of plaintiff's age with average intelligence, then, in such case, if defendant's cars were held by brakes of the ordinary kind, and the brakes were set in a manner to hold the cars where they were left, unless some one loosened them, the plaintiff cannot recover. We think such an instruction takes the case out of the class to which the turntable cases belong and like cases, such as Branson v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, where lumber was negligently piled, and analogous cases, and stated the law correctly as applicable to the undisputed facts in this case.

Appellant alleges error in submitting certain special interrogatories to the jury for answer. It is said that they were of a character calculated to lead up to a general verdict for defendant, and did not embrace all the issues involved. The court was authorized, by section 625, Code Civ. Proc., to instruct the jury "to find upon particular questions of fact, to be stated in writing," if the jury render a general verdict. It is a matter resting in the discretion of the court (Smith v. Steamship Co., 99 Cal. 462, 34 Pac. 84), and the court was not required to thus submit all the issues. The order should be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. UNION BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N OF SACRAMENTO et al.
(two cases. Sac. 610, 611).

(Supreme Court of California, Oct. 20, 1899.)
BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—AP-POINTMENT OF RECEIVER.

Section 9 of the act creating the board of commissioners of building and loan associations (St. 1893, p. 231), and providing for proceedings to restrain the prosecution of business by such associations in certain cases, does not imperatively require the appointment of a receiver, but simply permits it, in the discretion of the court; and where the cause of probable future insolvency of such an association is depreciation of real estate owned by it, and no fraud or mismanagement by its officers, or lack of competency on their part to liquidate and settle up its affairs economically, and in the interest of creditors and stockholders, is shown, the appointment of a receiver at the instance of the state, when the state is neither a creditor nor stockholder, is not justified.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeals from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by the people of the state of California, by W. F. Fitzgerald, attorney general, against the Union Building & Loan Association (a corporation), and others as directors. From a judgment enjoining the defendant corporation, its directors, etc., from further prosecution of its business, and appointing a receiver therefor, defendant corporation and one of its directors bring separate appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Devlin & Devlin and L. T. Hatfield, for appellants. W. F. Fitzgerald, A. M. Johnson, Grove L. Johnson, and J. B. Devine, for the People.

HAYNES, C. These are separate appeals taken upon the same record from the same judgment upon the judgment roll. The appellants, however, are represented by different counsel, who have also presented separate briefs. The first is taken by the corporation, and the second by a director. They present the same question for decision, and may therefore be disposed of together.

As the title of the case indicates, the defendant corporation is a building and loan association. In December, 1897, the commissioners of the building and loan associations of the state of California made an examination of the business and affairs of said corporation, and reported to the attorney general that it was "conducting its business in an unsafe manner, such as to render its further proceeding hazardous to the public and to those having funds in its custody"; and thereupon this action was brought by the attorney general, under and in pursuance of the provisions of section 9 of the act creating said board of commissioners (St. 1893, p. 231). The defendants answered, and upon the hearing findings were made and judgment entered enjoining said corporation, and its directors, servants, etc., "from the further prosecution of the business of the defendant corporation until the further order of the court," and appointing a receiver to take possession of its property and effects of every description, and, subject to the order of the court, liquidate and settle up the business of the corporation.

The only question presented is whether the averments of the complaint and the findings authorized the court to appoint a receiver to take charge of the corporate affairs and settle and liquidate the business of the corporation. The only allegations of the complaint tending to justify the relief granted are the following: "That since the organization of said corporation the said corporation has loaned out large sums of money upon real-estate security, and, in default of payment of said loan, has been compelled to take said property in payment of the moneys so loaned and interest thereon; that the cost of said real estate so obtained and now owned by said corporation exceeds the sum of $112,215.52; that there are now outstanding loans on real estate to the amount of $90,118.24; that since making said loans upon said real estate, and acquiring the title to the real estate, as aforesaid, the value of the said real estate has greatly depreciated, and is now depreciating, which has reduced, and will continue to reduce, the assets of said corporation to such an extent as to render the further proceeding and conduct of the business hazardous to the public and to those having funds in its custody; that plaintiff is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges, that, unless the said defendants are enjoined and prohibited by this court from the transaction of any further business, the said defendants will continue to prosecute and transact such business, to the irreparable injury of the people of the state of California." The prayer is for an injunction, and, "if the court shall deem it expedient," that a receiver be appointed.

The only finding touching the existing condition of the corporation is the following: "That actions have been commenced against the defendant corporation on promissory notes aggregating three thousand five hundred dollars, and property of the said corporation is now, and for more than twenty-nine days has been, under attachments levied thereon in said actions, and there are no funds available with which to discharge said attachments and indebtedness; that the necessary disbursements exceed the income of the defendant corporation, and, the said corporation continue its business, its necessary disbursements will continue to exceed its income; that the said corporation has been compelled to take in satisfaction of loans a large amount of real estate, which since taking has greatly depreciated in value, and there is no assurance or probability of any increase in its value; that there is a large amount of indebtedness of said corporation now due, and there are not sufficient assets on hand that can be realized upon whereby said corporation will be able to pay said indebtedness in any reasonable time; that to continue the business of said corporation, under such circumstances, would require that a considerable portion of the monthly dues of the members and stockholders be used for the purpose of discharging the deficit in current expenses and interest, after applying the income of the corporation to the same; that said corporation can no longer continue business without a continued impairment of the assets of said corporation and dues to be paid in by members; that the assets of said corporation, if converted into money at this time, are insufficient to pay the existing indebtedness of said corporation, and reimburse the stockholders of said corporation for moneys paid by them as dues; that the further proceeding with its business by said corporation would be unsafe and hazardous to the public, and to those having funds in its custody, and to its stockholders." The court, it is true, further found "that it is necessary and a proper case for the appointment of a receiver to settle and liquidate the business of the said defendant corporation"; but this is essentially a conclusion of law, which must find its justification in the allegations of the complaint and the findings of fact, if it be sustained.

Section 9 of said act authorizes the attorney general, upon receiving the report hereinbefore stated from said commissioners, to apply to the judge of the court to issue an injunction restraining the corporation from further proceeding with its business until a hearing can be had, and further provides: "Such judge may on such application issue such injunction, and, after a full hearing, may dissolve or modify it, or make it perpetual, and may make such orders and decrees, according to the course of proceedings in equity, to restrain or prohibit the further prosecution of the business of the corporation, as may be needful in the premises; and may appoint one or more receivers to take possession of its property and effects, subject to such directions as may from time to time be prescribed by the court." It will be observed that this statute does not imperatively require the appointment of a receiver, but permits it in the discretion of the court, or, in other words, in proper cases. In Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 365, 24 Pac. 121, 129, Mr. Chief Justice Beatty, speaking for the court, said: "Under our Codes, the rule is not to appoint a receiver, but to leave the whole matter of liquidation and distribution to the exclusive control of the directors of the corporation in office at the date of the dissolution. The appointment of a receiver is the exception, not the rule, and is not to be made unless some party interested, either a creditor or a stockholder, can show that, for the protection of his rights, the appointment of a receiver, and the administration of the assets under the control and superintendence of a court of equity, is necessary." Conceding that, under the provisions of the building and loan commissioners act, above quoted, a receiver may be appointed, it does not follow that the appointment was authorized under the facts of this case. The state is neither a creditor nor stockholder, and has no pecuniary interest in the association. It is neither alleged nor found that there was any fraud or mismanagement on the part of the directors or officers of the corporation, or any want of competency on their part to liquidate and settle up its business and affairs economically and in the interest of its creditors and stockholders, so that, if this application had been made by a creditor or stockholder, the facts alleged and found would not have justified the appointment of a receiver; and, unless such facts are alleged and found as would justify the appointment at the instance of a creditor or stockholder, it cannot be made at the instance of the state, under said statute. The notice of appeal is to the effect that it is taken from the whole of the judgment, but appellants say that no point is made against the judgment enjoining the association from the further prosecution of its business. I therefore advise that the judgment be modified by eliminating therefrom the order appointing a receiver, and all the provisions thereof relating to such receivership, and, as so modified, that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is hereby modified by eliminating therefrom the order appointing a receiver, and all the provisions thereof relating to such receivership, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

SAN JOSE RANCH CO. et al. v. SAN JOSE LAND & WATER CO. (L. A. 491.)

DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT—NEGLECT IN DEMANDING JUDGMENT—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 6, providing that an action may be dismissed when, after verdict or final submission, the party entitled to judgment neglects to have it entered for more than six months, does not warrant the dismissal, before judgment is rendered, of a case which the court has taken under advisement, after determining that defendant was entitled to a nonsuit, and had failed to demand a judgment for more than six months, since defendant could not demand that a judgment be entered until one was rendered.

2. A contention, on appeal, that plaintiff was not injured by an erroneous dismissal of his complaint, because defendant was entitled to judgment, and a dismissal was no worse than an adverse judgment, is untenable; for the plaintiff's purpose in bringing the action was to have his rights determined, and it would not advance his interest to have the suit disposed of without such determination.

3. On appeal from an erroneous judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint for neglect in entering judgment, a contention that plaintiff was not injured, because the judgment may be set aside, if on the appeal it is found that there was evidence to support his demands, is unavailing; for it assumes that on the appeal from the order of dismissal the court may consider the case as though a judgment of nonsuit had been entered.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by the San Jose Ranch Company and others against the San Jose Land & Water Company. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

J. S. Chapman, for appellants. R. Dunnigan and Anderson & Anderson, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. The plaintiffs claim certain water rights by appropriation. They charge that the defendant has wrongfully diverted water to which they are entitled, greatly to their damage, and threatens to continue to do so. They ask for an injunction during the pendency of the action, and that it be made perpetual, and for $5,000 damages. An answer was put in, which took issue with the allegations of the complaint, and asserted adverse rights in defendant. Upon these issues the action was tried without a jury, evidence put in on both sides, and the case argued by counsel and submitted for decision. Some seven months or more after the submission the court made an order dismissing the case. The judgment dismissing the case recites that the case was finally submitted to the court for its decision more than six months before, and that the court, after due consideration, has determined that the defendant is entitled to a nonsuit, and that defendant has failed to demand a nonsuit for more than six months; it was therefore ordered and adjudged that a nonsuit be granted, "and that the action be dismissed."

It is contended that this action was warranted by subdivision 6, § 581, Code Civ. Proc., which reads, "by the court, when after verdict or final submission the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and have the same entered for more than six months." The ready answer to this is that no one was entitled to have the judgment entered until it had been rendered. If findings were not waived, it was incumbent upon the court to make findings, and upon them it was the duty of the clerk to enter judgment at once. Section 664, Code Civ. Proc. The defendant who fails to demand a nonsuit is in no default. It is his privilege and right, although he can obtain a nonsuit, to demand instead a regular judgment on the merits. In this case both parties demanded a judgment on the merits by a final submission. It is said that plaintiff is not injured, although the action of the court was erroneous. The court found that judgment must be for the defendant, and a dismissal, it is contended, is no worse for the plaintiffs than an adverse judgment. In fact, respondent argues, it is better, for it leaves them at liberty to sue again, and is not an estoppel. But the one purpose of plaintiffs in bringing the suit was to have their rights determined. It would not advance their interests to have the suit disposed of without determining the disputed claims of the parties. They certainly cannot appeal as easily, or as conveniently present their view of the controversy, as they might have done if findings had been filed. It is said that plaintiffs may now have the judgment of dismissal set aside if upon appeal it should be found that there was any evidence to support their contentions. This assumes that, upon an appeal from the order dismissing the case, this court could consider the case as though a judgment of nonsuit had been granted. I do not see how this could be on an appeal from an order dismissing an action because of neglect in entering the judgment. The dismissal is because of neglect, and whether the neglect was such as to warrant and justify the dismissal would be the subject of review on such appeal; or, perhaps, whether it was a case for dismissal for neglect.

It may be said that injury cannot be presumed from error; that the court must be able to see from the record that the appellant has been aggrieved, or no relief can be granted. Section 475, Code Civ. Proc., is cited to that point. Among other matters contained in the section it is said: "No judgment, decision or decree shall be reversed or affected by reason of any error, ruling, instruction or defect, unless it shall appear from the record that such error, ruling, instruction or defect was prejudicial, and also that by such error, ruling, instruction or defect that said party complaining or appealing sustained and suffered substantial injury, and that a different result would have been probable if such error, ruling, instruction or defect had not occurred or existed. There is no presumption that error is prejudicial." In this particular case I think we can see that a different result would have been reached but for the error complained of. The plaintiffs would have had their action tried, and the issues disposed of by a judgment which could have been reviewed here, and the rights and liabilities of the parties finally disposed of. But, unless some very restricted meaning can be given to the amendment to section 475, it is plainly unconstitutional and void. The "substantial injury" and "different result" mentioned must have reference to the final judgment. Ordinarily we cannot ascertain or determine "from the record" whether the appellant has suffered substantial injury, or whether a different final result would have been reached, had not some particular error been committed. If the court were erroneously to refuse to receive any evidence for a party, and should arbitrarily determine all issues against him, this court could not determine from the record whether he would have fared better if the evidence had been admitted. So if, in an ordinary action at law, a court were to erroneously deny a jury trial, the record could not disclose that a different result would have been probable if the error had not been committed, although it would plainly enough show that a party had been denied a trial according to the law of the land. A person against whom such a ruling has been made, and who has lost his case, has been deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. And this amendment, if valid, would prevent a reversal of the cause upon that ground. That it might result in preventing the appellate courts from enforcing the fundamental right to a jury trial is not really of greater moment, perhaps not so much, as the fact that it may prevent this court from enforcing uniformity in the administration of the law. Under this rule, any and all trial courts may refuse to be governed by the law of procedure and evidence solemnly enacted by the legislature; and unless we can determine from the record, both that the party complaining has suffered substantial injury, and that a different result would have been probable if the law of procedure had been followed, there could be no reversal.

It is the right of every person, before he can be deprived of his property, to have a trial according to law,—to have the same character of trial, governed by the same established rules of evidence and procedure, as are applied in other cases under similar conditions. "Due process of law" "is law in its regular administration through courts of justice." 2 Kent, Comm. 10. Judge Field says of the words, "due process of law," when applied to judicial proceedings: "They then mean a course of legal proceeding according to those rules and principles which have been established in our system of jurisprudence for the protection and enforcement of private rights." Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714. Webster, in his well-known definition of the phrase, "the law of the land," said: "The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society." And in Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, the court said: "In all cases that kind of procedure is due process of law which is suitable and proper to the nature of the case, and sanctioned by the established usages and customs of the courts." See numerous decisions cited in 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) p. 293, note 4.

Uniformity in the administration of justice is a fundamental right, and every litigant may demand that his case shall be tried, so far as practicable, by the same established rules of procedure and evidence, as well as upon the same principles, which are applied to other like controversies. To secure this uniformity is an important function of an appellate court, and, the jurisdiction being derived from the constitution, a co-ordinate branch of the government cannot say that it shall not perform its function or control its use of the power and discretion vested in it. A litigant who has been denied a trial according to the law of the land has, in a legal sense, been aggrieved; but courts are not created for the redress of ideal wrongs, and therefore, when from the record we can see that the injury is not substantial, it is not such a grievance as courts will redress. We therefore say in such case that the party complaining has not been injured. He is not an aggrieved party in such sense that he needs or can obtain a correction of the error. Further than this the courts should not go, even if authorized by the legislature. How serious the departure from established rules must be to require a reversal is generally a judicial question. The judgment is reversed.

(S. F. 1,597, 1,599).¹

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — CONSTRUCTION OF WATERWORKS—RIGHT OF TAXPAYER TO SUE CITY—RETURN OF BONDS IMPROPERLY ISSUED — MISJOINDER — APPEAL ON JUDGMENT ROLL.

1. Where an appeal is taken upon a judgment roll without any bill of exceptions, appellant admits that no errors were committed in the admission or rejection of evidence, and that the evidence sustains the findings.

2. In an action to compel the return to a city of bonds issued by it to defendants for the construction of a waterworks costing less than the value of the bonds, a judgment that the bonds should not be affected, but that the defendants be charged with their value, and credited with the value of the waterworks, is warranted, under a prayer for general relief.

3. In an action by a taxpayer to set aside a contract made by a city, and to have returned to it certain bonds, where the complaint shows that a demand upon the city to bring suit or demand the return of the bonds would have been useless, the omission to make such demands is not ground for reversal of judgment for plaintiff.

4. Where several defendants are officers of a municipality, and the acts complained of were done under color and in excess of their authority, whereby the municipality as well as the plaintiff suffered loss, the recovery may be against them both as individuals and in their official capacity, though they were sued only as officers.

5. Where a plaintiff, in a suit against a municipal corporation, is a taxpayer, and has a direct and substantial interest in the controversy, the fact that he may also have ulterior motives in bringing the suit does not disqualify him.

6. In an action to have returned to a municipality certain bonds issued by it, holders of such bonds residing beyond the jurisdiction of the court are not indispensable parties, and, where no fact is alleged which would affect their title to the bonds, their omission as parties is not ground for reversal.

7. The fact that the answer of one of several defendants was stricken out, and no judgment can be rendered against him outside of the prayer of the complaint, does not necessarily affect the judgment against his co-defendants, whose answer was not stricken out.

8. A motion and ruling thereon made at trial, and which does not form any part of the judgment roll, cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, in the absence of a bill of exceptions.

9. In a suit on behalf of a municipal corporation for the improper construction of waterworks, it is not stating different causes of action or misjoinder of defendants to include prayers for annulment of the contract for such construction, and the return of bonds issued therefor, and to include as defendants those interested in only a part of the relief sought.

10. Since section 21 of the charter of Santa Rosa (St. 1875-76, p. 262), prescribing the duties of the city attorney, and stating when he may commence actions on his own motion, does not authorize him to bring suit against the city to set aside a contract for the construction of waterworks, it is not necessary for a taxpayer before bringing such a suit to obtain the city attorney's consent.

Vanderhoof, as treasurer of said city of Santa Rosa; Kobert Effey; and Paul B. Perkins." Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff and the city of Santa Rosa, in whose behalf he sued, and defendant C. L. Mobley, and this appeal is taken therefrom by defendants Woodward, Keegan, Collins, Berka, Wilson, and Vanderhoof from the whole of said judgment, except that portion thereof in favor of defendant Mobley. Mobley, Effey, and Perkins do not appeal. A separate appeal (No. 1,599) is taken upon the same judgment roll by "the city of Santa Rosa, a municipal corporation, and the common council of said city, as the legislative body thereof," from the whole of said judgment, except that part in favor of Mobley. Both appeals are upon the same record, and may be disposed of in one opinion.

The record, though consisting of the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions, is very long. The amended complaint covers 53 pages, the demurrer to it 12 pages, the answer 50 pages, and the findings and conclusions of law 69 pages. The facts involved are numerous, and dependent, and cover a period of time extending from the spring of 1893 to the time of the trial in December, 1896, so that the utmost condensation will necessarily require much space. The controversy has grown out of the issuance and disposal of bonds of the municipality for the purpose of constructing waterworks to furnish water for the use of the city and its inhabitants, the letting of a contract for the construction thereof, changes of plans, and other acts of the defendants connected with and forming part thereof, whereby the city, as the court finds, has sustained serious loss.

The judgment from which this appeal is taken is as follows: "(1) It is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the contract dated September 28, 1895, made by and between defendant the city of Santa Rosa, a municipal corporation, party of the first part, and defendant Effey, of the city of Santa Cruz, party of the second part, for the construction of a system of waterworks according to the plans and specifications of C. Monjeau, is hereby declared null and void and of no effect; and defendant the city of Santa Rosa is hereby absolved of and from any and all obligations whatsoever to any one under or by virtue of said contract. (2) It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the bonds provided for in ordinance No. 163 of the ordinances of defendant the city of Santa Rosa, except the first series of said bonds, to wit, bonds numbers 1 to 5, inclusive, were unlawfully disposed of by defendants E. F. Woodward, individually and as mayor of said city, F. Berka, C. N. Collins, E. D. Harris, Thos. P. Keegan, George A. Tupper, and J. S. Wilson, individually and as members of and composing the common council and legislative body of defendant the city of Santa Rosa, and M. V. Vanderhoof, individually and as treasurer of said city of Santa Rosa, and Robert Effey, and contrary to the provisions of law regulating the mode and conditions for the disposal of such bonds, and in violation of the trust reposed in defendants Woodward, Berka, Collins, Harris, Keegan, Tupper, Wilson, Vanderhoof, Effey, and Paul B. Perkins, willfully, unlawfully, and fraudulently disposed of the proceeds of said bonds, and that said defendants last named are adjudged to be liable for the payment to defendant the city of Santa Rosa of the value of said bonds at the time of their disposal, to wit, $165,701.25. (3) It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the system of waterworks constructed by Paul B. Perkins in the city of Santa Rosa, consisting of pipe lines, reservoirs, pumping plants, and all other appliances connected therewith, be, and they are hereby, decreed to be the direct results of the disposal of said water bonds issued by the city of Santa Rosa under and by virtue of ordinance No. 163, and that, as such direct result, said waterworks constructed by said Paul B. Perkins should be, and they are hereby, decreed to be held and possessed by the defendants the mayor and common council of the city of Santa Rosa in trust for said city of Santa Rosa, and the inhabitants and taxpayers thereof, as if said works were a part of said water bonds, and that said defendants Robert Effey and Paul B. Perkins never had any lawful right, title, or interest in or to said waterworks, or any part or parcel thereof. (4) That an accounting shall be had by this court of the actual value of said system of waterworks, pipe lines, reservoirs, pumping station, etc., constructed by said Paul B. Perkins in said city of Santa Rosa, and that after said actual value of said waterworks is ascertained as herein provided, that a judgment shall be entered, to take effect as of the entry of this judgment, against defendants E. F. Woodward, F. Berka, C. N. Collins, E. D. Harris, Thos. P. Keegan, George A. Tupper, J. S. Wilson, M. V. Vanderhoof, individually and as treasurer of said city of Santa Rosa, Robert Effey, and Paul B. Perkins, jointly and severally, for the amount of money which shall be found to be the difference between the value of said bonds at the time of their disposal, to wit, $165,701.25, and the ascertained value of said system of waterworks constructed by defendant Perkins. (5) That said city of Santa Rosa shall have the option to take and retain, as the property of said city, said system of waterworks constructed by said Paul B. Perkins, at the value thus ascertained, provided that the defendants hereby made liable for the deficiency aforesaid consent thereto; that, if such consent shall not be duly given and entered in this cause, then that said system of waterworks shall be sold by the sheriff of Sonoma county, acting as the commissioner of this court, to the highest and best bidder, at public sale, in the same manner as sales are made upon execution as provided by law; and the proceeds of such sale shall be paid to the treasurer of the city of Santa Rosa, and said city of Santa Rosa may, by its officers, become a purchaser at said sale; and, if said city should become the purchaser of said system of waterworks, the purchase price to be paid by said city shall be credited upon the amount of the liability of defendants named in the fourth clause of this judgment to said city, to wit, $165,701.25. (6) That upon the filing of the consent and agreement of all of the defendants made liable for said deficiency as to the value of said system of waterworks, or upon the return of the sheriff of the results of said sale, judgment for the amount of the deficiency, as provided in paragraph 4 hereof, and for the costs of plaintiff up to this time hereby taxed at $537.40, and for accruing costs hereafter incurred on behalf of defendant the city of Santa Rosa, or of plaintiff against said defendants made liable for said deficiency, shall be entered against said defendants as herein provided. (7) That defendant Mobley have and recover from plaintiff his (said Mobley's) costs, hereby taxed at $——."

As this appeal is taken from the judgment upon the judgment roll without any bill of exceptions, it is necessarily admitted by appellants that no errors were committed in the admission or rejection of evidence, and that the evidence sustains and justifies the findings; and in this connection may be noticed appellants' contention that the judgment is not authorized by the pleadings, and that facts occurring after the commencement of the suit cannot be considered in the absence of a supplemental complaint. The failure of the plaintiff to file an amended or supplemental complaint might have been a ground for excluding evidence of transactions occurring after suit commenced, but whether it would or not need not be considered: for, as was said in Poladori v. Newman, 116 Cal. 377, 48 Pac. 326: "Upon a direct appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone, it will be assumed in support of the judgment that all objections to evidence in support of the findings were waived. If objection to the introduction of any evidence had been made upon the ground that the defect to which it related was not alleged in the complaint, the court would have permitted the plaintiffs to amend their complaint. Parties will not be permitted to lie by and keep silent when evidence is offered, and, after the court has rendered its judgment, object thereto, upon the ground that the evidence sustaining it was inadmissible under the pleadings." Besides, the answer of these appellants was filed more than seven months after this suit was commenced, and it was alleged therein that Perkins had nearly completed said waterworks, and for more than a month had been willing to turn the same over to the city; that appellants should at once commence supplying the city with water, and should not be interfered with in the exercise of their official duties,—thus voluntarily presenting issues as to facts occurring after the suit was commenced. But, for reasons above stated, it is not necessary to consider to what extent these allegations would have constituted a reply to the objection that evidence offered by the plaintiff was outside of the issues.

It is also contended that the relief granted is not warranted by the prayer of the complaint. It often happens that the relief which would be appropriate to the facts and circumstances known to the plaintiff at the time he files his complaint, or which existed at that time, is inadequate and unsuited to the conditions existing at the time of the trial, resulting from the conduct or agency of the defendant; and hence it is usual to add to the prayer for specific relief appropriate to the facts alleged in the complaint the prayer for general relief, as was done in this case. All the appellants answered. Section 580, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint, but in any other case the court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue." The object of the suit, as disclosed by the complaint, was to cancel and have declared void the contract let to Effey for the construction of the waterworks, to prevent the construction of the works thereunder, and to have returned to the treasury the bonds issued by the city, and to prevent any disposal of them otherwise than for money to be paid into the treasury, to the intent that neither the bonds nor their proceeds should be used in payment of work and materials done and furnished under a void and fraudulent contract. So far as the judgment relates to the contract under which the work was performed, the judgment accords with the special prayer of the complaint. As to the bonds, it was alleged, on information and belief, that they were delivered to Effey, September 28, 1895; but the court, after finding the facts as to the disposal of the bonds, and the circumstances under which a deposit of $120,000 was made for the benefit of the contractor in the Santa Rosa National Bank, concluded that the validity of the bonds in the hands of the present holders was not affected by the present action, or by the conclusions of the court concerning the bid and contract for the construction of the works, and that, as the works as constructed were the direct result of the disposal of the bonds, the defendants should be charged with the value of the bonds, and the city should hold the works as if they were a part of said bonds, and upon an accounting that appellants be credited with their value. This, I think, is entirely consistent with the pleadings and the issues actually tried, and is the nearest possible approach to the specific prayer that the bonds be returned and held until lawfully disposed of, and the proceeds placed in the treasury, and is consistent with the case made under the complaint, and fully authorized by the prayer for general relief. Section 580, Code Civ. Proc., is but a concise statement of the rule observed upon this subject in courts of equity. For a construction as to what is consistent with the case made by the complaint, see Hieru v. Mill, 13 Ves. 114, and Poladori v. Newman, 116 Cal. 375, 48 Pac. 325.

It is contended by appellants that no demand was made upon the mayor or council or anybody else for the return of the bonds or that suit be brought. The court found that a prior demand upon the municipal authorities to bring suit in the premises was, under the circumstances, not a necessary condition precedent to bringing the action. This is directly sustained by Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788, and Moyle v. Landers' Adm'rs, 83 Cal. 579, 23 Pac. 798. The facts alleged in the complaint sufficiently show that a demand to bring suit would have been useless; and, if it were conceded that a demand should have been made for the return of the bonds, it cannot avail the defendants as a ground for reversal of the judgment, since the answer disclosed that the bonds had been delivered to Effey, and by him sold to Seligman & Co., in the city of New York, and said purchasers and the bonds were out of and beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and further alleged that the complete construction of the waterworks had been paid for out of the proceeds of such sale. It therefore appears that a demand for the return of the bonds would have been useless, and that appellants are not injured by the omission.

In this connection appellants further contend that "the powers of a taxpayer plaintiff are limited, and can be extended only to acts or threatened acts of ministerial officers"; citing section 1243 of High on Injunctions. It is there laid down that equitable interference by injunction with legislative action by municipal bodies has given rise to some apparent conflict of authority, and is not wholly free from doubt; that purely legislative action will not be enjoined. But the author further says: "And, while courts of equity will not enjoin municipal bodies from the passage of ordinances or resolutions, yet after the passage of such ordinances or resolutions the courts may, and will, on a proper case being shown, prevent their enforcement; and for this purpose may enjoin proceedings thereunder which would otherwise result in irreparable injury." The cases of Merriam v. Board, 72 Cal. 517, 14 Pac. 137, and Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 171, cited by appellants, do not support their contention. The defendants, except Effey and Perkins, are sued as officers of a municipal corporation, and are so described in the title of the cause, and are not referred to as "individuals," and are formally alleged in the complaint to be such officers; and all the acts complained of as having been done or performed by them were alleged to have been done and performed in the exercise, or pretended or assumed exercise, of official powers and duties; and the judgment fixes upon them, as individuals, a large pecuniary liability to the city of Santa Rosa, the amount to be determined by future proceedings, and gives judgment against them in favor of the plaintiff for costs.

Appellants contend that, "If one is made a defendant in an official capacity, the judgment will not bind him personally;" citing Freem. Judgm. p. 285, § 156. The learned author is there treating of the effect of a judgment against a defendant in an official capacity as an estoppel against the same person when suing as plaintiff in a different capacity in relation to property rights, or title to property, and not, as here, where the misconduct of an officer, or one holding an official position, or acting in other than a personal or individual capacity, creates thereby a personal liability. Here the defendants were in fact officers of the municipality, and their several acts complained of were done and performed under color of this official authority; yet, having exceeded their powers as such officers, as charged in the complaint, whereby the municipality has wrongfully suffered loss, the recovery must be against them as individuals. But their several violations of official powers and duties could not be shown without showing their several official positions; and, besides, relief was also sought against them in their official capacities. They were, therefore, properly sued as officers, the judgment showing the character in which they were liable; and, so far as the character of the relief given by the judgment requires it, the official designation of the several defendants given in the complaint will be regarded as descriptive personarum. Stillman v. Squire, 1 Denio, 329; Litchfield v. Flint, 104 N. Y. 543, 11 N. E. 58. In Scott v. Alexander, 23 S. C. 126, it was held that the fact that defendants were sued in their official capacity as aldermen did not protect them from personal liability for costs. In Evans v. Evans, 23 N. J. Eq. 72, the complainant was not styled "executor" in the commencement of the bill, nor were the defendants styled as "executors" in the prayer for process; but the bill, in its premises, fully stated the facts, and correctly described the character and relation of the parties. It was objected that the bill should have been filed by the complainant as executor against the defendants as executors. The chancellor said: "Proceedings in equity are conducted with less regard to mere matters of form and technical objections than proceedings at law. When a bill, in its body, sets forth facts which give the complainant a right as executor, or make the defendant liable as such, so that the court, upon these allegations, can give the relief required, it is mere form, and useless form, to require that each party should be so styled in the commencement or conclusion of the bill." See, also, White v. Davis, 48 N. J. Eq. 22, 21 Atl. 187; Ransom v. Geer, 30 N. J. Eq. 249. Baldwin v. Ellis, 68 Cal. 495, 9

Pac. 652, was an action to recover taxes illegally collected. In the second cause of action the defendant was not sued as an officer, and a demurrer upon that ground was sustained. See, also, City of Blair v. Langtry, 21 Neb. 247, 31 N. W. 790; Nowell v. Wright, 3 Allen, 166. In Amy v. Supervisors, 11 Wall. 136, it was said: "The rule is well settled that, where the law requires absolutely a ministerial act to be done by a public officer, and he neglects or refuses to do such act, he may be compelled to respond in damages to the extent of the injury arising from his conduct. There is an unbroken current of authorities to this effect." And this, it was said, was a common-law liability, and is, therefore, not confined, as appellants seem to suppose, to those cases where the liability is imposed by statute.

It is further contended that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, but that the action is prosecuted in the interest of the Santa Rosa Waterworks, a private corporation then supplying the city with water; and that this action is one of a series instituted to hinder and delay the construction of waterworks by the city; and that these allegations are not found to be untrue. The court found that one Jones, a taxpayer of said city, commenced an action in 1894 against the city, and which is still pending, to prevent the city from entering into a contract with Effey, upon the ground that his bid was not lawful, in which case the court, on February 26, 1895, gave an opinion, upon demurrer, that any contract made by the city with Effey upon said bid would be void. It does not appear that the defendants offered or gave any evidence tending to support said allegation that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, but, whether they did or not, the issue was immaterial. It is not disputed that the plaintiff is a resident and taxpayer, and therefore qualified to bring the suit. In Mazet v. City of Pittsburg, 137 Pa. St. 548, 20 Atl. 693, it was held, in effect, that if the plaintiff is not a mere volunteer, but has a direct and substantial interest in the controversy, being one who is liable to be taxed, in common with the general public, for the work contracted for, his ulterior motives will not disqualify him. See, also, Times Pub. Co. v. City of Everett (Wash.) 37 Pac. 695.

It is also contended that J. & W. Seligman & Co. are necessary parties. Under the allegations of the complaint they were certainly proper parties, but it was alleged that they were in the state of New York, and, as they were beyond the jurisdiction of the court, they were not indispensable parties. The answer, however, alleges that the bonds were sold to them, and no fact is alleged, either in the complaint or answer, that would affect their title to the bonds if they had been parties. This is, therefore, not a ground for the reversal of the judgment.

It is further contended that, "the answer of Perkins being struck out by the court without authority of law, and the judgment, therefore, being void as to him, it is void as to all the defendants against whom said judgment was jointly given with him." Whether the answer of defendant Perkins was stricken out without authority of law, or whether the judgment against him exceeded the relief prayed for, would seem to be immaterial. He answered separately, has not appealed, and is not complaining; and we fail to see how these appellants are injured by Perkins being joined with them in a joint and several judgment which they say entitles them to contribution from him. Conceding, for the purposes of the argument, that no judgment could properly be rendered against him outside of the prayer of the complaint, it does not follow that the judgment against these appellants whose answer was not stricken out was in any way affected.

It is also said that no loss is alleged to have accrued to the city by the change of plans made by Effey. The allegations in the complaint were made in reference to the invalidity of the contract, and for the purpose of preventing its performance; but when the answer was filed—which was more than seven months after the suit was begun—the situation had changed, and it was alleged therein that the waterworks were substantially completed, that about 600 connections had been made with the mains thereof, and that water was then generally being used therefrom; and it was denied that any of the acts done by defendants subsequent to July, 1894, relating to the sale of said bonds or the letting of the contract, were had or done for the purpose of preventing competition, or in the furtherance of any plan to exchange the bonds for said work, and that the mayor and common council should not be interfered with in taking possession of said works. These allegations opened the door to an investigation of the change of plans, and the findings show many material changes, resulting in loss to the city and gain to the contractor, who had been paid in full for his work before it began. Not only so, but the complaint set out in full the contract made with Effey under which the work was done, and which provided that changes might be made by the city authorities; that, if the cost of the work was thereby increased, the contractor should be paid the additional cost, and, if diminished, the amount thereof should be deducted from the contract price, the amount of the increase or diminution to be agreed upon in writing in advance. The complaint also set out several resolutions, passed by the council after said contract was made, changing the said plans and specifications in several material particulars, and it does not appear that any agreement as to the increased or diminished cost thereof was made.

The defendants moved to strike out parts of the complaint, and to make the complaint more definite and certain, and the motion was denied, and to the order denying the motion the defendants, and each of them, excepted. Neither the motion nor the ruling thereon is any part of the judgment roll (Code Civ. Proc. § 670), and cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment in the absence of a bill of exceptions (Spinetti v. Brignardello, 53 Cal. 283; Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 607, 29 Pac. 220).

Defendants also demurred to the amended complaint, all joining therein, upon many grounds, the general demurrer for want of facts being interposed as to all and to each of the defendants separately. The other grounds were for misjoinder of parties defendant, in that Mobley and Vanderhoof are unnecessary parties, because no cause of action is alleged against them; and similar grounds are alleged as to the improper joinder of other parties with certain other defendants; that the complaint does not show a joint cause of action against the defendants, and that defendants are not jointly interested in the several causes of action alleged, and that there is a defect of parties, in that Seligman & Co. are necessary parties. It is urged that some of the defendants have no interest in that part of the relief sought relating to the return of the bonds to the treasury, while others have no interest in the other part of the relief prayed for asking that the contract letting the construction to Effey be annulled or declared void. The municipal corporation known as the city of Santa Rosa, on whose behalf this action is prosecuted, had one object in view, viz. the construction of waterworks. The issuance and sale of the bonds, the adoption of plans and specifications for construction, the several steps leading up to and including the execution of the contract and the work done under it, were but the constituent parts of one entire thing, and all the defendants were connected with the proceedings. There was no misjoinder of defendants or statement of different causes of action in this equitable suit prosecuted by the plaintiff for and on behalf of the municipality, and that adequate relief required the presence of all against whom judgment was rendered. The general demurrer should have been sustained as to defendant Mobley, but judgment was rendered in his favor for costs. He has not appealed, and appellants are not injured.

The question whether demurrer or motion is the proper remedy where two or more causes of action are alleged, but not separately stated, need not be considered in view of our conclusion above stated, though appellants seem unable to distinguish between omitting to state separately causes of action that are of the same class, and may be united, and uniting in the same complaint, whether separately stated or not, causes of action of different classes, which the Code declares may not be done.

It is further contended that the court has failed to find upon many of the issues. Many, and, indeed, much the greater number, of the findings are of probative facts, and the alleged failures to make findings relate to these. Some of the findings are of facts occurring after the commencement of the action, and are referred to by appellants as "findings outside of the issues." These findings of probative facts seem to have been made in support of the findings of ultimate facts, and many that were made might have been omitted. Some issues tendered by the answer, it is true, were not passed upon,—as, for example, the character of the water furnished by the corporation known as the Santa Rosa Waterworks, and the insufficiency of that system as a fire protection; but such issues were immaterial. We are not, however, pointed to any failure to find upon any issue or question of fact which, if found upon favorably to appellants, would have changed the result; nor have we discovered any. The controlling findings of ultimate facts are, in substance, that the contract under which the waterworks were assumed to be constructed was void; that the construction of said works was paid for out of the proceeds of a sale of the bonds which was presumptively valid, and that the value of the works as constructed was much less than the value of the bonds, or the amount paid Effey under said void contract; and, as a conclusion of law, that the defendants, except Mobley, are liable for the difference between the value of the works as constructed and the sum paid to Effey.

Some additional points made on the appeal taken by the city remain to be noticed. The brief filed in its behalf presents and discusses elaborately the questions discussed by the other appellants, and these have been noticed so far as space permits and their importance seems to require. It is contended that a taxpayer cannot bring an action for the benefit of the city, or one in which the city is a party, without the consent of the city attorney, unless some valid excuse is alleged and proved for not having requested him to bring it; citing section 21 of the charter of said city. St. 1875-76, p. 262. This section, so far as material here, provides: "It shall be the duty of the city attorney to advise the officers and authorities of the city in all legal matters pertaining to the business of the city; to prosecute all violations of the city ordinances, or non-compliance therewith, and shall represent the city in all suits in which the city may be a party." He is given "power" to sign informations and charges against persons for violating city ordinances, and to collect delinquent taxes. This section gives him no authority upon his own motion to commence suits for the city in other matters. He may advise, but he cannot control, the action of the city in relation to bringing suits other than those specially provided for in said section. He is but an agent of the city, with no power to compel his principal to act. There is, therefore, no merit in this contention.

The appeal by the city from a judgment in its favor, based upon the contention that the judgment is wrong, and that no judgment should have been rendered in its favor, seems upon its face somewhat peculiar. There is, however, one ground upon which the city might properly seek a modification of the judgment. It is said by the city in its brief: "If the court adjudged those officers liable to the city for the proceeds of the bonds, and gave the city execution therefor, the municipality could have no objection. But when the property of the city is directed to be sold to pay the debts of these alleged wrongdoers, the city has a right to object, and does object most strenuously, to any such proceeding." There are certainly difficulties, together with possible injustice, in the way of a proper and just accounting and ascertainment of the value of the works in the mode expressed in paragraph 5 of the judgment. In paragraph 3 it is decreed that the waterworks constructed by Perkins be held and possessed by the defendants the mayor and common council, in trust for the city, as if said works were a part of the water bonds, and that Effey and Perkins never had any lawful right to said works. Paragraph 4 provides that an accounting shall be had of the actual value of said system of waterworks, pipe lines, etc., constructed by Perkins, and that said value be deducted from the value of the bonds, $165,701.25, and judgment entered against the defendants therein named for the difference. To this we see no objection. But paragraph 5 provides that the city shall have the option to take and retain said works as the property of the city, provided the defendants made liable for the deficiency consent thereto, and, if such consent be not given, that the "system of waterworks shall be sold by the sheriff to the highest bidder, and the proceeds of the sale paid into the city treasury, and credited upon the liability of the defendants liable for the value of the bonds." We see no difficulty in ascertaining the value of the works constructed by Perkins, and no reason why the defendants who are decreed to be held liable for the value of the bonds should have the privilege of refusing to consent to the value so ascertained, and thus compel a sale of "said system of waterworks" which already belongs to the city, and not to the other defendants. But, if a sale is to be had, what is to be sold? The water supply, the real estate upon which the works are erected or constructed, and the right of way belong to the municipality, and were not paid for by Perkins. If the whole system, including the water supply and real estate, be sold, the defendants held liable should not have the benefit of the additional value thereof, and, besides, the municipality would be wholly deprived of that for which the people voted, and for which the bonds were issued, if an individual or private corporation should become the purchaser. The judgment should be modified so as to avoid the possibility of such a result.

The judgment is modified: (1) By striking out the fifth paragraph of said judgment. (2) By striking out all the first part of paragraph 6 down to and including the word "sale" in the fifth line of the said paragraph as printed in the transcript on page 261, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "That upon the value of the work and material done and furnished by said Perkins in the construction of said waterworks being ascertained by the court,"—and, as thus modified, the judgment is affirmed, with costs against all the appellants in the appeal numbered 1,597, and without costs to either party in No. 1,599.

PEOPLE v. WOODRUFF. (Cr. 516.)
(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 21, 1899.)
NEW TRIAL—IDENTITY OF DEFENDANT—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.
Defendant was convicted of embezzlement, his identity being established by four witnesses, three of whom testified that he had a beard of about two weeks' growth at the time of the crime. Defendant asked a new trial, based on newly-discovered evidence, tending to show that he had no beard, and filed several affidavits. In one of these affidavits stated that another told him before the trial that he had committed the crime. Affiant did not make this alleged fact known until after defendant's conviction. This affidavit also seriously contradicted statements made upon defendant's preliminary examination. Held, that the affidavits contained nothing which rendered it probable that on a retrial of the case a different result would be reached.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

John Woodruff was convicted of embezzlement, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

J. N. Phillips and W. H. Shinn, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

HAYNES, C. John Woodruff was convicted of the crime of embezzlement, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial. The only ground presented for reversal is that the court erred in overruling his said motion. The controverted question is the identity of the embezzler. Fetterman & Son were the proprietors of a livery stable at Long Beach. On July 8, 1897, the senior partner was absent, and the son and his younger brother, a boy of 15, were in charge of the stable. A man, who was not known to either of them, called, and hired a pair of horses and a spring wagon to go to Redondo. The elder brother harnessed the horses, and the younger brother, assisted by the stranger, greased the wagon. These things consumed about 20 minutes, and the stranger drove away, going, not to Redondo, but to Los Angeles, where he and another man disposed of the horses, wagon, and harness. No inquiry was made by the livery keeper as to the name or residence of the hirer. The defendant was arrested on the 3d of September, at Long Beach, the defendant's brother, Charles, being with him. The elder of the Fetterman boys testified on cross-examination that the man who got the team had at least two weeks' growth of beard on his face at the time he got the team, and the next time he saw him he was clean shaven, except that he had a mustache. The witness, however, further testified that he identified him by his eyes, his face, and general appearance, as well as his whiskers; that he was as positive as he could be of anything that defendant is the man who got the team. The younger brother testified that he was positive—had no doubt—that defendant was the man who got the team. He also testified upon cross-examination that the man had long whiskers, "had quite a whisker on his face"; that when he saw him after his arrest he knew he was the man that took the team; that on that occasion he picked him out of a crowd. J. M. Brown testified that he had known the defendant for two years, and saw him the day before he got the team at Long Beach, and talked with him; that he had a beard all over his face; that it was not long, but he had not shaven for some time. At the time the property was disposed of there was another man with the defendant, and they traded the spring wagon to Peter Varlo for a buggy, and Varlo identified the defendant positively as one of the men, and thought Charles Woodruff was the other. There were two men also at Meinhardt's horse market, where the remainder of the property was disposed of, one of whom was identified as the defendant. The defendant offered evidence tending to prove an alibi, and also that he did not wear whiskers or a full beard, and that his brother shaved him on the 4th of July, at his father's house. Six witnesses testified to the fact that defendant wore a mustache, but no whiskers.

One of the grounds for a new trial, and the only one discussed, is that of newly-discovered evidence. The trial was concluded on January 12, 1898. Six affidavits, besides those of the defendant, containing a statement of newly-discovered evidence, were filed, and used in support of defendant's motion for a new trial. Except as hereafter noticed, these affidavits contained matters which were merely cumulative of the evidence touching the existence or absence of a beard. The only new fact in the affidavit of Janie Flint was to the effect that on the evening of July 9th Samuel Woodruff told her that he had been down to Long Beach, and had driven up from there to Los Angeles. She was examined as a witness for the defendant, and, judging from her interest in the defendant's case manifested in her testimony, it is remarkable that she should have failed to communicate this alleged fact to him or his counsel. The affidavit of Walter S. Humbert was to the effect that he was acquainted with both John and Samuel Woodruff prior to July, 1897; that on July 8th, about 5 o'clock p. m., he saw Samuel on Los Angeles street, near Third, driving a span of horses, one gray and one sorrel; that the team appeared tired and dusty, and that the defendant was not with him, and that he did not see them together that day; that he did not know of the arrest and trial of defendant until after his conviction, when he learned of it through the newspapers. Here we have a man passing along a busy street in the heart of a city of 100,000 inhabitants, with nothing to specially call his attention to the circumstance, who seven months afterwards can describe the team and wagon driven by a man whom he has known a few months, and, more wonderful still, is willing to swear positively that it was on the 8th day of July, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The affidavit of Charles A. Woodruff was to the effect that on January 3, 1898 (about eight days before the trial began), Samuel Woodruff told him it was he, and not the defendant, who took the team from Fetterman's stable, and that defendant was innocent, and that he (affiant) did not tell anybody of said conversation until after defendant's conviction. If said deponent believed said statement alleged to have been made by Samuel Woodruff, and failed to communicate it to the defendant, but remained silent, and permitted an innocent man to be convicted and the guilty man to escape, he is wholly unworthy of credit. Whether Samuel resembled his brother, the defendant, and wore a beard or not, could not well overcome the testimony of the defendant given upon his preliminary examination to the effect that on the morning of the 10th of July a man named Williams requested him to aid in selling the property, and that he did so, coupled with the fact that the day before he and another man were twice at Vario's place, and there traded the wagon for a buggy, and was positively identified by Vario as one of the two men. I see nothing in the affidavits that would render it probable that on a retrial of the case a different result would be reached. People v. Urquidas, 96 Cal. 240, 31 Pac. 52.

PEOPLE v. HOFFMAN. (Cr. 514.)

EXTORTION—INFORMATION.

Pen. Code, § 518, declares that extortion is obtaining property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right, and section 519 declares (subdivision 2) that fear, to constitute extortion, may be induced by a threat to accuse one of a crime. Section 952 requires that an information must be direct and certain, as regards the accused, the offense, and the particular circumstances thereof, when necessary to constitute a complete offense. Held, that an information for extortion, stating that the property was obtained by reason of defendant's threat to accuse another of the crime of selling diseased or unwholesome meat, was insufficient, as it did not allege an intent that the meat should be eaten, necessary to constitute a crime under Pen. Code, § 383.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

J. P. Hoffman was convicted of extortion, and from the judgment, order denying motion in arrest, and order denying a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Shinn, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment, order denying his motion in arrest of judgment, and order denying his motion for a new trial. The information stated "that the said J. P. Hoffman on the 5th day of March, 1898, at the county and state aforesaid, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously extort and obtain from another, to wit, Simon Maier, certain bank notes and treasury notes, a more particular description of which is to the district attorney unknown, which said notes were then and there of the value of five hundred dollars, lawful money of the United States, and the personal property of the said Simon Maier, under the circumstances not amounting to robbery, and by reason of a threat then and there made by the said J. P. Hoffman to accuse the said Simon Maier of a crime, to wit, of selling diseased and unwholesome meat, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California." The defendant demurred to the information upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense; that it did not allege whether the money was obtained from said Maier with his consent, and did not state the character of the crime of which the defendant threatened to accuse Maier. The court overruled the demurrer, and defendant was convicted "of an attempt to commit the crime of extortion."

"Extortion" is defined by the Penal Code (section 518) as follows: "Extortion is the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right." Section 519 is as follows: "Fear, such as will constitute extortion, may be induced by a threat, either, * * * (2) To accuse him, or any relative of his or member of his family, of any crime." The information (Pen. Code, § 952) "must be direct and certain as it regards: (1) The party charged. (2) The offense charged. (3) The particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense." When measured by the above provision of our Penal Code, we think the information did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, and that the court erred in overruling the demurrer. The information does not show that the property therein described was obtained from Maier with his consent. It does not show that it was obtained by the wrongful use of force or fear. It simply states that the property was obtained from Maier by reason of a threat made by the said defendant to accuse the said Maier of the crime of selling diseased and unwholesome meat. The act of selling diseased and unwholesome meat is not of itself a crime. To knowingly sell diseased or unwholesome meat, knowing it to be so diseased or unwholesome, with intent to permit it to be eaten, is a crime. Pen. Code, § 383. But it might be sold under many circumstances, and such selling would not be a crime. It might be sold with no knowledge on the part of the seller that it was diseased or unwholesome. It might be sold with no intention on the part of the seller to permit it to be eaten. It might be sold as a fertilizer, or for many other purposes besides that of being eaten. We have the right to presume that defendant threatened to accuse Maier of selling diseased and unwholesome meat for any of these purposes, and we know of no law that would authorize us, in a criminal case, to presume that defendant threatened to accuse Maier of knowingly selling it with intent to permit it to be eaten. Unless the act of selling diseased and unwholesome meat under all circumstances and for any purpose, and even without knowledge on the part of the seller that it is unwholesome or diseased, is a crime, this information does not charge any public offense. The court in its charge to the jury said: "And a threat by the defendant to accuse the said Maier of selling diseased and unwholesome meat is not accusing him of a crime, within the meaning of the law; and, before the defendant can be convicted on the information in this case, it is not only necessary for the people to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant accused said Maier of selling diseased and unwholesome meat, but they must also prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant accused said Maier of selling diseased and unwholesome meat with intent to permit the same to be eaten, drank, or otherwise consumed by some person or persons." If the court had measured the information in this case by the law as given to the jury, it would have been found short of the statutory requirements. It becomes unnecessary to notice the other points argued. We advise that the judgment and orders be reversed.

CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE—PRESENTATION—STATEMENT OF PARTICULARS.

The requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, that the particulars of a claim against an estate must be stated if it is not due when presented, is complied with in the case of a claim based on an ordinary note, if the particulars appearing on the face of the note are stated.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

Action by A. J. Landis against E. M. Woodman, administrator of the estate of A. Fuller, deceased, to recover on a claim against the intestate. There was a judgment for defendant entered on sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

C. A. March, J. C. March, J. D. Sproul, and H. W. Johnson, for appellant. John Gale and F. C. Lusk, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiff presented a claim against the estate of A. Fuller, deceased, to the administrator. This claim was in the following form, and was rejected:

"The undersigned creditor of A. Fuller, deceased, presents his claim against the estate of said deceased for approval, to wit: Estate of A. Fuller, Deceased, to A. J. Landis, Debtor.

"To principal promissory note, dated June 25, 1897, hereto attached, fifteen thousand dollars.

"To interest on same from June 25, 1897, at seven per cent. per annum, to March 25, 1898, seven hundred and eighty-seven and $\frac{50}{100}$ dollars.

"Which note is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"$15,000. Chico, Cal., June 25, 1897. One year after date (without grace), I promise to pay to the order of A. J. Landis fifteen thousand dollars, for value received, with interest until paid, both principal and interest payable only in United States gold coin. Alfred Fuller."

"State of California, County of Butte—ss.: A. J. Landis, whose foregoing claim is herewith presented to the administrator of said deceased, being duly sworn, and says that the amount thereof, to wit, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, with accruing interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum on the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, is justly due said claimant, but is not payable until the expiration of one year from June 25, 1897; that no payments have been made thereon which are not credited; and that there are no offsets to the same to the knowledge of said claimant. A. J. Landis.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of March, 1898. [Seal.] J. D. March, Notary Public in and for the County of Butte, State of California."

Upon the rejection of the aforesaid claim this action was brought upon it, and a general demurrer was sustained to the complaint. Thereafter judgment was entered against plaintiff, and this appeal is taken from that judgment. The complaint was held fatally defective upon the ground that the claim therein set out was fatally defective.

Among other matters, section 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares: "Every claim which is due when presented to the executor or administrator must be supported by the affidavit of the claimant, or some one in his behalf, that the amount is justly due, that no payments have been made thereon which are not credited, and that there are no offsets to the same to the knowledge of the affiant. If the claim be not due when presented, or be contingent, the particulars of such claim must be stated." It was held by the trial court that the "particulars" required to be stated in a claim that is not due were not set out in this claim. The single question involved by this appeal is, does the claim presented substantially comply with the requirements of this statute? Respondent rests the case upon the proposition that the "particulars" of this claim are not stated, and in seeking for the meaning of the word "particulars" he declares that it refers to the four essentials of a valid contract, namely, parties capable of contracting, consent, a lawful object, and a sufficient consideration. He then admits that this claim shows three of these essentials, but declares it fails to show a sufficient consideration. Even if it be admitted that this construction of the statute is the sound one, we would be loath to hold this claim too weak to form the basis of a cause of action. We would consider long before declaring such a claim no claim. Especially is this so in view of a statute which is so general and indefinite as the one here under consideration. If respondent rejected this claim for the reason that it contained no statement as to the true consideration actuating these parties in making the contract, it would seem but just and right to the claimant that he should have been so informed by the administrator, in order that an amended claim could have been presented to meet that objection. The "particulars" of this claim are sufficiently stated. The date of the contract is shown. The parties are named. The amount to be paid is stated. When it is to be paid, and kind of coin, are also stated. This must be held to be a substantial compliance with the statute. Especially are we inclined to such conclusion when we find in sections 1494 and 1499 of the Code of Civil Procedure ample power vested in the court and the administrator or executor to investigate to the lowest dregs the validity and honesty of all claims which may be presented to them. We are also disposed to this conclusion in view of the fact that the business world would be badly handicapped in dealing with commercial paper if a history of such paper be required to accompany it from its inception throughout its long and devious travels. To obtain such a history would be impossible in numberless cases. A promissory note past due requires no statement of particulars other than that found upon its face; yet there is no good reason why the law should make any different rule in the two cases. "Particulars" are as necessary in the one case as in the other. Of course, in the case of contingent claims the propriety of the rule is readily apparent, and very possibly in many other cases when claims are not due. But in a simple, plain, ordinary promissory note we see no necessity for stating any other particulars than those appearing upon its face. The Indiana statute requires a "succinct and definite statement of the claim." Under such a requirement a copy of a promissory note has been repeatedly held to constitute a compliance with the law. Wolfe v. Wilsey (Ind. App.) 28 N. E. 1004. Yet it would seem that the language of the Indiana statute is fully as broad and explicit as the word "particulars" found in the aforesaid provision of the Code of Civil Procedure. We conclude that this note upon its face gives the "particulars" called for by the statute. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

LUDWIG v. HARRY. (Sac. 519.)

APPEAL AND ERROR—CHANGE OF VENUE—QUESTION OF FACT.

Where a defendant sued in one county is served in another, and moves for change of venue to the latter county on the ground that he resides there, and he files affidavits in support of his motion, and plaintiff files affidavits tending to show that defendant resides in the county where the suit is brought; that the defendant had actually resided in said county with his family, he running a hotel; that defendant in September left said county, and his family ran said hotel for defendant's benefit; that plaintiff informed defendant's wife that she was going to sue defendant, and that said wife tried to dissuade her from suing, and assured her that defendant would return in December, and resume control of said hotel; and that from all information plaintiff could get she has been led to believe that defendant's absence is temporary, and several other affidavits are filed by each party, which materially conflict,—the decision of the trial court will not be disturbed, as there is a conflict in the evidence on a question of fact.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

Action by Caroline Ludwig against John C. Harry. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Curtin, for appellant. Jo Hamilton and Geo. W. Hamilton, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was brought in the superior court of the county of Placer. The summons was served upon the defendant in the county of Tuolumne, and the defendant in due time filed a demurrer to the complaint and an affidavit of merits, and moved the court to change the place of trial to said last-named county, upon the ground that said county of Tuolumne was his place of residence, as shown by his affidavit filed therewith. The plaintiff filed her affidavit in opposition thereto, and the defendant filed several additional affidavits, tending to sustain and corroborate his original affidavit. Upon the hearing the court denied the motion, and the defendant appeals.

Plaintiff, in her complaint, alleged that she was the owner of a hotel in the town of Auburn, Placer county, and in August, 1896, leased the same, with the furniture, barn, and stable, to the defendant, and brought this action to recover $350, rent due and unpaid. This action was commenced October 18, 1897. In her affidavit in opposition to the motion, it was stated that the defendant actually resided in said leased premises with his family, conducting the business of a hotel keeper, until in September, 1897, when he left Auburn, his wife and family remaining in the leased premises, conducting the hotel business under the lease, and for the benefit of the defendant, until November 19, 1897; that defendant did not inform her that he was going away; that shortly before the commencement of this action she learned for the first time that the defendant was in Sonora, Tuolumne county; that she informed defendant's wife, on the day before the commencement of this action, that she was contemplating bringing it; that defendant's wife tried to dissuade her from doing so, and assured her that the defendant would return about the 1st of December, and resume possession and control of said hotel; that affiant was never informed from any source that defendant had left Auburn intending to change his place of residence, but was led to believe, from all the information she was able to obtain, that his absence was temporary, and that he intended to return.

The defendant's affidavit in reply states that he went to Tuolumne county, intending to change his place of residence to that county, and so expressed himself to various persons before leaving; that he has been since about August 1, 1897, a bona fide resident of Tuolumne county; that soon after he arrived he obtained work in a mine at Soulsbyville, and has ever since been engaged in performing labor in said county; and that a few days after his arrival he informed his wife by letter of the fact of his "residence in Tuolumne county." Several other affidavits were read by defendant. The conflict between defendant's affidavits and that of the plaintiff is material, and in several points not capable of being reconciled, particularly in regard to the result of plaintiff's inquiries as to where the defendant was after he left Auburn, and his intention as to a change of his place of residence. Whether the defendant had changed his place of residence before this action was commenced is a question of fact. That he had been a resident of Auburn, Placer county, is beyond dispute. That the usual indicia of residence there existed at the time this action was commenced is equally clear. His family occupied the premises leased by the defendant from the plaintiff for residence and business purposes. He did not, until a month after the suit was commenced, surrender the leased premises, but the business for which he leased the same, and which he personally conducted up to the time of his departure, was continued for his benefit, and the leased premises continued to be the shelter for his family and household goods, and it does not appear that he had provided any other. That defendant started out in search of a new place of residence may be conceded, but that he had in fact changed his residence at the time this action was commenced may well be questioned. At all events, there was a conflict in the evidence, and the rule that in such cases the action of the court below will not be disturbed on appeal applies to these motions. Daniels v. Church, 36 Cal. 13, 30 Pac. 798, and cases there cited. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SCHOEDDE. (Cr. 498.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 23, 1899.)

MAYHEM—SUFFICIENCY OF PROOF—PRINCIPAL IN CRIME—AIDER AND ABETTOR—CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTION—REASONABLE DOUBT.

1. One H. was castrated early Monday morning in Santa Cruz. Defendant, a veterinary surgeon, hired by P. to commit the crime, traveled on the preceding Saturday from San Jose to Santa Cruz with P., P.'s wife, and others, for the purpose of executing it on the next morning. On Monday defendant exhibited H.'s members to several persons in San Jose, telling them that he did the castration, but in the trial he testified that in making said statements he lied. Defendant and various credible witnesses testified that defendant returned to San Jose on Sunday evening, which, if true, precluded his presence at the commission of the crime, and defendant further testified that P. gave him H.'s members in San Jose on Monday. Held, that as to whether or not defendant was present when the crime was committed was a question for the jury.

2. If defendant had returned to San Jose on Sunday evening, there was not sufficient evidence of his guilt as an aider and abettor.

3. Where one is convicted of mayhem under evidence that would support a verdict if he were present at the crime's commission, but which would not support a verdict if he were not present, and the jury are instructed that, if he were present, he may be convicted, and, if absent, he may be convicted as an aider and abettor, a new trial will be granted, as it cannot be told from the verdict whether the conviction was as a principal present or as an aider and abettor.

4. An instruction that "if, after careful and impartial consideration of all the evidence, the jury can say and feel that they are morally convinced of the defendant's guilt, and are fully satisfied of the truth of the charge, that then they are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, and the verdict should be conviction," is not a sound legal instruction.

5. An instruction which declares that there has been no evidence introduced in the case on trial which tends in the slightest degree to show any justification of the crime charged is improper, as charging upon matters of fact.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

Mark Schoedde was convicted of mayhem, and he appeals. Reversed.

Howell C. Moore, Louis O'Neil, and J. H. Skirm, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of the crime of mayhem, and appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

By the information he is charged with the castration of one Harris in the city of Santa Cruz, June 21, 1897. It is strenuously insisted that the evidence fails to support the charge. In its facts the case is peculiar. It is undisputed that Harris was castrated upon the early Monday morning of June 21st at a lodging house in the city of Santa Cruz. It is also conceded that the defendant, a veterinary surgeon, was hired by one Plyler to do the work, and that upon the preceding Saturday he traveled from the city of San Jose to Santa Cruz, in company with Plyler, Plyler's wife, and others, for the purpose of committing this crime. The crime, by agreement of the conspirators, was to have been committed in an outlying part of the city upon Sunday morning, June 20th. In fact it was committed in a lodging house of the city upon the following Monday morning. Upon this Monday, Schoedde, the defendant, told various parties in the city of San Jose that he had castrated Harris in Santa Cruz upon the preceding day, and thereupon exhibited to them the members of Harris' body as evidence of the fact. Standing alone, the foregoing facts as evidence of defendant's guilt could hardly be stronger; but in defense various witnesses, apparently entirely credible, testified that Schoedde, the defendant, returned to San Jose from Santa Cruz Sunday evening, and it is now conceded that, if such evidence was true, he was not present at the commission of the crime. The defendant upon the witness stand declared that upon Sunday morning he determined to withdraw from the conspiracy, and that he thereupon returned to San Jose upon Sunday evening, and in connection with this evidence various disinterested persons testified that they saw him upon the train at that time while en route from Santa Cruz to San Jose. The defendant also declared that Plyler, a conspirator, and the principal, gave him the members of Harris' body in San Jose upon Monday; and he further declared upon the witness stand that he was flatly and entirely lying when he told the various parties in San Jose upon Monday that he committed the crime. Upon the foregoing state of facts it is apparent that the jury had a difficult duty to perform in getting at the truth. Measured by his sworn statements, defendant was a colossal liar, willing to be hired for money to commit a felony. Measured by his unsworn statements, he committed a crime which marked him as a villain of the deepest dye. Hence we say it is a most peculiar case in its facts, and a case presenting serious difficulties to a jury. Yet it is a case presenting facts only, and facts are matters which a jury alone is authorized to weigh and sift and pass upon. It can only be said by the court that there exists a substantial and direct conflict in the evidence, and the truth of the matter rested with the jury.

There is a claim made by the people that, even conceding that defendant did not actually participate in the commission of the crime, but returned to San Jose upon Sunday evening, still he was an aider and abettor, and equally guilty with Plyler. The general principle here contended for is sound, but its application to the facts of this case is wanting. We will not go at length into a discussion of this contention. It is sufficient to say that under the evidence disclosed by this record, if it be conceded that the defendant was not at Santa Cruz when the crime was committed, but had previously returned to San Jose upon Sunday evening, as testified to by various witnesses, then the verdict has not sufficient support in the evidence. In other words, under the evidence there is not disclosed that aiding and abetting by defendant which would make him a principal in the crime. A great many instructions as to the law bearing upon this particular branch of the case were given to the jury, but, in view of what has been said, we pass them by without consideration; for, assuming that the evidence given upon a second trial as to this point will be the same, no instructions should be given bearing upon the facts in this regard. As illustrative of this class of instructions, the following may be cited: "Even though you believe the defendant was not present at the commission of the alleged crime, it does not necessarily follow that you must acquit him." In view of the evidence, we are satisfied that the defendant should have been acquitted, unless he was present at the commission of the crime.

From what has been said a new trial must be ordered. It is impossible to say from the verdict and the instructions whether the jury found that the defendant was present at the time the crime was actually committed, and participated in that commission, or whether they found that, though he was in San Jose at the time of the commission of the crime, still he was guilty as an aider and abettor. As we have seen, if the jury based its verdict of guilty upon the ground that the defendant was simply an aider and abettor of the crime, then the evidence does not justify the verdict.

The court gave the following instruction to the jury: "If, after a careful and impartial consideration of all the evidence in the case, you can say and feel that you are morally convinced of the guilt of the defendant, and are fully satisfied of the truth of the charge, then you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, and your verdict should be one of conviction." This instruction has some support in a few of the early decisions of this court, but it is not a perfectly sound legal instruction by any means, and should never be given. It is better by all means to define a reasonable doubt in the way so often declared unobjectionable by this court, rather than attempt new departures. The court also gave the following instruction: "I instruct you further that there has been no evidence introduced in this case which tends in the slightest degree to show any justification of the crime alleged in the information." This instruction comes very near the border line of error as charging the jury upon matters of fact. It should not be given upon a second trial. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

CRIMINAL LAW—EXAMINATION OF JURORS—EVIDENCE AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION
—PROOF OF DEATH—REPORTER'S NOTES—INSANITY—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ER-ROR.

1. Jurors on their voir dire may be asked whether they believe a man has the right to take the law in his own hands, and thereby commit a crime.

2. Pen. Code, § 686, provides that evidence taken at the preliminary examination of a defendant may be introduced at trial, upon it being satisfactorily shown to the court that the witness is dead or insane. Held, that the fact of death must be shown at trial by relevant and competent evidence, and cannot be shown by affidavit.

3. The statute allowing the admission in evidence at trial of reporter's notes of testimony taken at the preliminary examination of defendant is constitutional.

4. Error in striking out a certain answer of a witness is harmless, where it was afterwards given by the witness without objection.

5. Though expert evidence, as well as opinion evidence of friends and acquaintances, all point to defendant's insanity, the jury may weigh that evidence in conjunction with defendant's conduct and all the circumstances of the case.

6. An instruction "that there has been no evidence introduced in this case which tends to show any justification of the crime alleged" is improper, as charging upon matters of fact.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

George F. Plyer was convicted of mayhem, and appeals. Reversed.

Josselyn & Houck and Jos. H. Skirm, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of mayhem, and appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. Under objection and exception, the court allowed various jurors upon their voir dire to answer the question, "Do you believe that a man has the right to take the law into his own hands, and thereby commit a crime?" The attorney general contends that the question was clearly proper, for the purpose of securing light upon the minds of the jurors, with a view to a peremptory challenge, and for authority relies upon People v. Car Soy, 57 Cal. 102. It would seem that People v. Hamilton, 62 Cal. 378, to some degree, at least, curtails the doctrine of the previous case. Yet, aside from any question of peremptory challenge, we deem the action of the court in allowing the question entirely proper. It is, in effect, to ask the prospective juror, if taken upon the panel, will he decide the case according to the law and the evidence. Certainly, a juror who declares that he believes a party is justified in taking the law into his own hands in certain cases, notwithstanding he commits a crime thereby, should not be taken upon a jury. The identical case upon trial might be one of those cases which the juror had in mind when making such a statement, and a man in that mental condition should not be taken as a juror. He has a bias, which in law disqualifies him as a competent juror. To be sure, if it should be developed upon further examination that the case upon trial could not, under any circumstances, come within the class towards which the witness' bias extended, then, possibly, the juror would be qualified. But in this case the various jurors in answer to this question declared in the negative, and the examination there closed. Clearly, there was no substantial error in allowing the question to be answered.

One Bradley testified at the preliminary examination of the defendant. He was a very important witness. At the trial his evidence taken at the preliminary examination was offered, supported by an attempted showing that he had since died. Section 686 of the Penal Code provides that this kind of evidence may be introduced "upon it being satisfactorily shown to the court" that the party is dead or insane, or cannot after due diligence be found in the state. The sole showing made by the prosecution going to the fact of the death of the witness was in the form of an affidavit made by his sister to the effect that he was dead. This affidavit was admitted under objection. The evidence introduced to show the death of the witness was as much a part of the trial as any other part of it, and the fact that the witness was dead could no more be shown by affidavit than the fact that dying declarations could be shown by affidavit to have been made under the sense of impending death, or that the contents of a written document could be shown, supplemented by an affidavit to the effect that the document was lost. The statute says the fact of death must be satisfactorily shown to the court. It means the fact of death must be shown by relevant and competent evidence. We know of no case where it has ever been held that an affidavit may be introduced as evidence at the actual trial of a defendant. The statute (section 2019, Code Civ. Proc.) forbids it. The only answer found in the brief of the attorney general to appellant's contention in this particular is the claim that an affidavit may be used upon the hearing of a motion, and that the introduction of this evidence partook of the character of a motion. We cannot indorse this contention. Almost every state constitution in the Union has a provision declaring that a defendant is entitled to be confronted at his trial by the witnesses against him. While our constitution has no such provision, yet that declaration is found in the Penal Code of the state, and, while there are a few statutory exceptions made to the rule there declared, still the right thus given to a defendant by the statute is deemed a most substantial one. If the practice here adopted could be allowed, then a defendant would be deprived of the right to cross-examine the witnesses against him,—a right of the highest importance.

Various objections are made to the admission in evidence of the reporter's notes of the testimony of Harris and Bradley, given and taken at the preliminary examination. The statute allowing this character of evidence to be introduced at the trial is constitutional. People v. Oiler, 66 Cal. 101, 4 Pac. 1066; Same v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697; Same v. Sierp, 116 Cal. 250, 48 Pac. 88; Same v. Cady, 117 Cal. 10, 48 Pac. 908. The various objections raised by appellant's brief upon this branch of the case are entirely too technical to possess substantial merit. A review of the soundness of the ruling of the court in striking out the answer of the witness to the effect that defendant's "manner was bad, desperate, crazy," becomes immaterial, for subsequently the same evidence was given by the witness without objection.

It is claimed that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence in this: that defendant's insanity was established without substantial conflict. There is nothing whatever in this contention. Even conceding that the expert evidence and the opinion evidence of friends and acquaintances all pointed to defendant's insanity, still the jury had the right, and it was their duty, to measure and weigh that evidence in conjunction with defendant's conduct and acts as that conduct and those acts were disclosed by all the circumstances of the case; and, after so weighing all the evidence, it was their duty to say whether or not the insanity of the defendant was shown by a preponderance of evidence.

Error is complained of in the giving of an instruction which is in part as follows: "I instruct you further that there has been no evidence introduced in this case which tends to show any justification of the crime alleged in the information." This instruction is near the border line of error, as charging upon matters of fact. Upon a second trial it should not be given. Many objections are made to other instructions given to the jury, and also objections are presented to some which were offered and refused. We have examined all these objections with care, and find the great majority of them of a highly technical character. Many of the instructions find support in the authorities of this state, while others need no authority to support them. There is no substantial merit to be found in any of these contentions, and they are overruled. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

POTTER v. RANDOLPH et al. (Sac. 549.)
(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 26, 1899.)
PUBLIC LANDS—CONTEST OF TITLE—JURISDICTION OF STATE COURTS.

1. The state courts have jurisdiction of an action to quiet title, pending the determination of a contest of plaintiff's title before the United States land department, dependent on whether the lands are agricultural or mineral, and of which question only the land department has jurisdiction, and the court will delay its judgment until the decision of such question by the land department.

2. On the determination of such contest, there is no error in admitting in evidence the decision of the land department, though such decisions have not the formalities of judgments.

3. The decision by the land department of such question is conclusive on the courts, and evidence on the question is inadmissible.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Amador county.

Action to quiet title by Frank M. Potter against Clark Randolph and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appealed. Affirmed.

Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for appellants.
Wm. J. McGee, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The action was to quiet title to land, and the appeal is from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial. Plaintiff claims title derived from the United States under a commuted homestead entry, and a duplicate receipt for a patent dated prior to the commencement of the action. The answers set up claims to portions of the land under mining locations, and aver a contest with plaintiff, still pending in the United States land department, and contend that, therefore, the superior court had no jurisdiction to render judgment "until said cause in said land department of the United States has been fully determined." The matter of the contest was whether the land was more valuable for mineral than for agricultural purposes, and the court found that such contest, at the time of the trial, had been determined in favor of plaintiff, and that he was therefore entitled to his patent, and consequently to judgment. The appellants contend that the court had no jurisdiction of a suit to quiet title while the contest for the right to purchase was pending in the land office; that the question of title depended upon the further question as to whether the land claimed was mineral or not. If mineral, plaintiff had no title, and could acquire none, and, therefore, as soon as the nature of the issue was made to appear, the court should have dismissed the action, as it had no jurisdiction to determine that question. A special tribunal had been created by congress to determine such matters, and that tribunal alone could determine the issue.

The court certainly had jurisdiction of the cause. The real contention was that it could not determine the issues raised by the pleadings, because they involved a question which it could not try, and for the determination of which a special tribunal had been created. If that were so, a dismissal would have been the proper course. But was it so? Astiazaran v. Mining Co., 145 U. S. 80, 13 Sup. Ct. 457, is cited as authority. That was an action to quiet title, brought in the territorial courts of Arizona. The land was claimed under an unconfirmed Mexican grant. Congress did not establish a tribunal to determine the validity of such grants, but by law directed the surveyor general to ascertain certain facts, and report to congress, with his decision as to the validity of the grant. When congress confirmed the decision, it was final. It does not appear that the title conferred any rights, as to possession or otherwise, until confirmed. Pinkerton v. Ledoux, 129 U. S. 346, 9 Sup. Ct. 399. The court said, in substance, that the suit was, in effect, to determine whether the grant was valid. To determine that question a special tribunal had been provided. Therefore the judiciary cannot act upon it while the matter is pending in the special tribunal; "for if congress should decide the same way as the court the judgment of the court would be nugatory, and if congress should decide the other way its decision would control." That was held valid ground for a dismissal. The cases are not precisely similar. The land department of the United States is not a special tribunal organized to determine who is the owner of land. The department is the medium through which parties may acquire the title of the United States. Its functions are mostly administrative, and only incidentally judicial. It determines the existence or nonexistence of alleged facts, to enable it to select the person who is entitled to purchase. The proceeding is to acquire title, not to determine who has it. The title, when acquired, will, however, for many purposes, date back to the first step in the procedure. The court very properly then delayed the trial until the question as to the character of the land was determined by the land department, which alone had the power to decide that controversy. The court had jurisdiction of the action, but could not try that particular controversy which was involved in the action. Being a suit to quiet title, and not to recover possession, there was no special reason for anticipating the action of the department.

The case might have been different had the suit been to recover possession. Whether a person entitled to immediate possession should be kept out until these proceedings were ended may be a serious question. In a suit for possession, the court might be called upon to determine many questions involved in a contest. It would try such questions, so far as was necessary to determine the right to the possession. Such trial would not trench upon the jurisdiction of the special tribunal, or affect the proceedings, or the force and validity of any title which might be acquired in the proceeding.

We see no error in allowing in evidence the decisions of the land department, which proved that the controversy had been determined for the plaintiff since the commencement of the action. These executive officers do not enter up judgments or keep records, like the judgment roll of a court. We are not informed by the parties that notices of appeal were required, or, if so, by whom and to whom they were to be given. The land department having decided that the land was more valuable for agricultural than for mining purposes, the court was bound by the conclusion, and properly refused to consider the evidence upon that subject offered by defendants. The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. FOGG v. PERRIS IRR.
DIST. (HUTCHINGS et al., Interveners. L. A. 743).

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 30, 1899.)
APPEAL—MERITS—MOTION TO DISMISS.

Motion to dismiss appeal on the ground that appellants have no interest will not be sustained.

In bank. Appeal from superior court Riverside county.

Quo warranto by the people, on the relation of one Fogg, against the Perris Irrigation District (one Hutchings and others, interveners). There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and interveners appeal. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

C. C. Wright, Wm. C. Cox, and L. L. Boone, for appellants. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen. Ford, and Works & Lee, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding by quo warranto to determine the de jure existence of a de facto irrigation district. Certain bondholders of the district were allowed to intervene against the people, and have appealed from a judgment declaring the organization illegal. The people now move to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the interveners have no interest, there being no judgment against them. The motion involves the whole merits of the case as presented on the part of the appellants by their intervention in the superior court and by their appeal. Want of merit in an appeal is not a ground for dismissing it. Motion denied.

HIGGINS v. MANSON. (S. F. 1,738.)

EQUITABLE MORTGAGE—DESCRIPTION—EXECUTORY CONTRACT.

1. A writing accompanying a deposit of title deeds recited, "I further agree to transfer to H. all my right and title to said 160 acres of land,—certificate No. 7,072,—should I fail to pay my obligation of $100 and interest." Held, that the intention was to transfer the land itself in case of delinquency, and hence an equitable mortgage was created.

2. It was no objection that the agreement was executory, as equity regards as done that which ought to be done.

3. As the patent described the land, the reference to it was a sufficient description of the mortgaged premises.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Suit by Charles H. Higgins against Carrie A. Manson, administratrix of the estate of Homer Manson, deceased. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Geo. D. Collins, for appellant. J. N. Gillette, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Foreclosure. Defendant had judgment on a general demurrer to the complaint, from which plaintiff appeals.

The action is brought against defendant as administratrix of her deceased husband's estate. The complaint alleges that Homer Manson in his lifetime executed and delivered to plaintiff his certain written instrument, of which the following is a copy:

"$100.00. San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 2d, 1896. One day after date (without grace), I promise to pay to the order of Charles H. Higgins the sum of one hundred and no/100 dollars, for value received, with interest at the rate of one per cent. per month until paid; both principal and interest payable only in United States gold coin. [Signed] H. Manson.

"San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 2, 1896. In consideration of the sum of one hundred no/100 dollars, loaned me by Chas. H. Higgins, I this day deposit with him as security my government patent to 160 acres of timber land in Humboldt county,—certificate No. 7,072,—dated at Washington, D. C., the 18th day of October, 1889; said certificate to be returned to me if the sum of one hundred dollars and interest at the rate of one per cent. per mo. is paid in one year from date. I further agree to transfer and assign over to Chas. H. Higgins all my right and title to said 160 acres of land,—certificate No. 7,072,—should I fail to pay my obligation of one hundred dollars and interest on September 2, 1897. [Signed] Homer Manson. Witness: [Signed] Geo. E. Dodge."

The complaint alleges that the patent referred to in the instrument was issued to Manson on October 18, 1889, by the United States, whereby title was transferred to Manson to the land sought to be sold (describing it); alleges nonpayment, and waives recourse against the property of the estate, other than the above-described property; and prays judgment "for the foreclosure of said lien, and for the sale of said real property in satisfaction of said lien," and for general relief.

Appellant concedes that a lien cannot be created by the mere deposit of title deeds, but he contends that a lien in the nature of a mortgage may be imposed upon land without compliance with section 2922, Civ. Code; citing Dingley v. Bank, 57 Cal. 471; Hill v. Eldred, 49 Cal. 398; Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 419, 50 Pac. 549; and some other causes; also, sections 2872, 2881, 1636, 1643, 1647, 1656, Civ. Code. As to when a written memorandum makes the deposit of a title deed a mortgage, he cites 1 Jones, Mortg. § 187; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1266, 1235, 1237; 1 Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. § 291. To the point that the contract does not set forth a description of the mortgaged premises, it is claimed that reference is made to the patent, and by the latter the description is furnished; that the maxim, "Id certum est quod certum reddi potest," applies,—citing Preble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 251, 26 Pac. 99; Towle v. Coal Co., 99 Cal. 398, 33 Pac. 1126.

Respondent concedes that the law of this state recognizes an equitable mortgage, and also concedes that an instrument may be drawn contemporaneously with the deposit of the title deeds which a court of equity will enforce as an equitable mortgage; but it is contended that it must be such an agreement as meets the requirements of our Code, and must leave no doubt, and, further, that the instrument should "expressly state that the debt was 'secured by, or be a charge on, the land described in the deed,'"—citing 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1266, and relying especially upon Gardner v. McClure, 6 Minn. 250 (Gil. 167). The parties, by their mutual concessions, have reduced the inquiry to the single question as to the true purport and meaning of the written instrument pleaded. The true rule, as we think, was correctly stated in Howard v. Land Co., 62 Minn. 298, 64 N. W. 896: "Every express agreement in writing, whereby the party clearly indicates an intention to make some particular property therein described a security for a debt, creates an equitable lien upon the property, which is enforceable. The form of the writing is not important, provided it sufficiently appears that it was thereby intended to create a security. If that intention appears, it will create a mortgage in equity, or a specific lien on the property so intended to be mortgaged,"—citing in support thereof Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1235, 1236; Payne v. Wilson, 74 N. Y. 348; Daggett v. Rankin, 31 Cal. 321; Canal Co. v. Vallette, 21 How. 414. We are not concerned at this time as to the rights of third persons or creditors of the estate. If the complaint is good as between the parties to the action, it is not demurrable. Howard v. Land Co., supra. Gardner v. McClure, supra, is a very well considered and instructive case. The agreement there, however, clearly showed an intention to fix the lien upon the deed, and not upon the land described therein, and the opinion in the case is mainly a learned review of the doctrine from its inception in England as applicable to the mere deposit of the deed unaccompanied by any clear intention to place a lien upon the land itself. There was in that case no such clause in the contract as the concluding paragraph of the instrument here. In this paragraph there is, we think, a clear intention to make a transfer of the land itself by Manson, should he fail to pay as agreed. Reading the entire instrument, it seems to us the intention is made manifest that the land should stand as security for the debt, and the land is sufficiently described to indicate what was intended to be mortgaged. It is no answer that this part of the agreement was executory, for equity regards as done that which ought to be done. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1237. In Daggett v. Rankin, 31 Cal. 321, Mr. Justice Currey gives what Mr. Pomeroy calls "an admirable statement of this truth," namely: "The doctrine seems to be well established that an agreement in writing to give a mortgage, or a mortgage defectively executed, or an imperfect mortgage, or to appropriate specific property to the discharge of a particular debt, will create a mortgage in equity, or a specific [equitable] lien on the property intended to be mortgaged." I advise that the judgment be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is reversed.

RYER v. FLETCHER-RYER CO. (Sac.
520.)

PARTITION—STATUTORY PROCEEDING—RIGHT OF ADMINISTRATOR TO MAINTAIN ACTION.

1. Partition is a special statutory proceeding under the Code of this state.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1581, providing that, for the purpose of suits to partition the estate of a decedent, the possession of the executors or administrators is the possession of the heirs or devisees; that such possession by the heirs or devisees is subject, however, to the possession of the executor or administrator for the purposes of administration,—contemplates actions by the heirs or devisees to partition the property of the estate, and does not authorize an administrator to maintain an action for partition of real estate owned by deceased at the time of his death as tenant in common with others.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Solano county.

Action by Mary Jane Ryer, administratrix of the estate of William T. S. Ryer, deceased, against the Fletcher-Ryer Company for partition. From an interlocutory judgment ordering the property to be partitioned, and appointing referees to make such partition, defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. H. Countryman, for appellant. M. M. Estee and Oscar B. Coghlan, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought by plaintiff, as administratrix of the estate of William T. S. Ryer, deceased, against the defendant corporation, for the purpose of having the lands described in the amended complaint partitioned according to the respective rights of the plaintiff, as such administratrix, and of defendant corporation. A demurrer was interposed by defendant to the amended complaint, and overruled. The defendant then answered, and after trial an interlocutory judgment or order was entered, ordering the property to be partitioned in certain proportions, and appointing referees to make such partition. The defendant has appealed from said interlocutory judgment.

The first point urged is that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the amended complaint. The question for determination here is as to whether the administratrix of the estate of deceased, in her representative capacity, can maintain an action for the partition of real estate owned by deceased at the time of his death as tenant in common with defendant. Partition, under our Code, is a special statutory proceeding. Waterman v. Lawrence, 19 Cal. 218; Gates v. Salmon, 35 Cal. 597. We must therefore look to the statute for the authority to bring the action. It is provided in our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 752): "When several co-tenants hold and are in possession of real property as parceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, in which one or more of them have an estate of inheritance, or for life or lives, or for years, an action may be brought by one or more of such persons for a partition thereof," etc. The plaintiff is not one of the parties named in the statute. She is not a co-tenant, either as parcener, joint tenant, or tenant in common. The Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1675 et seq.) provides that in probate proceedings, "when the estate, real or personal, assigned by the decree of distribution to two or more heirs, devisees or legatees, is in common and undivided, and the respective shares are not separated and distinguished, partition or distribution may be made," etc.; but the proceeding in this case is not claimed to be under the authority given by this section of the Code, and in fact is not a proceeding in the estate, but an action in the superior court for partition. We look in vain for any authority to bring such action, and our attention has been called to none. The estate of a deceased vests, immediately upon his death, in his heirs or devisees,—subject, of course, to the payment of his debts. The administrator is entitled to the possession of the estate for the purposes of administration. It is his duty to preserve it and distribute it as the court may direct. He may, for certain purposes named in the statute, sell either the real or personal property, by order of the court first obtained. He cannot represent either side in a contest between heirs, devisees, or legatees. He should perform his duty, preserve the estate, pay the debts, and turn over the property to the parties to whom it is given by decree of the court. Roach v. Coffey, 73 Cal. 282, 14 Pac 840. The statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1582) gives the administrator the right to maintain actions for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or for the possession thereof, or to quiet title thereto, or to determine any adverse claim thereto. But this is not such action. It is said that authority to bring this action exists under Code Civ. Proc. § 1581, which provides "for the purpose of bringing suits to quiet title, or for partition of such estate, the possession of the executors or administrators is the possession of the heirs or devisees; such possession by the heirs or devisees is subject, however, to the possession of the executor or administrator, for the purposes of administration, as provided in this title." We think the section refers to and contemplates actions by the heirs or devisees for quieting title to or partitioning the property of the estate; the intent being to give the heirs or devisees all the rights which actual possession would give them, and to make the possession of the administrator the same as if the heirs or devisees were actually in possession, preserving, however, all the rights of the executor or administrator for the purposes of administration. This construction is consistent with the authority expressly given to the heirs or devisees to maintain actions in ejectment, or for the purpose of quieting title, by section 1452, Id. The "partition of such estate" evidently refers to suits brought by the heirs or devisees. The possession of the administrator does not divest the heir or devisee of the fee. His possession is for the heirs or devisees who are the owners and seised in fee, subject to the temporary right of the administrator to the possession, and subject to the defined statutory authority and powers of sale given to the administrator. In partition proceedings all parties are actors, and a judgment in the case binds all parties,—the plaintiff as well as the defendant. The administrator performs his trust when he carefully preserves the property, and delivers it over to the heir or devisee with such title as the deceased had at his death. Whether it be an estate in fee, for life, or for years; whether it be the entire fee, or an undivided interest as tenant in common,—it should follow the same rule, and, after the administration, go to its rightful owner.

In Freem. Co-Ten. § 454, it is said, "An administrator, though the estate be shown to be insolvent, has no such seisin in the land of the deceased as entitles him to apply for partition." The same rule is laid down in 2 Woerner, Adm'n (2d Ed.) pp. 1244, 1245, § 567. It is, we believe, universally held that the administrator of an estate has no such interest in the land as entitles him to institute partition proceedings unless power is expressly given him by statute, as in Indiana and Utah. Whitlock v. Willard, 18 Fla. 166; Foster v. Newton, 46 Miss. 661; Speer v. Speer, 14 N. J. Eq. 240; Nason v. Willard, 2 Mass. 478; Richards v. Richards, 136 Mass. 126; Tindal v. Drake, 51 Ala. 578; Campau v. Campau, 19 Mich. 116; Beecher v. Beecher, 43 Conn. 560; Throckmorton v. Pence, 121 Mo. 58, 25 S. W. 843; Nelson v. Haisley (Fla.) 22 South. 265; Garrison v. Cox, 99 N. C. 478, 6 S. E. 124. In the case of Whitlock v. Willard, 18 Fla. 166, it is said: "In the matter of partition in equity, however, we cannot see where, either before or since the statute of this state controlling this subject, an administrator can be held to have such right; and we have been unable, in our examination, to find a single case which sustains such proposition. On the contrary, the law as announced, so far as we know, without exception, under every statutory policy, is that he cannot." Counsel quote a sentence from Bath v. Valdez, 70 Cal. 350, 11 Pac. 724, in which it is said, "Actions may be maintained by the executor or administrator of an estate to recover possession of the real property, for partition thereof, or to quiet title thereto." The language used was not necessary in the case, as no question was in any way at issue involving the right of an administrator to maintain an action for partition, and was clearly obiter dictum. It becomes unnecessary to discuss the many other questions in the case. The judgment is reversed, and the court below directed to dismiss the action.

HART v. CHURCH et al. (L. A. 507.)

HOMESTEAD—MORTGAGES—EXECUTION—RATIFICATION—CANCELLATION—PARTIES—MARRIED WOMEN—NOTES—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 1242, requiring an incumbrance on a homestead to be acknowledged by both husband and wife, a mortgage on a homestead, executed by a wife alone, is void, though five months after such execution and delivery the husband executes a declaration on the mortgage, stating that he concurs in the mortgage as of the date of its execution.

2. The statute requiring one to bring an action for the rescission of a contract for fraud within three years after discovery of the fraud does not preclude him from interposing fraud as a defense in an action on such a contract, brought by the person guilty of the fraud more than three years after the former had discovered the fraud.

3. A mortgage on a homestead that is void for want of a joint execution by the husband and wife, as required by Civ. Code, § 1242, cannot be ratified by either spouse alone, nor could either be estopped by his or her conduct alone from asserting the invalidity.

4. A married woman, who has been fraudulently induced to execute a note, may condone the fraud, or so conduct herself as to be estopped from asserting the invalidity of the note.

5. A married woman cannot assert the invalidity of a note executed by her on the ground of fraud as against a bona fide purchaser.

6. Where a holder of a note in an action thereon proves that he purchased it before maturity, and that he paid a valuable consideration therefor, the maker, alleging fraud as a defense, has the burden of showing that the holder knew when he purchased that the note was procured by fraud, and knew of the seller's fraudulent intention in making the sale.

7. Where a purchaser of a note that had been procured by fraud brings an action thereon, and the defendant maker shows the seller's fraudulent intent, the purchaser has the burden of showing a valuable consideration.

8. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, making the joining of a husband with a wife, when she is a party, unnecessary where the action concerns her claim to the homestead property, a husband is not a necessary party in a suit by his wife to cancel a mortgage on their homestead.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by Eleanor Hart against Katharine A. Church and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed in part.

John G. North, for appellants. Wm. J. Hunsaker and Wm. Peck, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought her action to procure the surrender and cancellation of a mortgage in the sum of $5,000 upon the homestead. She pleaded: That in January, 1894, when she was the wife of Hart, the latter executed and acknowledged the declaration of homestead upon the premises in question. Thereafter, in January, 1895, her husband, for a valuable consideration, conveyed to her all his interest in the land, and that ever since that day she has been the owner in fee thereof. That she was induced by her husband to admit to her household the defendant Katharine A. Church. That said Katharine A. Church and her husband became and continued to be unduly intimate with each other. That in the month of December, 1894, they entered into a conspiracy and agreement "whereby they confederated and agreed together that they would, for their joint and mutual use and benefit, by threats, intimidation, and undue influence, compel plaintiff to execute and deliver to said defendant Katharine A. Church a mortgage upon said real estate to secure the payment to her of the sum of $5,000, notwithstanding the fact that said plaintiff was not indebted to said defendant in any sum whatever." That, while plaintiff was in a distracted mental and feeble bodily condition, in pursuance of the conspiracy, Katharine A. Church threatened and told plaintiff that, if plaintiff did not at once execute the mortgage, "she, said defendant, would procure the husband of plaintiff to obtain a divorce from plaintiff," and Katharine A. Church induced the husband to write plaintiff a letter, and he did write her a letter, threatening that he would procure a divorce from her if she did not immediately execute the mortgage demanded by the defendant. That "by reason of the representations and threats of the defendant and the commands of her husband she was put in fear, and greatly distressed, and believed, in her enfeebled mental and physical condition, that her husband would sue for a divorce, and attempt to ruin her in character, if she refused to execute the mortgage," and under such fear she executed it upon the 7th day of March, 1895. That, upon the 1st day of August following, Roswell Hart, her husband, executed the following written instrument upon the same paper which contained the mortgage: "I, Roswell Hart, husband of Eleanor Hart, for a valuable consideration, hereby join and concur in the foregoing mortgage as of the 6th day of March, 1895." This was signed and acknowledged by Hart, and the mortgage, together with Hart's declarations as above given, was recorded on the 2d day of August, 1895. This action was commenced by plaintiff upon March 20, 1896. In excuse for her delay in seeking to enforce a cancellation, she pleaded that from the 7th day of March, 1895, the time of the execution of the mortgage, to the 28th day of April, 1895, she was ill, and unable to attend to business; that on May 1, 1895, she commenced a suit for divorce against her husband, charging him with adultery with the defendant Katharine Church, "and her said husband, acting for himself and said Katharine A. Church, and for the purpose of inducing the said plaintiff to dismiss her suit for divorce against him, and to refrain from bringing an action against said defendant to procure the cancellation of said mortgage, promised plaintiff to procure from said defendant a satisfaction of said mortgage, and said Roswell Hart from time to time thereafter until about March 1, 1896, renewed said promise to procure such satisfaction, and plaintiff, relying upon the aforesaid promises of her husband to procure such satisfaction, did refrain from taking any measures to rescind the mortgage, or bring an action to procure a rescission and cancellation thereof; that plaintiff was not informed that said Roswell Hart could not and would not procure such satisfaction of said mortgage until about the 1st day of March, 1896, whereupon she employed counsel to commence this action, and did commence this action on the 20th day of March, 1896." Her prayer was that she be adjudged the owner in fee of the property, that the mortgage be declared void and canceled, and for general relief. To this complaint defendants interposed demurrers, both general and special. These being overruled, the defendant Katharine Church answered, denying the averments of the complaint, and pleading that the mortgage was freely and voluntarily given as security for a debt due her from Roswell Hart; pleading further that Roswell Hart never conveyed the mortgaged land to his wife, but that she had surreptitiously and fraudulently secured possession of a deed to this land which had never been delivered to her, and caused it to be placed upon record; that Roswell Hart thereafter began a suit against her to set aside the deed, when, on the 13th day of May, 1895, plaintiff executed to him her deed to an undivided one-half of the land, subject to the mortgage made to this defendant. The defendant Elton Church, who is the son of the defendant Katharine Church, answered, denying the allegations of the complaint, and filed a cross complaint, and alleging that he was the owner by purchase for a valuable consideration, and, without notice of the note and mortgage in question, pleaded certain acts and declarations of the plaintiff by way of ratification of her contract of mortgage, and asked that she be estopped from contesting the validity of the same, and that he be decreed the bona fide owner and holder of them. In this condition of the pleadings the cause went to trial before a jury.

It is contended by appellant that this is not an action to determine the validity of an adverse claim, under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but is an action under section 3412 of the Civil Code, which declares that a written instrument, in respect to which there is reasonable apprehension that, if left outstanding, it may cause serious injury to a person against whom it is void or voidable, may, upon his application, be so adjudged and ordered to be delivered up or canceled; and in this connection reference is had to the case of Castro v. Barry, 79 Cal. 445, 21 Pac. 946. It is further argued that the sole ground presented for the rescission and cancellation of this contract is that it was procured from the plaintiff by menace and fraud, and, if the complaint does not show equity, the relief prayed for will be withheld. If we could adopt appellant's view that the complaint seeks relief solely upon the ground of fraud, and that the contract of mortgage was, therefore, not absolutely void, but voidable merely, appellant's conclusion would be impregnable, and it would become necessary in the first instance to consider the sufficiency of the complaint as a pleading seeking such relief. But, if all the allegations respecting the fraud were eliminated from the complaint, there would still be left averments sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It would be a cause of action directed against this particular written instrument, and under it the court would be asked to decree, not that the instrument was voidable, but that, because of the manner of its attempted execution, it was void absolutely. These particular averments of the complaint—and as to them it may be said that they are sustained by the evidence and findings—are substantially the following: The plaintiff, the wife of Roswell Hart, executed a mortgage upon the homestead to the defendant Katharine Church for the sum of $5,000. The mortgage was simply a mortgage from Eleanor Hart, mortgagor, to Katharine A. Church, mortgagee, and did not contemplate nor provide for the joining therein of plaintiff's husband. The mortgagor, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, was not indebted to the mortgagee in any sum whatever. This mortgage, dated the 6th day of March, 1895, was acknowledged by the mortgagor upon the 7th day of March following, and was filed for record upon the last-named day. Nearly five months thereafter,—that is to say, upon the 1st day of August, 1895,—Roswell Hart, husband of plaintiff, signed and acknowledged the following writing, which had been transcribed upon the mortgage theretofore given by his wife: "I, Roswell Hart, husband of Eleanor Hart, for a valuable consideration, hereby join and concur in the foregoing mortgage as of the 6th day of March, 1895," and upon August 2, 1895, the mortgage was again filed for record in the recorder's office.

Under these allegations the question arises whether or not a mortgage so executed upon the homestead property creates any lien thereon, and, if not, the judgment annulling it must be upheld, regardless of any consideration of the alleged fraud. "The homestead of a married person cannot be conveyed or incumbered unless the instrument by which it is conveyed or incumbered is executed and acknowledged by both the husband and wife." Civ. Code, § 1242. The provisions of the earlier homestead act of 1860, as amended in 1862, were somewhat different in their phraseology, but in effect they were the same as those now set forth in the Code. Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 22 Pac. 551. As early as Poole v. Gerrard, 6 Cal. 71, it was said by this court, "To make a valid sale of the homestead requires the joint deed of husband and wife." In Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 11, the homestead act received elaborate consideration from this court, and Chief Justice Sawyer, in delivering its opinion, not once, but repeatedly, enunciated an interpretation of the statute to the effect that the interest in the land to the extent of the homestead value cannot, after the declaration, and while both spouses are alive, "be severed, alienated, incumbered, divested, destroyed, or impaired without the concurrent act of both parties in the mode prescribed by the act." In Gagliardo v. Dumont, 54 Cal. 496, still considering the statute of 1860, it is said: "Under the restraints imposed by the homestead law, neither the husband nor the wife had power to transfer the homestead by a separate conveyance, nor could either incumber it to the prejudice of the other, or of both, or to the destruction of the homestead itself. * * * Neither could, without the consent and concurrence of the other, alienate or transfer it. It was created as a place of residence for the family, and it is the policy of the law to preserve it intact for that purpose until both the husband and wife shall mutually resolve to destroy it by alienation or abandonment. In pursuance of that policy, its destruction is prohibited except by the joint act of both in the mode provided by the homestead law." The case of Burkett v. Burkett, 78 Cal. 310, 20 Pac. 715, arose when the homestead statute had been superseded by the Code provision, and in discussing the Code provision it is said: "The object of the statute, as construed by this court, is to prevent the destruction of the homestead except by the consent of the parties expressed by a joint conveyance." We have been at pains thus to quote from the decisions of this court to show that uniformly and without any conflict the statute and the Code, though not using the term "jointly" or "concurrently," have been construed to mean that the homestead cannot be alienated or incumbered by separate instruments separately executed by the husband and wife, and that it can only be so alienated or incumbered by the joint and concurrent execution of the instrument by the two. Neither Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 564, nor Dentzel v. Waldie, 30 Cal. 138, at all militate against this declaration. In both of these cases the attempt was made to convey the wife's separate property. In both cases it was found that the assent of the husband to the execution of the deed was contemporaneous with, and part of, the execution of the deed of the wife.

Such being our law relative to the alienation or incumbrance of homesteads, it is apparent at once that this attempted mortgage is absolutely void. Clearly, the execution and acknowledgment by the wife alone of a mortgage upon the homestead were the merest nullity. Nor did the fact that the husband five months thereafter wrote upon the mortgage paper a statement that he joined and concurred therein, and signed and acknowledged this declaration, add any validity to an instrument, which at the time when it was drawn, signed, acknowledged, and delivered by the wife was nothing more than her own futile and abortive attempt to incumber the homestead. The husband's declaration, five months after, that he joined in this separate mortgage of his wife as of the date when it was executed, did not make the mortgage an instrument jointly and concurrently executed by the parties in the following essential respect, if in no other: The law declares that the mortgage shall be executed by both parties, and, as this law has been construed, it is to be jointly and concurrently executed by both parties in one instrument. An essential part of execution is delivery. It must be concurrently delivered by both parties. It was delivered by the wife upon March 7th, and, the husband not joining therein, such a delivery was a nullity. Five months thereafter, when the husband took into his hands the mortgage, and indorsed upon it the words above quoted, and in turn handed it back to the mortgagee, it was in no sense a joint delivery, or a delivery of the wife at all. The conclusion thus reached, that the mortgage was absolutely void for a failure to execute it in compliance with the terms of the Code, justifies the judgment of the trial court, without regard to the question of its fraudulent procurement.

The complaint asked merely for the rescission and cancellation of the mortgage, and did not ask for the surrender and cancellation of the note for $5,000 executed by plaintiff to the defendant Katharine Church, which note was secured by the mortgage. The mortgage being but an incident to the debt, it could well be that one might procure through fraud security for a valid obligation. The result, therefore, of a decision upon the issues tendered by plaintiff would be to leave the note outstanding while canceling the mortgage which secured it. But the defendant Elton Church, in addition to answering, filed a cross complaint, in which he alleged the execution by plaintiff to defendant Katharine Church of her promissory note for $5,000, secured by the mortgage in question; that the note was indorsed and the mortgage assigned to him before maturity; that he became the owner and holder of the note and mortgage without knowledge or notice of any of the fraudulent matters set forth by the plaintiff; and he further set forth facts which he contended amounted to a ratification of the contract by the plaintiff, and which also estopped her from contesting the validity of the instruments she had executed. This cross complaint further asked that plaintiff's husband be made a party to the action, and this was done. A decree was sought that the note and mortgage in the hands of the cross complainant be decreed good and valid. To this cross complaint plaintiff made answer by denial, and affirmatively set up in avoidance of both the note and the mortgage the fraudulent matters which she had pleaded in her complaint. Special issues upon many of these questions were submitted to the jury. Upon each and all of them they found for the plaintiff. The court adopted most of their findings, and supplemented them with others of its own, and so rendered judgment. It was found that both the note and mortgage were secured by fraud; that plaintiff had been guilty of no laches, nor had she acquiesced in or ratified her contract; and that the cross complainant took with notice and knowledge of the facts.

It is insisted that the complaint itself shows a lack of equity, in that plaintiff's delay in commencing her action for cancellation is not sufficiently explained, and it is argued that the same omissions which render her complaint defective make her defense to the cross complaint upon the ground of fraud itself insufficient. It is true, as appellant contends, that where a party seeks a rescission of a contract he must ask with promptness, and that the question as to what is or is not a prompt effort to rescind must depend in each case upon its own peculiar facts. It is also true that, where a party seeks relief upon the ground of fraud or mistake, the action must be commenced within three years after the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake; but a different case is presented where the party who has procured the fraudulent contract, or who seeks to take advantage of it, asks to have it declared valid, or to enforce its executory terms, and is thus himself asking affirmative relief. The three-years statute of limitations does not bar the defendant in such a case from objecting to the validity or to the enforcement of the contract upon the ground of fraud. It is not incumbent upon one who has thus been defrauded to go into court, and ask relief, but he may abide his time, and, when enforcement is sought against him, excuse himself from performance by proof of the fraud. Of course, in such a case he incurs the risk of defeat by the intervention of the rights of innocent parties. As to the mortgage considered as security apart from the promissory note, it has already been said that, regardless of the question of fraud in its procurement, it is a void instrument for a lack of execution in the manner demanded by the Code. Since, to be a valid mortgage upon the homestead, it must be concurrently executed and acknowledged by both spouses, where not so executed neither could separately ratify it so as to give it validity, nor be estopped by conduct from asserting its invalidity, because, under no circumstances, could the act or conduct of either separately be held to validate such a void instrument without doing violence to the plain letter of the law, which declares that the homestead may be incumbered in but one way. A different question might be presented if the husband and wife, their minds meeting upon the matter, jointly and concurrently by their conduct raised against themselves an estoppel in pais. But such is not the case here presented. As neither could be separately estopped so as to validate the mortgage, the absence of a finding upon the question of estoppel, if it be conceded that such an omission exists, is immaterial. As to the note, however, the legal considerations are quite different. A wife defrauded or coerced into executing her promissory note may, after discovery of the fraud, or when freed from duress, condone the wrong, waive her right of action, and ratify her contract, or she may, by conduct, estop herself from future reliance upon the fraud or duress. But if, for a valuable consideration, her note shall, before maturity, have passed into the hands of an innocent holder, such holder takes it free from these equities and defenses. It was charged in this complaint that the defendant Elton Church took with knowledge and without consideration. Upon the trial it was shown that he became the owner of the note before its maturity. The evidence was uncontradicted and corroborated that he paid a valuable and sufficient consideration for the note and mortgage by the extinguishment of a pre-existing debt owed by his mother to himself. It is well settled in this state that the extinguishment or security of a pre-existing debt constitutes a valuable consideration for the sale or assignment of property. Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335. Elton Church having shown that he took the note and mortgage before maturity, and that he paid a valuable consideration therefor, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that he had knowledge of the fraud and of the fraudulent intent of the vendor in making the sale to him. Upon this point we think plaintiff has failed. There was introduced in evidence a letter by the defendant Katharine Church to the mother of Roswell Hart, written after the transfer of the note and mortgage to her son. In this appear expressions sufficient to raise a doubt as to the honesty of the motive which actuated Mrs. Church in making the transfer, but we are unable to discern anything in the nature of evidence to show that the son took with knowledge of the alleged fraud which had been practiced upon the plaintiff, or of the fraudulent intent of his mother in making the transfer, if such existed. It is the well-settled rule that, where a plaintiff attacks a conveyance as in fraud of his rights, it is incumbent upon him first to show the fraudulent intent of the vendor. The burden then shifts to the purchaser to show a valuable consideration, and, this shown, the burden again shifts to the plaintiff, who must show the vendee's knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the vendor. Ross v. Wellman, 102 Cal. 4, 36 Pac. 402. As we read the evidence, there was a failure to show this knowledge upon the part of Elton Church. It follows therefrom that while, as to the mortgage, the finding that he took with knowledge, even though erroneous, is without injury, because the mortgage is absolutely void as to the note, this finding being unsupported; and since, from the evidence introduced, Elton Church stands in the position of an innocent purchaser, the decree declaring the note to be fraudulent and voidable and ordering its cancellation cannot be maintained.

Plaintiff's action being one in protection of her homestead right, her husband, Roswell Hart, was not a necessary party. Code Civ. Proc. § 370; Prey v. Stanley, 110 Cal. 423, 42 Pac. 908.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment, in so far as it decrees invalid and orders the cancellation of the mortgage, be affirmed; but that, in so far as it decrees invalid and orders the cancellation of the note, it be reversed, and that the cause of action pleaded in defendant Elton Church's cross complaint, so far as concerns the note in question, be remanded for further proceedings.

I concur: TEMPLE, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment and in the opinion of Mr. Justice HENSHAW. It is proper to say, however, that this decision is not to be taken as authority, one way or the other, on the question whether or not one, knowing the facts, who takes a note which, though negotiable in form, is secured by mortgage, is in the position of an indorsee in due course of negotiable paper, and can avoid equities existing between the original parties. That question was not raised in this case. It was raised in Hays v. Plummer (Cal.) 58 Pac. 447, but was not there determined.

SAVINGS BANK OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY
v. BARRETT. (L. A. 480.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 24, 1899.)

SAVINGS AND LOAN CORPORATIONS—POWERS—INVESTMENT OF FUNDS—PURCHASE OF REAL-ESTATE MORTGAGES—CORPORATE POWERS—EXERCISE BY DIRECTORS—MORT-GAGES—FORECLOSURE—IDLE ACT—REDEMP-TION.

1. By the power conferred by Civ. Code, § 571, on savings and loan corporations, to "invest" the funds of their members, stockholders, and depositors, they may use their funds to buy interest-bearing notes and mortgages.

2. The exception by Civ. Code, § 574, subd. 5, of mortgages on real estate from personal property which it prohibited savings and loan corporations from purchasing, implies that they are authorized to purchase such mortgages; and the authority to do so necessarily carries with it the right to purchase the obligations secured thereby.

3. Whether the purchase of a mortgage is required by the purposes of the corporation, within Civ. Code, § 354, subd. 4, authorizing all corporations to purchase such personal estate "as the purposes of the corporation may require," not exceeding limitations thereon, is to be determined by its board of directors, by whom, as provided by section 305, its corporate powers are exercised; and it is not open to investigation at the instance of the mortgagor.

4. Where plaintiff bought defendant's note and mortgage, and surrendered and delivered the same to him in consideration for his execution of a new note and mortgage directly to plaintiff, his claim, in avoidance of his obligation, that plaintiff made no "loan" of money to him, is without merit, as the handling of money in the transaction would have been an idle act, which Civ. Code, § 3532, declares the law does not require.

5. St. 1897, p. 41, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 702, so as to extend the time for redemption from sales under execution to one year, does not apply to sales under foreclosure of mortgages executed prior to its enactment.

6. Defects in the complaint may be cured by the answer, notwithstanding a demurrer directed against them was overruled.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by the Savings Bank of San Diego County, a corporation, against George N. Barrett. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hammack & Jerauld, for appellant. W. T. McNeally, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff is a corporation organized under the provisions of title 10 of the part of the Civil Code relating to corporations, and seeks by this action the foreclosure of a mortgage executed to it by the defendant June 15, 1893, to secure the payment of his promissory note of the same date. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

The defendant admits the execution of the note and mortgage, but defends the action thereon upon the ground that the same was without consideration, and in support of his defense alleges that in June, 1888, he executed a promissory note, and a mortgage securing the same upon the lands described in the complaint, to one Hamilton, who afterwards sold and transferred the same to the Consolidated National Bank of San Diego; that in June, 1891, this bank sold and transferred the same to the plaintiff herein; that shortly before the maturity of this note he executed to the plaintiff the note and mortgage upon which the action was brought; and that the sole consideration therefor was the surrender and delivery to him by the plaintiff of the Hamilton note and mortgage. It is contended by him that upon these facts it appears that the note and mortgage sued upon were without consideration; that under the power conferred upon the plaintiff in section 571, Civ. Code, it could only "loan" the funds of its stockholders and depositors, and was incapable of purchasing or becoming the owner of the Hamilton note; that, notwithstanding the transfer of said note to the plaintiff, it was worthless in its hands, and its surrender to the defendant did not constitute a consideration for the execution of the note and mortgage sued on. It is unnecessary to determine whether the defendant is in a position to make this defense to the payment of the note executed by him to the plaintiff, since we are of the opinion that for other reasons the judgment of the superior court must be affirmed.

Section 571, Civ. Code, provides: "Corporations organized for the purpose of accumulating and loaning the funds of their members, stockholders and depositors may loan and invest the funds thereof, receive deposits of money, loan, invest and collect the same, with interest, and may repay depositors with or without interest." The authority given by this section to such corporation to "invest" its funds is distinct from that given to "loan" them, and may be exercised with the same effect. While the latter term is technically limited to transactions in which the corporation delivers to the borrower, and the borrower receives from it, a given sum of money upon his agreement with it to repay the same, the former includes all of the transactions in which the funds of the corporation are placed or employed by it for the purpose of receiving an income therefrom. Webster defines the term "invest" as follows: "To lay out [money or capital] in business, with the view of obtaining an income, or profit; as to invest money in bank stock." The Century Dictionary gives the following definition of the word: "To employ for some profitable use; convert into some other form of wealth, usually of a more or less permanent nature, as in the purchase of property or shares, or in loans secured by mortgage, etc.; said of money or capital." The meaning to be given to the term was presented in Jennings v. Davis, 31 Conn. 134. By the laws then prevailing in that state the husband was entitled to all personal property coming to the wife during coverture, but it was provided that when her real estate was sold, and the proceeds thereof were "secured or invested in her name," it should, in equity, be deemed to belong to her. Certain real estate of the wife had been sold, and a note for the price given by the purchaser to her. Before the payment of the note both husband and wife died, and the note was claimed by the personal representatives of each. The court held that the note belonged to the wife; that, as it was taken in her name for the proceeds of the sale of her real estate, those proceeds were "invested" in it,—saying: "Promissory notes are the subject of sale and transfer like ordinary articles of merchandise, and money paid for a note, and especially for a note carrying interest, may with entire propriety be said to be 'invested' in that note." In Una v. Dodd, 39 N. J. Eq. 186, the vice chancellor said upon the same subject: "So far as I am aware, there is no technical, legal definition of the term 'investment,' as applied to money. In its most comprehensive sense, I think it is generally understood to signify the laying out of money in such manner that it may produce a revenue, whether the particular method be a loan, or the purchase of stocks, securities, or other property. In common parlance it means putting out money on interest, either by way of loan or of the purchase of income-producing property." See, also, Duncan v. Institution, 10 Gill & J. 299; Shoemaker v. Smith, 37 Ind. 123; Neel v. Beach, 92 Pa. St. 226; Insurance Co. v. Phillips, 141 Mass. 540, 6 N. E. 534.

Under subdivision 4, § 354, Civ. Code, all corporations have power "to purchase, hold and convey such real and personal estate as the purposes of the corporation may require, not exceeding the amount limited in this part." The limitation thus referred to upon the class of corporations to which the plaintiff belongs is found in section 574, Civ. Code. The right of the plaintiff to purchase or hold real estate is not involved in the present case. The prohibition in subdivision 5 of this section of the purchase by such corporation of personal property, "except * * * mortgages on real estate," implies that it is authorized to purchase mortgages on real estate. The exception to this class of personal property from that which it is prohibited to purchase leaves the corporation free to exercise the power given in section 354. The authority to purchase mortgages on real estate necessarily carries with it the right to purchase the obligations secured by the mortgages, since otherwise the mortgages would be valueless. Whether the purchase of the mortgage in question was "such as the purposes of the corporation required" was to be determined by its board of directors (Civ. Code, § 305), and is not open to investigation at the instance of the defendant. The plaintiff, therefore, by its purchase of the Hamilton note and mortgage, became vested with the title thereto, and with the right to enforce their obligation against the defendant; and, as stated by appellant in his brief, if the plaintiff could have recovered from the defendant upon the Hamilton note and mortgage, according to the express terms of that contract, then the surrender of the same to the defendant would be a good consideration for the contract in suit.

The further contention that, as the note and mortgage sued on were executed in consideration of the surrender and delivery to him of the Hamilton note and mortgage, the plaintiff made no "loan" of money to the defendant, is without merit. It would not be claimed that if the plaintiff at the time of the transaction had delivered the money to the defendant, and the defendant had immediately handed it back to the plaintiff and received therefor the Hamilton note and mortgage, he would not be liable upon his note to the plaintiff. The law does not require idle acts (Civ. Code, § 3532), and the rights and obligations of the parties to the transaction could not be varied by the physical handling of the money, as thus suggested, or by its omission.

The amendment of section 702, Code Civ. Proc., in 1897 (St. 1897, p. 41), extending the time for redemption from sales under execution to one year, has no application to sales under the foreclosure of a mortgage executed prior to the enactment of this statute. Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 118, 16 Sup. Ct. 1042.

The defendant set forth in his answer the class of corporations to which the plaintiff belongs, and thereby obviated the defects of the complaint to which his demurrer was directed. Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 413, 50 Pac. 546. The judgment and order are affirmed.

Ex parte McKENNA. (Cr. 524.)
MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—LICENSES—DISCRETION—VALIDITY.

1. Imposition of a discriminating and prohibitory tax on merchants using trading stamps, by a city authorized to license, for the purposes of regulation and revenue, all kinds of business, lawful games, etc., cannot be justified on the ground that such tax is levied on a lottery, since a lottery, being unlawful, cannot be licensed.

2. Where a city having power to license all kinds of business, lawful games, etc., for the purposes of regulation and revenue, adopted a graduated license tax on merchants according to the amount of monthly sales, and imposed a prohibitory license tax, eight times the maximum tax authorized, on merchants issuing trading stamps, such issuance of trading stamps not being an essentially different business from that of other merchants, or furnishing any justification for a discriminating ordinance, it is unreasonable and invalid, as in restraint of trade.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Application by C. E. McKenna for a writ of habeas corpus. Prisoner discharged.

Frank H. Short, for petitioner.

BEATTY, C. J. The petitioner was arrested upon a complaint charging him with the offense of carrying on and conducting at the city of Fresno the business of selling trading stamps redeemable in money, merchandise, or other things, and so redeeming the same, without the necessary license, contrary to the provisions of a city ordinance, etc. This charge is in the language of an ordinance of the city of Fresno imposing a license tax of $200 per quarter upon all persons carrying on such a business. The prisoner contends that the ordinance is oppressive, discriminating, prohibitory, and unreasonable; that it is therefore void, and his imprisonment unlawful. Fresno is a city of the fifth class, and has the power to license, for the purposes of regulation and revenue, all kinds of business, lawful games, etc. In pursuance of this power, it has adopted a general ordinance imposing a graduated license tax upon merchants, ranging from $2.50 to $25, according to the amount of monthly sales; $25 being the amount required of those whose sales equal or exceed $30,000 per month. The ordinance in question here is a recent amendment to the general license ordinance, and, in exacting from every person issuing trading stamps, no matter how insignificant his monthly sales, a tax eight times the amount required of merchants doing the very largest business without the use of such stamps, was evidently designed to be prohibitory, as it necessarily must be with respect to any dealer whose profits do not considerably exceed $200 per quarter. The sole question to be decided is whether such an ordinance is so oppressive, discriminating, and unreasonable that a court may pronounce it invalid upon that ground.

The complaint upon which the prisoner was arrested means nothing more than this: That in conducting the business of a merchant he makes a practice of issuing stamps or tickets, which he agrees to redeem, and does redeem, in merchandise or money. If such a practice is not embraced within the terms of the ordinance, the complaint charges no offense, and the imprisonment is, of course, unlawful. But it is claimed on the one hand, and conceded on the other, that the ordinance was intended to apply, and does apply, to the practice alleged, and, as above stated, the sole question is the validity of the regulation. In support of the ordinance, it is contended that the trading-stamp device is a lottery in disguise, and therefore immoral. But we cannot see that it has any resemblance to a lottery. There is in it no element of chance, and nothing in the nature of gaming. It appears to be simply a device to attract customers, or to induce those who have bought once to buy again, and in this aspect is as innocent as any form of advertising. And, besides, if it were a lottery in disguise,—a mere device to cloak a gambling scheme,—it would be unlawful, and not the subject of a license. The ordinance, therefore, cannot be upheld on this ground. It is not an ordinance to prohibit an immoral practice or to regulate a hazardous or offensive business, or the conduct of a lawful game or public exhibition. It is, under the guise of a revenue measure, an evident attempt to put an end to the issue and redemption of trading stamps by levying a discriminating and prohibitory tax upon those dealers who resort to that method of attracting customers. Many decisions are cited by the petitioner in which the courts of other states have condemned and set aside municipal ordinances such as this, upon the ground that they were unreasonable and contrary to public policy because in restraint of trade, but it is contended on the part of the people that this court in the case of Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 412, 44 Pac. 725, has established a different principle and rule of decision. It was said in that case that a municipal ordinance must be very clearly obnoxious to the objection that it is oppressive and unreasonable before it will be declared invalid by the court. "Every intendment is to be indulged in favor of its validity, and all doubts resolved in a way to uphold the lawmaking power, and a contrary conclusion will never be reached on slight consideration. It is the province and right of the municipality to regulate its local affairs, within the law, of course, and it is the duty of the courts to uphold such regulations, except it manifestly appear that the ordinance or by-law transcends the power of the municipality, and contravenes rights secured to the citizen by the constitution, or laws made in pursuance thereof." Upon these principles it was held that an ordinance of the city of Chico imposing a license tax of $50 a quarter upon traveling salesmen could not be declared invalid merely because it imposed a license somewhat less in proportion upon merchants having a fixed place of business within the city. The ground of that decision was that the manner in which Haskell conducted his business—by which he avoided the payment of rents, property tax, etc.—made it an essentially different business from that conducted by regular merchants, and was therefore a good reason for discrimination. The same cannot be said in defense of the Fresno ordinance. The persons to whom it applies pay the same rents and local taxes as other merchants, and it is not perceived how the issue of trading stamps makes theirs an essentially different business, or furnishes any justification for a discriminating ordinance. It is not necessary, therefore, to overrule, or in any respect to depart from the doctrine of, the Haskell Case, in order to pronounce the ordinance here in question invalid. Accepting the principles above quoted from the opinion in that case, it remains that in this case there is lacking a ground of discrimination which was there found to be sufficient to support the ordinance. Besides, there is no hard and fast line which divides the reasonable from the unreasonable, in such matters. Where the question is in doubt, as in the Chico Case, the ordinance will be upheld, but there may be such a palpable discrimination that there can be no doubt. We think this case furnishes an instance. To tax the smallest retail establishment eight times as much as the largest mercantile business, merely on account of its method of advertising or attracting customers, is clearly unreasonable. The prisoner is discharged.

PEOPLE v. HOLMES. (Cr. 548.)¹

LARCENY—CHARGE—CONTINUANCE—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

1. To an inquiry by a juror whether a certain amount must be taken, to comprise grand larceny, the court replied: "No. Grand larceny is committed when the property in question exceeds $50 in value, or when it is taken from the person of another. Any property of value taken from the person of another is grand larceny, without regard to its value." Held not error, the court having previously properly defined larceny and grand larceny.

2. Where the court charged the jury to consider the testimony of the accused as they would that of any other witness, in determining its weight, and that they should carefully determine the credibility to which it was entitled, and impartially consider it, it was not error to refuse to charge that they had no right to disregard accused's testimony on the ground alone that he was the defendant, and stood charged with a crime.

3. Accused cannot complain of a charge requested by himself.

4. Refusal to continue the time for pronouncing judgment is not error, several continuances having been had.

5. Newly-discovered evidence which is merely contradictory of a witness for the prosecution is not ground for new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

J. William Holmes was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hiram W. Johnson and Peter J. Shields, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GRAY, C. The defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny, for having feloniously taken from the person of L. H. Poston one certain $20 bill. The crime was committed in the city of Sacramento, at the defendant's place of business, known as the "Real Thing Saloon."

1. The most of the evidence against the defendant came from said Poston, two women who accompanied him to the saloon, and from the defendant himself. It would serve no useful purpose to either state or analyze this evidence. We deem it sufficient to say that the verdict of the jury finds ample support in the testimony, both as to the money having been feloniously taken from the person of Poston, and as to defendant's complicity in such taking.

2. When the court had concluded the instructions to the jury, and had told the clerk to swear an officer to take charge of the jury, a juror asked, "May I ask one question, for information,—whether a certain amount has to be taken, to compose grand larceny?" to which the court replied: "No, sir. As I instructed you, grand larceny is of three kinds. I will read it to you again. And, if it comes within any of those degrees, it constitutes grand larceny. Grand larceny is larceny committed in either of the following cases: First, when the property taken is of a value exceeding fifty dollars; second, when the property is taken from the person of another. Any property of value taken from the person of another is grand larceny, without regard to its value." The court, in an instruction previously given, had properly defined larceny to be "the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, leading, or driving away the personal property of another," and had also given the full statutory definition of grand larceny. In view of these previous instructions, we see no error in the court's reply to the juror except perhaps in the use of the word "degrees," and that is immaterial.

3. At the request of defendant, the court instructed the jury as follows: "The defendant has been examined as a witness in his own behalf. This is his right, and you will consider his testimony as you would that of any other witness, in determining the weight and effect to be given to it, and to be taken into consideration with other evidence in the case. You will carefully determine the amount of credibility to which his testimony is entitled, and thoroughly and impartially consider his testimony, together with all the other evidence in the case." The court refused to give the following instruction offered by defendant, to wit: "The jury have no right to disregard the testimony of the defendant on the ground alone that he is the defendant, and stands charged with the commission of a crime." The court committed no error in refusing this latter instruction. The instruction given was fair and full, and substantially covered the point contained in the rejected instruction.

4. At the request of defendant the court instructed the jury that "the circumstances should be such as to produce nearly the same degree of certainty as that which arises from direct testimony." The defendant cannot be heard to complain of an instruction requested by himself. People v. Lon Yeck, 123 Cal. 246, 55 Pac. 984.

5. There was no error in the court's refusing to continue further the time for pronouncing judgment. Several continuances had already been had, and, besides, the ground on which the continuance was asked was not good. The defendant wanted time to procure the affidavit of a witness to show newly-discovered evidence. It appears that this newly-discovered evidence was merely contradictory of one of the witnesses for the prosecution, and would not, therefore, have tuted any ground for a new trial. We advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HETTICK. (Cr. 521.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 24, 1899.)

CRIMINAL LAW—SANITY OF DEFENDANT—DETERMINATION—SUBMISSION TO JURY—DOUBT OF JUDGE—FORMER CONVICTION—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTION ON DEFENSE OF INSANITY.

1. Pen. Code, § 1368, provides that when a case is called for trial, or at any time during the trial, or when defendant is brought up for judgment on conviction, if a doubt arise as to the sanity of defendant, the court must submit the question of sanity to a jury. When defendant's case was called for trial, his attorney suggested that he was insane, and moved the submission of the question to a jury. The court refused to impanel a jury to try the issue, but stated that the evidence could be introduced on the trial, and, if it then warranted, he would suspend the trial, and impanel a jury to try such issue. The defendant introduced evidence of insanity, and admitted that the defendant's mental condition at the time of the trial was not different from that at the time of the commission of the crime. The judge announced at the hearing of the motion for a new trial "that he never at any time had the slightest doubt of the sanity of defendant." Held, there was no error in the refusal of the trial judge to impanel a jury to try the question of defendant's sanity.

2. On the trial of one accused of burglary, and who was also charged with a previous conviction of larceny, the state introduced the records of the superior court of another county, showing the conviction of a person bearing the same name as defendant, for stealing a mare from one J. P. A witness testified that he knew defendant, and that he knew him at the time of the former conviction; that defendant at that time was working for J. P.; and that he had admitted to witness that he was sent to state's prison for stealing a horse from J. P. Held sufficient to support a verdict of former conviction.

3. An instruction, where defendant set up a defense of insanity, that "the defense of insanity is one which may be resorted to in cases where the proof of the overt act is so full and complete that any other means of avoiding conviction seems hopeless"; that, therefore, while insanity was a defense to be weighed fully and justly, and, where satisfactorily established, must recommend itself to the favorable consideration of the jury, they should examine it with care, lest an ingenious counterfeit should furnish immunity for guilt,—is not erroneous.

4. One setting up insanity as a defense has the burden of proving it.

5. The defendant cannot on appeal complain of the refusal of the trial court to give certain instructions, where it does not appear from the transcript that they were requested by defendant.

6. The defendant cannot on appeal complain of the refusal of the trial court to give certain instructions, where the substance of the instructions was contained in other instructions given by the court.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

George E. Hettick was convicted of burglary in the first degree, and appealed. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appealed. Affirmed.

Capps & Capps and Callen & Rippey, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GRAY, C. Defendant was convicted of burglary in the first degree, a former conviction of grand larceny was found against him, and he was sentenced to a term of 10 years in the state prison at San Quentin.

When the case was called for trial, his attorney suggested a doubt of the sanity of the defendant, and moved the court to submit that question to a jury to be specially impaneled for the purpose, under the provisions of sections 1368 and 1369 of the Penal Code. The defendant also offered to present evidence for the purpose of creating a doubt as to defendant's sanity. The claim of the defense was that there had been no material change in the mental condition of defendant since the commission of the acts upon which the charge of burglary was based, and that his general mental condition had been the same for a period of years prior to the time of the trial, and that he had been of unsound mind during all that time, as the result of a fracture of the skull received in his childhood. The judge declined to hear evidence previous to the defendant being put upon his trial, but suggested that he would listen to the evidence taken at the trial of the case, and whenever a doubt arose in his mind as to defendant's sanity he would discontinue the trial, and impanel another jury to try the question alone of defendant's sanity. The defendant excepted to the action of the court. The trial on the information against defendant was then had. The evidence as to the burglary was strongly against the defendant, and without conflict, and left the defendant to rely solely on the defense of insanity, upon which defense evidence was taken as to the actions, conversations, and history of defendant from his birth down to and including the time of the trial. The opinions of many acquaintances of defendant, and the testimony of many experts who had examined defendant, were also received in evidence at the trial. The trial judge, after listening to all this, announced at the hearing of the motion for new trial "that he never at any time had the slightest doubt of the sanity of the defendant." The meaning of section 1368 of the Penal Code evidently is that the doubt therein referred to must exist in the mind of the judge before whom the cause is pending before the court will be authorized to grant a request of the defendant in a criminal case to have the question of his sanity tried before a jury summoned for that exclusive purpose. Webber v. Com., 119 Pa. St. 223, 13 Atl. 427. The Code provides no procedure for creating a doubt in the mind of the judge, and yet it seems to be the purpose of the law that no person should be tried for a crime while he is insane. Pen. Code, § 1367. Much, however, must be left to the judicial conscience of the trial judge in a matter of this kind. Webber v. Com., supra. In view of the absence of any claim by the defense that there had been any change in the mental condition of defendant, and in view of the express admission that there was no material difference in his condition between the time of the alleged commission of the offense and the time when the case was called for trial, we see no error in the refusal of the court to hear evidence, offered before the trial, to raise a doubt of defendant's sanity, and think the method adopted in the matter could work no prejudice to defendant. It seems there was in fact no doubt of defendant's sanity at the time of the trial, and no evidence existed that could reasonably cause such a doubt to arise. It is to be presumed that the counsel for the defendant placed all the evidence tending to show insanity, that he could discover, before the court on the trial. He was entitled to and did introduce testimony as to the mental condition of the defendant at the time of the trial, yet it appears from the record that the judge who heard this evidence never for an instant had any doubt as to the sanity of the defendant. It is not probable that it would have had any different effect on the mind of the court had this evidence been presented before the trial began. The trial judge was in a better position to estimate the evidence than this court can be, and yet, reading the evidence from the printed page, as we have, we can find nothing in it to convince us that the court was wrong in entertaining no doubt at any time as to the defendant's sanity. In the absence of such doubt, the court was not warranted in calling a special jury. People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 440, 48 Pac. 389.

In support of the charge of previous conviction of grand larceny the prosecution placed in evidence records of the superior court of San Diego county showing the conviction and sentence to one year in the state prison at San Quentin of "George Hettick" for the crime of grand larceny in having stolen a mare, the personal property of J. C. Pelton. The testimony of Charles Bell, a witness for the prosecution, was to the effect that the defendant had admitted to him that he was sent to state prison at San Quentin for stealing a horse from John C. Pelton. This witness also testified: "I knew the defendant as a boy, and at the time he was sent to San Quentin for stealing John C. Pelton's mare. I knew him at that time. I was then living in National City. I knew at that time of the offense. * * * I knew he was working at the time for John C. Pelton." There was nothing to contradict or discredit the foregoing evidence, and we deem it sufficient to support the verdict for the people on the charge of a prior conviction of larceny. People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 540.

The jury were instructed that: "The defense of insanity is one which may be resorted to in cases where the proof of the overt act is so full and complete that any other means of avoiding conviction and escaping punishment seems hopeless. While, therefore, this is a defense to be weighed fully and justly, and, when satisfactorily established, must recommend itself to the favorable consideration of the humanity and justice of the jury, they are to examine it with care, lest an ingenious counterfeit of such mental disorder should furnish immunity for guilt." It is the settled law of this state that this is a proper instruction in cases where the defense of insanity is interposed. People v. Allender, 117 Cal. 81, 48 Pac. 1014; People v. Larrabee, 115 Cal. 158, 46 Pac. 922. The burden of proof as to this defense of insanity is on the defendant, and his insanity must be established by a preponderance of the evidence, and there was no error in the instruction to that effect. People v. Allender, supra.

The defendant complains of the action of the court in refusing a number of instructions. There are two reasons why this complaint is not available to defendant: First, it does not appear from the transcript that any of these instructions were requested by the defendant; second, a part of these instructions were properly refused because they were not sound in law, and the rest of them were contained, in substance at least, in the instructions that were given to the jury. We advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; BRITT, C.

RAMISH et al. v. HARTWELL, City Treasurer (HAYES, Intervener. L. A. 503).

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 25, 1899.)
MUNICIPAL ASSESSMENTS—ENFORCEMENT—SALE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Act Feb. 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 33) § 5, provides that the city treasurer may sell land to pay delinquent assessment bonds, as provided by law for the collection of delinquent state and county taxes. Pol. Code, § 3771, at the time of the passage of the above act, provided that the tax collector should sell land for delinquent state and county taxes, at public auction, to the person who would take the least quantity of land and pay the taxes and costs of sale. St. 1895, p. 327, amended section 3771 by providing that, instead of selling the land at auction, the property on which the taxes were delinquent should be sold to the state. Held, the act of 1895 did not affect the remedy afforded by the act of February 27, 1893, and the treasurer could sell the land to the holder of the bonds or any other person.

2. Act Feb. 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 33) § 4, which provides that a city assessment shall be a first lien on the property affected thereby, and the bonds issued therefor shall be conclusive evidence of the validity of said lien, is unconstitutional, as depriving the owner of his property without due process of law.

3. Act Feb. 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 33) § 4, which provides that a city assessment shall be a first lien on the property affected thereby, and the bonds issued therefor shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of the proceedings and of the validity of said lien, will be enforced as to the regularity of the proceedings, they not being jurisdictional in their nature.

4. A city street improvement contract, which provided that the work contracted for should be commenced within 10 days from the date thereof, and completed within 240 days thereafter, sufficiently complies with Street Improvement Act, § 6, which provides that the superintendent shall fix the time for the commencement and completion of the work.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Application for mandamus by Adolph Ramish and others against William A. Hartwell, as treasurer of Los Angeles, and William Hayes, intervener. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant and intervener appealed. Affirmed.

W. E. Dunn and R. A. Redman, for appellants. Finlayson & Finlayson, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The city council of Los Angeles, in January, 1896, ordered the improvement of a portion of Sixth street in that city in accordance with the provisions of the street improvement act, and the work thus authorized was completed to the satisfaction of the superintendent of streets, and an assessment made therefor by him. Before passing its ordinance of intention therefor, the city council found, upon estimates of the city engineer, that the cost of the work would be in excess of one dollar per front foot along the line of the street upon which the improvement was to be made, and thereupon determined that serial bonds should be issued to represent the cost of the improvement, in accordance with the provisions of Act Feb. 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 33), and so declared in its ordinance of intention. After the completion of the work, the assessment, together with the warrant for its collection attached thereto, and the certificate of the city engineer, were recorded by the superintendent, and delivered to the contractors, the plaintiffs herein; and within 30 days thereafter the said warrant, with the return indorsed thereon, was returned to the said superintendent, and by him recorded in the margin of the aforesaid record. No appeal was taken to the city council, and after the expiration of 30 days from the date of the warrant the superintendent certified to the city treasurer a list of the assessments which amounted to $50 and over, and which remained unpaid, among which was an assessment upon the lot of land described in the complaint herein, amounting to $128.33. Thereupon, March 23, 1897, the city treasurer made out and issued to the said contractors, the plaintiffs herein, a bond representing the amount of this assessment against said lot of land, in accordance with the form prescribed in the aforementioned statute, by which the first installment of interest thereon was made payable July 2, 1897. No payment was made for either principal or interest on said bond, and on July 16, 1897, the plaintiffs herein elected to declare the whole amount unpaid to be due and payable, and demanded in writing of the city treasurer that he proceed to advertise and sell the lot of land upon which said bond was issued to pay the same, with interest thereon, and again, on the 19th of July, delivered to him a written demand that he forthwith proceed to advertise and sell said land by proceedings in all respects the same as were provided by law for the collection of delinquent state or county taxes on the 27th of February, 1893. The city treasurer, the defendant herein, failed to so advertise or sell the same, and gave to the plaintiffs a written statement to the effect that he refused to sell the said lot of land to any purchaser whatever except to the state, as provided by section 3771 of the Political Code, as amended March 28, 1895. The plaintiffs thereupon applied to the superior court for a writ of mandate, commanding the defendant, as such city treasurer, to proceed forthwith to advertise and sell said lot under proceedings in accordance with their aforesaid demand. A complaint in intervention was filed by the intervener herein, claiming to be the owner of said land. A demurrer to the complaint of the plaintiffs was overruled, and the defendant thereupon filed an answer, to which a demurrer of the plaintiffs was sustained. The plaintiffs also demurred to the complaint in intervention, and their demurrer having been sustained, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs, from which the defendant and the intervener have appealed.

1. Section 5 of the act of February 27, 1893, after providing for the sale of the land to satisfy the amount of the bond in case of delinquency in its payment, declares that "the city treasurer shall have and shall act thereafter with all the powers and duties of the tax collector in the collection of unpaid state and county taxes, and shall forthwith proceed to advertise and sell said lot or parcel of land by proceedings in all respects the same as are provided by law for the collection of delinquent state and county taxes." At the date of that act, Pol. Code, § 3771 et seq., provided that, in case of delinquent state and county taxes, the tax collector should sell the real estate of the delinquent upon which the taxes were a lien at public auction, to the person who would take the least quantity of land and pay the taxes and costs of sale, and that, in case there should be no redemption therefor within a year, the purchaser should be entitled to a deed of conveyance of the land so purchased. In 1895 (St. 1895, p. 327) section 3771 of the Political Code was amended by providing that, instead of selling the land at auction, the property upon which the taxes are delinquent "shall by operation of law and the declaration of the tax collector be sold to the state, and said tax collector shall make an entry 'Sold to the state' on the delinquent assessment list opposite the tax." It is contended by the appellants that by this amendment to the Political Code its provisions are ipso facto incorporated into the act of February 27, 1893, and that the city treasurer can proceed only in accordance with the provisions of the Political Code as thus amended.

It is a rule of statutory construction that the adoption in one statute, for the purpose of carrying its provisions into effect, of the provisions of another statute, by reference thereto, does not include subsequent modifications of these provisions in the statute referred to, unless a clear intent to do so is expressed. This rule is subject to a qualified exception in cases of the adoption into a special act of the provisions of law then in force by virtue of general laws. In such cases subsequent modifications of the general law will be deemed to be within the intent of such adoption, so far as they are consistent with the purposes of the particular act. See Kirk v. Rhoads, 46 Cal. 403. A repeal of the adopted statute will not take from the adopting statute the operative force of these provisions so far as they may be necessary to carry the later statute into effect, but these provisions will be regarded as if they had been originally incorporated therein at length. Spring Valley Waterworks v. City of San Francisco, 22 Cal. 434; People v. Clunie, 70 Cal. 504, 11 Pac. 775; Collins v. Blake, 79 Me. 218, 9 Atl. 358; Darmstaetter v. Moloney, 45 Mich. 621, 8 N. W. 574; Suth. St. Const. § 257. Under the same principles, any amendment of these provisions of the statute thus adopted, whether it be a particular act or a general law, which so far modifies them as to subvert the purpose of the statute by which they were adopted, will be regarded in the same light as a repeal. The main object of all statutory construction is to ascertain the legislative will, and, as it is to be assumed that the legislature intends its acts to have effective operation, such amendments will not be construed as depriving the adopting statute of all effect, unless there is a clear necessity for such construction.

A comparison of the act of 1893 with the provisions of the Political Code, as amended in 1895, shows that the provisions in the latter, as thus amended, are entirely inapplicable to the former, and ineffective to carry its objects into effect. The provision in section 5, above quoted, was to enable the contractors to receive the amount of the assessment as the several installments should mature, and to provide means for enforcing its collection in case of delinquency. The provision for a sale of the land at public auction to any one who would pay the assessment, with the right in the contractor to become such purchaser, was an efficient mode of securing such payment; but if, instead thereof, the land should be struck off to the state, with no power for its sale within five years, and no fund from which to pay the amount for which the sale was made, there would be no means by which the contractor could receive his payment, and the entire purpose of the act would be frustrated. We hold, therefore, that the above amendments to the Political Code in 1895 are inapplicable to the provisions of the act of February 27, 1893, and that the sale of land for delinquency in the payment of the bond is to be made according to the provisions of the law for the collection and enforcement of taxes at the date of the act.

2. The obligation of the defendant to proceed to advertise and sell the land is further contested upon the ground that the statute under which the bond was issued, and which directs such sale to be made, is unconstitutional, in that by its provisions the owner of the land is deprived of his property without due process of law. This contention is based upon the provision in section 4 of the statute that "the assessment shall be a first lien upon the property affected thereby until the bond issued for the payment thereof and the accrued interest thereon shall be fully paid," and the further provision that "said bonds by their issuance shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings thereto under said street work act and this act, previous to the making of the certified list of all assessments unpaid to the amount of fifty dollars or over by the street superintendent to the city treasurer, and of the validity of said lien up to the date of said list." The power of the legislature to declare any evidence conclusive against the right of an individual to controvert it, in any action which involves the taking of his property, has been extensively considered in cases involving taxation. It may be regarded as settled that the legislature may make a tax deed conclusive evidence of a compliance with all provisions of the statute which are merely directory of the mode in which the power of taxation may be exercised, but that it cannot make it conclusive evidence of those matters which are essential to the exercise of the power; that as to those steps which are jurisdictional in their nature, and without which the power of taxation cannot be called into exercise,—such as the listing or assessment of the property, a levy of the tax, some notice of its delinquency, and that the property will be sold therefor,—the legislature cannot deprive the owner of the right to show want of compliance. Mr. Cooley says (Const. Lim. p. 452): "A statute which should make a tax deed conclusive evidence of a complete title, and preclude the owner of the original title from showing its invalidity, would be void, because being not a law regulating evidence, but an unconstitutional confiscation of property." And in his treatise on Taxation he says (page 521, 2d Ed.): "The legislature cannot make the tax deed conclusive evidence of the holder's title to the land, or of the jurisdictional facts which would make out title, but the legislature might doubtless make the deed conclusive evidence of the correct performance of all mere acts of routine, and of acts in which the public rather than the taxpayer was specially concerned; in short, of everything except the essentials." In McCready v. Sexton, 29 Iowa, 389, the supreme court of that state said: "The legislature may prescribe the time or manner in which these essential and jurisdictional acts shall be done, but it cannot, either constitutionally or in the nature of things, provide for passing the title to property for the nonpayment of taxes without them. As to the time or manner in which they shall be done, the discretion of the legislature is absolute and supreme, and cannot be judicially controlled or interfered with. Having the right to prescribe the manner, it may also rightfully provide that a failure to comply with its directions as to manner shall not defeat the end, or that no person shall question the legality of the manner, and that any subsequent act or fact shall be either prima facie or conclusive evidence that the law as to time or manner was complied with. As to the essential and jurisdictional facts, so to speak, which the legislature cannot annul or change, it cannot excuse the nonperformance of them, and, of course, cannot make the doing of any other thing a substitute for them or conclusive evidence of their being done." See, also, Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395, 29 Pac. 58; Haaren v. High, 97 Cal. 445, 32 Pac. 518; Ensign v. Barse, 107 N. Y. 329, 14 N. E. 400, and 15 N. E. 401; Williams v. Supervisors, 122 U. S. 154, 7 Sup. Ct. 1244; Chamberlain v. Taylor, 36 Hun, 24.

This question has generally arisen in cases in which tax deeds have been made conclusive evidence of certain preliminary steps, and also in determining the effect of curative acts; but, whenever it is within the power of the legislature to give this force to evidence, the species of evidence to which it is given is immaterial, and it may also declare the effect of the evidence in advance of its existence as well as as subsequent thereto. As was said in McCready v. Sexton, supra: "Whatever the legislature is at liberty to authorize or not, it may waive or estop denial, but not so as to that which it must require." The declaration in the statute herein, that the issuance of the bond shall be conclusive evidence of the validity of the lien, is to be regarded with the same effect as a similar declaration with reference to the deed that might be issued upon the sale therein authorized; for, if the lien is to be held valid and paramount to all other claims, the purchaser at the sale will obtain the property freed from any right in the owner to contest his title. It must be held, therefore, that the provision in the statute that the issuance of the bond is conclusive evidence of the validity of the lien was without the power of the legislature to enact, and is, consequently, unavailing to the plaintiffs.

Although this provision in the statute was without the power of the legislature to enact, the remaining provisions, relating to the effect of the issuance of the bond as evidence, are not necessarily invalid. We have seen that the legislature had the authority to declare that the issuance of the bond should be conclusive evidence of certain facts, provided such facts were not essential to the jurisdiction of the officers to create the assessment, and to the extent that the legislature could exercise this power it should be upheld. In the first portion of the sentence above quoted the legislature has not assumed to make the bond conclusive evidence of the existence of any jurisdictional fact, or that any step essential to the creation of an assessment has been taken, but has merely declared that it shall be conclusive evidence of the "regularity" of all proceedings prior thereto. This clause does not necessarily imply that any proceedings were in fact taken, but is limited to the "regularity" of such as were taken, and leaves the owner at liberty to show, in defense of his property, that no jurisdiction to authorize the work or to make the assessment was in fact acquired. Such provision in a statute is held to apply only to proceedings to be had after the right and power to sell are acquired. Doughty v. Hope, 3 Denio, 249, affirmed in court of appeals, Id. 594, 1 N. Y. 79; Tallman v. White, 2 N. Y. 66; Ensign v. Barse, 107 N. Y. 329, 14 N. E. 400, and 15 N. E. 401. To the extent that the provisions of the statute are within the constitutional power of the legislature, it is to be sustained, and only that portion thereof rejected which the legislature had no power to enact. Hence, in determining whether in any particular case the provisions of the statute which are invoked in support of the bond are such as were without the power of the legislature to make, it is necessary, in the first place, to determine whether the proceedings of which the issuance of the bond is made conclusive evidence were of a jurisdictional nature, or whether they related merely to the regularity in the manner or time of exercise of its jurisdiction. As was said by the supreme court of the United States in Castillo v. McConnico, 168 U. S. 680, 18 Sup. Ct. 232: "The plaintiff in error has no interest to assert that the statute is unconstitutional because it might be construed so as to cause it to violate the constitution. His right is limited solely to the inquiry whether, in the case which he presents, the effect of applying the statute is to deprive him of his property without due process of law."

Turning now to the respect in which the appellants claim that the proceedings were defective, we find that the only defect alleged in response to the plaintiffs' application is that the contract for doing the work provided: "The work to be commenced within ten days from the date hereof, and its completion to be within two hundred and forty days thereafter;" and it is urged that the superintendent did not thereby "fix" the time for the commencement and completion of the work, as required by the statute. In Palm-er v. Burnham, 120 Cal. 364, 52 Pac. 664, we held that a similar provision in the contract in that case was a sufficient compliance with the statute, and, under the authority of that case, it must be held that the appellants presented no defense to the application of the plaintiffs.

It may be added that the statute does not deprive the owner of the right to challenge the validity of the assessment, or to present any irregularities in the proceedings therefor which would defeat an action for its enforcement, since it is provided by section 4 that at any time before the issuance of the bond the owner may notify the city treasurer that he desires no bond to be issued for the assessment against his land, and that upon such notice no bond shall be issued therefor, but the payee of the warrant must enforce the collection of the assessment by action. As the bond cannot be issued until after 30 days from the date of the warrant, and as the assessment must be demanded within that period of time, the owner has at all times the option to insist upon the collection of the assessment by a suit therefor, in which he may present all defenses, either in matters of jurisdiction or irregularity of proceedings. The judgment is affirmed.

FRAGLEY v. PHELAN et al. (S. F. 2,048.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—FREEHOLDERS' CHARTER—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—ELECTIONS—CHANGE OF PRECINCTS—REGISTRATION—APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS.

1. Const. art. 11, § 6, declares that cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof, framed and adopted by authority of this constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to, and controlled by, general laws; and section 8 authorizes the adoption of freeholders' charters by cities of more than 3,500 inhabitants. Held, that since the adoption of a city charter was not "a municipal affair," within the meaning of the constitution, St. 1897, p. 288, providing for the election of freeholders to draft freeholders' charters, and the election for its subsequent ratification, in cities specified in Const. art. 11, § 8, was not unconstitutional.

Per Garoutte, Van Dyke, and McFarland, JJ.
2. Const. art. 11, § 8, authorizes the adoption of freeholders' charters in cities of more than 3,500 inhabitants; and St. 1897, p. 288, entitled "An act in relation to elections held under the authority of Const. art. 11, § 8, to elect boards of freeholders or to vote upon proposed charters or upon amendments to existing charters," provides the manner of electing freeholders to draft such charters, and for conducting the elections subsequently held to ratify the same. Held that, since the act applied with equal force to all cities of the class specified in the constitutional provision, it was not unconstitutional, as special legislation.

Per Garoutte, Van Dyke, and McFarland, JJ.
3. Since, under Pol. Code, § 1129, the board of election commissioners of San Francisco were authorized to change the boundaries of, create new, or consolidate established election precincts, the fact that such commissioners redistricted a city under St. 1897, p. 238, providing the manner for the holding of elections for the adoption of freeholders' charters, which act was claimed to be unconstitutional, as violating Const. art. 11, § 6, declaring that cities and towns, except in matters relating to municipal affairs, shall be subject to, and controlled by, the general laws, is immaterial.

Per Beatty, C. J., and Harrison and Henshaw, JJ.

4. Pol. Code, § 1129, as amended by St. 1889, p. 424, authorizes the change of election precincts, and provides that boards having control of elections may from time to time change the boundaries, so that there shall always be as many precincts as shall be sufficient to make the number of votes at any one precinct not more than 200, as nearly as can be ascertained. Held, that the change of election precincts was within the discretion of election boards, and that in the absence of any action preceding an election at which such precincts had been changed, to correct alleged erroneous actions of the board, or show that a fair election was thereby prevented, an elector cannot thereafter impeach an election held on that ground alone.

Per Beatty, C. J., and Harrison and Henshaw, JJ.

5. Act 1878, § 22, requires boards of precinct registration to continue registering voters within their precincts until the time provided by law for registration to cease. Section 24 requires them to deliver the precinct registers to the registrar not later than three days after the cessation of registration; and section 28 declares that fifteen days before a general election all registration shall cease, and the precinct registers, as they stand, shall be the precinct registers for said ensuing election, and until the next general election, subject only to changes under regulations fixed by the board of election commissioners. Held that, since there was no express provision directing precinct registration for special elections, the act of election board commissioners in providing for supplemental registration at the registrar's office, instead of in the different precincts, was valid.

Per Beatty, C. J., and Harrison and Henshaw, JJ.

6. Where election commissioners were authorized to appoint election officers for each precinct, their failure to appoint as many officers as they were authorized to appoint for an election was a mere irregularity, not sufficient to invalidate the election.

Per Beatty, C. J., and Harrison and Henshaw, JJ.

Temple, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by M. F. Fragley against James D. Phelan and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. Ruef, Thos. V. Cator, E. S. Pillsbury, and John Garber, for appellant. F. K. Lane, H. N. Clement, and Garrett W. McEnerney, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action brought by a taxpayer by injunction against the board of election commissioners and other municipal officers of the city and county of San Francisco to restrain the expenditures of certain public moneys for the conduct and carrying on of an election in said city and county. The primary and direct purpose of the litigation is to test the validity of the new charter of the city and county of San Francisco, which is to take effect January 1, 1900.

The state legislature of 1897 placed upon the statute books an act which may be called the "Charter Election Act." It is entitled "An act in relation to elections held under the authority of section 8 of article 11 of the constitution to elect boards of freeholders, or to vote upon proposed charters or upon amendments to existing charters." The election to secure a board of freeholders in this city to draft a charter, and the election subsequently held to ratify the action of that board of freeholders, were held under the aforesaid act. The manner of holding and conducting these elections, while in strict conformity with the act, was widely at variance with the provisions of the general law as to the manner and conduct of holding elections in the city and county of San Francisco; and it is now claimed that these elections as held were absolutely void, by reason of the unconstitutionality of the statute under which they were held, and that, the elections being void, therefore the new charter is a void and barren instrument.

The parties now attacking the constitutionality of this act of the legislature rest the entire results of the litigation upon that attack, conceding in open court that they have no case if that statute be a valid and constitutional law. They insist that the act is unconstitutional, in this: that it is violative of section 6 of article 11 of the constitution of the state. That part of section 6, art. 11, of the constitution, here directly involved, reads: "Cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized and all charters thereof framed and adopted by authority of this constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." It is now claimed that these two elections to which reference has already been made were "municipal affairs," within the meaning of the constitution, and therefore not subject to, and controlled by, general laws. In this connection it is then claimed that said act of 1897 is a general law attempting to deal with and control "municipal affairs," and for that reason violative of this constitutional prohibition. As a second contention, it is asserted that this statute is special legislation, and also lacking in uniformity of operation. We at once pass to an examination of these constitutional objections.

The solution of the questions thus presented largely revolves around the meaning of the words, "except in municipal affairs," as these words are used in the constitution of the state. The phrase formed by these words has a meaning, and a most significant one. This is apparent when we pause a moment to consider that this single phrase forms the subject-matter of an amendment to the constitution of the state. The relationship existing between a state and its municipalities is so close that it may be said every city ordinance and every state statute is a matter of interest to both state and municipality. It may be said that all state affairs are a matter of substantial interest to the municipality, and that likewise all municipal affairs are a matter of concern to the state. Yet those interests are incidental and indirect, and the meaning of this phrase necessarily takes a narrower scope. Indeed, in the very wording of the constitutional provision itself, we find that all matters of legislation pertaining to, and bearing upon, municipalities do not come within the signification of the words "municipal affairs," as used in the constitution. A mere glance at the provision demonstrates this fact. The constitution provides that cities and towns, "except as to municipal affairs," shall be subject to, and controlled by, general laws. It is here plainly indicated that a vast amount of legislation pertaining to cities and towns does not come under the classification of "municipal affairs."

For the purpose of getting at the true significance of these words, there is no brighter light to be shed upon them than is disclosed by a consideration of the reasons which moved the legislature to propose the amendment and the people to adopt it. What was the evil to be remedied? What was the good to be gained by this amendment? The answer is common, everyday history. It was to prevent existing provisions of charters from being frittered away by general laws, which would repeal those provisions by implication. It was to enable municipalities to conduct their own business and control their own affairs, to the fullest possible extent, in their own way. It was enacted upon the principle that the municipality itself knew better what it wanted and needed than did the state at large, and to give that municipality the exclusive privilege and right to enact direct legislation which would carry out and satisfy its wants and needs. These are a few of the reasons which gave occasion for this concise, but all-significant, amendment to section 6 of article 11 of the constitution of the state. This amendment, then, was intended to give municipalities the sole right to regulate, control, and govern their internal conduct independent of general laws, and this internal regulation and control by municipalities form those "municipal affairs" spoken of in the constitution.

"Municipal affairs," as those words are used in the organic law, refer to the internal business affairs of a municipality. It was the internal business affairs of municipalities then existing and those of municipalities to be hereafter created that the constitutional amendment was framed to meet. There is absolutely no sound reason why freeholders' charters should not be framed and ratified under general laws. There are a multitude of sound reasons to be urged why the conduct and procedure of elections for the election of freeholders and ratification of charters should be held under general laws. No sound policy exists demanding special legislation upon such a subject-matter. As far as there has been given us light to see, neither the legislature nor the people ever thought of such a thing as the adoption of charters when they placed the words "municipal affairs" in the organic law. In defining the phrase "county affairs," the court said in Hankins v. Mayor, 64 N. Y. 22: "County affairs are those relating to the county in its organic and corporate capacity, and included within its governmental or corporate powers." Tested by this rule, elections held as preliminary steps towards the creation of a freeholders' charter are not municipal affairs.

The city and county of San Francisco is a municipality. The municipal affairs of this municipality are a multitude, covering its business transactions. These business matters are the municipal affairs of the present municipality, but the drafting and ratification of a new charter is not one of its business matters. The conduct of the present municipality's business affairs has nothing to do with the question of the creation of a new municipality. The new municipality will have municipal affairs of its own after it is created, and not before. The old municipality performs its functions when it carries on the business intrusted to it. As a municipality it has no voice in saying whether or not there shall be a new charter. In that matter it is wholly passive. If its inhabitants say to it, "Stay with us yet a while," it stays. If they say, "Your days are ended; you have outlived your usefulness; stand aside,"—it makes no protest. The decree of the people is its will. A municipal affair pertains to something which may be done by the municipality. The creation of a new charter is a matter not placed in the hands of the municipality, but in the hands of the inhabitants thereof, with the consent of the state.

As the legislature alone has the power to approve a charter, it inherently, in the absence of constitutional prohibition, must have the power to prescribe the terms, conditions, and mode upon which it will give its approval; and, if an election is made necessary by the constitution as a condition precedent to the validity of the charter, the legislature has the power to say what shall be the nature of that election, and how it shall be conducted. And such power gives it the right to say how many voting precincts shall be used upon election day, and what shall be the manner and time for registration.

Viewing this question from another angle, it seems that the creation of a charter is not essentially and alone a municipal affair. It is a state affair, and that fact is recognized in unmistakable terms by the state when the constitution demands that the state legislature approve the instrument by a majority vote, and until such approval it has no life. Notwithstanding all the people of the municipality with a single voice may ask for a new charter, yet the state, by and through its legislature, may deny that request. The legislature stands as the representative of the sovereign power of the state, and has the arbitrary right to grant or refuse charters to municipalities. A grant of a charter to a municipality is a grant of so much power. It is a delegation of a certain amount of power to the municipality theretofore vested in the state. It is a parting with a portion of its sovereignty. It is for this reason that the state, through its legislature, must breathe into the charter the breath of life; and, if the state withhold its breath, such action is beyond all review. When the constitution vested this omnipotent power in the legislature, it would seem that the framers of that instrument deemed the creation of a municipal corporation a state affair of the greatest import.

In speaking to the general principle here involved, Judge Cooley says, in People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44: "There is no doubt of the right of the state to do any of these things; not by virtue of any general authority to take to itself the management of the local concerns, but because the inauguration and modification of local government can only be provided for, without confusion and injustice, by the aid of the guiding and assisting hand of the authority that creates and modifies. The right in the state is a right, not to run and operate the machinery of local government, but to provide for and put it in motion." This seems to be the very principle recognized by the framers of the constitution, and carried into effect by the aforesaid amendment to that instrument. And it may well be said that, while general legislation as to municipal affairs is there prohibited, yet at the same time the very same section of the constitution reserves to the state, not the right "to run and operate the machinery of local government," but the right to provide for and put that machinery into motion. In People v. City of Oakland, 123 Cal. 604, 56 Pac. 445, it is held that a general law providing for the manner of annexing adjacent territory to a municipality did not deal with "municipal affairs," and was therefore without constitutional objection. It would seem that the adding of adjacent territory to a municipality, and bringing the inhabitants of that territory within the government of the municipality, was a matter of great moment and interest to the municipality. Yet it was held not to be such a municipal affair as contemplated by the constitution. This court there said: "As the legislature alone has the power to authorize such annexation, it must have the power to prescribe the terms, conditions, and mode of annexation." This language applies with full force to the question under discussion in the case at bar.

The charter act of 1897 is neither special legislation, nor does it lack uniformity of operation. The title of the act itself stamps the law as general legislation. The title purports upon its face to deal with a class of municipalities created by section 8 of article 11 of the constitution. Legislation bearing upon a constitutional class of municipalities is not special legislation. The authorities in this state without exception so declare the law. Again, the act applies to all municipalities that are authorized to adopt freeholder charters. Such municipalities intrinsically constitute a class in themselves, and probably, even in the absence of constitutional classification, could be dealt with by general laws; but, in view of the constitutional classification, it cannot be denied for a moment but that legislation relating to such a class is both general and uniform. Mintzer v. Schilling, 117 Cal. 361, 49 Pac. 209.

It is not a light thing to set aside an act of the legislature, and the rule is elementary that unless it is perfectly plain that such act is violative of constitutional provisions a court will uphold it. With the policy of the legislation found in the act the court has nothing to do. This legislation may be wise or unwise. That is a matter with which the court has no concern. It is for us alone to declare the law void or valid, and that declaration must rest upon the test, namely, is this act clearly violative of some constitutional provision? In other words, the real question here is, does it plainly and clearly appear that these two elections constituted "municipal affairs," within the meaning of those words as used in the constitution? In view of what has been said, we are not prepared to make that declaration. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: VAN DYKE, J.; McFARLAND, J.

HARRISON, J. The board of election commissioners of San Francisco directed that an election for freeholders to frame a charter for that city and county be held December 27, 1897; and, a board of 15 freeholders having been chosen upon that day, a charter framed by them was submitted to the voters of the city and county at an election held therefor, under the direction and control of the board of election commissioners, on the 26th day of May, 1898, and, having received a majority of the votes cast at that election, was approved by the legislature on the 26th day of January, A. D. 1899. Under a provision therefore in the charter, this board of election commissioners has directed that an election be held on the 7th day of November, 1899, to fill certain offices named in the charter. The plaintiff herein, a taxpayer of the city and county, brought the present action to enjoin certain of its officers from incurring any expense in holding said election, and from paying out or disbursing any of the public moneys for any expense that may be incurred in holding the election, upon the ground that the elections at which the freeholders were chosen, and upon the adoption of the charter framed by them, were illegally held, and for that reason the charter, never having been legally adopted, was invalid.

After the board of election commissioners had directed the election for the freeholders, it caused the city and county to be redistricted into special election precincts for the purpose of said election, and consolidated the 313 general election precincts into which the city had been divided for the last preceding election into 94 special election precincts, and designated one polling place within each of said special election precincts, and held this election, and also the one upon the adoption of the charter, in the same precincts. Prior to the holding of each of said elections the board of election commissioners provided for supplemental registration at the office of the registrar at the city hall, but made no provision for precinct registration. Before the consolidation of the precincts as aforesaid, the board passed a resolution that the special election for freeholders should be conducted in accordance with the act relating to the election of freeholders and charters, approved March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 288), and that the number of votes for each special election precinct be estimated at 750, or as near thereto as possible. The superior court rendered judgment in favor of the defendants, and from this judgment and an order denying a new trial the plaintiff has appealed.

The grounds urged in support of the appeal herein are that the act of 1897 is unconstitutional, and that inasmuch as the elections for freeholders and upon the adoption of the charter were held in conformity with the provisions of this act, instead of under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the registration of voters and to secure the purity of elections in the city and county of San Francisco," passed March 18, 1878, they were invalid, and that the charter adopted thereat was invalid, and confers no authority to hold an election for the offices therein named. The particulars in which the invalidity of the elections is urged are that the board of election commissioners had no authority to consolidate the election precincts or to omit precinct registration, and that they did not appoint proper election boards for the precincts in which the elections were held.

The act of 1878 was a special act relating to San Francisco alone, and at the adoption of the constitution of 1879 formed a part of the charter of that city and county. By its provisions the conduct, management, and control of elections, and matters pertaining to elections, were taken from the board of supervisors, which, under the Political Code, then exercised this power throughout the state, and were conferred upon the board of election commissioners therein created. Section 6 of article 11 of the constitution of 1879, as originally adopted, after directing the legislature to provide, by general laws, for the organization of cities and towns, declared that "cities or towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." In Staupe v. Commissioners, 61 Cal. 321, it was said that the effect of this section was that San Francisco "shall be subject to, and controlled by, such general laws as the legislature shall enact, other than those for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns." The Political Code is a general law whose force extends throughout the state, and, in the absence of any qualifying words, the legislature must be deemed to intend that its provisions shall have uniform operation in all parts of the state; and it was held in the case just cited that an amendment to section 4109 of the Political Code, by which the time for the election of all city and county officers was made uniform throughout the state, superseded a provision in the charter of San Francisco providing a different time for the election of those officers within that city and county. In 1889 the legislature amended several sections of this Code relating to elections by extending their provisions to each of the counties and cities and counties of the state, and by placing every board having charge and control of elections in the same category with the board of supervisors in each of the counties of the state, and making the same provisions for cities and counties as for counties. By so doing it is manifest that it was the intention of the legislature that its provisions should be operative in San Francisco. The city and county of San Francisco was the only political subdivision of the state in which any board other than the board of supervisors had the control and management of elections, and, as was said in Staupe's Case, we know judicially that it was the only city and county in the state. To the extent, therefore, that these amendments are inconsistent with, or variant from, the provisions of the act of March 18, 1878, the latter is superseded, and the city and county is subject to, and controlled by, the provisions of the Political Code.

By the act of 1878, the board of election commissioners was required to divide the city and county into election precincts "as soon after each general election as convenient, not to exceed ninety days." By the amendment to section 1127 of the Political Code, the board is required to divide the city and county into election precincts "as soon before a general election as is convenient." Section 1129 of the Code, as originally enacted, gave to the board of supervisors in each county authority "from time to time to change the boundaries of, create new, or consolidate established precincts"; but there was no provision in the act of 1878 for changing the boundaries of the election precincts, when once made, until after another general election. Section 1129 was, however, amended in 1889 to read as follows: "The board of supervisors or other board having charge and control of elections in each of the counties and cities and counties of the state may, from time to time, change the boundaries of, create or consolidate established new precincts; provided, that there shall always be as many precincts as shall be sufficient to make the number of votes polled at any one precinct to be not more than two hundred as nearly as can be ascertained." Under this section, as thus amended, the authority of the board of election commissioners of San Francisco, prior to the adoption of the amendment to section 6 of article 2 of the constitution, in 1896, to consolidate established precincts, is without question; and, unless that amendment has taken from them this authority, they must be held to have been authorized to consolidate the precincts for the purposes of the elections herein considered.

In 1896 the above clause in section 6 of article 11 was amended to read as follows: "Cities or towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of the constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." It is contended by the appellants that the elections for freeholders, and upon the adoption of the charter, proposed by them, were "municipal affairs," and were therefore not subject to, or controlled by, general laws.

The construction of the section, as thus amended, involves a determination of the meaning to be given to the term "municipal affairs," as used therein. The term "affair" is a word of wide import, and has been held to be more comprehensive than the word "business." See Morrison v. Bachert, 112 Pa. St. 322, 5 Atl. 739. Although it may be difficult to give a definition of the term "municipal affairs," as used in this section, which will be exhaustive or precise, it cannot be held that the effect of the amendment is to preclude the legislature from enacting laws relating to matters which might be made the subject of municipal control, or that all municipalities are exempt from all general laws which the legislature may enact. It has been decided so frequently, that it may be said to have become a maxim in jurisprudence, that a municipal corporation has only such powers as are given to it by its charter, and that it must find authority in its charter or under some general law for every municipal act which it may perform. The municipal affairs of any individual municipal corporation are therefore such affairs only as that municipality has the power to engage in or perform, and the municipal affairs of one city may vary greatly from those of any other city; and this, too, whether the charter of the city has been conferred upon it by the legislature or has been framed by a board of freeholders of its own choice, and afterwards adopted by its citizens and approved by the legislature. In either case, the municipality can exercise only the powers found in its charter. If, however, the charter of a city, whether given to it by the legislature prior to the constitution of 1879, or framed by a board of freeholders, contains no provision in reference to subjects which might have been included therein, that city or its inhabitants is not thereby freed from legislative control. The legislature is vested with the lawmaking power of the state, and the general laws passed by it have force in all parts of the state, unless by virtue of some provision in the constitution such effect is limited, or the lawmaking power has been lodged elsewhere. A city cannot claim to be exempt from general laws relating to municipal affairs if there is no provision relating to such affairs in the charter under which it is acting, whether such charter is one framed by itself or was given to it by the legislature. If in framing its charter its board of freeholders should make no provision for a public library, or for the improvement of its streets, the general laws upon those subjects would be operative within that city. It is not within the constitutional power of the legislature, by approving a freeholders' charter which fails to make provision upon subjects pertaining to municipal affairs, to exempt that city from being subject to legislative control in reference to those subjects, nor can the city secure exemption from such control by omitting to make such provision in its charter. If, by adopting a charter which failed to give to it power to act upon affairs which are properly municipal, a city could be freed from any legislative control in reference to those affairs, either by itself or by the legislature, that city would become a veritable Alsatia.

Under these considerations, it must be held that the exception in the above clause in section 6 of article 11, placed there by the amendment of 1896, applies only to such municipal affairs as are within the power of the particular municipality to perform, and that every city in the state is subject to, and controlled by, general laws relating to municipal affairs, unless, by virtue of some provision of the charter under which it exists and is acting, such municipal affairs may be engaged in and performed by it. The clause is to receive a distributive construction, and is to be read as if its language were: "Any city or town heretofore or hereafter organized, and every charter thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, except in its municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

We have seen that the provisions of the act of March 18, 1878, relating to the division of San Francisco into election precincts, were superseded by the amendments to the Political Code in 1889, and that from that date these provisions of the Political Code constituted the only law upon that subject which was applicable to San Francisco. It may be conceded that each of the elections herein considered, as well as the creation or consolidation of the precincts at which the elections were held, is a "municipal affair"; but as, since the amendment to the Political Code in 1889, there has been no provision in the charter of San Francisco relating to the creation or consolidation of election precincts, the city was subject to, and controlled by, the general laws existing in reference thereto. Section 1129 of the Political Code was in force within the city and county of San Francisco at the dates of these elections, and under this section the consolidation of the election precincts for the purpose of these elections was within the power conferred upon the board of election commissioners.

Inasmuch as the board had the power to consolidate the precincts "from time to time," as might seem to it desirable or proper, this power was not diminished, or its exercise impaired, by the fact that the board purported to exercise it under the act of 1897. If it had authority to consolidate the election precincts irrespective of this statute, it had the right to adopt its provisions in this respect as the basis of its consolidation, even though the legislature had no authority to enact the statute. It is unnecessary, therefore, to determine whether this statute is obnoxious to the charge of being special legislation, or whether it was within the power of the legislature to enact.

The provision in section 1129, that the precinct shall be sufficient "to make the number of votes polled at any one precinct to be not more than two hundred, as nearly as can be ascertained," is not to be regarded as jurisdictional, but is merely directory. The concluding clause, "as nearly as can be ascertained," shows that much is left to the discretion of the board, and, in the absence of any showing that by reason of a failure to observe this direction the fairness of the election or the completeness of the vote was affected, the act of the board in making the consolidation must be upheld. The finding of the court that at least one week before either election was held a written notification was mailed to each and every elector in the city and county whose name appeared upon the register, informing him specifically of the exact location of the polling place in his special election precinct, and inclosing therewith a sample of the ballot to be used at said election, takes away all claim of any want of notice to voters. It is not claimed that the board acted in bad faith, or that any citizen was deprived of his vote; the only claim being that, by reason of the registered vote within each of said precincts being much greater than 200, the board must be presumed to have abused its discretion in consolidating the precincts in the manner it did.

We need not determine whether this provision in section 1129 is to be construed as requiring the registered vote to be the criterion for fixing the extent of the precincts, or whether the board had the right to fix their extent upon its estimate of the number of registered votes which would be polled at the election. The wording of the section is such that the board might act in good faith in making the number of precincts such as in their opinion would make the number of votes which would be polled at each precinct not more than 200. It was competent for any citizen, if he deemed the boundaries of the precincts to be in violation of this clause in the section, to seek their correction prior to the election. He ought not, after the election has taken place, to be allowed to impeach it upon this ground alone, unless he can show that by reason thereof a fair election was prevented.

There is no express provision in the act of 1878 directing precinct registration to be had for special elections, and a consideration of the entire act leads to the conclusion that such registration is not authorized. Section 20 of the act requires the boards of precinct registration to meet in their respective precincts, "commencing five days before the day fixed by this act for the cessation of registration of electors in said city and county, and to sit in open session from nine o'clock a. m. until ten o'clock p. m. of each day until the day of such cessation"; and by section 22 they are required to continue registration of voters within their respective precincts "until the time provided by law for registration to cease"; and by section 24 to deliver the precinct registers to the registrar "not later than three full days after the cessation of registration, as provided by law." Section 28 declares: "Fifteen days before a general election all registration or enrollment of voters shall cease, and the precinct registers as they stand shall be the precinct registers for said ensuing election and until the next general election," subject only to changes in certain cases; and at the close of this section it is provided that changes and additions to said precinct registers for use at other than general elections may be made after the general election, and prior to any special election, "under the regulations fixed by the board of election commissioners." Under a proper construction of these provisions, registration for a special election is to be made under regulations fixed by the board of election commissioners, and need not be made in the several precincts. The provision in section 31, that the additional names shall be "noted upon the register for each special election thereafter or added in supplements thereto, and conformatory so far as the same is applicable to the provisions of the law governing the making of the general election register," has reference to the manner of preparing the precinct registers for use at the special elections, and not to the mode or time of registration. The provision in this section, that after the voter has been legally registered in the precinct register he may vote in such precinct at any election taking place before the next general election, was for the purpose of giving him the right to vote at such election without renewing his registration, and not for the purpose of defining the place at which he should vote. His right to vote in the same precinct is subordinate to the right of the board of election commissioners to change that precinct or consolidate it with others, and is not impaired by such enlargement of its boundaries, and fixing a different polling place within the boundaries thus extended.

A consideration of the spirit and object of the act of 1878 leads also to the same conclusion. The main purpose of the act, as shown by its provisions, was to secure a full registration of the voters of the city, with as little inconvenience to them as was practicable. For this purpose the act provides an extended period for registration at the office of the registrar, within which voters may be enrolled, and that at the close of this period those who have been unable to avail themselves of this opportunity may resort to some designated place within their respective precincts, and there be registered. To still further accommodate the voters, they are not required to present themselves for precinct registration within the usual hours for public offices, but the act provides that the boards of precinct registration shall sit in open session each day of their session until 10 o'clock p. m. It must be assumed that in this mode the registration for a general election will contain the names of all who are qualified to vote, and as the registers thus prepared for use at the general election are to be used at all special elections that may be held before another general election, with such additions as may be made thereto, there is no manifest reason for requiring precinct registration in connection with any special election, and, in the absence of direct provision therefor, it should be held that it is not required. The few changes or additions that may be desired are readily to be made at the office of the registrar, under the regulations of the board of election commissioners.

The omission of the board of election commissioners to appoint for each precinct as many officers of election as it was authorized to appoint (a proposition upon which we pass no opinion) does not authorize the election to be set aside. Such omission was but an irregularity, and it is not shown that it had any effect upon the election, either in the number of votes that were cast, or in the correctness of their canvass and return. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HENSHAW, J.

TEMPLE, J. I concur in the judgment. But I am of the opinion that the "framing of a charter" by a city "for its own government," under the authority given by section 8, art. 11, is a municipal affair, and I also think there was in the charter of the city and county of San Francisco a provision under which the elections here questioned might have been held. I am therefore unable to concur in either of the opinions already prepared.

It is unfortunate that when section 6, art. 11, was amended its meaning should be left in doubt. Before amendment it had been the subject of much contention, and we were entitled to expect that when amended there would be no ambiguity left. The clause amended had been construed and its meaning determined by numerous decisions of this court in which there was no conflict. It was contended on one side that the general laws which the constitution provided should control cities and towns and the charters thereof, were those general laws which operated upon all persons throughout the state, such as the Criminal Code, the Code of Civil Procedure, the statute of frauds, etc. But the court steadily ruled against this contention, and held that the restriction did not "at all affect the power to control or regulate the charters of all municipal corporations by laws general in their character. This power is expressly recognized by the last clause of section 6, above cited, where it is declared that 'cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed and adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws.'" Thomason v. Ashworth, 73 Cal. 73, 14 Pac. 615. Many attempts were made to overthrow this conclusion, and in various cases earnest dissenting opinions were filed, insisting upon a contrary view. But, notwithstanding many changes in the personnel of the court, that ruling was never reversed or modified. It was argued by those who favored the view adopted by the court that the last clause of section 6 was put in for the express purpose of showing that, although a novel municipal organization was authorized which secured some degree of home rule, and which had been made "immune" from attacks by special laws, they were nevertheless subject to general laws which would control and might alter their charters. It was certainly an assurance of legislative power and authority over such charters for some purposes. General laws, like the statute of frauds or the Code of Civil Procedure, do not and could not control cities and towns as such, and certainly not their charters. And, even if there were any way in which they could indirectly do so, it is impossible to imagine that the members of the constitutional convention apprehended any danger that it could be held that such laws did not prevail in cities and towns. But, if the contrary view was intended, there was reason to fear that the construction would be contended for which actually was asserted, notwithstanding the precaution that such charters could not be controlled by general laws. At all events, this rule was persistently maintained by this court, and in the face of and because of it the clause was amended.

That the form of the amendment is unfortunate is, in my opinion, demonstrated by the two opinions filed in this case. They differ widely as to what are "municipal affairs," within the meaning of the amendment. The language is in itself quite unambiguous, but the difficulty arises solely from the fact that the exception, construed in the light of the meaning uniformly given to the unamended clause by this court, and also giving the language its obvious import, plainly includes the entire proposition excepted to. I think we must suppose that the author of the amendment had in mind the contention of the justices who dissented from the established doctrine, and that it means that the legislature cannot by any general law add to, modify, or control the charter of any municipality. This is also the natural force and effect of the unambiguous language used. And, if it be admitted that all the power in terms granted is expressly denied by the exception, still it must stand as an inhibition upon any legislation which would directly affect cities and towns as municipal corporations. Indeed, the first few clauses in section 6, in substance, declare that any purposes for which cities and towns are organized are municipal affairs. The word "affair" would include all possible laws. "Municipal" means simply pertaining to a municipality. It is not permitted to construe unambiguous language used in statutes.

If the legislature may still control such charters by general laws in regard to matters not expressly provided for, a wide margin of uncertainty is still left, and a charter by such laws may yet be made; "quite another [municipal] affair." Presumptively, that which was omitted was not desired.

The other definition, as I understand it, confines the immunity to "municipal business." The phrase conveys no definite meaning to my mind. Does it include such police regulations as might prohibit opium joints, or fast driving in the streets, and a thousand and one other matters which make up the city government?

I submit that there is no warrant in any language found in the constitution for either construction. To hold, notwithstanding the plain language of the constitution, that these charters are to be practically amended in some respects, or by some general laws, in regard to municipal affairs, is to disregard the words of the amendment, and not to construe it. It may be found that the municipal offspring was badly crippled in the accouchement.

My views do not require me to discuss at length many matters found important in the other opinions. I think, however, the constitution authorizes the city to frame a charter for its own government by causing 15 freeholders to be elected, who pro hac vice represent the city. It is none the less the act of the city, as such, because a referendum is provided to its constituent members, who, collectively incorporated, are the municipality.

I think there was a provision in its charter under which the elections called in question could and should have been held, and that the election was not held as this charter provision required. I refer, of course, to the act of 1878.

But I think we are neither authorized nor required to determine whether the municipal elections were duly and regularly conducted. That was settled by the legislature when it enacted the charter into a law. This position is admitted in People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238, 24 Pac. 718, if the legislature, as to the charter, is the lawmaking power. It is there said, however, that as to the charter the legislature is not the lawmaking power. This question was again reviewed in Ex parte Sparks, 120 Cal. 395, 52 Pac. 715. Some of the justices, though not constituting a majority of the court, held that since an amendment was made to the constitution, providing that the charter may be approved by joint resolution, such charter becomes the law of the state through the action of the legislature. It was said: "It prevails and has force as a law of this state, and is not made a law by the people of the municipality or by virtue of authority delegated to them. It is proposed by the municipality, and accepted and passed into law by the legislature, or rejected, as it shall see fit." Many reasons additional to these stated in Ex parte Sparks might be given, but it is unnecessary, for all the attorneys in this case admit that such is the law; that the doctrine laid down in Ex parte Sparks is the true doctrine.

It was necessary for the legislature to determine that the charter had been framed by the city for its own government before it proceeded to enact it into a law. No record was required to be kept which should furnish conclusive evidence as to what was actually done in holding these elections. No private rights were involved. No one had a peculiar interest in the question. The whole proceeding was governmental and political. And the fact that the legislature enacted the charter into a law is conclusive evidence that it made the proper investigation and found the requisite facts which would warrant its action. Many cases upon this subject are cited in Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 27 Pac. 1089, where the principle is fully discussed.

But I contend that, even if it were admitted that the function of the legislature is correctly stated in People v. Gunn, still, on principle, the action of the legislature is conclusive. If the action is legislative in its character,—that is, something that is within the domain of the legislature as a co-ordinate department of the government,—its action is conclusive upon the other departments. This rule applies to each department,—to the executive as well as to any other. In the performance of a purely executive act the governor cannot be controlled, and all his determinations of facts which induced his action are conclusive. This is illustrated in the power of the executive to declare martial law, or to suspend the right to issue certain writs in case of insurrection or rebellion. Possibly, in regard to matters where the law requires records to be kept and makes them conclusive on all departments, this may not be so. We may look to see if the governor or the legislature has acted in the mode required by the constitution. That is not the question here. Admittedly the legislature pursued the method required by the constitution, and the question is as to the effect of legislative action which is regular and valid. There is nothing giving peculiar force to the action of the legislature in enacting a statute rather than any other action which is made a function of that department of the government by the constitution. To approve or disapprove a freeholders' charter is especially committed to the legislature by the constitution. Whether it performs this duty by resolution or by bill, it is equally a legislative act, which concludes the other two departments. If the legislature were to refuse to act at all upon a proposed charter, no power could compel it to do so, simply because it is a peculiar function of the legislature. It approves or disapproves as a legislature,—a co-ordinate department of the state government.

MARTIN et al. v. BOARD OF ELECTION COM'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 1974.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CONSOLIDATION OF CITY AND COUNTY—FREEHOLDERS' CHARTERS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS—VALIDITY.

1. Const. art. 11, § 8½, subd. 4, provides that, where a city and county has been "merged and consolidated" into one municipal government, it shall be competent, in any charter framed under section 8, authorizing the adoption of freeholders' charters, to provide for the election, terms, and salaries of county officers. Act April 19, 1856, entitled "An act to repeal the several charters of the city of San Francisco, to establish the boundaries of the city and county of San Francisco, and to consolidate the governments thereof," declares that the corporation now existing, and known as the "City of San Francisco," shall continue a body politic in name and in fact, by the name of the "City and County of San Francisco," and by that name shall possess all the attributes of a municipal corporation. Section 2 vests the title to all city and county property in the consolidated corporation; and the act further declares that the existing provisions of law defining the powers and duties of county officers, except those relative to supervisors, so far as they are not repealed or altered by such act, shall be applicable to the officers of the city and county of San Francisco; and the officers enumerated to be elected for the consolidated corporation comprise both city and county officers. Act April 1, 1897, passed pursuant to certain sections of Const. art. 11, provides for a uniform system of county and township government. Held, that since the city and county of San Francisco were merged, within the meaning of the constitution, by Act April 19, 1856, Act April 1, 1897, had no application to such city and county, and hence the provisions of a freeholders' charter for such city and county, providing for the election of county officers, was valid, though not in conformity with such act.

2. Since the legislature has power to form general laws for the submission of constitutional amendments to the people, the fact that Const. art. 11, § 8½, authorizing provisions in freeholders' charters, in addition to those authorized by the constitution and laws of the state, was submitted under St. 1883, p. 53, providing generally for the submission of constitutional amendments, instead of being submitted by a special act proposing such amendments, was immaterial.

3. The fact that a freeholders' charter, providing for the election of officers of a consolidated city comprising the city and county in which it is located, as authorized by Const. art. 11, § 8, specifies a manner of election different from that defined by Act April 1, 1897, establishing a uniform system of county and township government generally, passed pursuant to certain sections of Const. art. 11, does not render such charter unconstitutional, since the charter becomes a special act controlling the general law, the two to be construed in pari materia.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Henry S. Martin and others against the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants sustaining a demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint, they appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. D. Collins, for appellants. F. K. Lane, H. N. Clement, and G. W. McEnerney, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. This action is in some measure connected with that of Fragley v. Phelan (S. F. 2,048; just decided) 58 Pac. 923, involving the validity of the freeholders' charter. In the complaint of the plaintiffs it is stated "that this action is not designed or intended to impeach the validity of the said charter in any respect other than to have it adjudged herein that the provisions of said charter concerning the county officers of said city and county of San Francisco are in open and flagrant conflict with the constitution of the state of California, are an invasion of, and an infringement upon, the sovereignty of said state, are a revolutionary usurpation of power, and are a palpable violation of the law adopted by the legislature of said state in obedience to the constitution, and entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of county and township government,' approved April 1, 1897." A demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court below, and, plaintiffs declining to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendants, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

The provisions of the freeholders' charter concerning the so-called "county officers," in whose behalf this action is prosecuted, were inserted in said charter in pursuance of the amendment to article 11 of the constitution, concerning counties, cities, and towns, and is entitled section 8½, adopted in 1896. By that amendment it is declared: "It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section 8 of article 11 of this constitution, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this constitution and by the laws of the state, as follows: * * *

(4) Where a city and county government has been merged and consolidated into one municipal government, it shall also be competent in any charter framed under said section 8 of said article 11, to provide for the manner in which, the times at which and the terms for which the several county officers shall be elected or appointed, for their compensation, and for the number of deputies that each shall have, and for the compensation payable to each of such deputies."

By the act of the first legislature dividing the state into counties, passed February 18, 1850, the county of San Francisco was bounded on the south by the San Francisquito creek, and from the head of said creek due west to the ocean, and three miles therein, and on the northerly end including all of the present city and county, counties lying to the south being Santa Clara and Branciforte. The latter was changed subsequently to the county of Santa Cruz. At the same session of the legislature an act was passed, April 15, 1850, to incorporate the city of San Francisco. The southern boundary line of said city, as thus incorporated, was two miles distant from the center of Portsmouth Square, "and parallel to the street known as 'Clay Street'"; and the western boundary was a line a mile and a half in a westerly direction from Portsmouth Square, "and parallel to a street known as 'Kearney Street.'" The act provided for a complete organization and a full set of officers for the city, independent of the county officers of the county of San Francisco. The acts creating the county, and also the city, were amended at subsequent sessions of the legislature; and April 19, 1856, an act was passed "to repeal the several charters of the city of San Francisco, to establish the boundaries of the city and county of San Francisco, and to consolidate the government thereof." By the first section of said act it is provided that "the corporation or body politic and corporate, now existing and known as the city of San Francisco, shall remain and continue to be a body politic and corporate in name and in fact, by the name of the city and county of San Francisco, and by that name shall have perpetual succession, may sue and defend in all courts and places, and in all matters and proceedings whatever, and may have and may use a common seal, and the same may alter at pleasure; and may purchase, receive, hold and enjoy real and personal property, and sell, convey, mortgage and dispose of the same for the common benefit." By the second section it is provided that "the public buildings, lands and property, all rights of property and rights of action, and all moneys, revenues and income belonging or appertaining either to the corporation of the city of San Francisco, or to the county of San Francisco, are hereby declared to be vested in, and to appertain to, the said city and county of San Francisco; and the moneys in the treasury of said city, and in the treasury of said county of San Francisco, and all the revenues and income from whatsoever source arising, including delinquent taxes upon persons and property appertaining to the said city or to the said county, shall be handed over, paid and received into the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco as a part of the general fund." The boundaries of the new municipal corporation designated as the "City and County of San Francisco" were fixed as at present, and there was formed out of the southern portion of the county of San Francisco the county of San Mateo; and the eighth section of the act dividing the state into counties, providing for the formation of the county of San Francisco, was repealed. It was further provided in said act that the existing provisions of law defining the powers and duties of county officers, excepting those relating to supervisors, so far as the same were not repealed or altered by said act, should be considered as applicable to the officers of said city and county of San Francisco; and among the enumerated officers to be elected for said new municipal corporation were, in addition to purely city officers, the officers formerly designated as county officers.

From the passage of the consolidation act to the constitutional convention of 1878-79, the city and county of San Francisco had been a subdivision of the state, and as such, and by that name and style, organized and existing as a body politic and corporate. Its charter—the consolidation act—had been added to and amended, but the general form and substance of the municipal government had not been changed. And since the passage of the consolidation act the county of San Francisco has ceased to exist as a body politic or corporate, independently of, and separate from, the municipal corporation created by that act, and known and designated as the "City and County of San Francisco."

One of the contentions on the part of the appellants is that, although the former city and county were consolidated, they were not "merged," within the meaning of the constitution. As already shown, the consolidation act repealed the various acts creating and amending the charter of the city of San Francisco, as well as the provisions of the act creating the county of San Francisco; and all the funds and property of every kind theretofore belonging either to the city or county became vested in, and belonged to, the new municipal corporation known as the "City and County of San Francisco." It would seem difficult to more effectually merge two separate bodies into one. Besides, in the constitutional convention of 1878-79, the city and county of San Francisco was referred to and treated as a merged and consolidated municipal government, and it was then, as now, the only municipal government of that kind in the state. That portion of section 7 of article 11 of the constitution, where merged and consolidated municipal governments are referred to, has not been changed since it was reported to the convention by the committee on municipal corporations, and the debates show that the terms there used referred to a municipal government like that of the city and county of San Francisco. During the debate on the various amendments proposed to that portion of section 7 referring to the two houses of legislation (since omitted by constitutional amendment), Judge Hager, the chairman of the committee, in replying, said: "I had no idea that this section was going to create so much difficulty in the convention, or receive so much apparent opposition. The section as drawn was intended to be for the city of San Francisco." Debates of Constitutional Convention, p. 1058. These remarks of Judge Hager were not questioned by any member, and it is fair, therefore, to assume that the convention understood that when using the term, "merged and consolidated into one municipal government," it had reference at that time only to the city and county of San Francisco, and also to any similar consolidated corporation that might thereafter be created. When the following section, 8 (then section 9), providing for freeholders' charters, was under debate, Judge Hager remarked: "This applies strictly and only to the city and county of San Francisco." (The section originally required a population of more than 100,000 to entitle the inhabitants of such city to frame such a charter.) He further said: "I cannot see that any evil will come from it. We have this peculiar government there,—a consolidated city and county government. I do not agree with my friend from Sacramento, that the tendency is to multiply offices. The tendency is to reduce the number of offices. Instead of having a set of city officers and a set of county officers, they are consolidated. We have a sheriff who is the sheriff of the county and of the city. * * * We have a tax collector and we have an auditor that acts for both; formerly we had one for each. The tendency of a consolidated government is to reduce the offices from two to one in every case, and reduce the expense in every particular, and not, as the gentleman said, for the purpose of multiplying offices."

It is further contended by the appellant that section 8½ of article 11 is invalid, for the reason that it was submitted to the people under the general law, passed March 7, 1883, providing for the submission of constitutional amendments, instead of being submitted specially by the legislature proposing the amendment. St. 1883, p. 53. This contention is entirely untenable. The amendment to section 6 of the same article, by the insertion of the words "except in municipal affairs," was submitted and adopted at the same time and in the same manner as section 8½, now under consideration, and the validity of that amendment has been considered and sustained by this court. Besides, there are many other amendments that have been in like manner submitted and adopted since the passage of the act of 1883. There is no constitutional objection to the passage of such an act, and, that being the case, it is entirely proper for the legislature to provide by general, instead of special, legislation for submitting constitutional amendments to the people.

The causes leading up to the adoption of constitutional amendment section 8½ are well-known. In the freeholders' charter of the city of Los Angeles provision was made for the establishment of a police court and the election of judges thereof. In People v. Toal, 85 Cal. 333, 24 Pac. 603, it was held by this court that such provision of that charter was invalid, for the reason that inferior courts, including police courts, could only be established as provided by article 6, concerning the judicial power of the state, and that it is there provided that the legislature may establish inferior courts in any incorporated city or town or city and county; and this meant that an act must be passed by the legislature in the form and manner prescribed in article 4, legislative department; and that the approval of the freeholders' charter by a vote of the two houses of the legislature was not equivalent to the passage of a law as provided in said legislative article. Hence the new section (8½) of article 11 of the constitution (subdivision 1) confers in express terms the power to provide in freeholders' charters "for the constitution, regulation, government and jurisdiction of police courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the compensation of such judges and their clerks and attaches." And to remove any doubt that may have previously existed concerning the status of officers of the class prosecuting this action, in merged and consolidated municipalities, it is further expressly provided in the amended section (8½) that it should be competent in a freeholders' charter of such consolidated government to provide for the election of such officers for such municipality. There is no room for doubt, therefore, as to the purpose of the legislature in proposing said amended section 8½ of article 11, or of the people in voting upon and approving the same.

It is contended, however, on the part of the appellants, that the provisions of said amended section 8½, under consideration, cannot be carried out, for the reason that it would conflict with the general law of the state establishing a uniform system of county and township government; in other words, that the law (and a freeholders' charter adopted as provided for in the constitution is a law of the highest grade) cannot be passed, although in pursuance of express power granted by the constitution, because it may perhaps infringe upon some other law. The rule of construction invoked by appellants seems to be that a provision in a law or constitution in reference to a particular matter is inoperative and void if it be inconsistent with the general provisions of said law or constitution. The direct opposite is the true construction in such cases. "The more specific provision controls the general, without regard to their comparative dates; the two acts operating together, and neither working the repeal of the other." Bish. Wr. Law, §§ 112-126; Desmond v. Dunn, 55 Cal. 247; Dwar. St. 765; Cooley, Const. Lim. 63; Com. v. Council of Montrose Borough, 52 Pa. St. 391; Coxe v. State, 144 N. Y. 396, 39 N. Reeder*, 22 Mich. 323.

Under this rule of construction, it would be immaterial whether the general county government act applies to the county of San Francisco or not; for, although said new section (8½) of article 11 may conflict with other sections of the same article providing for a uniform system of county and township government, it would still be valid as to the particular cases for which it is intended; for in such case the particular and the general both stand together. Neither abrogates the other; the former furnishing the rule for the freeholders' charter, the latter for all other cases.

But the act establishing a uniform system of county and township government does not, and never has, applied to the county of San Francisco, in the sense claimed by the appellants. The first section provides that the several counties of this state, as they now exist, and such others as may be hereafter organized, are bodies corporate and politic, and as such have the power specified in said act. Among these are the power to sue and to be sued; to purchase and hold land within its limits; to make contracts, and purchase and hold personal property, as may be necessary to the exercise of its powers; to manage and dispose of its property as the interests of its inhabitants may require; to levy and collect such taxes as are authorized by law. The county of San Francisco, as already shown, since the passage of the consolidation act, has never, as such, owned or possessed any property or performed any of the acts of a corporate body. Further, the general law provides that "each county must have a board of supervisors consisting of five members." The county of San Francisco never has had such a board, or any board of supervisors, since the consolidation act. The general county government act also provides for justices of the peace and constables in the several townships of the county, and there are no justices of the peace or constables in the townships of the county of San Francisco, since there are no townships in San Francisco. In fact, it is too obvious for question or argument that the general law establishing a uniform system of county government does not apply to the city and county of San Francisco. Further, section 8 of article 11, as it now stands, declares that, when said charter is approved as therein provided, "it shall become the charter of such city, or, if such city be consolidated with a county, then for such city and county, and shall become the organic law thereof and supersede any existing charter, and all amendments thereof, and all laws inconsistent with such charter." As the section originally stood it read, "all special laws inconsistent with such charter." The purpose of the amendment is in line with other amendments to the other sections of the article in question, and would seem to remove all doubt that such charters are not subject to existing laws, whether general or special. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

TEMPLE, J. I concur in the judgment.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment solely on the ground that the constitutional amendment (section 8½) definitely settles the question involved in favor of the contention of respondents.

STACKPOLE v. HERMANN. (S. F. 2,063.) (Supreme Court of California. Oct. 27, 1899.)

APPEAL AND ERROR—UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL—DATE OF UNDERTAKING—FILING NEW UNDERTAKING IN APPELLATE COURT—DISMISSAL.

1. Where an undated undertaking on appeal is filed after service of notice of appeal, and on the same day said notice is filed, and an affidavit of the surety annexed to the undertaking is dated prior to the date of said service and filing, and prior to the date on which a motion for a new trial was overruled, it must be assumed that the undertaking was signed before the motion for new trial was overruled, and before said notice was served or filed.

2. Where an undertaking on appeal is executed before the overruling of a motion for a new trial, and the appellant files a new undertaking in the supreme court, to get the benefit of Code Civ. Proc. § 954, providing that no appeal shall be dismissed if a good and sufficient undertaking, approved by a justice of the supreme court, be filed before the hearing of a motion to dismiss, the appeal from the order denying a new trial will be dismissed, as the original undertaking is without consideration, and is equivalent to a total lack of any undertaking to perfect an appeal from said order.

3. An appeal from a judgment is valid though the undertaking is signed by the sureties before the notice of appeal is served.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by W. H. Stackpole against R. Hermann. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from judgment, and also from an order denying a new trial. Appeal from the order is dismissed, but motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment is overruled.

John J. Roche, for appellant. F. W. Van Reynegon, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Motion to dismiss the appeal. Judgment herein was entered in the superior court, April 8, 1899, and on June 23d an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial was made. June 27th the defendant served upon the plaintiff a notice of appeal from both the judgment and the order, and on the next day filed the same with the clerk. June 28th he filed with the clerk an undertaking on appeal in proper form, but it did not show the date upon which it was executed. The affidavit of the sureties annexed to their undertaking was dated June 21st, and it must be assumed that the undertaking was not signed by them later than that date. At that time, however, there had been no order made denying a new trial, and there was therefore no right of appeal therefrom, or consideration for an undertaking upon such appeal. Clarke v. Mohr (Cal.) 58 Pac. 176.

Prior to the hearing of this motion, the appellant filed herein an undertaking on appeal, which had been approved by the Chief Justice, and upon that ground asks that the motion be denied. As the undertaking on the appeal from the order which was originally filed herein was without any consideration to support it, and was therefore incapable of sustaining the appeal, there was more than an "insufficiency" in the undertaking, and it must be regarded with the same effect as if no undertaking had been filed. It created no obligation upon the sureties, and gave to the respondent no right to recover from them the costs and damages to which he might be entitled if the judgment should be affirmed or the appeal be dismissed. Such want of validity in the instrument is equivalent to the entire want of an undertaking, and the appellant is not entitled, by virtue of section 954, Code Civ. Proc., to supply its absence by filing a new undertaking. Loan Associates v. Wilkins, 71 Cal. 626, 12 Pac. 799; In re Heydenfeldt's Estate, 119 Cal. 346, 51 Pac. 543.

The objection to the undertaking, on appeal from the judgment, that it was signed by the sureties before the notice of appeal was given, was considered in Clarke v. Mohr, supra, and held to be untenable. The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed. The motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment is denied.

APPEAL BONDS—CONDITIONS—PAYMENT ON DISMISSAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 954, requiring the dismissal of an appeal unless a "good and sufficient undertaking" is filed, an appeal will be dismissed, where the sureties in the undertaking promise "that the appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against him in the appeal, not exceeding $300," but do not agree to make such payment "on a dismissal thereof," as required by section 941.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

In the matter of the estate of George W. Fay an appeal was taken from the judgment. Dismissed.

H. A. Gabriel, J. Samuels, and C. D. Wright, for appellant. E. E. Cothran, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Motion to dismiss the appeal. In the undertaking on appeal herein the sureties undertook and promised "that the appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against him on the appeal, not exceeding three hundred dollars," but the undertaking does not contain an agreement on their part that he will make such payment "on a dismissal thereof," as required by section 941, Code Civ. Proc. In Duncan v. Times-Mirror Co., 109 Cal. 602, 42 Pac. 147, it was held that the omission of these words is fatal, and the appeal therein was for that reason dismissed. In Duffy v. Greenebaum, 72 Cal. 157, 12 Pac. 74, and 13 Pac. 323, it was held that the appellant did not obviate this defect in the undertaking by having inserted the provision in the undertaking to stay execution of the judgment. Prior to the hearing upon this motion the appellant presented another undertaking on appeal, and asked that the same may be filed herein, under the provisions of section 954, Code Civ. Proc., but the same defect exists in the proposed undertaking as in the one originally filed. Under section 954, the appeal must be dismissed unless a "good and sufficient undertaking" is filed in this court. See, also, Ditch Co. v. Bachtold, 109 Cal. 111, 41 Pac. 813; In re Heydenfeldt's Estate, 119 Cal. 346, 51 Pac. 543. The motion is granted, and the appeal dismissed.

CALIFORNIA NAV. & IMP. CO. v. UNION TRANSP. CO. (Sac. 513.)

SHORE OF NAVIGABLE WATERS—DEDICATION FOR PUBLIC LANDING PLACE—AGENT'S TESTIMONY OF PRINCIPALS' INTENTION—ADMISSIBILITY.

1. The dedication of a country highway along the shore of navigable waters does not carry with it the right to use it as a public landing place to discharge and receive freight and passengers.

2. Testimony of an agent as to the intention of his principals, tending to deprive them of their property, is inadmissible if unsupported by facts tending to show that he knew what their intention was, and unaccompanied by any of their declarations and acts.

3. The public used as a landing a part of the shore of navigable waters for a long period of years, with the consent of an agent of the owners, but it did not appear that he was authorized to dedicate the same to the use of the public further than that he was authorized to manage and reclaim for its owners a large area of swamp land, of which it was a part, and his testimony showed that it was their intention to retain control thereof. Held not to justify a finding that the landing had been dedicated to the public, conceding that such a dedication may be made.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by the California Navigation & Improvement Company, a corporation, against the Union Transportation Company, a corporation. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Woods & Levinsky and Thos. H. Breeze, for appellant. Fairall & Carrol, Reddy, Campbell & Metson, and S. M. Spencer, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Injunction. Defendant had judgment, from which, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff and defendant are corporations engaged in transporting freight and passengers by river between the city of Stockton and the city of San Francisco and intermediate points. About June 1, 1897, plaintiff became lessee of a certain piece of land situate on Roberts Island, in San Joaquin county, known as "Wakefield's Landing," the same being a portion of the so-called "Wakefield Ranch," adjacent to the San Joaquin river. It is alleged in the complaint that defendant, "without the consent of plaintiff, and against the will of the said plaintiff, has for many days past continuously entered upon the said land and premises, and used the same for the purpose of making landings and receiving therefrom freight and passengers, and of delivering thereon freight and passengers; and that the said defendant, although requested so to do, has refused to cease from said use of the said land and premises, and threatens to, and will, unless restrained, * * * continue to enter upon and use the said land and premises for the aforesaid purposes." It is also alleged that said entry has caused and does cause continual and daily damage, and that to recover the amount of damages suffered and which will be suffered will require a multiplicity of suits. The defense to the action set up in the answer is that plaintiff is not damaged, and that the leased premises had long been dedicated and set apart and used as a public highway, and denies any right in plaintiff's lessor to lease the same; and also that the said premises had been, in 1876, set apart and dedicated as a free public wharf and landing, and accepted and used by the public as such. The cause was tried upon the complaint and answer, no demurrer to either having been interposed. At the request of defendant, and against plaintiff's objection, certain questions were submitted to a jury, and answered as follows: (1) That plaintiff was not in possession of the premises on July 8, 1897, "otherwise than as one of the public." (2) The premises on that day were "a part of a public highway, which had theretofore been dedicated to the public by the owners of the land." (3) On that day the premises constituted a public landing, which had been dedicated to the public, prior to the commencement of this action, by the owners of the land, and the same had been accepted by the public by the use and occupation of the same for 20 years last past. (4) That plaintiff had not been damaged other than nominally. (5) The premises, "for more than twenty years prior to the commencement of the action, have been continuously, peaceably, uninterruptedly, notoriously, openly, and with the knowledge of plaintiff and its grantors used as a public highway, road, and landing place by the public in general, and by all persons who chose to travel over said highway, road, and landing place, and use the same." The court adopted these answers as part of the findings, and also found that on June 1, 1897, one Ralph P. Lane was the owner of the fee of the property in controversy, and that plaintiff, "by means of mesne leases, leased the same from said Lane."

The principal question involved is: Did the evidence justify the decision that Wakefield Landing was, prior to the commencement of the action, dedicated to public use as a public landing place, and had defendant a right to occupy it for landing purposes against plaintiff's consent? The evidence in support of respondent's position was of two classes, —one relating to the dedication of a highway, and the other to the long use by the public, and the dedication to the public of the land for a wharf and landing. The land in question is part of a tract of about 38,000 acres, which, in 1876, was the property of the Glasgow-California Land Company. At that time Roberts Island was an unreclaimed swamp, and its reclamation was undertaken in two parts, called the upper and the lower divisions; Wakefield Landing being on the lower division. As the levee system progressed, the land was occupied from time to time by tenants of the company, and later by purchasers from it. Roads were used indiscriminately at first, but finally settled down in recognized locations. Landing places also became necessary at different points upon the island for landing supplies and receiving the products grown on the land. There were several of these landing places, and, among others, the one in question. It consisted simply of a levee, somewhat higher and broader than the levees generally protecting the island. The leased land embraced a strip along the river 1,000 feet in length and 100 feet in width, measured from the river. The evidence tends to show that roads leading from the cultivated portions of the island approached this landing from above and below, following inside of the levees, and converging at Wakefield Landing, where they ran upon this more elevated land, which formed both a levee and roadway.

Some of the witnesses testified that the road ran all over this higher ground, and that the road and levee were practically identical at that place. The evidence tended to show use by the company and by the public of these roads as public highways for many years by acquiescence of the agent having charge of the property. Whether this was sufficient to justify the finding need not be decided, but, assuming that it was sufficient for that purpose, we cannot concur with respondent in his contention that proof of dedication of the highway establishes a dedication of the land for a landing and wharves, even if identical in situation and area with that used for the highway,—which is by no means clearly shown to be the fact. The evidence is that the levee was built up and broadened out for landing purposes at this point, and the roads came to the landing. The landing did not go to the roads. The dedication of the roads was entirely consistent with nondedication of land for wharfage purposes. Nor can we agree with respondent that the dedication of the locus in quo for road purposes implied a dedication for a landing, or that the right to use the road for landing purposes was included in the right to use the dedicated strip for a road. Evidence alone of an intention to dedicate to a particular use cannot be considered as implying an intention to dedicate to another and entirely different use.

Instances are numerous where highways are laid out along the shores of rivers, lakes, bays, and the ocean, both for pleasure and for general utility, as highways. We know of no principle of law that would justify us in holding that the owner of the soil over which any such highway is laid out is to be deemed to have dedicated the banks or shores to the common use of the public for landing purposes by dedicating a strip of land as a highway. In the case of Chambers v. Furry, 1 Yeates, 167, the question arose under an alleged right of fishery to land on the Susquehanna river at a point where a public highway approached the river. The action was trespass, and the defendant justified on the ground, among others, that there was a highway laid out to the river at the point in question. The evidence showed that the highway terminated some perches distant from where the boats landed and received their freight. The court said: "But, had it been a highway, would it have been a justification? The public would in that case have been entitled to a right of passage, but the title to the soil, the stones, the wood, or the grass growing thereon would have still continued in the owner of the lands. The use of the ground would be dedicated to the public for particular purposes only. The books lay it down that in England the right to a bed of a navigable river is presumed to belong to the crown, and, of course, in such case here to the commonwealth, 'usque ad filum aquæ'; but the right to the adjoining lands rests in the owner of the soil. No one can use them without making compensation to the respective proprietors." The rule as held in that early case has been often since approved, and, we think, is the correct rule, except as it seems to have been modified in relation to streets in towns and cities. See Cooper v. Smith, 9 Serg. & R. 26; Chess v. Manon, 3 Watts, 219. The question was more fully considered and was elaborately discussed in the case of Pearsall v. Post, 20 Wend. 111, and later, on appeal to the court of errors, in Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. 425. The action was trespass for entering upon the land of plaintiff and depositing thereon a quantity of manure. The case had very full consideration both in the supreme court and in the court of errors. After reviewing the cases, including those above cited, Mr. Justice Cowen, speaking upon the point before us, said: "The amount of these cases is that roads are made to be traveled on, and not to be occupied, much less to be blocked up, by sloops and scows. If the contrary were allowed, the ferryman might derive a profit from his toll, which belongs to the owner, under a pretense of free passage. The intention of laying out a public highway is to make a free passage, not a profit of water craft. The easement is for land, not water, carriage, and therefore not to be touched by the latter without the permission of the owner." Again, he remarked: "Independent of what I take to have been the plain intent of the legislature, a landing, even though for the purpose of direct transit, is more than a highway. The relative rights, both of owner and passenger, in a highway, are perfectly understood and familiarly dealt with by the law. Subject to the right of mere passage, the owner of the soil is still absolute master."

Respondent contends that the cases to which reference has been made have been practically overruled by the cases cited in its brief. The case of Barney v. City of Keokuk, 94 U. S. 336, is cited, among others, as adverse to appellant's contention. Reference is made in that case to Haight v. City of Keokuk, 4 Iowa, 199, from which the supreme court quoted approvingly, as was done in several other of the cases cited: "The streets of a town are fairly subject to many purposes to which a highway in the country would not be. More regard should be paid to the object and purpose than to the name. The ways of a town would be of comparatively little use if the citizens and traders could not deposit their goods in them temporarily in their transit to the storehouse; and so of other things, and so it is of the wharf." It will be observed that the court expressly distinguished the conditions existing in a town or city as to streets from those existing in the country in suburban regions. for the court said: "The streets of a town are fairly subject to many purposes to which a highway in the country would not be." This distinction is expressly recognized in Barney v. City of Keokuk, supra, and by Mr. Dillon, where he states the rule in his work on Municipal Corporations (section 633), and also in the leading case of City of Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. 431. I do not find any case, and none is cited by respondent, where the doctrine is laid down as universally applicable that the dedication of a highway along the shore of navigable waters outside of towns and cities carries with it a right to land vessels indiscriminately on such highway, and use it as a public landing place to discharge and receive freight and passengers.

Conceding that there may be a dedication of land for wharves or landing places on the banks of navigable waters, we are brought to consider whether the evidence shows such dedication here. First, it should be determined in what manner may dedication be made, and by what evidence may it be proved. We have seen that it cannot follow from proof of dedication as a highway. The authorities hold that: "To constitute a dedication, there must be an abandonment by the owner to the use of the public exclusively, and not a mere use by the public in connection with a user by the owners in such measure as they may desire. Nor can the public acquire a right by prescription or custom to land on the shore of a navigable stream, to unload freight, and thus incumber the land." Washb. Easem. pp. 205, 555; Talbot v. Grace, 30 Ind. 390; City of Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. 431, at page 438; Pearsall v. Post, 20 Wend. 111; Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. 425; Curtis v. Keesler, 14 Barb. 511; Chambers v. Furry, 1 Yeates, 167; and other cases. In City of Cincinnati v. White the court shows that rights of this description do not rest upon length of possession. We think the rule in a case such as his one, where not controlled by statute, is correctly stated in Post v. Pearsall, supra, as follows: "Dedication cannot be presumed as a mere legal inference from a prescriptive user, but should be proved to have been made by writing, or by public and unequivocal declarations or acts; and the evidence of user is good only to show that such dedication was accepted and enjoyed, and to corroborate or explain other evidence or probabilities." Mr. Dillon says: "Upon the adjudged cases there exists some doubt whether the public can prescribe for or claim, by way of implied or common-law dedication, land for landing purposes." But he adds: "There may be an express dedication for this purpose, and, on principle, within the limits of a municipality bordering on navigable waters, it would seem to be going too far to say that in no case can a common-law dedication of land for a public wharf or landing be shown by user, and the proprietor be estopped from denying the right of the public to such use." 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 649. The dedication must be made by the owner of the land, and an intention on the part of the owner to dedicate is absolutely essential, and, unless such intention can be found in the facts and circumstances of the particular case, no dedication exists. Id. §§ 635, 636.

Apart from evidence tending to show that the public used the landing in question for a period of years with the consent of the agent of the owner, Mr. Ferris, the evidence is slight, and inconclusive. The land was owned until quite recently by a corporation whose principal place of business was in San Francisco. There is no evidence that any stockholder or director or officer of the corporation ever visited Roberts Island, or took any part in the establishment of Wakefield Landing, or directly authorized or ratified its establishment. Mr. Ferris was the land company's engineer and agent at the island, but there is no evidence as to how far his authority extended, and not the slightest direct evidence that he had authority to dedicate any of the land to the public for wharves or landings. He testified for defendant: "I have known Roberts Island for twenty-one years. I have been an agent of the people owning it for the greater part of that time, and engaged in carrying out its reclamation and management. I am no longer engaged with the people who own it. I have some interests of my own there, but the people by whom I was employed the greater part of the time have no further interest there. I ceased to be their agent in 1892." This is the extent of the evidence as to his power, and it does not seem to us that his agency to carry out the reclamation of the land implied any authority to dedicate any portion of it to the public for landings. There is an entire lack of evidence from which it can be inferred that Mr. Ferris had authority to dedicate this land to the public for a landing. Taking his evidence in its entirety, it shows that, so far as he assumed to express what the intention of the owners of the land was, there never was any intention to yield control of the land to the public, without which there could be no dedication. Respondent contends that, when Ferris testified that "it was the intention of the owners to have this landing for the use of the tenants and for the use of the public," he testified to what the owners did; that he stated their intention as a fact. We do not think it was competent for Ferris to deprive the owners of their property by testifying to their intention, unsupported by any facts tending to show that he knew what their intention was, and unaccompanied by any acts or declarations of the owners. Besides, his evidence clearly showed that the intention of the owners to which he testified was to retain in themselves the control of the landing, and this introduced an element wholly inconsistent with legal dedication. The evidence does not justify the finding that the premises in question were, prior to the commencement of the action, a public landing which had been dedicated to the public.

We do not feel called upon to indicate the particular facts and circumstances which should be made to appear before an equity court will interpose to restrain a trespass, such as is here intended to be set forth. Attention is invited to the decision in the case between the same parties reported in 122 Cal.

641, 55 Pac. 591, which was decided on a general demurrer to the complaint since this present action was tried. The facts proven in the case now here are no stronger than as admitted by the demurrer in the case cited. The complaint in this case is substantially the same as in the case cited, and must have shared the same fate had a general demurrer been interposed to it. The findings, however, do not support the judgment, and it should therefore be reversed, and we so advise.

We concur: BRITT, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed.

LEONIS v. LEFFINGWELL. (L. A. 641.)

LEONIS' ESTATE v. SAME. (L. A. 642.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 21, 1899.)

APPEAL AND ERROR—COSTS—JUDGMENT AGAINST ADMINISTRATOR.

Since the act of a clerk in erroneously entering a judgment for costs against an administrator personally instead of against the estate is not a mere clerical error, it cannot be corrected on motion, but can only be taken advantage of by appeal.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Michael Leonis, executor of Jean Leonis, deceased, against Anna G. Leffingwell. Judgment against the administrator for costs. From orders denying motions to amend the judgment, and rejecting the judgment as a claim against decedent's estate, she appeals. Affirmed.

Wells & Lee, for appellant. H. H. Appel, R. Dunnigan, and Reymert & Orfila, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. These two appeals were argued and submitted, and will be considered, together. No. 641 is an appeal by defendant Leffingwell from an order denying her motion to have a judgment in her favor amended; and No. 642 is an appeal by said Leffingwell from an order in probate rejecting said judgment as a claim against the estate of said Jean Leonis, deceased. If the order refusing to amend the judgment in No. 641 was right, as we think it was, then the order in No. 642, rejecting the judgment as a claim against the estate, was also right, and both orders should be affirmed. The facts in No. 641 are these: The action was ejectment, and was brought by Jean Leonis, since deceased, on the 16th day of October, 1886, against Anna G. Leffingwell, who answered, denying the averments of the complaint. Afterwards, and before the action was tried, Jean Leonis died, and his executor, Michael Leonis, was substituted as plaintiff. The case was afterwards tried with a jury, and on the 15th day of June, 1888, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. On June 16, 1888, a judgment was entered in which, after the usual recitals, including a recital of the verdict, it was adjudged that plaintiff took nothing by the action, "and that the said defendant, Anna G. Leffingwell, do have and recover from said plaintiff, Michael Leonis, executor of the last will and testament of Jean Leonis, deceased, her costs and disbursements incurred in this action, amounting to the sum of ——— dollars." On the same day the defendant filed her cost bill, which on the 20th day of July, 1888, was, on motion, taxed in the sum of $686.55, but the costs as taxed were never entered in the judgment. The judgment stood as originally entered, without any further proceedings thereon, until the 9th day of March, 1896, which was nearly eight years after the date of the entry of the judgment. On the last-named day the defendant, Leffingwell, moved the superior court for an order requiring the clerk of the court to enter the amount of the costs as taxed in the blank space in the judgment, and to add to the judgment the following words: "And that said judgment be, and the same is hereby, payable out of the estate of Jean Leonis, deceased, in the due course of administration thereof." The court refused to grant the motion, and, from the order so refusing, the appeal in No. 641 is taken. In 1889 the executor, Michael Leonis, died; and, although several administrators of the estate were afterwards appointed, no person was ever substituted in the place of Michael Leonis as a party plaintiff.

Appellant contends that its motion to amend the judgment should have been granted because the part of the original judgment which awarded costs against the administrator personally was a mere clerical mistake or misprision, which could be amended by the record. Nearly all the cases to which we have been referred where judgments have been amended for clerical mistakes were cases where the clerk had incorrectly entered the judgment which the court had rendered. It is evidently that class of cases to which Mr. Freeman refers in the long quotation which appellant makes from his work on Judgments. He there says: "All courts have inherent power to correct clerical errors at any time, and to make the judgment entry correspond with the judgment rendered. * * * Where the record contains sufficient matter to show that the judgment entered is not the one rendered, it may be corrected," etc. And again: "In whatever respect the clerk may have erred in entering judgment, the court may, on proper evidence, nullify the error by making the judgment entry fully and correctly express the judgment rendered." Freem. Judgm. § 71. In the case at bar it does not appear that the court rendered any judgment, or that the clerk incorrectly entered any judgment, order, or instruction of the court. Neither, indeed, does it appear that the court did not direct the clerk to enter the very judgment which was entered, as the court could have done under section 1031 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The act of the clerk in entering the judgment was not a clerical misprision, within the meaning of any of the authorities to which we have been referred, nor is there any record by which it could be amended in the respect asked for. When a judgment for costs should be against an administrator, and when it should be "made chargeable only upon the estate," are questions about which sections 1031 and 1509 are somewhat conflicting. See Reay v. Butler, 99 Cal. 479, 480, 33 Pac. 1134. If, therefore, in the case at bar the judgment for costs was erroneous because it was against the executor personally, and not made chargeable only upon the estate, it was, like any other erroneous judgment, reversible on appeal; but it was not the result of a mere clerical misprision which could be amended by the record. In both Burrill's and Black's Law Dictionaries "clerical error" is defined as "a mistake in copying or writing; the mistake of a clerk in writing." In Rapalje the definition is "a mistake in copying or transcribing a written instrument;" in Wharton, "a mistake in copying." There are references in these books to Villars v. Parry, 1 Ld. Raym. 182, where the distinction between a clerical mistake and an erroneous judgment is clearly pointed out. The case at bar cannot be distinguished from Morrison v. Dapman, 3 Cal. 255, except that the case at bar is stronger in favor of the respondent here than the Morrison Case was in favor of the appellant there. That also was ejectment brought by an administrator where the defendants recovered, and the judgment pronounced by the court was that "the defendants do recover their costs." There was no further direction by the court as to costs, but the clerk, when entering the judgment, put in this clause, "and it is further ordered, etc., that said judgment be levied, and paid out of the effects of said deceased in the hands of said administrator and unadministered." Six months afterwards defendant's attorney moved to amend the original judgment by striking out the clause above quoted, and the court granted the motion, and amended the judgment for costs so as to make it against the administrator personally. On appeal the order was reversed and the court said: "A court may at any time render or amend a judgment nunc pro tunc. But this power is confined to cases where the record discloses that the entry on the minutes does not correctly give what was the judgment of the court. If there is no record evidence to show that the judgment was different from the one entered, the latter must stand as the judgment until reversed."

Under the foregoing views, it is not necessary to notice the many other points made by respondent in support of the orders appealed from,—as, for instance, that no appeal will lie because there is no plaintiff to the action; that, if the amendment could have been made by the court at all, it should have been made, under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., within six months after the judgment; that the judgment could not be amended at the time of the motion to amend because it was then lifeless under the statute of limitations; and that both appeals should be dismissed for various other reasons given. Perhaps the clerk could have been compelled, by mandamus or other proceeding, to insert the amount of the costs as taxed in the blank in the judgment, if a proceeding for that purpose had been commenced in time; but that matter is of little importance here, as the main purpose of the appellant is to have the judgment for costs made chargeable against the estate. Such a proceeding would now be barred by laches. The order appealed from in L. A. No. 641 is affirmed, and the order appealed from in L. A. No. 642 is also affirmed.

SECURITY LOAN & TRUST CO. OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA v. BOSTON & S. R. FRUIT CO. et al. (four cases. L. A. 476-479.)

JUDGMENT—DEFAULT—VACATION—SPECIAL APPEARANCE—GROUND OF MOTION—MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE—DECREE.

1. Defendant appeared specially for the purpose of vacating a default judgment. He claimed that the court had acquired no jurisdiction by reason of a defect in publication of the summons, and that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the notice in the summons did not conform to the relief demanded in the complaint. Held, that the assignment of the last two grounds for the motion constitutes a general appearance and waiver of all defects in the service of the summons.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 580, which provides that in actions where there is no answer the relief granted shall not exceed that which plaintiff demanded in his complaint, an allegation, in a complaint in an action to foreclose a mortgage on real estate and certain shares of stock, that the trustee should be directed to deliver to the clerk of the court the shares of stock, so as to be subject to the further order of the court, warrants a decree directing the trustee to deliver such stock into court, though the prayer of the complaint said nothing about the stock, but prayed such relief as the court might deem plaintiff entitled to, and no answer was filed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Actions by the Security Loan & Trust Company of Southern California against the Boston & South Riverside Fruit Company and others. From default judgments in favor of plaintiff, the Boston & South Riverside Fruit Company and the United States Trust Company appeal. Affirmed.

Luke D. Bechtel, for appellants in Nos. 476, 477. Wm. Peck and Wm. J. Hunsaker, for appellants in Nos. 478, 479. R. H. F. Vartel and J. G. North, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. All these appeals involve exactly the same questions. They were argued and submitted together, and will be so decided. The references in the briefs and arguments of counsel are to the transcript in appeal No. 478, and we will consider and determine the case presented in that transcript; the other appeals involving exactly the same questions, although in one set of appeals the United States Trust Company is the appellant, and in the other the Boston & South Riverside Fruit Company is the appellant, both appellants being foreign corporations. The case upon which the appeal in No. 478 arises is an action to foreclose the lien of a mortgage made by E. W. Skinner to the plaintiff's assignor upon certain real property, and also to foreclose a lien upon 14 shares of the capital stock of the Temescal Water Company, which at the time of the mortgage, and as part of the same transaction, were deposited with one George L. Joy to hold as trustee as additional security for the promissory note to secure which the mortgage on the real property was given. The appellant herein the Boston & South Riverside Fruit Company, a corporation, was made a party defendant upon the averment that it claimed an interest in the land mortgaged and in the said shares of stock. Service by publication was made upon the appellant, or was attempted to be made by publication; and, the appellant not having appeared within the statutory time, default was entered against it, and final judgment was afterwards rendered foreclosing all its right, etc., in and to the said property. Judgment was entered on the 19th day of December, 1896. Afterwards, on the 9th day of July, 1897, the appellant served a notice on plaintiff that on July 19, 1897, or as soon thereafter as counsel could be heard, the appellant, "appearing specially for the purpose of making the motions hereinafter mentioned, and not otherwise, will move the said court to make an order or orders in said cause: (1) Vacating and setting aside the order for publication of summons; (2) vacating and setting aside the entry of the default of said defendant Boston & South Riverside Fruit Company; (3) vacating and setting aside the judgment entered therein against said defendant; (4) vacating and setting aside the sale made under said judgment; (5) vacating and setting aside all proceedings taken against said defendant in said action subsequent to the making of said order for publication of summons. Said motion will be made and based on the following grounds: (1) That the affidavit of R. H. F. Variel, Esq., upon which said order for publication of summons was based, is insufficient to authorize the court, or the judge thereof, to make said order, in that it does not appear therefrom that said defendant had no managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary within the state of California." The motion then sets forth a number of grounds upon which it is based, referring to the insufficiency of the order for publication and the insufficiency of the affidavit upon which it was based, and then the following are stated as grounds for the motion, to wit: "(10) That the decree of foreclosure and sale entered in said action exceeds the relief demanded in plaintiff's complaint, in that (a) said decree and judgment directs and requires the sale of fourteen shares of the capital stock of the Temescal Water Company, referred to in the said complaint; (b) said decree requires the delivery of said capital stock to the clerk of said court." "(14) That the complaint in said action does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant. (15) That the notice in the summons does not conform to the relief demanded in the complaint, in that the complaint does not pray judgment authorizing the sale of the shares of the capital stock of the Temescal Water Company, referred to in said summons." It is contended by respondent that these last-quoted grounds for the motion constitute a general appearance, and a waiver of all defects in the service of the summons; and we think that this contention must be sustained. When a party moves to set aside a default and judgment upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction over his person because there had been no valid service of summons, he must carefully occupy that ground exclusively, and must keep out of court for all other purposes. The law upon the point, gathered from a long list of authorities cited, is correctly stated in 2 Enc. Pl. & Prac. § 625, as follows: "The principle to be extracted from the decisions on the subject as to when a special appearance is converted into a general one is that, where the defendant appears, and asks some relief which can only be granted on the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of the cause and person, it is a submission to the jurisdiction of the court as completely as if he had been regularly served with process, whether such an appearance, by its terms, be limited to a special appearance or not,"—citing a number of authorities. In Lowe v. Stringham, 14 Wis. 225, the court states the rule tersely as follows: "If a party wishes to insist upon the objection that he is not in court, he must keep out for all purposes except to make that objection." In Land Co. v. O'Hare, 93 Wis. 194, 67 N. W. 38, the court says: "The settled rule is that if a party desires to take advantage of want of service of process sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of his person by moving to set aside the proceedings on that ground, he must appear specially for that purpose, and keep out of court for all others. Alderson v. White, 32 Wis. 308. If the motion be made to set aside the judgment on a ground inconsistent with the claim that it is void for want of jurisdiction of the person,—as, for instance, for irregularity in entering the judgment, or because costs are excessive, or not warranted by the pleadings, or because of some fact or facts constituting a defense,—as is said in Alderson v. White, supra, in effect such motion carries with it all objections to the jurisdiction of the court growing out of defective service or want of service of process on the persons of the defendants making the motion. It constitutes a submission on their part to the jurisdiction of the court, because the relief granted would be inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis." In Burdette v. Corgan, 26 Kan. 102, the court say: "The motion to vacate the judgment recited that the parties specially appeared, and moved to set aside the judgment as void for several reasons; among them that the petition of the plaintiff did not state facts sufficient to uphold the judgment. * * * In the first place, we remark that this appearance by the motion, though called special, was in fact a general appearance, and by it this defendant appeared so far as she could appear. The motion challenged the judgment, not merely on jurisdictional, but also on nonjurisdictional, grounds; and whenever such a motion is made the appearance is general, no matter what the parties may call it in their motion." Numerous other decisions declaring the law as above stated could be cited from foreign jurisdictions, but this will be unnecessary, because the same principle was declared by this court in Re Clarke, 58 Pac. 22. In that case Temple, J., delivering the opinion of the court, discussed the subject at some length, and, among other things, said: "On general principles a statement that a defendant or party makes a special appearance is of no consequence whatever. If he appears and objects only to the consideration of the case, or to any procedure in it, because the court has not acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, the appearance is special, and no statement to that effect in the notice or motion is required or could have any effect if made. On the other hand, if he appears and asks for any relief which could only be given to a party in a pending case, or which itself would be a regular proceeding in the case, it is a general appearance, no matter how carefully or expressly it may be stated that the appearance is special. It is the character of the relief asked, and not the intention of the party that it shall or shall not constitute a general appearance, which is material. See 2 Enc. Pl. & Prac. 625, notes, and cases cited." In the case at bar the motion of appellant was based upon grounds other than a want of jurisdiction of the person,—as, for instance, "that the complaint in said action does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant,"—which is, in substance, a demurrer to the complaint, and that the complaint does not pray for a judgment authorizing the sale of the shares of stock, that the summons does not conform to the complaint, etc. Therefore, upon the principles and authorities above stated and cited, the court did not err in denying appellant's motion to vacate the judgment, etc.

Upon the appeal from the judgment the only point to be considered is whether the court erred in the disposition which it made of the shares of stock, upon the ground that the relief granted as to the stock was beyond that asked for in the complaint. We do not think that the contention of the appellant on this point can be maintained. It is true that in the formal prayer at the end of the complaint there is nothing said about the stock, although it is prayed that the plaintiff "have such other and further relief as to the court may seem lawful and proper." But section 580, Code Civ. Proc., does not refer to any formal part of the complaint. It merely provides that, where there has been no answer, the relief granted shall not exceed that which the plaintiff "shall have demanded in his complaint." In the complaint all the facts about the giving of the shares of stock as additional security, and constituting, with the mortgage of the land, a part of the same transaction, are fully set out; and paragraph 12 of the complaint, in which all these facts are specifically stated, contains this clause: "That the said administratrix of the estate of George L. Joy, deceased, should be, by an order and decree of this court, directed to transfer and deliver up to this court, or to the clerk thereof, the said fourteen shares of stock of the said Temescal Water Company, so as to be subject to the further order of this court, and to disposition or sale under any decree made and entered herein." We think that this is a substantial and sufficient compliance with said section 580 of the Code. The judgments and orders appealed from in all the above-entitled cases are affirmed.

Action by George Meyer against A. Haas and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. J. Hunsaker, for appellants. R. A. Long and E. A. Meserve, for respondent.

GRAY, C. Action for injuries to the person. Defendants appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor for $1,500 and from an order denying a new trial.

The plaintiff fell into an insufficiently guarded elevator shaft which was maintained by defendants near the middle of the sidewalk immediately in front of their place of business in the city of Los Angeles. The result of his fall was three or four broken ribs and internal injuries apparently of a nature to permanently disqualify him for the performance of hard work, such as he had previously been accustomed to. The defense principally relied on at the trial was a settlement and discharge of appellants from all claim for damages. The plaintiff was a German, and spoke and understood the English language imperfectly, and could not read it at all. The defendants employed Carl Kurtz as a physician to treat plaintiff's injuries. This physician also acted as the agent of appellants in the settlement relied on as a defense. The evidence shows that on their behalf he paid plaintiff $25, and secured his signature to a receipt prepared by appellants, which receipt is as follows: "Received of Haas, Baruch & Company the sum of twenty-five dollars in full satisfaction and discharge of all injuries of every kind, nature, and description sustained by me by reason of having fallen down their sidewalk elevator shaft on Los Angeles street, near Aliso, on November 5, 1897, and in full satisfaction of my loss of time by reason of said accident; the said Haas, Baruch & Company having provided me with medical attendance during my illness pursuant to said accident. And this is to be a receipt in full of all claims of every kind, nature, and description which I have against said firm by reason of any injuries sustained by me, or time lost by me, by reason of said accident. Dated Los Angeles, November 24, 1897. [Signed] George Meyer. Witness: Carl Kurtz." In addition to their general verdict in plaintiff's favor for $1,500, the jury, in response to questions proposed by appellants, specially found as follows: "(1) Did the plaintiff, on the 24th day of November, 1897, execute and deliver to Dr. Carl Kurtz, for the defendants in this case, the instrument dated November 24, 1897, a copy of which is set forth in defendants' answer? Answer. Yes. (2) Did the plaintiff receive from Dr. Carl Kurtz, acting for the defendants, Haas, Baruch & Co., the

RELEASE—VALIDITY—OPERATION.

1. A person who understood English imperfectly, and was unable to read, executed a contract releasing a claim for personal injuries and lost time in consideration of $25, believing the same to be a release for lost time only. He was led into this error by the deception of his physician, who was the agent of the persons liable for the claim. Held, that the part of the contract releasing the claim for personal injuries was void.

2. The rule requiring the return of the consideration for a contract releasing a claim for damages before it can be avoided by the maker does not apply where he is deceived into signing sum of twenty-five dollars as the consideration for the execution and delivery of said instrument? Answer. Yes. (3) Did Dr. Carl Kurtz at any time make any misrepresentations to plaintiff as to the contents, character, or legal effect of such instrument? Answer. Yes. (4) If you answer the third question in the affirmative, then you will state particularly, and in detail, what false representations or misstatements concerning either the contents, character, or legal effect of said instrument were made by Dr. Kurtz to said plaintiff. Answer. He did not convey full information as to its contents, and said it was all right, and led him [the plaintiff] to believe that the twenty-five dollars only covered his loss of time while he was sick. (5) Did Dr. Kurtz say anything to the plaintiff or do anything to prevent the plaintiff from becoming fully acquainted with the character, contents, and legal effect of said instrument before the signing thereof by the plaintiff? Answer. Yes. (6) If you answer the fifth question in the affirmative, then you will state particularly, and in detail, what Dr. Kurtz said or did to prevent the plaintiff from becoming fully acquainted with the character, contents, or legal effect of said instrument. Answer. He withheld full explanation of the instrument, and led plaintiff to believe it was all right. He neglected to inform him that the acceptance of the twenty-five dollars barred any further action for damages of any nature whatever. (7) Has the plaintiff ever restored to the defendants, or offered to restore, the twenty-five dollars received by him at the time of the execution by him of the instrument of November 24, 1897? Answer. No."

It will be seen from these special findings of the jury, considered in connection with their general verdict, that the jury were of the opinion that plaintiff executed the alleged release under a mistake as to its contents; that he believed he was receiving the $25 and giving the receipt in discharge of any claim he might have for loss of time merely; and that he was led into this error by the artifice and deception of Kurtz as to the contents of the instrument, Kurtz acting as the agent of defendants, and being in their employ, and at the same time pretending to act for plaintiff. The case is not without evidence to support such conclusions. That portion of the contract, therefore, purporting to release and satisfy the claim upon which the action is based is, on the findings of the jury, absolutely void, for the reason that the mind of plaintiff never consented to any such a release, and the plaintiff should be bound only to the release and satisfaction of his claim for loss of time. This view of the case makes it clearly distinguishable from most of the cases cited by appellant. In those cases generally the parties sought to avoid or rescind contracts, the nature and contents of which they understood correctly, but they had been led to execute them by fraud or deception as to something other than the contents of the contract; and in such a case the contract would not be void, but only voidable, and the rule requiring a return of everything received on the faith of the contract before it could be rescinded or avoided would apply. But this rule as to a return of everything received does not apply where a party is tricked or deceived into signing a contract different in its terms and objects from the contract which he has made, and which he understands that he is executing. The contract, under such circumstances, will be held to be what the maker of it intended it should be, and not what it was made to appear to be by the deception practiced. The $25 paid plaintiff may, therefore, properly be said to have been received in payment for the loss of time during his illness, and not in satisfaction of anything that his mind never consented that it should satisfy. The claim sued upon does not include this loss of time, and the court instructed the jury that they could find nothing against defendants for loss of time. No offer to return the money was necessary, for the reason that the plaintiff in this case "is not attempting to avoid a contract which he has made, but is showing that he did not make the contract which he apparently made." Mullen v. Railroad Co., 127 Mass. 86; Railway Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 120; Senter v. Senter, 70 Cal. 619, 11 Pac. 782; Wilson v. Moriarty, 77 Cal. 596, 20 Pac. 134; Id., 88 Cal. 207, 26 Pac. 85; Sullivan v. Moorhead, 99 Cal. 157, 33 Pac. 796.

Appellants, in their reply brief, cite Hawkins v. Hawkins, 50 Cal. 558, and Association v. Esche, 75 Cal. 513, 17 Pac. 675. In neither of these cases was there any relation of trust or confidence between the parties, and the means of knowing the contents of the contract executed was open alike to both parties; but in this case the agent of appellants was also acting as the agent of respondent, and respondent trusted in him, and relied upon his representation that the instrument was "a receipt for the lost time." Here, too, the contract was in a language that respondent could not read, and so the means of knowledge as to its contents was not equally open to each of the parties to it. The disposition of this case in the trial court is, therefore, not in conflict with the two cases last referred to.

The point is made that the special findings of the jury fail to show that the release was obtained by misrepresentation or fraud. That might well be and still the implied finding of misrepresentation and fraud would attach to the general verdict returned by the jury. Certainly, the special findings are not inconsistent with respondent's theory of misrepresentation, but, in so far as they relate to the subject at all, they tend to support that theory.

The contention of appellant that "it is not alleged in the complaint that plaintiff's injuries were caused by defendants' negligence," and for that reason the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, is evidently based on a misapprehension of the contents of the complaint. The complaint states facts showing that the injuries to plaintiff were caused by defendants' negligence.

The court did not err in refusing instructions 1 and 2 requested by defendants, and instruction No. 2 given by the court of its own motion is not erroneous in the respect contended for by appellant. We advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

FRAUDULENT SALE—CONVEYANCE TO CORPORATION—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

Where the owner of personal property, which he had theretofore used in the carrying on of his business, gave a bill of sale thereof to a corporation formed by himself and children, and the business was carried on therewith by the corporation practically as it was before,—the former owner's name being obliterated from a sign on the premises, but none other being substituted,—the sale is void as to creditors, under Civ. Code, § 3440, which provides that sales of personalty, not accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, shall be void as to creditors of the vendor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the McKee Stair-Building Company against Henry S. Martin, as sheriff. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Alexander & Gardner, for appellant. J. W. Carter, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This action was brought to enjoin the defendant from selling, as sheriff, certain personal property, alleged to belong to plaintiff, under an execution issued against the property of one John McKee. The defendant justified under said execution, and alleged that the property in question belonged to said John McKee at the time it was seized by defendant. The case was tried without a jury, plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals from the same, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is admitted that John McKee was the owner of the property for years, but respondent contends that it owns the property by virtue of a sale of the same by John McKee to it, which sale is evidenced by a bill of sale dated April 27, 1898, and introduced in evidence by plaintiff at the trial of the case. Appellant contends that such sale was void as to creditors of John McKee, under the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code, because such sale was not accompanied by an immediate or any delivery, nor followed by an actual and continued change of possession. This is the only question discussed on this appeal. The evidence on this question is as follows: For at least nine years prior to the sale John McKee had carried on the business of stair builder at a certain place in San Francisco, and had at that place been in possession of and using said personal property in carrying on said business. He also had in his employ in said business his three sons. His son Thomas W. had been his foreman during said nine years. Annie McKee, the daughter of John McKee, held a chattel mortgage against the property, which she had acquired by purchase from Blythe & Trott, to whom John McKee had previously executed it to secure the payment of $500. In reference to this mortgage, Annie consulted a lawyer, and he advised her to incorporate a company and purchase the property from her father, as she might in that way be able to get her money out of it. She then had the plaintiff corporation formed; the stockholders in said corporation consisting exclusively of herself, her father, her sister, and her said three brothers. After the alleged sale to the corporation the father and the three brothers continued, down to the time of the levy of the execution, to carry on the business with this same property, at the same place, and in the same way as before such sale, the son Thomas still acting as foreman, the only difference being that before such sale the "father went out and figured upon work, and made bids for it, and told the foreman what to do," but after the sale the father was under the orders of the foreman, receiving as his compensation from the corporation $50 per month as wages, and the foreman did the figuring and bidding, and looked after the work, and also acted as manager. Prior to the sale there was a sign on the building, where the property was located and the business carried on, in the following language: "John McKee, Stair Builder." After the transfer John McKee removed his name from the sign, leaving it simply "Stair Builder." It would seem from this evidence that there was no delivery of the property to the vendee, and that the possession of the personal property here in controversy, leaving out of consideration the business of the concern, remained after the sale in the same persons that it had previously rested in. A person familiar with the business and the use of the premises and personal property thereon, prior to the sale, on visiting it subsequently could have seen nothing evidencing a change of ownership, or a change of possession. Even the change in the sign, unexplained, would have been meaningless to him. It has been held a great many times in this state that to make a sale of personal property good as against the creditors of the vendor, and to avoid the presumption of fraud denounced in section 3440 of the Civil Code, there must be a visible and apparent change of the custody of the property, such as to give evidence to the world of the claims of the new owner. We cite one case: Hesthal v. Myles, 53 Cal. 623. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. v. McCANN. (Sac. 545.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 6, 1899.)
PUBLIC LANDS—GRANT IN AID OF RAILROAD—RESERVATION—PRE-EMPTION CLAIM.

A qualified pre-emptor settled upon land in 1859, and performed all the acts required, until after plaintiff's line of railroad was fixed. Before it was fixed he applied at the proper land office to make a pre-emption filing, and was refused permission so to do, but did not appeal; and in 1867, after the line was fixed, he moved off the land, without having filed any claim. Held, that the pre-emption claim did not "attach" to the land, within the meaning of the act of congress of July 1, 1862, § 3, excepting from the alternate sections granted thereby lands to which a homestead or pre-emption claim had attached before the line of the railroad was fixed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

Action of ejectment by the Central Pacific Railroad Company against Henry McCann. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. Singer, Jr., and H. V. Reardan, for appellant. F. P. Tuttle, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Defendant's demurrer to the third amended complaint having been sustained, judgment was entered in his favor. This appeal is by plaintiff from the judgment, and for the purpose of reviewing the order sustaining the demurrer. The complaint, which is in ejectment, shows that the lands described therein vested in plaintiff under an act of congress of July 1, 1862, unless a pre-emption claim of one Daniel Shay had attached thereto at the time the line of plaintiff's road was definitely fixed, which was prior to November 15, 1867, but the date is not given. Section 3 of the act is as follows: "That there be, and is hereby, granted to the said company, * * * every alternate section of public land, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of five alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad, on the line thereof, and within the limits of ten miles on each side of said road, not sold, reserved or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a pre-emption or homestead claim may not have attached at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed." The sixth allegation of plaintiff's amended complaint is as follows: "(6) The plaintiff is informed and believes that one Daniel Shay, a qualified pre-emptor, settled upon the said land during the year 1859, and continued to reside upon it, performing all the acts required of a pre-emptor, until after the said railroad was definitely fixed; and, prior to the time the said road was definitely fixed, he applied at the proper land office to make a pre-emption filing therefor, and was refused permission so to do by the register thereof, but did not appeal from such refusal, and during the year 1867, after the said road had been definitely fixed, he moved off the said land, without having filed any claim for it." The defendant does not claim under Shay, and there is no privity shown in any manner between defendant and said Shay. The sole and only question discussed in the briefs is as to whether or not the paragraph of the complaint here quoted shows that the pre-emption claim of Shay had attached to the lands at the time the line of plaintiff's road was definitely fixed. If it had attached then, the lands were not vested in plaintiff under the said act. The court below held that the said paragraph of the complaint showed that the pre-emption claim had attached, and that plaintiff did not become the owner of the lands under said act. In this we think the learned judge of the court below was in error. The rule is well settled that no pre-emption or homestead claim attaches to a tract of land until an entry in the local land office. Lansdale v. Daniels, 100 U. S. 116; Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 94, 15 Sup. Ct. 796; Railroad v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 386, 17 Sup. Ct. 98; Weaver v. Fairchild, 50 Cal. 362. The main purpose of the exception of lands to which a homestead or pre-emption had attached was to prevent the grant from having a retroactive effect, so as to convey lands to which a valid claim had taken effect prior to the date of the passage of the statute. Railway Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 635, 5 Sup. Ct. 573. In the latter case it is said by the court: "Of all the words in the English language, this word 'attached' was probably the best that could have been used. It did not mean mere settlement, residence, or cultivation of the land, but it meant a proceeding in the proper land office by which the inchoate right to the land was initiated. It meant that by such a proceeding a right of homestead had fastened to that land, which could ripen into a perfect title by future residence and cultivation." The pre-emption claim could not and did not attach or fasten itself to the land in this case, because it was never filed or placed on record. Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 94, 15 Sup. Ct. 796; Lansdale v. Daniels, 100 U. S. 116.

It is said that the allegation that Shay applied at the proper land office to make a pre-emption filing, and was refused permission to do so by the register thereof, is the equivalent in law to the actual filing, and shows that the pre-emption claim attached to the lands. We do not think so. The register refused to file the declaratory statement, and Shay did not appeal from the order. We must presume, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the register correctly performed his official duty. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15; Upham v. Hosking, 62 Cal. 259; Weaver v. Fairchild, 50 Cal. 360. In the latter case the question was as to whether it was proved that the line of the railroad was definitely fixed before the declaratory statement of the defendant as pre-emptor was offered for filing. The defendant claimed that the line of the railroad had not been definitely fixed, and hence the land had not been withdrawn from sale at the time the declaratory statement was filed. The only evidence of such withdrawal was a letter from the commissioner of the general land office, addressed to the local land officers, withdrawing the land from sale and pre-emption. In the opinion it is said: "The act being within the scope of the commissioner's powers as a subordinate officer, it will be assumed that the withdrawal was made by the direction of the secretary of the interior, and the withdrawal is itself a recognition of the fact that the map was filed in the office of the secretary. We must presume that the proper evidence was before him on which to base his official action." If it be conceded in this case that the offering to file the declaratory statement was equivalent to filing, it certainly would have to be alleged that the declaratory statement complied with the law, and that the necessary fees were tendered. In the case of Railroad Co. v. Purcell, 77 Cal. 70, 18 Pac. 886, the defendant contended that the lands in controversy were excepted from the grant, and made proof of his qualifications as a homestead claimant, residence, and compliance with the law at the time and prior to the time the line of the road was definitely fixed; that he went to the land office, and asked the register to be allowed to file a homestead entry for the land,—but the offer was rejected. The court in the opinion says: "This did not bring him within the exception. Nothing is said about his paying or offering to pay the register's fees, or about his making or tendering the necessary affidavit. It may be that the register refused to allow his entry because these conditions were not fulfilled. If such was not the fact, the defendant should have proved it, as the burden in this regard was clearly upon him. So far as is shown, he appears not to have taken any further step. He did not show that a homestead claim had attached to the land, and therefore did not bring himself within the terms of the exception. So far as is shown by the record, he was a mere occupant of the land. And it is well settled that mere occupancy of public land does not, of itself, give the occupant any right to the land, or prevent the government from disposing of it as it pleases." It appears from the complaint that Shay moved off the land during the year 1867, and it does not appear that he ever appealed from the order of the register rejecting his filing, or that he has ever since claimed the land. It further appears that in 1885 the defendant applied to plaintiff to purchase the land, and was by plaintiff let into possession as its tenant under a contract to purchase; that, after occupying the land for some six years under said contract with plaintiff, the plaintiff, at defendant's request, transferred the contract and right to purchase to his wife, Julia McCann, and defendant let his said wife into the possession of the land as the tenant of plaintiff. Afterwards the defendant re-entered the land, and ousted the plaintiff and its said tenant, Julia McCann, from the same, and has ever since wrongfully held possession of the same. We advise that the judgment be reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint, and allow the defendant a reasonable time to answer.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint, and allow the defendant a reasonable time to answer.

BOYD v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RY.
CO. (L. A. 544.)

APPEAL—RECORD—PRESUMPTION—QUESTION OF TITLE TO REAL PROPERTY—RAILROADS—ACTION FOR KILLING COLT—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

1. Where all the record shows regarding a trial in justice court is that the complaint is entitled in such court, and was filed in both the justice and superior courts, and the answer is an amended answer filed in the superior court, it will not be presumed that the case was tried in justice court without raising a question of title to real property, notwithstanding briefs on both sides assumed so.

2. Where the complaint in an action under Civ. Code, § 485, imposing on railroads a liability to adjoining landowners for killing stock avers ownership of adjoining land, as required, title to land is involved in the action so as to give the supreme court jurisdiction of an appeal from the judgment therein.

3. In an action against a railroad company for killing a colt, instructions that, if it was killed where defendant failed to fence or keep a sufficient fence, the jury might presume that it entered on defendant's track at that place, and that, if it was found on the right of way, near the track, with its entrails protruding, they might find that it was killed by defendant's train, were erroneous, as they were plainly on the weight of evidence.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by James Boyle against the Southern California Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. N. Sterry and H. J. Stevens, for appellant. Parrington & Adair, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought in Riverside county to recover $100 damages for killing a colt. Objection is made to the jurisdiction of this court, and it is stated in the briefs on both sides that the case was originally brought in a justice's court, was there tried, and, after judgment in favor of plaintiff, was appealed to the superior court upon both law and fact. The action was tried in the superior court, and plaintiff recovered judgment for the full amount of his claim, and the defendant appeals to this court from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial.

All that the record shows in regard to the justice court is that the complaint is entitled "In the Justice Court of Riverside Township, County of Riverside," and is indorsed: "Filed July 17, 1897. James Mills, Justice of the Peace;" under which last is: "Filed Sep. 18, 1897. A. J. Condee, Clerk, by J. W. Roberts, Deputy." The answer is entitled in the superior court. It may well be doubted whether, from this record, this court would be justified in saying that the case had ever been in the justice court; but certainly we cannot conclude that it was tried in the justice's court without raising a question of title to the court by a verified answer, or that the case went to the superior court by appeal upon questions of law and fact. The main contention upon this matter is that the defendant did not raise any issue as to title in the justice court, and that on appeal the superior court has no further jurisdiction than the justice had; that as to such case its jurisdiction is purely appellate, and it can only retry what was tried in the lower court. But the answer is an amended answer, filed in the superior court, and if we assume, from the title to the complaint, that the case was once in the justice court, we cannot say what the issues there were, nor how they were made. Briefs on both sides assume such facts, but we are not called upon to decide moot questions because attorneys are pleased to make them.

The amount sued for was less than $300, but the first count of the complaint is based upon the liability of the defendant under section 485, Civ. Code, which requires railroad corporations to maintain good and sufficient fences on both sides of their track, and provides that, in case they do not, and their engine or cars should maim or kill any cattle on their "line of road which passes through or along the property of the owner thereof, they must pay to the owner of such cattle or other domestic animals a fair market price for the same." In this count of the complaint plaintiff avers title in himself to a described tract of land, that it adjoins defendant's railroad, the insufficiency of the fence, and that without his fault his colt strayed upon the railroad, and was killed by defendant's locomotive and cars. No negligence other than a neglect to keep the fence in repair is charged. In Enright v. Railroad Co., 33 Cal. 235, it was held that this statute was designed to protect the adjoining landowners. This seems quite obvious from the language of the statute itself. That being so, when plaintiff based his right on that statute, averring his ownership of the land, as he did, and was required to do, title to the land was necessarily involved, whether his ownership was denied or not. Holman v. Taylor, 31 Cal. 338. Though not in issue, it was involved in the action. Therefore it is a case of which this court has jurisdiction.

This consideration would be conclusive of the question discussed by counsel if it were properly presented in the record. Section 838, Code Civ. Proc., provides for the case where the plaintiff's cause of action is not based upon title, or the right to the possession of real estate, and such claim of title is made an issue in the case by the answer, or a subject of controversy in the course of the trial. If the complaint itself shows that the question is necessarily involved, as determined in Holman v. Taylor, there would be no propriety in requiring a verified answer before the case could be transferred to the superior court. It is conceivable that the author of section 838 was of the opinion that title or the right to the possession of the real property was not involved unless an issue to be tried was raised, but, in view of the decisions of this court, that view cannot be maintained. It seems that the defendant could not make such an issue save by a verified pleading. Holman v. Taylor was affirmed in Copertini v. Oppermann, 76 Cal. 181, 18 Pac. 256, and in Hart v. Carnall-Hopkins Co., 103 Cal. 132, 37 Pac. 196. See, also, Pollock v. Cummings, 38 Cal. 684.

Upon the conclusion of the testimony for plaintiff, defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was denied. Many points are made with reference to this ruling, but, as the case must be reversed upon other grounds, these points need not be considered. Upon a new trial the evidence will probably be different.

Defendant attempted to show—principally upon cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses—that the animal probably passed from plaintiff's property into a neighboring field, which was not the property of plaintiff, and from thence got upon the railroad track, and therefore did not get through the fence of the railroad from plaintiff's land. Considerable evidence favoring this view was produced. The evidence was all circumstantial, there being no direct evidence as to where it entered upon the right of way. Upon this subject the court instructed the jury as follows, and the defendant duly excepted: "If you find that the plaintiff's colt was killed at a point on defendant's railway where the railroad was insufficiently fenced, and if you further find that at that point it was defendant's duty to make and maintain a good and sufficient fence, then I charge you that these facts, unexplained, raise a prima facie case of negligence against the defendant, and it is not necessary for plaintiff to show the exact point where his colt escaped onto defendant's track. In other words, if you find that plaintiff's colt was killed at a place where defendant had failed to fence, or to maintain a sufficient fence, you are justified in presuming, and you are authorized to find, that it entered upon the defendant's track at that place." This was a plain interference with the right of the jury to determine the value and weight of the evidence. This was not a question of law, but of fact. If it was a fact that the colt was found killed at a point where the fence was insufficient, it was a circumstance for the jury to consider. The court also erred in the same manner in giving the following instruction: "And you are further instructed that, should you find from the evidence that the animal referred to in the complaint was found on the right of way and near the track of defendant, and that it was so injured that its entrails protruded, you are authorized, on the proof of such facts alone, to find that said animal was killed by a train of defendant. But you are not obliged to accept such evidence or conclusion, and if, to your mind, this is not sufficient, you are at liberty to reject it as insufficient to establish negligence, or that the animal was killed by defendant's train." It does not appear that any evidence was offered which tended to establish the second cause of action, in which the defendant was charged with killing plaintiff's horse by negligently running and managing its trains. It does not even appear that defendant had any cars, or that a train was ever run over the road. The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PHELPS v. MAYERS. (Sac. 649.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 6, 1899.)
MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE FOR DEFAULT IN INTEREST—JUDGMENT—OBJEC-TIONS ON APPEAL.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 1642, providing that several contracts relating to the same matter, and between the same parties, and made as parts of substantially one contract, must be taken together, a note and a mortgage given to secure the same should be construed together.

2. A mortgage contained a clause providing: "In case default be made in the payment of the said principal or interest," the mortgagee is "empowered to sell the said premises," etc. Held, that a suit to foreclose the mortgage, commenced when interest was overdue, but before the principal was due, was not prematurely brought.

3. Where a judgment on foreclosure for a specified amount was rendered as "costs, percentage, and necessary disbursements," and it does not appear in the record what was meant by the word "percentage," it will be presumed on appeal that the whole sum awarded was made up of proper costs in the suit.

4. Where an objection by appellant is raised for the first time in his closing brief, it will be overruled.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Shasta county.

Action by John R. Phelps against Henry Mayers to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. A. Procter, for appellant. J. O. Stephens and Reid & Bartlett, for respondent.

BRITT, C. On October 18, 1895, Mayers, the defendant, made and delivered to Phelps, the plaintiff, a mortgage of certain land in the county of Shasta to secure the payment of a promissory note of the same date, by the terms of which note Mayers promised to pay to Phelps, on or before November 1, 1898, the sum of $1,500, with interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, interest payable semi-annually in advance from date of the note. The mortgage recited said note at length, and proceeded: "And these presents shall be void if payment be made according to the tenor and effect thereof. But, in case default be made in the payment of the said principal or interest as herein provided, then" the mortgagee is "hereby empowered to sell the said premises, * * * or any part thereof, in the manner prescribed by law, and out of the money arising from such sale to retain the said principal and interest, together with the costs and charges * * * of suit for foreclosure, including counsel fees at the rate of fifteen per cent. upon the amount which may be found to be due," etc. This action for the foreclosure of said mortgage was begun on May 27, 1897. It is alleged in the complaint that defendant has paid nothing on the note except the interest thereon to October 18, 1896, and that the principal thereof, with interest from said last-mentioned date, is due and unpaid. The court rendered judgment for the foreclosure of the mortgage to pay both the principal of the note and the interest due. The judgment contains also a recital that there is due from defendant to plaintiff the sum of $184.40 "costs, percentage, and necessary disbursements," and a direction that plaintiff be paid that sum from the proceeds of sale as "cost of this suit." The defense is that the action was prematurely brought. Defendant maintains that the instruments in suit do not provide that the principal of the debt shall become due on default in payment of interest, and hence that a foreclosure for both principal and interest was unwarranted. The note and mortgage, however, must be construed together. Civ. Code, § 1642. Interest on the note is payable semiannually, and the mortgage is clear that upon default in the payment of the interest, equally with default in the payment of the principal, the mortgagee may cause the premises to be sold, and retain from the proceeds "the said principal and the interest." There is scarcely room for interpretation in these provisions. They support the action for the amount of the note, both principal and accrued interest. Brickell v. Batchelder, 62 Cal. 623; Maddox v. Wyman, 92 Cal. 674, 28 Pac. 838. The case of Brod- ribb v. Tibbets, 58 Cal. 6, on which plaintiff relies mainly, decided nothing to the contrary. The contract in that case, as the court considered, contained no provision for the foreclosure of the mortgage on default of interest. In the present instance such provision is express. Besides, Brodrigg v. Tibbets is of doubtful authority upon the point which it did decide. It has been disapproved in later cases. Yoakam v. White, 97 Cal. 286, 32 Pac. 238; Van Loo v. Van Aken, 104 Cal. 269, 37 Pac. 925.

In the closing brief of appellant the point is made that the court erroneously allowed to the plaintiff an undefined sum as "percentage." It does not appear what was meant by this word in the judgment. Possibly it denotes the court's allowance of counsel fees provided for in the mortgage. But, admitting that it has no reference to such fees, yet, as the evidence on which the court acted is not in the record, it should be presumed, in view of both provisions of the judgment which refer to the matter, that the whole sum of $184.40 was made up of proper costs of the suit. It is another and sufficient reason for overruling this point that it is first raised in the closing brief for appellant, when respondent has no opportunity to reply. Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES HOLINESS BAND v.
SPIRES et al. (LOS ANGELES HOLI-NESS BAND, Intervener. L. A. 502).

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 6, 1899.)
DE FACTO CORPORATION—DEPRIVATION OF FRANCHISE OR PROPERTY.

A de facto corporation can be deprived of its franchise or property only in a direct proceeding by the state.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by the Los Angeles Holiness Band, a corporation, against J. H. Spires and others and the Los Angeles Holiness Band, a corporation, intervener. From a judgment for defendants and intervener, and orders refusing to strike out a portion of the cost bill and denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. Gould, for appellant. Geo. S. Hupp and C. McFarland, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. This is an action to quiet title. The court below found the following facts: Prior to April, 1881, an association of persons were in the habit of meeting together for religious services in the city and county of Los Angeles, calling themselves the Los Angeles Holiness Band, and in April, 1881, six of the members of said Holiness Band signed and acknowledged articles of incorporation under the name of the Los Angeles Holiness Band, incorporating for religious and benevolent purposes; and in such articles of incorporation the six members who thus signed and acknowledged the same were chosen trustees of the corporation. These articles were filed in the office of the county clerk of the county of Los Angeles on the 8th day of April, 1881. A copy of the same was filed in the office of the secretary of state, and a certified copy of the articles of incorporation, certified to by the secretary of state, was afterwards filed in the office of the said county clerk. On the 20th day of April, 1881, the secretary of state issued a charter certificate to said band, and certified that said Los Angeles Holiness Band had been incorporated for religious and benevolent purposes. Said Los Angeles Holiness Band then organized, and elected trustees or directors, and adopted rules and by-laws for their government. After the articles had been filed and the charter thus issued, the said Los Angeles Holiness Band purchased the property described in the pleadings, and which is the property in controversy, from S. C. Hubbell, for $400, and received a deed from said Hubbell in the name of the Los Angeles Holiness Band, a corporation. Said deed recited the receipt of said $400 as the purchase price, and that at that time Hubbell had good title to the said premises. The Los Angeles Holiness Band, its trustees and members, erected a house of worship upon said property about the year 1881, and thereafter continuously and uninterruptedly from that time up to April, 1896, held regularly religious services upon said premises at least upon two different days in each week; and from that time the said Los Angeles Holiness Band elected trustees, as required by law, to act as trustees of said corporation, and such trustees took charge and control of said property from 1881 up to the bringing of this action, for the purposes for which said organization was formed; and said Los Angeles Holiness Band held itself out as a corporation, and in good faith claimed to act and did act as a corporation in all its various transactions. That on December 30, 1896, it elected as trustees to serve as such for one year thence ensuing the seven persons who were trustees at the time of the bringing of the suit, who were in control and possession of said property up to the time said band was dispossessed by persons pretending to be trustees of the plaintiff corporation, in the month of April, 1897. In the month of April, 1897, C. F. McKee, D. C. Roberts, M. Whisler, G. W. Morgan, and L. R. Gay attempted to incorporate under the name Los Angeles Holiness Band, and did prepare and file articles of incorporation in which it was shown that they were elected trustees or directors of the Los Angeles Holiness Band for the coming year; and said articles of incorporation were filed with the county clerk of said county of Los Angeles, and a copy thereof filed with the secretary of state, and thereafter a copy of said articles was filed in the office of the said county clerk, and the certificate or charter from the secretary of state was afterwards issued to said corporation in said month of April; and said Los Angeles Holiness Band, as incorporated in 1897, thereupon during said month obtained a deed to the property hereinbefore mentioned and referred to from S. C. Hubbell and his wife in the name of the Los Angeles Holiness Band. In said month of April, while the regular members of the Los Angeles Holiness Band, as organized in 1881, were holding their regular and accustomed religious services upon said premises, D. C. Roberts and G. W. Morgan, and the other persons pretending to be trustees and members of the Los Angeles Holiness Band, as organized in 1897, entered upon said premises, interrupted the meeting then in progress, and announced that they took possession of said premises in the name of the Los Angeles Holiness Band, and then and there pretended to elect trustees for the succeeding year, and then elected a janitor, with instructions to take charge of said premises, and to prevent persons other than members of the plaintiff corporation from entering upon the same, and from that time up to the time of the trial claimed and asserted title and sole ownership to said property and to said corporate name of Los Angeles Holiness Band, and held forcible possession of said premises, and prevented the members and officers of the intervenor corporation from entering such premises or holding meetings therein. And as a conclusion of law the court found that the Los Angeles Holiness Band, intervenor herein, is and has been a corporation since the time of the filing of its articles of incorporation in April, 1881, and that such corporation, its officers and trustees, have been carrying on the object and purpose of such corporation since that time; that in 1881 it acquired title in fee simple to the property in controversy, by the conveyance from S. C. Hubbell of that date, and is the owner of such premises in controversy, and that the attempted incorporation of the Los Angeles Holiness Band by the parties mentioned, in April, 1897, was and is an unlawful attempt by such persons and such corporation to usurp the franchises and take possession of the property of said intervenor corporation and its corporate name; and that such articles of incorporation of plaintiff corporation, as well as its charter, and the election or selection of such persons as trustees of said pretended corporation, are all fraudulent and void, and plaintiff corporation was formed solely for the purpose of defrauding the intervenor corporation of its corporate name and property. Judgment was entered accordingly in favor of the intervenor corporation and against the plaintiff for the premises in controversy and for costs.

The main point made by the appellants—in fact, the only point necessary to be considered—is that the intervenor was not a corporation, and never had any legal existence, and therefore that the first conveyance of Hubbell of the premises in question was void for the reason that there was no one in being as a grantee competent to take the property. From the findings of fact, however, which are abundantly supported by the testimony, the position of the appellant in this regard is entirely untenable. If it be admitted, as contended by the appellant, that there were defects in the first incorporation proceedings, still it became a corporation de facto at least, and in good faith carried on the business for which it was organized or attempted to be organized as a corporation for the period of some 16 years prior to the ouster by the plaintiff. The authorities relied upon by the appellant do not support its contention. In McCallion v. Society, 70 Cal. 167, 168, 12 Pac. 116, it is stated by the court: "But as articles of incorporation the certificate was legally defective, for want of conformity to the statutory requirements under which it purported to have been made; but, aside from the defects which rendered it inept, Conlan and Dolan, and those acting with them in the movement, did not attempt to exercise corporate functions under it in connection with or as division No. 1 of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. Therefore the certificate was not proof of a corporation in esse,"—citing Mining Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 425; Harris v. McGregor, 29 Cal. 127; People v. Selfridge, 52 Cal. 331. The cases thus cited are also cited in appellant's brief, and are to the same effect as McCallion v. Society. Baker v. Ducker, 79 Cal. 365, 21 Pac. 764, cited by appellant, was a case where some of the members of the society, by organizing another society under a different name, got possession of the property belonging to the old society, to wit, the First Reformed Church of the City of Stockton. The action was by some of the members of the old society, for the benefit of all, to recover the property, and the trial court found that the change of name was with the intent and for the purpose of depriving the said old congregation of the benefit of their corporate franchise and property. In affirming the judgment this court said: "It is thus made clear that the property in question was held by the Reformed Church in trust for its members, and the defendants, even though they constituted a majority of the members, had no right and no power to divert it to the use of another and different church organization." The later case of Wheelock v. Presbyterian Church, 119 Cal. 477, 51 Pac. 841, is in the same line. People v. Water Co., 97 Cal. 276, 32 Pac. 236, cited by the appellant, was a proceeding by the state in the nature of a quo warranto, and not, as in this case, a collateral attack in litigation between private parties. These cases do not touch the question whether defects in the formation of a corporation can be inquired into in a collateral proceeding, as attempted in this case. On this point the Code itself, it would seem, is decisive. "The due incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation under this part, and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit to which such de facto corporation may be a party." Civ. Code, § 358. It has been frequently held that, although many of the acts required to be performed in order to make a complete organization of the corporation may have been irregularly performed or entirely omitted, yet such irregularities and defects will not defeat the incorporation where the questions are raised collaterally. Rondell v. Fay, 32 Cal. 361; Stockton & L. G. R. Co. v. Stockton & C. R. Co., 45 Cal. 680; Association v. Chester, 55 Cal. 101; People v. La Rue, 67 Cal. 530, 8 Pac. 84; Golden Gate Mill & Min. Co. v. Joshua Hendy Mach. Works, 82 Cal. 186, 23 Pac. 45; Ditch Co. v. Crane, 80 Cal. 185, 22 Pac. 76. It requires a direct proceeding on behalf of the state to deprive a corporation de facto of a franchise or property. The judgment and orders refusing to strike out portion of cost bill, and denying motion for a new trial, are affirmed.

HORTON v. JACK. (L. A. 572.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 31, 1899.)

CONVERSION—WHAT CONSTITUTES—MANUAL TAKING—NECESSITY—PROPERTY OF ESTATE.

1. Where defendant, through an agent, took possession of property, and sold it, and used the proceeds to pay an account against a third person in favor of a bank of which he was president, it is sufficient.

2. Where one took property of an estate, by an unauthorized bill of sale from the executrix, in payment of an account against her individually, he is not relieved from liability to the estate for conversion by the fact that the account included a prior debt of her testator.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by Joseph Horton, as administrator of the estate of James A. Brown, deceased, against R. E. Jack, for conversion. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

M. C. Hester and Graves & Graves, for appellant. Wilcoxon & Bouldin and R. B. Carpenter, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This is the third appeal in this case. On the first appeal the nonsuit as to the defendant corporation was affirmed, but the judgment in favor of defendant Jack was reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial between the plaintiff and said defendant. 37 Pac. 652. The second trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant, and on appeal from said judgment and order denying a new trial they were reversed, and the cause again remanded. The last trial was also by a jury, and a verdict was rendered for the defendant. From the judgment entered on said verdict and from the order denying the plaintiff's motion for a new trial, this appeal is taken.

The action is for a conversion of certain personal property belonging to the estate of James A. Brown, deceased. In the opinion on the first trial the facts in the case are stated as follows: "It seems that Mrs. Brown was indebted to the bank of which Jack was president; that it was agreed between Jack and Mrs. Brown that the property should be conveyed to Jack as security, and immediately sold, and the proceeds paid on Mrs. Brown's personal indebtedness to the bank. In pursuance of this agreement, an absolute bill of sale was executed, and Sandercock was selected to sell the property, with the consent of Mrs. Brown. Having delivered the bill of sale to Jack, and agreed upon Sandercock as a proper person to conduct the sale, Mrs. Brown prepared a letter to be handed by Sandercock to Bailey, her agent, and which was so delivered. It was as follows: 'Mr. S. P. Bailey—Dear Sir: I have made a bill of sale to Mr. Jack of the whole outfit. Mr. Sandercock, the bearer of the note, will consult you about the disposition of the outfit. If Mr. Sandercock cannot manage the disposition of the same without your help, then you will please go with him. Mr. Sandercock acts as Mr. Jack's agent, and the entire disposition must be under Mr. Sandercock's control. C. J. Brown.' Mr. Sandercock also at the same time handed Bailey a letter from Mr. Jack, as follows: 'Mr. Bailey—Dear Sir: This will introduce to you my friend, Mr. John G. Sandercock. I have bought of Mrs. J. A. Brown the whole grading outfit which belonged to the late J. A. Brown, and I send him down to represent me in the premises, and to sell according to the general plan that you have arranged. You will therefore please deliver the whole business to my representative, Mr. Sandercock. I should be pleased to have you accompany Mr. Sandercock, and assist him all in your power. Mrs. Brown's desire also is that you shall accompany Mr. S. and aid with your counsel and co-operation. Yours, truly, R. E. Jack.' Bailey, acting for Mrs. Brown, had already arranged to ship the goods to Modesto for sale. They were then turned over to Sandercock, who shipped them to Modesto. Bailey accompanied him, but acted in entire subordination to Sandercock. The property was sold, and the proceeds sent by Sandercock to Jack, who applied them to the payment of Mrs. Brown's individual debt to the bank." Accompanying the bill of sale of the property, Jack executed the following: "This indenture witnesseth that whereas, Catharine J. Brown has this day, by a bill of sale of even date herewith, sold, transferred, and set over and delivered to R. E. Jack certain personal property in said bill of sale described, said bill of sale being hereby referred to and made a part hereof, now it is mutually understood and agreed that said R. E. Jack shall appoint a good and competent agent to take said property in charge, and dispose of the same on the best terms possible, within a reasonable time, not to exceed four months in all from the date hereof; and that said R. E. Jack will, as soon as said property is disposed of, account to said Catharine J. Brown for the proceeds of said personal property within the four months aforesaid, and as soon as received apply said proceeds to the payment of the indebtedness of G. W. Kenney, of the First National Bank of San Luis Obispo, for which indebtedness Catharine J. Brown has given written guaranty. Dated San Luis Obispo, April 15, 1890. R. E. Jack."

The judgment on the first appeal was reversed on the ground that the findings were not sustained by the evidence. The court, in its opinion, says: "Among such findings are the following: (1) That the personal property was never delivered to Jack, although it is admitted that a bill of sale of the property was made and delivered to him; (2) that Sandercock, who took the property, and sold it, was the agent of the executrix, and not the agent of Jack; and (3) that the proceeds of the property were paid to the executrix." Continuing further, in the opinion it is said: "The court also found that Jack had not converted the property to his own use. That he took the property, by the consent of Mrs. Brown, to sell, and to apply the proceeds to the payment of her individual debt to the bank cannot be denied. Did it amount, under the circumstances, to a conversion? Of course, when Mrs. Brown conveyed the property to Jack in payment of her individual debt, she misappropriated it. She put it out of her power to hold the property as executrix for the estate, and subject to the orders of the court. It was a clear violation of her duty. It was a wasting of the estate, which would constitute a devastavit. Ordinarily, no doubt, one who receives property under such circumstances in payment of an individual debt of the executrix to him may be treated by the successor of such executrix, after a demand and a refusal to deliver the property, as a wrongdoer." On the second appeal (46 Pac. 920), the respondent claimed that the evidence on the second trial was substantially different from that on the first, and that the debt to pay which the property was sold was the debt of the deceased, Brown, instead of that of Mrs. Catharine J. Brown. But it was held by this court: "The facts as to the debt in question, as proved on the second trial, did not differ from those disclosed on the first trial. It appeared then, as it does now, that the deceased, in his lifetime, guaranteed the payment by Kenney of such sums as should be advanced to him by the bank of which the defendant, Jack, was president; that some such advances were made during the lifetime of the deceased; that after his death his widow, Catharine J., made a new guaranty, in her own name, of the like character; and that all the subsequent advances were made under the latter guaranty." After further noticing the testimony and the pleadings, the court say: "We are therefore unable to perceive that the facts on the second trial differ at all from those on which our former opinion was predicated, and the propositions of law there decided are therefore decisive of the case on this appeal. Benson v. Shotwell, 103 Cal. 163, 37 Pac. 147."

On the last trial the answer was amended by eliminating therefrom all affirmative matter as a defense. As thus amended, the answer simply denied that the defendant took and carried away the personal property described in the complaint, or that he converted the same to his own use, and denied that said property was of the value of $7,000, or of any other sum exceeding the value of $4,529.65. On the trial, the bill of sale, with the stipulation on the part of the defendant, and letters from Mrs. Brown and defendant to Bailey, were introduced in evidence as on the former trials; also the testimony of the lawyer who prepared the papers to the effect as before, and the testimony of Bailey given at the former trial was read, he having died in the meantime; also the testimony of Sandercock, the man appointed by defendant to take charge of the property and dispose of the same as indicated in his letter, and according to his stipulation, already referred to. He says he made out a list of the property; that a part of it had already been disposed of by Bailey, but that Bailey turned over the proceeds of that which he had sold to him. "I turned the money I got from the sales of that property over to the president of the First National Bank. I think Mr. Jack was president at that time. I made the report of the sales to Jack as president of the bank." The testimony on the last trial was substantially that produced on the former trials. At any rate, it was equally strong in favor of the plaintiff. It goes for nothing that defendant says in his testimony that he never saw the property, and did not handle it, and did not have anything to do with the sales thereof, or the proceeds. This means simply, in the light of the other testimony, that he did not personally handle the property or the proceeds; but there is no testimony on his part tending to contradict the documentary and other testimony to the effect that the property was sold, and the proceeds appropriated, according to his stipulation accompanying the bill of sale, and the letter of directions by the defendant to Bailey to turn over the property to his agent, Sandercock; and in law what one does by another he does himself. "It is not necessary to a conversion that there should be a manual taking of the thing in question by the defendant. It is not necessary that it should be shown that he has applied it to his own use. Does he exercise a dominion over it in exclusion or in defiance of the plaintiff's right? If he does, that is, in law, a conversion." Liptrot v. Holmes, 1 Kelly, 381, quoted in the opinion on the first appeal. The answer in this case did not deny that the property belonged to the estate of plaintiff's intestate, James A. Brown, and the testimony clearly shows that defendant, through his agent, converted this property into money, and appropriated it to the account of Mrs. Brown, according to his written agreement; and it does not alter the case at all if that account of Mrs. Brown's included some prior indebtedness of her deceased husband, as held by this court on the first appeal. The testimony on the last trial being substantially the same as on the two former, under the previous decisions of this court in the case the lower court should have directed the jury, as requested, to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount admitted by defendant to be the value of the property converted. The evidence does not support the verdict for the defendant, and a new trial should, therefore, have been granted. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

LA MARCHE v. NEW YORK LIFE INS. CO.
(Sac. 489.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 30, 1899.)
INSURANCE—APPLICATION—FRAUD OF AGENT
—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—INTEREST OF INSURED'S WIFE IN POLICY.

1. Where insured, a foreigner, imperfectly acquainted with the English language, and unacquainted with the terminology of insurance, signed a blank application for insurance, and delivered it to an agent of the company on the latter's agreement to fill it in in accordance with an oral agreement with him, the agent acted for the company, and fraud on his part in filling in the application will be attributed to the company.

2. Though the blank application contained a provision that the company should not be affected by statements or promises of the agent unless embodied in the application, and the agent filled the application in so as to call for a policy different from that called for by the oral agreement, the insured may rescind the contract, and recover the premium paid at the time he signed the application.

3. Where the company issued a policy payable to insured's wife, which was not in accordance with the oral agreement, though in accordance with the application as filled in by the agent, the wife acquired no such interest in the policy as required her joinder in an offer to surrender the policy as a condition precedent to a rescission and recovery of a premium paid at the time insured signed the application.

4. Under the circumstances the insured was not guilty of negligence in not reading the application, either before or after it was filled in by the agent.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action by Joseph La Marche against the New York Life Insurance Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appealed. Reversed.

E. W. Holland and F. L. Alford, for appellant. Page, McCutchen & Eells, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Action for damages sustained by plaintiff because of fraud alleged to have been practiced on him by defendant, a life insurance company, through the instrumentality of one Eaton, its agent, whereby defendant obtained from plaintiff his negotiable promissory note for the sum of $430.50, ostensibly in payment of the first annual premium on a policy of insurance to be issued on his life; which note plaintiff was subsequently compelled to pay to a third person holding the same. At the trial defendant moved for judgment of nonsuit on the evidence produced by plaintiff, and the court granted the motion.

It is not contended in this court by the defendant that the evidence was insufficient to show fraud in the representations by which Eaton, the agent, obtained plaintiff's note, but it is urged that for certain reasons, to be presently noticed, the plaintiff is in no position to hold defendant responsible on that account. Among the facts which the evidence tended to establish were the following: Plaintiff is a farmer by occupation, a foreigner by birth, unacquainted with the technical terms of life insurance, and accustomed to rely on other persons for the conduct of transactions of moment requiring some proficiency in the English language. Eaton visited him at his farm, and represented to him, in substance, that in consideration of his note aforesaid, and his agreement to pay an annual premium of the same amount for the term of 15 years, the defendant would issue to him its policy on his life in the sum of $10,000, payable to the beneficiary to be named therein in case of plaintiff's death during said term, and, if he survived said period, then the policy would be paid up, and, if he chose, he "would draw ten thousand dollars." Plaintiff agreed to the terms proposed, and executed the note aforesaid. Eaton produced a blank form of application to the defendant for a policy, and requested plaintiff to sign his name thereto, saying that he (Eaton) would fill the same afterwards. Plaintiff complied without reading the paper. Eaton departed with the form thus signed, and subsequently completed it, and forwarded it to the company. Among the provisions of such application was one to the effect that the insured reserved the right to change the beneficiary of the insurance at any time; and another was that "no statements, promises, or information made or given by or to the person soliciting this application shall be binding on the company, or in any manner affect its rights, unless such statements, promises, or information be reduced to writing, and presented to the officers of the company at the home office in this application." As completed by Eaton, it called for a policy materially different from that he had described to the plaintiff. The company issued a policy accordingly, whereby it engaged to pay the sum of $10,000 to the wife of plaintiff in case of his death within 15 years; but the cash surrender value of the policy at the end of that time was therein stated to be $3,070 (together with a "dividend" of undefined amount), instead of $10,000, as orally promised by Eaton; and instead of becoming then a paid-up policy, its further continuance was conditioned upon the payment of premium at the rate of $367 per year. The policy was sent to plaintiff by mail. He returned it to defendant, accompanied by a letter, which he caused to be written, stating the particulars wherein the policy differed from the representations of Eaton, and demanding the return of the note he had given for the first premium. Such demand was refused, and plaintiff, after payment of the note, brought this suit.

1. Defendant contends that by signing the blank application and delivering it to Eaton plaintiff made Eaton his agent to complete the same, and thus assented to the terms which Eaton saw fit to insert. We do not understand this to be the law in cases such as the present. The blank form was such as could be intelligently filled only by one possessing some skill in the technology of life insurance. For example, it required an answer to the question whether the insured desired "an accumulation policy, with guaranteed cash values, as set forth in the policy form of the company." Plaintiff neither knew nor assumed to know the meaning of these terms. Presumptively Eaton possessed the requisite knowledge, and there is no doubt that the preparing of the application was within the scope of his authority as agent for the company. Insurance Co. v. Chamberlain, 132 U. S. 304, 311, 10 Sup. Ct. 87; Insurance Co. v. Olmstead, 21 Mich. 246; Donnelly v. Insurance Co., 70 Iowa, 693, 28 N. W. 607. His act in filling the instrument over the signature of plaintiff was, therefore, the act of the company, and fraud by him in the performance of that act, to the injury of plaintiff, must be treated as the fraud of the company. This conclusion, which, as will appear, is virtually decisive of the case, is fully supported by the decisions on the subject. Wheaton v. Insurance Co., 76 Cal. 415, 18 Pac. 758; Hingston v. Insurance Co., 42 Iowa, 46; Fitchner v. Association, 103 Iowa, 276, 279, 72 N. W. 530; Swan v. Insurance Co., 96 Pa. St. 37; Dowling v. Insurance Co., 168 Pa. St. 234, 31 Atl. 1087; Rowley v. Insurance Co., 36 N. Y. 550; O'Brien v. Society, 117 N. Y. 310, 22 N. E. 954; Insurance Co. v. Eshelman, 30 Ohio St. 647; Insurance Co. v. Williams, 39 Ohio St. 584; Kausal v. Association, 31 Minn. 17, 16 N. W. 430; Bowlus v. Insurance Co., 133 Ind. 106, 32 N. E. 319.

2. The provision of the application that the company should not be affected by statements or promises made by or to the agent unless the same were reduced to writing, and presented in the application, can be of no avail to defendant on the facts which the evidence for plaintiff tended to show. For present purposes it is sufficient to say of such provision that plaintiff had no knowledge of it, and did not assent to it. Although such knowledge might be imputed to him if his signature to the application had been honestly obtained, yet, since the instrument as completed by the agent was fraudulent as to plaintiff, it must follow that defendant can derive no advantage from any stipulation thus fraudulently procured. McKay v. Insurance Co. (Cal.) 56 Pac. 1112, and cases cited; Insurance Co. v. Woodworth, 83 Pa. St. 223; 1 Joyce, Ins. §§ 508, 509.

3. Defendant seems to place most reliance on the circumstance that the plaintiff's wife, who was named as beneficiary of the insurance, did not join in his offer to surrender the policy. It is claimed that her failure to do so is fatal to plaintiff's action, and that Jurgens v. Insurance Co., 114 Cal. 161, 45 Pac. 1054, and 46 Pac. 386, settles the question in defendant's favor. The ground taken in that case was that, since the beneficiary (there, as here, the wife of the plaintiff in the action) had a vested interest in the policy, the husband could not, without her concurrence, rescind the contract evidenced by that instrument. The case before us differs from that in some essential particulars. The wife of La Marche never acquired an interest in the policy defendant issued to her husband. Aside from any consideration of fraud in the procurement of the application, it seems to us doubtful whether, in view of the provision that the right to change the beneficiary of the insurance at any time was reserved to La Marche, the beneficiary first named could be said to have a vested interest in the policy in any sense that would prevent her husband from disposing of it as he pleased. See Splawn v. Chew, 60 Tex. 532; Block v. Association, 52 Ark. 201, 12 S. W. 477; 2 Joyce, Ins. § 730. We do not, however, venture an opinion on that question, for this case is for other reasons without the rule held in Jurgens v. Insurance Co. There the court said, "The policy issued to him [Jurgens] was precisely such a policy as he had applied for in writing;" and the opinion of the court was influenced throughout by the fact that Jurgens really assented to the contract which he subsequently assailed, although his assent was induced by fraudulent representations of the company's agent concerning its meaning. Necessarily, in that view, the contract was good until rescinded. Civ. Code, § 1566. But here, when the blank form left the hand of La Marche, it was not an application for a policy. It was meaningless until completed by Eaton; and the only ground on which La Marche can be said to be bound by it is that by delivering the paper with his signature attached he constituted Eaton his agent to fill the blanks, and so became responsible for what the latter did in that behalf. Bish. Cont. § 1174, and cases cited; Trust Co. v. Brown, 59 Mo. App. 461. It has been held that if the party so made the agent of the other fills the blanks with terms different from those which have been orally agreed upon he exceeds his implied authority, and the instrument is not the contract of the party who has signed it. Rounsavell v. Pease, 45 Wis. 506; Green v. Sneed, 101 Ala. 205, 13 South. 277. However this may be in general, it is plain that the rule to which we have adverted—that one who has signed a contract in blank, and delivered it to the other contracting party, thereby makes the latter an agent to fill the blanks—has no effect in the case at bar, for, as shown above, the agent of an insurance company who thus deals with the blank application of a customer for a policy acts yet as the agent of the company, not of the applicant, and can have no authority from the latter to insert in the form any proposal different from the oral agreement. We may also observe that upon the facts appearing La Marche is not chargeable with negligence in failing to read the application either before or after Eaton filled the blanks. Fitchner v. Association, 103 Iowa, 279, 72 N. W. 530; Insurance Co. v. Lunkenhimer, 127 Ind. 536, 26 N. E. 1082; 1 Joyce, Ins. §§ 489, 490. See Maxson v. Llewelyn, 122 Cal. 195, 54 Pac. 732; McKay v. Insurance Co. (Cal.) 56 Pac. 1112. It follows that plaintiff never applied for the policy which defendant assumed to issue, and of course his wife could have no vested or other interest in a policy which he did not accept nor agree to accept. It was error to grant the nonsuit, and the judgment and order denying a new trial should be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

BAKER et al. v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RY. CO. (L. A. 483.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 31, 1899.)
ACTION AGAINST RAILROAD—INJURY TO CATTLE—UNCERTAIN COMPLAINT.

A complaint alleged that cattle were grazing on land occupied and controlled by plaintiffs, adjoining defendant's railway, and, without plaintiffs' fault, casually strayed on the ground and track of the railway; that defendant so negligently managed its trains that they ran over the cattle and killed them, to plaintiffs' damage; and that, at the point where they were killed, defendant's railway was not fenced. Held uncertain, in that it could not be ascertained therefrom whether plaintiffs relied on negligence in managing the train, or on possession and control of the premises through which the road passed, and that the same were not fenced.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by Amelia B. Baker and others against the Southern California Railway Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. N. Sterry and H. J. Stevens, for appellant. Withington & Carter, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. This action was brought in the justice's court to recover the sum of $130, the value of a cow and steer alleged to have been killed by a train on defendant's road. An answer was filed in which it was alleged, among other things, that the determination of the action necessarily involved the question of title to, or possession of, real property; and the cause was accordingly certified to the superior court, under the provisions of section 838 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the appeal from the first trial a motion was made to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction. This court held that the transfer of the cause to the superior court was proper, and that that court had jurisdiction thereafter to try the cause, and the motion to dismiss the appeal was denied. See Baker v. Railway Co., 110 Cal. 455, 42 Pac. 975. On the merits of the appeal in that case, among the questions considered was the alleged error in overruling the demurrer to the complaint as amended after the transfer to the superior court; and it was held that said complaint was uncertain as to whether the plaintiff's cause of action was founded upon negligent acts of the defendant in the management of its train, or upon the failure of the defendant to fence its track or right of way. Id., 114 Cal. 501, 46 Pac. 604. After the cause was remanded the complaint was again amended. In said last amended complaint it is alleged that the cattle were grazing "upon land occupied and controlled by plaintiffs adjoining said defendant's railway, and the said cattle then and there, without the fault of the plaintiffs, or either of them, casually strayed upon the ground and track occupied by the defendant's railway, in the county of San Diego, state of California; that defendant then and there, by its agents and servants, and not regarding its duty in that behalf, so carelessly and negligently managed its cars and locomotives that the same ran upon and against the said cattle, and killed and destroyed the same, to the plaintiffs' damage and injury in the sum of one hundred and thirty dollars; that, at the point where said cattle were killed as aforesaid, defendant's railway was not on the last-mentioned date, nor is the same now, fenced on either side thereof." It is very evident that this complaint is subject to the same uncertainty as the one considered by this court on the former appeal. It cannot be ascertained therefrom whether the plaintiff relies upon the allegation of negligence in the management of the train, or upon the allegation of possession and control of the premises through which the railroad passes, and that the same was not fenced.

It appears from the transcript that upon the trial of the cause the plaintiff relied upon the allegation of occupation and control by the plaintiff of the premises adjoining the said defendant's railway, and that the same was not fenced. The law creating a duty on the part of the railroad company to fence is contained in section 485 of the Civil Code, and reads as follows: "Railroad corporations must make and maintain a good and sufficient fence on either or both sides of their track and property. In case they do not make and maintain such fence, if their engine or cars shall kill or maim any cattle or other domestic animals upon their line of road which passes through or along the property of the owner thereof, they must pay to the owner of such cattle or other domestic animals a fair market price for the same; unless it occurred through the neglect or fault of the owner of the animal so killed or maimed. Railroad corporations paying to the owner of the land through or along which their road is located an agreed price for making and maintaining such fence, or paying the cost of such fence, with the award of damages allowed for the right of way for such railroad, are relieved and exonerated from all claims for damages arising out of the killing or maiming any animals of persons who thus fail to construct and maintain such fence; and the owners of such animals are responsible for any damages or loss which may accrue to such corporation from such animals being upon their railroad track, resulting from the non-construction of such fence, unless it is shown that such loss or damage occurred through the negligence or fault of the corporation, its officers, agents or employees." It would seem from the reading of this section that it provides a penalty for killing or maiming cattle or domestic animals on the line of the road which passes through or along the property of the owner thereof, without regard to the manner in which the train may be operated (provided it be without neglect or fault of the owner of said animals), unless the company fence in its line of road. If the railroad company pay the owner of the land through which the railroad runs the price or cost of making or maintaining a fence as therein provided, then the company is relieved and exonerated from all claim for such damages; and, on the other hand, the owners of such animals are responsible for any damage or loss which may accrue to the company from such animals being on the railroad track, resulting from want of such fence. The whole provision seems to be in the interest of the owner of the land through or along which the railroad runs. But, if it be conceded that a tenant or licensee of the owner may avail himself of the benefits of such law in like manner as the owner, the evidence here fails to show that the plaintiff was such tenant or licensee of the owner of the land. On the trial, against an objection from the defendant, the plaintiff introduced in evidence the record of a deed from the Combination Land Company to W. F. Carter, purporting to convey the interest of said company to said W. F. Carter, upon the statement of plaintiff's counsel that he proposed to connect the deed with lot 20, and also the title of the Combination Land Company with that lot, and also offered in evidence, over the objection of the defendant, the record of a deed from Bryant Howard, as trustee, to the Combination Land Company, a corporation, of certain real property situated in Soledad Valley, San Diego county; being lot 20, according to the map of the Sorrento lands and town site. But the court stated the deed would be admitted as a link in a chain of evidence, if connected, and the title traced to the plaintiffs. There is no evidence, however, appearing in the transcript, connecting this link in the chain of evidence with the source of title, or with any title. It was not shown that Bryant Howard, as trustee or otherwise, had title or was ever in possession of the premises, or that his grantee, the Combination Land Company, went into possession of said premises under its deed, or that the said W. F. Carter, who purchased from said Combination Land Company, went into possession under his deed, or in fact was ever in possession. William G. Baker, one of the plaintiffs, testified, "I occupied this lot 20 as agent of my wife,"—the wife claiming to be owner of the stock that was killed; and the right to occupy or pasture said lot was obtained by parol from W. F. Carter's brother, and as his agent, two or three years prior. The result is an utter failure of evidence to show that the plaintiffs were tenants or licensees of the owners of the land along or through which the railroad ran. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded.

I concur: HARRISON, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment of reversal, but I do not think the third amended complaint is uncertain as to the particular negligence upon which plaintiffs count. They charge that the defendant failed to fence its track, and that it ran down and killed cattle of plaintiffs that had strayed upon the track. The charge of carelessness and negligence in running over the cattle, though unnecessary, does not make the pleading any less certain as to the grounds of the action. There is, however, what I deem a more substantial fault in the complaint. To maintain an action under the statute, the land which the railway company neglects to fence must be the property of the owner of the cattle. The plaintiffs here do not allege that the land was their property, or the property of either of them, but only that it was occupied and controlled by them. Instead of alleging the material and essential fact, they merely alleged that which is inconclusive evidence of such fact. Their complaint is also defective in failing to show that the cattle strayed upon the track at a point where the same passes through or along the property occupied by them. As to the right of a lessee to maintain an action under the statute, I have no doubt that his estate is sufficient for the purpose, though he would be bound, no doubt, by any waiver on the part of his landlord of the right to have the land fenced. There is in this case, however, not only a failure to allege that the land in question was the property of plaintiffs, but also a failure to prove tenancy under any person having title to the premises.

et al. (L. A. 565).¹

APPROPRIATION OF SUBSURFACE WATERS OF STREAM—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

1. One may, by appropriate works, develop and secure to useful purposes the subsurface flow of a stream, and become, with due regard to the rights of others in the stream, a legal appropriator of the waters thereby.

2. Where a person constructs a tunnel to collect the subsurface flow of a stream, and thereby weakens the natural bank and bed of the stream, and creates an artificial draft on the surface waters, causing them to flow more freely into the tunnel, and thus decreases the surface flow, one who has a right to all the surface flow, which is diverted at a point further down the stream, will be entitled to an injunction restraining such person from asserting any right to the water so taken.

Works & Lee, for appellant. Silent & Campbell, Anderson & Anderson, and A. M. Stephens, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued, as an appropriator of a part of the subterranean flow of the San Gabriel river, to restrain the defendants, who are also appropriators of the waters of the same stream, from changing their place and manner of diversion to the plaintiff's injury. The defendants, who are very numerous, made answer, and, without particularizing their pleadings, it will be sufficient, speaking of them collectively, to say that they asserted a right to all of the waters of the stream prior and superior to that of plaintiff, both as appropriators and as owners of riparian lands. By cross complaint they sought also to restrain plaintiff from further taking the waters of the river, upon the ground that it materially interfered with their own prior and superior rights thereto.

The following facts are necessary to an understanding of the litigation: The San Gabriel river flows through the San Gabriel canyon over government land, whence it passes out into San Gabriel valley. The channel of the river is well defined, both in the canyon and after it passes into the valley. In the canyon the stream is tortuous, and of varying width; in places narrow, in others broadening out into flats and bars. The rocky walls of the canyon are the natural banks of the stream. The space between these rocky walls is filled with a loose formation of sand, gravel, and bowlders. This forms the bed of the stream. In the summer season the channel is changeable along and across this gravel bed, moving from one side of the canyon to the other. In places the waters of the stream divide, forming small islands. The gravelly bed of the stream is of varying depth, being shallow where the canyon narrows, and deeper in its broader parts. The water from the surface flow of the stream saturates this gravelly bed at times and in places from canyon wall to canyon wall. This water saturating the gravelly bed is a part of the waters of the San Gabriel river flowing in its channel between its natural banks in contact with the surface flow, and forms the subsurface flow of the river. It is found by the court that this subsurface flow protects and supports, and is necessary for the protection and support of, the surface flow. At a time prior to the acquisition by plaintiff of any of its asserted rights, it is admitted that the defendants other than the defendant the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company had appropriated all of the waters constituting the surface flow of the river, diverting them at a point below plaintiff's point of later diversion. These defendants actually took the surface waters of the stream, and no others. Owing to the nature and character of the bed of the stream, it appears, as it would be natural to expect, that a large volume of water is carried by the subsurface flow. It is possible and practicable to impound this water, and make it available for useful purposes, in some instances by a dam called a "bedrock dam," which is built from the natural country rock up and through the gravelly bed to and above the surface. Such a dam, as a matter of course, if extended across the channel of the stream, arrests and impounds the subsurface flow. Another method of securing these subterranean waters is by tunneling. Under this system a tunnel is driven from a point below in a general direction up the stream through, under and along this gravelly bed. The subsurface flow naturally drains into this tunnel, and is thus carried down to the mouth of the tunnel, and there diverted. Another of these defendants, the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company, still at a time prior to the acquisition by plaintiff of any of its rights, posted at places upon the stream above the point of diversion of the other defendants its notices of intention to appropriate all of the unappropriated waters of the stream. Under this notice the work actually done by this defendant was of the following character: Beginning at a point near the stream, and above the point of diversion of the other defendants, it drove a tunnel such as has been described up the bed of the stream, and therein collected from the subsurface flow some hundred or more miners' inches of water, which, flowing to the mouth of the tunnel, was there turned into the stream, and permitted to run with the surface flow to the point of diversion of the other defendants, where the waters were segregated and carried by their appropriate distributing systems to the consumers. Difficulties, however, arose between this defendant and the other defendants in this action, and litigation followed. In the end a so-called "compromise agreement" was entered into between all of the defendants. By this their various claims and contentions were settled and determined between themselves, and, as the court finds, "their rights were united and consolidated," and the water of the river to which they were entitled was divided and apportioned among them. There was appointed a committee of nine, which should thereafter, under certain restrictions, have full charge of the further works of development to be constructed. The notice of appropriation of the defendant the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company was posted upon the 27th day of August, 1883, and, as the court finds, it prosecuted its work of construction diligently and uninterruptedly until the 26th day of January, 1889. Upon this date the compromise agreement above mentioned was consummated; and, as the court still further finds, the committee of nine immediately after took charge of the development tunnel of the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company, and at once let contracts for continuing the work in the development of the tunnel, and prosecuted the work diligently and uninterruptedly until the completion thereof, in 1896. After the date of the compromise agreement the plaintiff was organized as an irrigation district. In March, 1890, it commenced the construction of its tunnel, completing the work in October, 1893. This tunnel began upon the opposite side of the river from the tunnels of defendants, upon the lands in the private ownership of the plaintiff, and was driven towards and into the gravelly bed of the river. By this tunnel, as by the tunnel of the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company, the subterranean flow of the stream was gathered and diverted to the amount of about 60 miners' inches of water. The place where the tunnel entered the river bed, from which the major portion of its waters was gathered, was above the point where the defendants for years past and at that time were diverting the surface flow, and at a point below where the defendant the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company turned into the stream the subsurface waters developed by its tunnels. Plaintiff continued for several years to draw from its tunnel an amount of water varying with the amount carried by the surface flow of the stream, while, upon the other hand, the committee of nine, acting under the compromise agreement and the notice of appropriation by the defendant Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company, continued work upon the latter's tunnel, driving it still further up the stream, constructing galleries, and finally sinking shafts from the surface to the tunnel to catch and drain all the surface flow. They designed thus to collect all of the surface flow at a point several thousand feet above the mouth of the tunnel, and all the subterranean flow which could there be gathered, and to carry the same through their tunnel, but they proposed no longer to turn these waters into the natural bed of the stream, thus to flow past the head of plaintiff's tunnel, as had formerly been done, but to divert them at the mouth of this tunnel. The effect of this would be and was that the surface flow of the stream ceased, and with its cessation the water no longer entered plaintiff's tunnel, and it dried up. Plaintiff then commenced this action. It asserted that the San Gabriel river, a short distance above its place of diversion, divided into two streams with well-defined channels,—the one a surface stream, the other a subterranean stream, from which it drew its water. Then it was an appropriator of the waters of this subterranean stream, and that the effect of the change in the place and manner of defendants' diversion was to send this stream dry. The court found against plaintiff's allegations of a separate and well-defined subterranean stream, but this finding, in view of the others which it actually did make, it is unnecessary to consider further than to say that it draws support from the evidence.

From the foregoing it is apparent that plaintiff's cause of action rests upon its asserted right as a subsequent appropriator of the waters of the stream, and the consequent injury to its rights following the change by the defendants of their place of diversion. Defendants, by cross complaint, themselves averred that plaintiff was taking the waters of the river, to which extent, then, it was an appropriator; but they insisted that this taking was in violation of and injurious to their earlier rights. Plaintiff complains—and with some justice—that upon this important question as to whether or not it was an appropriator of the waters of the stream the court has failed to find. The findings are somewhat discursive. They are not limited to declarations upon the ultimate facts in issue, but contain many probative facts, and leave something too much to inference and deduction. When it is come to consider whether, from these findings, it can be determined whether the court did or did not hold the plaintiff to be an appropriator, some difficulty will be experienced. The court finds that years before the plaintiff corporation came into existence the defendants had appropriated "all of the water of said river flowing in the natural bed thereof." The correctness of this finding must be conceded only if it be held to apply to the surface flow, for these defendants other than the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company had done nothing to develop the subsurface flow. It is found that the separate and independent subterranean branch of the stream, from which plaintiff insisted that it was drawing its water, did not in fact exist, but that the water which entered plaintiff's tunnel "is the percolation from the surface stream, and is withdrawn from the surface stream, which defendants had appropriated prior to the organization of plaintiff as an irrigation district." Again, it is found that "the water from the surface flow of the stream percolates through this gravelly bed of the river, and fills the voids, until in portions of the canyon the whole bed becomes saturated from wall to wall. This lower or percolating water is directly connected with the surface flow, and protects and supports, and is necessary for the protection and support of, the surface flow in its course in the natural bed of the stream." Also the court finds that the plaintiff's tunnel is constructed into the gravelly bed of the stream, through which water from the surface can and does percolate; that it is constructed into the "saturated mass" of gravel in the river bed. Still further, that the plaintiff's tunnel creates an artificial draft upon the surface flow of the stream, and draws down a part of the same, and weakens and injures the natural bed of the stream, and tends to interrupt and carry away from defendants the surface flow, and deprive defendants thereof. These findings are unhappy in using the phrase "percolating waters," a phrase of well-defined meaning within the law, in a manner apparently not justified by the facts. Percolating waters are a part of the soil, and belong to the owner of the soil. He may impound them at will, and the proprietor of lower lands injuriously affected cannot be heard to complain. Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 303; Cross v. Kitts, 69 Cal. 217, 10 Pac. 409; Painter v. Water Co., 91 Cal. 74, 27 Pac. 539. It is essential to the nature of percolating waters that they do not form part of the body or flow, surface or subterranean, of any stream. They may either be rain waters, which are slowly infiltrating through the soil, or they may be waters seeping through the banks or bed of a stream, which have so far left the bed and the other waters as to have lost their character as part of the flow. If these waters which the court describes were in fact percolating waters, then plaintiff had the unquestioned right to take them by its tunnel; and, even if injury resulted to other appropriators or riparian owners upon the stream, they could not be heard to complain. Yet the court grants these defendants an injunction against plaintiff to restrain it from taking such waters. The findings, therefore, must be construed—and they are fairly susceptible of this construction—to mean that plaintiff was drawing its waters from within the bed and channel of the stream, and from its subsurface flow. That one may be a lawful appropriator of such waters there can be no question. To hold otherwise would be to deprive vast tracts of arid land of waters thus obtained, and now beneficially used and employed upon them, and limit the legal taking of waters to the surface flow alone. The existence of a well-defined subsurface flow within the bed and banks of streams such as this is well recognized. Says Kin. Irr. § 44: "At certain periods of the year water flows on the surface in a well-defined course, and there is at all times what is known as the 'underflow.' This is the broad and deep subterranean volume of water which slowly flows through the sand and gravel underlying the most, if not all, the streams which traverse the country adjacent to the mountain systems of the arid region. These underground streams are probably much greater in volume in some cases than the water upon the surface, and are, as far as rights of appropriation or riparian rights are concerned, but a valuable portion of the well-defined surface stream." Indeed, illustration of the fact that the trial court itself must of necessity have considered that the taking of subterranean waters from the stream by means of such as those employed by plaintiff was a legitimate mode of appropriation is furnished by the finding that the defendant the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation Company gave notice of appropriation as required by the Code, and proceeded by its tunnel to develop and secure this underflow in manner precisely that employed by plaintiff, and the court distinctly finds that it was a legal appropriator of waters from this same stream. We therefore hold it to be the law, and we think it to be a moderate and just exposition thereof, that one may, by appropriate works, develop and secure to useful purposes the subsurface flow of our streams, and become, with due regard to the rights of others in the stream, a legal appropriator of waters by so doing. That plaintiff thus was, at the time of the institution of its action, an appropriator, permits of no doubt, but its appropriation was legal only so far as its taking did not imperil or impair the rights of others superior to its own. One may not, of course, tunnel into the bed of such a stream, or dam its underground flow, and by such means draw away either subterranean or surface waters the rightful use to which has been secured by others. If, upon the other hand, one can, by development, obtain subterranean waters without injury to the superior rights of others, clearly he should be permitted to do so.

This having been said, the legal rights of the respective parties to this controversy are not difficult of definition. As against this plaintiff, the compromise agreement could not give these defendants collectively any greater rights than before they had separately enjoyed. So far as concerns those defendants who had appropriated all of the surface flow, and were diverting it at a point below the intake of plaintiff's tunnel, plaintiff, as a subsequent appropriator, had the clear right to insist that their place of diversion should not be changed to its injury. If the surface flow which had been permitted to pass the head of its tunnel fed the subterranean flow, and if the waters which the plaintiff thus took could be and were taken without impairment of the rights of the defendants to the surface flow, then plaintiff is justified in insisting that the surface flow should continue to pass the head of its tunnel, and feed the underflow. If, upon the other hand, the taking of this water by plaintiff, as the court finds, creates an artificial draft upon the surface flow of the stream, draws down a part of it, and weakens and injures the natural bed of the stream, and tends to interrupt and carry away from the defendants the surface flow, and to deprive them of it, since plaintiff's use of the water has not ripened into a prescriptive right, defendants are entitled to an injunction to restrain this illegal interference. Again, as the Azusa Water Development & Irrigation District is an appropriator prior in time and right to the plaintiff, if its notice of appropriation be valid, as the court finds, and if its work has been properly prosecuted, it would have the unquestioned right to develop and take the subsurface flow to the extent of 5,000 miners' inches, and to divert the water at a point above the head of plaintiff's tunnel, and of this plaintiff could not be heard to complain. But in the fact that this defendant had compromised its differences and consolidated its rights with the other defendants will be found no legal justification for the diversion at a point above of all of the surface flow which had been accustomed to pass beyond plaintiff's point of diversion. The appropriators of this surface flow, as has been said, would not be warranted in so changing the place of diversion, and the mere fact that they had consolidated their rights with one who claimed the right to develop a subterranean flow in subordination to their rights would not justify the ignoring of the intervening rights of the plaintiff.

But into an examination of all these questions, as affected by the evidence in the case, it will not be necessary to enter; for, as has been said, the court at the instance of the defendants under their cross complaint granted an injunction against the plaintiff restraining it from asserting any right to the waters which it had been taking, and further restraining it from developing or extending its tunnel. This injunction was based upon the findings above adverted to, that the water which plaintiff was taking was drawn from and decreased the surface flow of defendants, and that the tunnel weakened the natural bank and bed of the stream, and created an artificial draft upon the surface waters, causing them to flow more freely into the tunnel, and thus lessening the amount which the defendants otherwise would have received. These findings, if supported, are determinative of the case, for, if plaintiff's attempted appropriation is so violative of the superior rights of the defendant appropriators as to justify an injunction restraining them from asserting any right to the water, it cannot matter to plaintiff what place the defendants may, in the future, select as their point of diversion. It would unduly extend this opinion to set forth the evidence at length, but we are satisfied that the findings are abundantly supported by the evidence of the engineers Wright, Purnell, and Koebig, who testified with unanimity to the matters found by the court. The right of the defendants to an injunction under the facts found is very clear, but, if it needs support, it may be found in the well-considered cases of City of Emporia v. Soden, 25 Kan. 425; Etna Mills v. Inhabitants of Brookline, 127 Mass. 69; and McClellan v. Hurdle (Colo. App.) 33 Pac. 280. The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

SPRINGER v. SPRINGER et al. (L. A. 756.)

APPEAL—BOND—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.

Where the respondent signed a certificate to the transcript on appeal that an undertaking in due form was filed in said cause within the time allowed by law, he cannot, after the expiration of the time within which another undertaking might have been filed, object to the sufficiency of the appeal bond.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by one Springer against one Springer and others. There was a judgment in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appealed. Defendants moved to dismiss the appeal for insufficiency of the appeal bond. Motion denied.

W. W. Holcomb and W. T. Williams, for appellant. G. P. Adams, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Motion to dismiss the appeal for want of a sufficient undertaking. Judgment herein was entered in the superior court in favor of the defendants October 31, 1898, and on April 24, 1899, the plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, and on the same day an order was made denying a motion made by the plaintiff to amend her statement. April 29th the plaintiff served and filed upon the defendants a notice of appeal from the judgment, and also from the orders denying a new trial and denying her motion to amend the statement. June 10th the attorney for the respondents signed a certificate to the transcript on appeal, in which he certified that "an undertaking on appeal in due form was filed in said cause within the time allowed by law," and on the same day the transcript was filed in this court. The appellant's brief was filed June 29th, and on July 29th the respondents filed their brief in reply thereto, in which no objection was made to the sufficiency of the undertaking, or the right to have the appeal heard in this court. September 29th the respondents gave notice to the appellant of a motion to dismiss the appeals upon the ground that the undertaking on appeal is insufficient, and on October 9th this motion was submitted for decision. In Re Marshall's Estate, 118 Cal. 380, 50 Pac. 540, a similar motion was made where the counsel for respondents had signed a stipulation "that an undertaking in due form was properly made and filed within five days after the service and filing of the notice of appeal." The motion was denied upon the ground that after the expiration of the time within which another undertaking might have been filed counsel could not be relieved of the effect of such a stipulation upon the showing made therein. See, also, Carey v. Brown, 58 Cal. 185; Forni v. Yoell, 95 Cal. 442, 30 Pac. 578; Id., 99 Cal. 173, 33 Pac. 887. The facts of the present case are within the principles there determined, and upon the authority of that case the motion is denied.

JORDAN v. MYRES et al. (Sac. 523.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—KNOWLEDGE OF OWNER OF LAND—NOTICE—MINER'S LIEN—LEASED MACHINERY.

1. A person who has leased machinery to persons in possession of land, under a contract to purchase the same, and which the latter have affixed to the soil, is not such an owner or person as is contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. § 1192,—which provides that where work is done on land with the knowledge of the owner, which work would entitle the person performing it to a mechanic's lien, the work will be deemed to have been performed at the instance of the owner, unless such owner within three days give notice, by posting, that he will not be responsible,—and need not give such notice to prevent a miner's lien attaching to the machinery.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, which provides that any person who performs labor in any mining claim has a lien on the same, and the works used in connection therewith, for his work and labor, a person who has performed work for one in possession of a mining claim under a contract for the purchase thereof, which contract provided that, if the purchasers failed to complete the contract, they could remove any machinery affixed by them, has no claim on machinery leased by the latter from a third person, with a privilege of purchasing, and permanently attached to the claim, though the lessor gave no notice of his ownership, and the lessees of the machinery never completed the contract for purchase of the claim.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

Action by L. E. C. Jordan against B. F. Myres and others to foreclose laborers' and material men's liens on a mining claim. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant Joshua Hendy Machine Works appealed. Modified.

John M. Fulweiler and F. P. Tuttle, for appellant. Jo & George W. Hamilton, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Foreclosure of laborers' and material men's liens. Plaintiff brings the action for himself and as assignee of 13 other lienholders. The court gave judgment for plaintiff, from which defendant Joshua Hendy Machine Works appeals on the judgment roll alone.

From the findings it appears that defendant Myres was and now is the owner of the mining property commonly called the "Calf Pasture Quartz Mine." On February 8, 1896, he entered into a contract of sale and purchase of the property with defendant Berry, who, before any work was begun upon said mine or any material furnished therefor, assigned to defendants Walter, Johnson, Ray, and Ward each an undivided one-fifth interest in said contract, and they then entered into possession of the property. It was agreed in their contract, among other things, that, in case Berry failed to purchase the mine as agreed, he should leave the mine properly timbered, and turn the same over to Myres in good mine order, free from any incumbrances, "but may remove any engine or other hoisting machinery he may have placed on the mine above ground." On March 24, 1896, defendant the Joshua Hendy Machine Works, a corporation, entered into a written contract of lease with defendants Walter, Johnson, and Berry, which was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Placer county on April 4, 1896, whereby the corporation defendant leased to them a certain engine and certain other machinery, and the latter agreed to pay as rental therefor certain stipulated sums, on payment of which they were to have the right of purchase upon further payment of one dollar. About March 29, 1896, these five defendants took possession of said machinery from defendant corporation, and placed the same on said mine, and "the same was permanently affixed and attached thereto by means of bolts and screws; that said machinery was necessary, and was thereafter, during the times in the complaint alleged, actually used, in the working and operating of said mine." On July 30, 1896, defendant corporation served notice on defendants Berry, Walter, and Johnson that, unless within five days they paid the balance due on said contract, it would declare the same rescinded, and take possession of the property. This demand payment was not made. The work done and the materials furnished, for which liens are claimed, occurred before July 30, 1896. The liens were filed on the mine and the machinery in question, and the actions were commenced, about the last-named date.

Appellant contends that the personal property leased by it retained its identity as personal chattels, and was not subject to the liens, notwithstanding it had become fixed to the realty by the lessees. It was held, under a similar lease, in Hendy v. Dinkerhoff, 57 Cal. 3, that, as between Hendy and his lessee, Lampson, and also as between Hendy and defendants, who had entered into a contract of sale and purchase as to the mine with Lampson much the same as in this case, the property must be treated as personal property. The case is authority for holding that as to all the defendants in the present case, including the owner of the mine, the machinery should be treated as personal property. In Hamilton v. Mining Co., 118 Cal. 148, 50 Pac. 378, the trial court enforced a laborer's lien against certain leased machinery which had become affixed to the realty, but denied the lien as to certain other of the leased machinery not yet affixed. Plaintiffs appealed from the judgment, which raised the question only as to the unaffixed machinery. No question arose as to the correctness of the judgment concerning the personal property that had become affixed to the realty. The case, therefore, does not directly decide the question here, nor does it, for that matter, even impliedly do so. The case of Williams v. Mining Co., 102 Cal. 134, 34 Pac. 702, and 36 Pac. 388, also cited by respondent, decides, upon the point in question, nothing more than that the lien should be taken against the mining claim, and not against the specific structure upon the mine. The only notice which respondent had of the lease under which appellant claims was by virtue of its being recorded in Placer county. But, as the statute makes no provision for thus giving notice of such instruments, we must deal with the case as though respondent had no notice. Respondent claims that appellant should have protected itself by posting the notice required of the owner of the lands, or the person having or claiming an interest therein, as directed by section 1192, Code Civ. Proc. Appellant was not the owner of the mine, neither had he any interest in it. We do not think appellant was such owner or person as is contemplated by that section. Appellant might have posted notice as a means of giving actual notice of its claim upon the personal property, but we do not think it was required to do so; nor would the mere posting of the prescribed notice have been conclusive of actual notice, the same as in the case of the owner, of a person claiming an interest in the mine itself. It is settled law that this personal property cannot be treated as part of the realty, so far as the owner of the mine and the defendants are concerned. Hendy v. Dinker- hoff, supra. The question is, must it be so treated as to respondent? Section 1183, Code Civ. Proc., provides as follows: "* * * And any person who performs labor in any mining claim or claims, has a lien upon the same, and the works owned and used by the owners for reducing ores from such mining claim or claims, for the work or labor done, or materials furnished by each respectively," etc. This section contemplates that the lien shall attach to the property of the owner, and not to the property of some other person. But it is said that, if another person allows his personal property to become affixed to the realty as part of it without giving notice of his claim, the lien will attach to it as the property of the owner of the mine; that in this case plaintiff had a right to believe and act upon appearances, and, if he or appellant is to suffer, it should be the latter, through whose neglect the respondent was misled. Hill v. Sewald, 53 Pa. St. 271, was a case where Hill brought trover against Sewald for the value of two boilers and appurtenances. Sewald had conveyed a piece of land to one Snodgrass on which was a steam mill, and took from him a mortgage to secure part of the purchase money. The boilers having worn out, Snodgrass made an agreement with Hill, the plaintiff, by which Snodgrass hired two boilers at a stipulated rental per month, and placed them in the mill, reserving the right to remove them whenever he desired to do so. Four years after the boilers were placed in the mill Sewald purchased the premises at foreclosure sale. Hill gave notice at the sale of his claim to the boilers, and after the sale demanded their return, which was refused. The question was whether the boilers had, in legal contemplation, as they had in fact, been incorporated into the realty and passed to the purchaser. The court said: "It is not the character of the physical connection with the realty which constitutes the criterion of annexation, as the authorities hereinafter abundantly show. * * * When these boilers and their connections were built into the mill of Snodgrass it is clear it was with no intention on his part, or those who acted for him, to affix them to the realty as his property, or with an intention to make them his own by a wrongful conversion. They were placed there as the personal chattels of Hill, under a valid contract of hiring for their temporary use, the right of removal being expressly reserved. How, then, can it be said that a chattel is converted into realty, when it was neither the intention of the owner of the chattel nor that of the owner of the freehold to annex it?" In Stell v. Paschal, 41 Tex. 640, mortgages had been given upon a "steam mill, cotton gin and press, * * * and in all other machinery and improvements that may be hereafter placed therein or attached thereto." A press had been temporarily put upon the mortgaged premises, for exhibition as a sample press, to enable one Smith, who put it up, to sell the patent rights as agent of said press. Afterwards it was purchased by Douglass, one of the mortgagors. The court held that if the press had been placed on the premises for the purpose of supplying such as had been worn out or destroyed, or to enlarge the business, it came within the terms of the instruments, and the lien attached. "But if it was not placed on said premises by the mortgagors, but by some other person, who was the owner of it, and it was not done for the purpose of or in connection with the business carried on by them on said premises, but merely to exhibit such press to the public, and to test its utility, this undoubtedly did not subject it to the mortgage. And though it was afterwards purchased by Douglass, one of the mortgagors, if it was not bought with the intent of and was not in fact applied in any way to the uses and purposes of the business, but remained thereon solely as a place of deposit and safe-keeping, then it is equally clear it did not thereby come within the terms and stipulations of the contracts by virtue of which appellant asserts a lien upon it." The case of Hendy v. Dinkerhoff, supra, clearly recognizes the principle that it is the intention of the parties which determines whether personalty is to retain its character as such. See, also, Fratt v. Whittier, 58 Cal. 126; Lavenson v. Soap Co., 80 Cal. 245, 22 Pac. 184; Miller v. Waddingham, 91 Cal. 377, 27 Pac. 750; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 429.

The general rule is, as to sales upon execution, that the purchaser acquires thereby only such title and interest as the judgment debtor had, and the rule is the same whether the sale follows the lien of attachment or is upon execution without such lien; and the rule also applies at sales under foreclosure of mortgages upon real estate,—the purchaser ordinarily takes the risk of title. Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 559. We cannot see in what way the sale upon foreclosure of a mechanic's lien can be said to carry any greater interest than the owner of the property had at the time the lien attached, whatever may be the rule as to a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of the land without notice. In the case before us the owner of the mine never had any interest in the personal property, and he acquired no interest in it, as against appellant, by its being affixed to the realty (Hendy v. Dinkerhoff, supra); and appellant's lessees expressly reserved the right to remove this machinery. It must result that respondent secured no lien upon this personal property by virtue of the statute, for he could only have a lien upon the property of the owner of the mine. Any other view of the matter would, we think, greatly retard development, especially of mining property, where it often becomes necessary for the owner or his lessee to borrow or hire the use of machinery, which, for the time being, in order to utilize it, must be affixed to the realty. No one would have the temerity to loan or hire machinery to another person for such purposes if he had to take the risk of losing his property through the liens of laborers or material men working in, or supplying material to, the mine. The courts find no difficulty in upholding the rights of a vendor under a conditional sale of personal property as against the creditors of the vendee, for the reason that the title remains in the vendor; and we can see no reason why the rule should not be the same where the owner of the personal property hires or leases it. The fallacy of respondent's position is in assuming that the situation of the personal property in its relation to the realty is the sole criterion by which to judge of its character; whereas, "the intention with which an article of personal property is attached to the realty, whether for temporary or permanent improvement, has, within certain limits, quite as much to do with the determination of the question whether it has thereby become a permanent fixture as has the way and manner in which it is attached." 1 Jones, Mortg. § 429, supra. In contemplation of law, the character of the machinery belonging to appellant did not change its character as personal property by the use to which the lessees put it, and it was error to include it in plaintiff's liens. The judgment should be modified by excluding this machinery from its operation, and otherwise the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is modified by excluding the engine and machinery claimed by appellant from its operation, and otherwise the judgment is affirmed.

REID et ux. v. ENGLEHART-DAVIDSON
MERCANTILE CO. et al. (L. A. 706.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 1, 1899.)

HOMESTEAD—DECLARATION OF CLAIMANT—REQUISITES OF.

1. The right of a claimant to select a homestead under Civ. Code, tit. 5, § 1237 et seq., providing for the reservation of homesteads to be exempt from execution at forced sale, must appear upon the face of his declaration, and the omission to show such right cannot be supplied by extraneous evidence.

2. A declaration claiming homestead allowed to head of family, which does not state, in express terms, that the claimant is the head of a family, as required by Civ. Code, § 1263, is void.

3. The use of the pronoun "he" in the certificate of acknowledgment attached to a declaration claiming a homestead merely shows that the declarant is a male person, and is insufficient to show that he is head of a family.

McFarland, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Suit to quiet title by R. M. Reid and wife against the Englehart-Davidson Mercantile Company, a corporation, and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Leonard & Morris, E. R. Annable, and T. P. Archer, for appellants. Otis & Gregg, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Suit to quiet title. July 12, 1897, the respondent R. M. Reid filed for record with the county recorder for the county of San Bernardino a declaration of homestead upon certain real property, and on October 1, 1898, filed another declaration of homestead upon the same property. The Englehart-Davidson Mercantile Company, one of the appellants herein, recovered a judgment in the justice's court for the township of Redlands against the said respondent, and an abstract of this judgment was filed in the office of the county recorder September 28, 1898. November 2, 1898, the interest which R. M. Reid had in the above-named real property was sold by the sheriff under an execution issued upon this judgment on October 5th, and the certificate of sale issued thereon was transferred to this appellant. October 13, 1897, a judgment was entered and docketed in the superior court of said county against Reid and in favor of one Archer, for the sum of $375, together with interest and costs, and was afterwards assigned by Archer to the other appellants herein. November 17, 1898, Reid and wife brought the present action to quiet their title to said property. Judgment was rendered in their favor, and the present appeal is from this judgment.

The sole question involved upon the appeal is the sufficiency of the selection of homestead in July, 1897. The declaration is as follows: "I hereby declare that I am married, and that I do now actually reside, with my family, on that certain land and premises situate in the city of Redlands, county of San Bernardino, state of California, bounded and described as follows, to wit [giving description]. I claim said premises as a homestead. The actual cash value of said premises I estimate to be three thousand dollars. Dated this 12th day of July, A. D. 1897. R. M. Reid." Section 1237, Civ. Code, defines the homestead to be the dwelling house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated, "selected as in this title provided." It is only a homestead "selected" in accordance with the requirements of the statute that is exempt from execution at forced sale. Section 1260 provides that homesteads of not exceeding $5,000 in value may be selected and claimed by any "head of a family," and to the extent of $1,000 in value by any other person. By section 1262 a homestead can be "selected" only by "a declaration of homestead," which must be executed and acknowledged in the same manner as a grant of real property is acknowledged, and filed for record; and by section 1263 this declaration of homestead "must contain," in addition to other statements, "a statement showing that the person making it is the head of a family; or, when the declaration is made by the wife, showing that her husband has not made such declaration, and that she therefore makes the declaration for their joint benefit." There is no statement in the above declaration that R. M. Reid is the "head of a family," nor are there any facts stated therein showing that the declaration was made by the "head of a family." Although it is stated that the claimant is married, it does not appear whether the person who made this statement is husband or wife, and the words "I am married" could with equal propriety have been used by either husband or wife. If "R. M. Reid" be the wife, the declaration is defective in not showing that her husband had not previously made a declaration. Booth v. Galt, 58 Cal. 254. If that be the name of the husband, the declaration is defective in not "showing" that he is the head of a family. The name appears only in the signature to the declaration, and it cannot be assumed that it is the name of the husband, or even of a male person; nor can any argument be drawn therefrom that the person by whom it was made was the "head of a family." The right of the claimant to select a homestead, and impress upon it an exemption from forced sale, must appear upon the face of the declaration, and its omission can no more be supplied by extraneous evidence than can an omission to state the value of the property claimed. The legislature has prescribed certain formalities and conditions which are essential to the "selection" of a homestead, and these formalities and conditions cannot be disregarded by courts. When a selection is made by virtue of the claimant being the "head of a family," that fact is as necessary to be shown in the declaration as is the fact of occupancy or of value. We are not at liberty to disregard one of these requisites any more than another. If either is wanting, the declaration is unavailing to create the exemption. See Ashley v. Olmstead, 54 Cal. 616.

It is urged by the respondents that this defect in the declaration is obviated by the certificate of acknowledgment which is annexed thereto. The certificate is as follows: "State of California, County of San Bernardino—ss.: On this twelfth day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven, before me, Charles E. Truesdell, a notary public in and for the county of San Bernardino, state of California, personally appeared R. M. Reid, known to me to be the person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument, and he acknowledged to me that he executed the same. Witness my hand and seal. Charles E. Truesdell, Notary Public," etc. It is claimed that from the use therein of the masculine pronoun "he" it must be assumed that the declaration was made by a male person, and that such person was the husband, and therefore the head of a family. The acknowledgment is, however, not a part of the declaration, but it is to be made after the declaration is completed; and the certificate of acknowledgment is not made by the claimant, but is only the statement of the officer before whom the acknowledgment was made. Moreover, as was said in Berniaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 42, 11 Pac. 802: "The use of the pronoun 'he' in the note, mortgage, and certificate of sale can have little, if any, greater effect than to raise a suspicion that the person referred to was a male and not a female." The declaration of October, 1898, created no rights in the plaintiffs as against the claims of defendants, for the reason that at that date the defendants had existing liens upon the property. Civ. Code, § 1241 (1). The judgment is reversed.

SUSSMAN v. COUNTY OF SAN LUIS OBIS-PO et al. (L. A. 533.)¹

QUIETING TITLE—DEED—ADMISSIBILITY—DEDICATION BY CORPORATION—NECESSITY OF FORMAL ACT OF DEDICATION PASSED BY CORPORATION—FACTS AND DECLARATIONS SHOWING DEDICATION—PREJUDICIAL FINDING.

1. In an action against a county to quiet plaintiff's title to a certain road and bridge thereon, a deed conveying to said county a strip of land leading up to plaintiff's line at a point in said bridge, so that the end of the bridge rests on the right of way so conveyed to the county, is not inadmissible on the ground that the grantor in said deed had agreed to see that plaintiff's predecessor got a deed for that part of the road, where there is no showing that such grantor ever carried out his agreement with plaintiff's predecessor, or that he was bound to carry it out, or that there was any legal impediment in the way of his conveying to the county.

2. As a dedication is a conclusion of fact to be drawn from the circumstances of each case, a corporation as well as an individual may be bound by its acts so as to be estopped from disputing or denying the fact of dedication, and no formal act of dedication passed by its proper officers is necessary.

3. Where a corporation told purchasers of its lots in a certain town and others that it would construct a bridge and open a public highway, and then subsequently constructed the bridge and opened the road, the court is justified in finding that there was a dedication of such bridge and road.

4. Where, in an action against a county to quiet plaintiff's title to a certain road and bridge thereon, there is a correct finding that there was a dedication of said road and bridge, a further finding in favor of defendant on the plea of the statute of limitations is not prejudicial to plaintiff, as it may be rejected as surplusage, and still the judgment is supported by the finding of dedication.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by Samuel Sussman against the county of San Luis Obispo and others to quiet title to a certain road and bridge resting thereon. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

G. W. Kemp and Graves & Graves, for appellant. F. A. Dorn, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. Plaintiff brings this action against the defendants to quiet his title to a certain wagon road and bridge resting thereon. Defendants county of San Luis Obispo and board of supervisors of said county in their answer deny the material allegations in the complaint, and set up as a defense the dedication by the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest of said road and bridge to the public as a public road, thoroughfare, and highway, and also plead the statute of limitations. The supervisors, as individuals, disclaim any interest in said property. Upon the issues thus raised the court found in favor of the defendant upon the question of dedication and the plea of the statute of limitations, and ordered judgment accordingly. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The Eureka Improvement Company, predecessor of plaintiff, then the owner of the Eureka rancho, in December, 1888, had said rancho surveyed, and a map thereof made and filed. A portion of said rancho, as surveyed, was laid out into lots and blocks, and called the "Town of Vasa." This map, so filed by said company, is called the "original map," and was introduced in evidence by plaintiff. Said map, or the portion thereof showing the town of Vasa, was lithographed on a large scale, with the streets of said town, including the road and bridge in controversy, delineated thereon as an open thoroughfare connecting the Templeton and Vasa road on the easterly side of the Salinas river with the Templeton and Santa Margarita road on the westerly side of said river, and leading to and past the railroad depot. This map was recorded in the office of the county recorder of

San Luis Obispo county at the request of Briggs, Ferguson & Co., the agents of said Eureka Improvement Company, on the 4th day of November, 1889. The Eureka Improvement Company and Briggs, Ferguson & Co., its agents, in September, 1888, brought a great number of people to the town of Vasa by excursions for the purpose of selling lands and town lots. Lands were then sold to buyers by the Eureka Improvement Company, and representations were made publicly to said buyers and to prospective purchasers that the proposed bridge and road across the Salinas river connecting the Eureka Improvement Company's lands with the road across the river would be of a public character, and for the benefit of the public. Among the parties that made such representations were several directors and officers of said company, and in November, 1889, another excursion was run by said companies for the purpose of bringing buyers of property to the town of Vasa and the Rancho Eureka, at which time an auction sale of lots was had, there being present of the Eureka Company the president, secretary, and treasurer, and the president of Briggs, Ferguson & Co. At this time representations were made by said officers to the people gathered at said auction that said bridge and road were built for the benefit of the public. It is true that some of the officers of said company on the trial denied that any statements of the kind were made, but, there having been a conflict in the evidence upon this point, it is to be presumed that credit was given to the statements of the witnesses on behalf of defendant by the trial court, and under the well-established rule the findings will not be disturbed. There is further evidence going to show the intention and offer to dedicate on the part of the Eureka Improvement Company by said company placing signs at each end of the road stating that said road was open to the Eureka rancho and town of Vasa. The testimony quite clearly shows that the bridge and road in question were thrown open to public travel and used as a public highway by the public with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff's predecessors in interest, and continued to be so used for more than five years without objection on the part of the owner. In September, 1894, James T. Murphy conveyed by deed to the county of San Luis Obispo a strip of land on the west side of the river for a public highway, said strip leading up to the plaintiff's line at a point in the bridge. The west end of the bridge rests on this land or right of way so conveyed by Murphy to the defendant county. The plaintiff objected to the admission of this deed in evidence, on the ground, as claimed, that Murphy had agreed to see that the Eureka Improvement Company got a deed for that part of the road, but there is no showing that Murphy ever carried out his agreement with said company, or that he was bound to carry it out, or that there was any legal impediment in the way of his conveying to the county. The court therefore did not err in admitting the deed.

On the petition of parties along the line of road in question, the supervisors formally accepted the road as a public highway and thoroughfare in 1895. The contention on the part of the appellant that the Eureka Improvement Company could only be bound by a formal act of dedication passed by its board of directors and entered on its minutes is untenable. Dedication is a conclusion of fact to be drawn from the circumstances of each case, and a corporation, as well as an individual, may be bound by its acts so as to estop it from disputing or denying the fact of dedication. In Smith v. City of San Luis Obispo, 95 Cal. 470, 30 Pac. 593, it is said: "We think the use of the street by the public for a reasonable length of time, where the intention of the owner to dedicate is clearly shown, is sufficient, without any specific action of the municipal authorities either by resolution or by repair or improvements. A common-law dedication operates against the dedicator by estoppel, and this estoppel may be invoked by or on behalf of the public at large." In People v. Railroad Co., 98 Cal. 670, 33 Pac. 729, the court say: "Upon the issue whether the road that it constructed was intended to be a private or public road evidence that at the time it purchased the land declarations were made on its behalf that it intended to construct a public highway would be relevant and pertinent. If such an agreement had been made, there would be an inference that its subsequent act in constructing the road was in pursuance thereof, and would corroborate the testimony of those who declared that at the time of its construction it was intended for a public highway." In this case it was shown that the Eureka Company, by itself and agents, held out to the purchasers of lots in the town of Vasa and others that it would construct a bridge and open a public highway across the same, leading to said town. The bridge was subsequently constructed, and the road opened. These facts, in connection with said declarations, would justify the court in finding that the dedication was made. Common-law dedications are, for convenience of description, frequently divided by law writers into two classes,—express dedications and implied dedications. The substantial difference between the two consists in the mode of proof. In the former case the intention to appropriate the land to public use is manifested by some outward act of the owner, while in the latter it is shown by such acts and conduct, not directly manifesting the intention, but from which the law will imply the intent. If the donor's acts are such as indicate an intention to appropriate the land to public use, then, upon acceptance by the public, the dedication becomes complete. The authorities show that dedications have been established in every conceivable way in which the intention of the parties could have been manifested. People v. County of Marin, 103 Cal. 223, 37 Pac. 203; Elliott, Roads & S. 92; Abbott v. Water Co., 87 Cal. 328, 25 Pac. 693; Helm v. McClure, 107 Cal. 199, 40 Pac. 437.

We think the evidence on the question of dedication is sufficient to justify the finding of the trial court. The appellant contends, however, that there are inconsistent findings, in this: That the court finds dedication, and also finds in favor of the defendant on the plea of the statute of limitations, whereas dedication rests upon intention and consent of the owner, and the answer pleading the statute of limitations alleges that the road has been used and occupied for over five years by the public adversely to the plaintiff and to all others. Prescription or adverse possession, however, was based in theory upon an assumed grant beyond legal memory, and which had been lost, and this law of limitation was to furnish the defendant with a defense in lieu of said original grant, which it was supposed he could not produce. However, this finding, if the other be correct, cannot prejudice the plaintiff, and, if rejected as unnecessary or surplusage, still the judgment in favor of the defendant would be supported by the finding of dedication. We see no errors in the transcript which would justify a reversal. Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

I concur: HARRISON, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment. In my opinion, there is no inconsistency between the findings of dedication and of a prescriptive right in the public, and I think the evidence fully sustains the latter finding.

CONDEE v. GYGER et al. (L. A. 471.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 6, 1899.)
NEW TRIAL—GROUND—APPEAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—DUTY OF TRIAL COURT.

1. Where an order granting a new trial is silent as to the ground on which it was made, and the record shows the existence of a valid ground, the supreme court will, on appeal, presume that the order was made on that ground.

2. Where, after making a finding of facts in favor of plaintiff on conflicting evidence, the court made an order for a new trial, it will be presumed that the judge changed his mind as to the effect of the evidence, and the order granting a new trial will be affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by A. J. Condee, as assignee, against C. E. Gyger and others. There was a finding in favor of plaintiff, and defendants moved for a new trial. From an order granting the motion, plaintiff appealed. Affirmed.

Caldwell & Duncan, for appellant. John T. Crowe and John G. North, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order granting defendants' motion for a new trial. The motion was upon the grounds of newly-discovered evidence and the other statutory grounds. At the hearing the court made the following minute order: "The motion heretofore made for a new trial of this cause is this day granted by the court."

Appellant contends that as the court assigns no reason for its order, and as the court must have given careful consideration to all the facts at the trial, the motion presumably was granted alone on the affidavits showing newly-discovered evidence. No such presumption can be indulged. It must rather be presumed that the court reconsidered and passed upon the sufficiency of all the evidence in the case in granting the motion, for it was its duty to do so; and in this appeal, the court having granted a new trial, "the presumption is against the findings, and not in their favor." Hass v. Association, 118 Cal. 6, 49 Pac. 1056. Where the order granting the new trial is silent as to the ground on which it was made, and the record shows the existence of a valid ground, this court will presume that the order was made upon that ground. Curtiss v. Starr, 85 Cal. 376, 24 Pac. 806. It is the duty of the judge of the trial court to grant the new trial whenever he is not satisfied with the verdict, if tried by a jury, or with the findings, if tried by the court (Id.); and he is not bound by the rule as to conflicting evidence, as is this court (Id., and cases cited; Bjorman v. Redwood Co., 92 Cal. 500, 28 Pac. 591).

The action is by the assignee in insolvency of one J. W. Nance, upon a promissory note which the court found was executed by defendant for the sum of $5,000 to Los Angeles National Bank, on which Nance made the following indorsement: "I guaranty the payment of this note at maturity, and waive demand, presentment for payment, protest, and notice of protest." The note became due February 25, 1892, and the court found that on April 11, 1892, Nance paid the bank $5-150.27, the balance then due, principal and interest, and the bank surrendered the note to Nance, who was its owner when he became insolvent; that defendants deposited with the bank, at the execution of the note, certain 11 bonds of the Perris Irrigation District, of the par value of $500 each, as collateral security, which were delivered to Nance with the note, and that on March 30, 1893, he sold the bonds for the highest market value, to wit, for $4,125; that except $165 paid to the bank on account of interest, by the irrigation district, no payments were made on said note by defendants, and that there was due at the date of the judgment from defendants the sum of $1,899.37 upon said note, and the further sum of $189.93 as attorney's fees provided for therein. Judgment was accordingly entered for plaintiff. The defense to the action was that the note was signed by defendants at the instance of Nance, and upon an express agreement that they were to be held harmless from the obligation thereof. They denied that they either delivered the note or the bonds to the bank, and alleged that they received no part of the borrowed money; that Nance obtained the money himself for the benefit of the said irrigation district, of which he was president and general manager, and that the bonds were part of a lot of bonds which he had purchased from the district or had agreed to purchase, and were his when pledged and when sold by him; also that when Nance paid the note and received back the bonds the note was canceled and marked "Paid" by the bank, and the transaction was at an end, and the note became functus officio. Defendants also pleaded the statute of limitations. The complaint was filed February 24, 1896, nearly four years after Nance paid the note, and nearly three years after he sold the bonds.

The evidence is conflicting upon the principal question of fact,—whether the note was in fact made at the instance of Nance, and to raise money for the irrigation district, and that he agreed himself to pay the note, and hold defendants harmless by reason of their having signed it. There is evidence tending to show this to be the fact, and, had the court found for defendants, we think the evidence would have justified such finding. In support of the order, we must presume that the court changed its opinion as to the effect of the evidence, and reached a conclusion, upon the hearing of the motion, favorable to defendants' contention. Upon this assumption the court was justified in granting the motion; indeed, it was its plain duty to do so. In this view of the matter, it becomes unnecessary to enter upon a discussion of the many interesting questions presented by counsel. They may not arise at the second trial, and some of them cannot arise should the defendants prevail. The order is affirmed, and the cause remanded.

McGUIRE et al. v. LYNCH. (Sac. 524.)

COURTS—DEEDS—EFFECT—MORTGAGES—POSSESSION BY MORTGAGEE—EJECTMENT—ADVERSE POSSESSION—LIMITATIONS—ESTATES—SETTLEMENT—WIDOW'S AND CHILDREN'S RIGHTS.

1. A court may determine whether a deed is a mortgage, so far as such determination is material to the issues, though the grantor be not a party.

2. Where a mortgagee goes into possession under a permission to pay his debt from the rents, the possession is not adverse, and limitations do not run.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 1469, required the court to assign, for the "use of the widow and minor children," the whole of a decedent's estate, if it was less than $1,500. Section 1468, in the same chapter, provides that, when property is set apart to the use of the family under provisions of the chapter, one-half shall belong to the surviving spouse, and the remainder in equal shares to the children. Held that, where property is assigned under section 1469, the children take an undivided one-half.

4. Where, in ejectment, defendant is found to be a mere trespasser, plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the entire property, though they own only an undivided one-half.

5. They are entitled, however, to only one-half the rents and profits accruing during the detention; defendant being liable for the remaining half to the owner of the other undivided one-half of the estate.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Solano county.

Ejectment by Annie McGuire and others against P. C. Lynch. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Modified.

H. H. McPike, for appellant. Frank R. Devlin, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. Annie McGuire and four of her children sue in ejectment to recover the demanded premises, with damages for withholding the same. A demurrer was sustained to the complaint of Annie McGuire, and she failed to amend, but the suit was continued by the other plaintiffs. Defendant denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and pleads the statute of limitations.

The court finds, in substance, that in 1880 the property belonged to one Patrick McGuire, who was the father of the plaintiffs and the husband of the said Annie McGuire. He died in that year intestate, and the probate court duly set aside and assigned all the property of the estate to the widow and minor children for their support, under section 1469, Code Civ. Proc. That section then provided that if the value of the estate be found to be less than $1,500 the court shall assign, for the use and support of the minor children, the whole estate, after certain payments, and there shall be no further proceedings in the administration unless further estate be found. It was further found that, on the 16th day of April, Annie McGuire executed and delivered to defendant an instrument in writing, purporting to be a deed, but in fact a mortgage, which has never been foreclosed. On the 28th day of September, 1890, defendant ousted plaintiffs, and has since unlawfully withheld said premises from plaintiffs. The value of the use and occupation is found to be $780, for which amount judgment was rendered, after deducting $249 for the care and preservation of the property and for taxes. Whether there was error in making the deductions is not a question here, for the plaintiffs have not appealed.

In effect, although not expressly, the court finds that the defendant is a naked trespasser, without right or title to any extent in the demanded premises. The evidence was ample to support the finding that the deed to Lynch was a mortgage. It is contended that the court had no jurisdiction to determine that the deed from Mrs. McGuire was a mortgage, rather than a conveyance, because Mrs. McGuire had ceased to be a party to the action. If the question was material to the issues made between plaintiffs and defendant, so far the court was bound to determine the matter. As to the statute of limitations, the court did not find that issue in favor of defendant, nor did the court find that the right of Annie McGuire was barred by defendant's adverse possession. Nor, indeed, does the evidence show that her right was barred by the statute. She testified that when defendant demanded possession of the premises she told him she would give him possession, that he might pay the debt due him from the rents. That being so, his possession was not adverse, and the statute did not begin to run.

The bill of exceptions is a mere skeleton statement. Many documents are referred to as introduced, and it is said, "Here insert plaintiffs' exhibit," etc., but the documents do not appear in the bill of exceptions. We can only conclude, therefore, that they are exactly as stated in the findings. It is found that the whole of the estate of Patrick McGuire was by the probate court "assigned to said widow and minor children for their use and support, and declared to be the property of said widow and minor children under and by virtue of the provisions of section 1469 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California." That section, as it then read, does not expressly state to whom the estate shall be assigned, but simply that it shall be assigned for the use and support of the widow and minor children. The preceding section, however, which is in the same chapter, provides that "when property is set apart to the use of the family under the provisions of this chapter, * * * if the decedent also left a minor child, or children, the one-half of such property shall belong to the widow or surviving husband, and the remainder to the child, or in equal shares to the children if there be more than one." In the absence of special provision in section 1469, this must control.

The children, therefore, were properly held to be entitled to an undivided one-half of the demanded property. The deed to defendant, being a mortgage, conveyed to defendant no interest in the property and no right of possession. Annie McGuire testified, in substance, that defendant was in possession as her tenant, but defendant denied this, and claimed to hold adversely. If he had admitted the tenancy, plaintiffs could only have recovered an undivided one-half. But the court found, according to his own testimony, that he was a mere trespasser. Plaintiffs, therefore, properly recovered possession of the entire property.

I see no plausibility, however, in the theory adopted by the court as to the rents. The widow was the owner of an undivided one-half, and was entitled to the use of one-half for her support. Indeed, there is much more force in the contention that, being bound for the support of her minor children, she can claim all of it, than that the children can do so. The defendant is still liable to a suit by her for her portion. The cause is therefore remanded, with directions to the superior court to modify the judgment by deducting one-half of the sum recovered for rents and profits, and as modified the judgment is affirmed.

(L. A. 557.)

CONTRADICTORY FINDINGS.

In an action under Pol. Code, §§ 2731, 2734, for the obstruction of a highway, the court found that a strip of land 66 feet in width, and of a certain length, as described in the complaint, was a public highway, that said strip was dedicated to the public as a public highway by a certain person, that said highway was of the uniform width of 40 feet, and that defendants obstructed said road as charged. The court failed to locate the 40-foot strip within the 66-foot strip. Held, that the findings were too contradictory to support a judgment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by Ambrose Compton, road commissioner, against W. W. Carr and others, for the obstruction of a highway. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Rolfe & Rolfe, for appellants. L. Gill, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. The plaintiff, as one of the supervisors of Riverside county, and road commissioner of his supervisorial district, brought this action against the defendants for the obstruction of an alleged public highway within his road district. The action is brought under the provisions of the Political Code: "If any highway duly laid out or erected is encroached upon by fences, buildings or otherwise, the road overseer of the district may, orally or in writing, require the encroachment to be removed from the highway." Section 2731. "If the encroachment is denied, and the owner, occupant, or person controlling the matter or thing charged with being an encroachment refuses to remove or permit the removal thereof, the road overseer must commence, in the proper court, an action to abate the same as a nuisance; and if he recovers judgment he may, in addition to having the same abated, recover ten dollars for every day such nuisance remained after notice, also costs in said action." Section 2734. Defendants in their answer did not deny the encroachment,—that is, erecting the fence alleged to be on the highway,—but denied that the alleged highway was a public highway, or ever dedicated as such. The complaint, as amended, described by courses and distances a strip 33 feet wide on each side of the common line dividing lots 2 and 3 in the Arthur Parks tract in West Riverside (the said strip being, in all, 1 chain, or 66 feet, in width, by 22.68 chains in length), and alleges that this strip is, and for many years has been, a duly laid out, constructed, and established public highway. The court finds that the said strip (giving the same description as in the complaint) is and has been a public highway, and has been used as such without interruption for about 15 years, and has been practically the principal road in a northerly and southerly direction in the locality in which said road is situated, during all of said time; "that said strip of land was dedicated to the public as a public highway by one Arthur Parks, Sr., many years ago, who at the time of said dedication was the owner of the tract of land through which said road passes; that said highway is of the uniform width of forty feet." The court further finds that the defendants obstructed said road as charged, and, as a conclusion of law, that the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment to have the obstruction removed, and for costs. The judgment entered upon the findings, after the preliminary recitals, reads: "Wherefore, by reason of the law and the findings aforesaid, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff, Ambrose Compton, as road commissioner of the First supervisorial road district of the county of Riverside, do have and recover judgment as follows: First. That that certain highway in the county of Riverside described as follows is, and for many years has been, a public highway. [Then follows the same description, by courses and distances, contained in the amended complaint and in the findings; being the strip 1 chain, or 66 feet, in width.] Second. That said highway is of the uniform width of forty (40) feet," and that the obstructions were placed across the same as charged, and that the same be removed, together with plaintiff's costs. Defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants: First, that the findings are contradictory and inconsistent with each other in material matters; second, that the evidence does not support the finding that there was or is a public highway.

The court found, as shown, that there was a public highway 1 chain, or 66 feet, in width; describing the same by metes and bounds. Owing to the nature of the testimony, or for some other reason, the court also finds that the dedicated road is only 40 feet wide; being the minimum width, fixed by law, of all public highways. Pol. Code, § 2620. The court, however, failed to locate the dedicated strip limited to 40 feet, and that remains, as it were, afloat. It may be located in the center of the wider strip (that is, 20 feet on each side of the line dividing the lots of the defendants), or all on one side of said exterior strip, to wit, 33 feet on one side of the dividing line and 7 feet on the other. It is quite impossible to reconcile these contradictory and conflicting findings so as to support the judgment, and for that reason, without considering the other point raised by the appellants, the cause will have to be remanded. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

CALKINS et ux. v. EQUITABLE BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N OF THE UNITED STATES (YEOMANS, Intervener. L. A. 628).¹

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 2, 1899.)
GIFTS INTER VIVOS—CORPORATE STOCK—INDORSEMENT OF CERTIFICATES.

An indorsement transferring stock was made on the certificates, reserving dividends during the life of the donor. The certificates were placed in an envelope, and delivered to the donee, with instruction not to open it until the death of the donor, the intention being to make a gift. Held, that there was an executed gift, in the lifetime of the donor, of the stock, except the dividends reserved, within Civ. Code, § 324, making stock personalty, and providing for its transfer, by indorsement and delivery of the certificates, between the parties thereto.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Suit by F. G. Calkins and wife against the Equitable Building & Loan Association of the United States. Robert Yeomans, as executor of the will of Daniel Calkins, deceased, intervened. There was a decree for plaintiffs, and defendant and intervener appealed. Affirmed.

Flint & Barker, for appellants. F. M. Porter and J. W. Swanwick, for respondents.

GRAY, C. This action was brought for the purpose of obtaining the mandatory decree of the superior court directing the defendant corporation to transfer certain certificates of stock on its books, and issue new certificates to plaintiffs in place of those which the complaint alleges had been heretofore issued to one Daniel Calkins, and by him assigned to these plaintiffs. Daniel Calkins having died subsequently to the said assignment, Robert Yeomans intervened as the executor of the last will of said Daniel Calkins, and claimed that the said assignment was void, and that the said shares of stock were a part of the estate of said deceased. The plaintiffs had judgment in accordance with the prayer of their complaint, and from this judgment and an order denying a new trial the defendant and the intervener appealed. The cause was tried without a jury, and the court found on the question of the transfer as follows: "That the transfer of said stock from Daniel Calkins to plaintiffs was voluntarily made by said Daniel Calkins, upon the consideration of love and affection which said Daniel Calkins bore to them, and not otherwise; that said Daniel Calkins did not intend to make a testamentary disposition of said stock to plaintiffs; that said Daniel Calkins did intend to transfer and deliver the same to plaintiffs upon the 30th day of December, 1896; * * * that thereupon, upon said date, said Daniel Calkins delivered said certificates of stock to plaintiff F. G. Calkins; that said certificates have been in the possession of plaintiffs ever since said date in their own right, and not as custodians of the papers of said Daniel Calkins."

It is contended by appellants that the evidence does not support the findings, and that the findings do not sustain the judgment of the court. The only question presented in the briefs of counsel relates to the validity of the assignment of the said certificates of stock. The testimony of the plaintiff F. G. Calkins, as it appears in the transcript, is as follows: "I am one of the plaintiffs in the case, and a nephew of Daniel Calkins, deceased. On the 30th day of December, 1896, said Daniel Calkins called at my office, in the city of Los Angeles, and, stating to me that he thought a great deal of my wife and myself, and desired in some way to remember us, produced the two certificates of stock mentioned and described in the complaint of plaintiffs herein. He said that he desired to have the stock transferred to us in such a way as to enable him to retain the dividends thereon while he lived. As this condition in the transfer of stock was unusual, he suggested that I have the assignment drawn up by an attorney. Accordingly I took the certificates of stock which he handed me to the office of Mr. F. M. Porter, an attorney, and explained the matter to him, whereupon the following indorsement was written upon the certificates, and each of them, to wit: 'For value received, I hereby sell, assign, transfer, and set over to F. G. Calkins and Rosamond A. Calkins the shares of stock within mentioned, reserving to myself the dividends declared upon the same during my life, and authorize the secretary of said association to enter such transfer on the books of said association. Witness my hand and seal this 30th day of December, 1896.' I returned with the certificates of stock to my office, the assignment as indorsed on the certificates was read over to Daniel Calkins, and was satisfactory to him. (He had not accompanied me to the office of the attorney.) He thereupon signed his name to the said indorsement, and his signature was witnessed by the two witnesses whose names are indorsed on the certificates as witnesses. He then placed the certificates of stock in an envelope, and handed the same to me. I suggested it,—that we put it in an envelope. After handing the stock to me, he suggested that, if it was agreeable to us, he would like part of the money to go to give my son Fred an education, or something to that effect. He also said that he did not want his people to know that he made the gift. Thereupon, partly at his dictation, I wrote upon the envelope containing the stock the following indorsement: 'Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 30, 1896. Dear Fred and Rose: In handing you this envelope I wish to make the following requests: That the envelope shall not be opened for one month after my death, and that you give to your son Fred one-third of the value therein, for his exclusive use. It is my desire that nobody but myself shall know the contents hereof.' He then signed his name to said writing. This envelope containing the stock was then left in my possession, and was by me placed in the safe in my office. Daniel Calkins had previously intrusted to me for safe-keeping certain valuable papers, which I kept in the same safe, but in a different compartment from that in which I placed the envelope containing the stock." On cross-examination the witness testified, in substance: "At the time the envelope was handed to me, and the indorsement written thereon, I did not notice that the envelope was unsealed. The day after the death of Daniel Calkins I noticed that fact, and thereupon sealed the envelope. This I did because Daniel Calkins really intended that it should be sealed, and I intended that it should. It was simply an oversight of mine that it was not sealed. It was agreed between us that it should be sealed. Within a week after the death of Daniel Calkins I opened the envelope, took the stock to the office of the Equitable Building and Loan Association, and asked to have it transferred on the books of the association to my name, and new certificates issued, which was refused. I never presented the stock for transfer during the lifetime of Daniel Calkins. There was no consideration paid for the stock. It was not a sale; it was a gift."

This testimony of plaintiff Calkins was corroborated in several particulars, and was not contradicted at all, and the court finds the several facts to which it relates in exact accord with said testimony. The question is, do the evidence and findings show a complete and executed gift of the stock in question by deceased, in his lifetime, to the plaintiffs? "A gift is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily and without consideration." Civ. Code, § 1146. "Whenever the capital stock of any corporation is divided into shares, and certificates therefor are issued, such shares of stock, except as hereinafter provided, are personal property, and may be transferred by indorsement by the signature of the proprietor, his agent, attorney or legal representative, and the delivery of the certificate; but such transfer is not valid, except as to the parties thereto, until the same is so entered upon the books of the corporation as to show the names of the parties by whom and to whom transferred, the number of the certificate, the number or designation of the shares, and the date of the transfer." Id. § 324. Everything necessary to a complete transfer of the stock, as between the parties, was found by the court to have been done by them in the lifetime of Daniel Calkins, and it is also found that these things were done with the intent to make a present transfer, and not with the intent to make a testamentary disposition. We think these findings are fully warranted by the evidence, and that the conclusion of the trial court that a valid transfer of the stock was effected is fully supported. Whether an actual gift and transfer of the stock was accomplished depended principally upon the intention of the alleged donor. The case of Ruiz v. Dow, 113 Cal. 490, 45 Pac. 867, is similar, in the principles involved, as well as in the facts considered, to the case now under consideration. The decision in that case we regard as sound, and an examination of it we think will show that it disposes effectually of every point of importance contained in appellant's brief in this case, and that no judgment other than the one entered in this case could have been rendered herein consistently with that decision. The fact that the donor reserved to himself the right to the dividends during his life did not affect the validity of the gift. The gift and transfer of the stock were accomplished by the written assignment and delivery of the stock with the intention to make a gift thereof to plaintiffs. The donor thereby gave up to plaintiffs the title and control of the stock, and he could not thereafter revoke the gift. The donees became the owners of the stock, and might have conveyed it away to a third party in the lifetime of the donor, subject to the reservation contained in the written assignment. Of course, the donor did not give away or pass title to the dividends which he had expressly reserved, but every other interest and right in the certificates and in the stock represented thereby passed to the donees. The cases of Zeller v. Jordan, 105 Cal. 143, 38 Pac. 640, and Hart v. Ketchum, 121 Cal. 426, 53 Pac. 931, and the other California cases relied on by appellant, differ materially as to their facts from the case now under consideration, and furnish no guide for this decision. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; BRITT, C.

PEOPLE v. PIGGOTT. (Cr. 556.)¹

CRIMINAL LAW—LARCENY—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF REQUESTS.

1. Under a statute declaring that an indictment must be so framed that a person of common understanding may know what is intended, an indictment charging that accused stole money from H., being the money and property of H., sufficiently charges the ownership of the money to have been in him at the time of the larceny.

2. An allegation of ownership by recital instead of by positive declaration in an indictment

3. Prosecuting witness was standing on the rear platform of a crowded car, when it was claimed that his pocket was picked of two purses, containing $30 and five $20 gold pieces, respectively. Such witness testified that he saw defendant's hand withdrawn from witness' pocket, and he thereupon grabbed him, and that he saw defendant pass some article to a co-defendant, whom he also grabbed. There was evidence that the co-defendant dropped the article passed to him on the car platform, where it was picked up, and found to be witness' $30 purse intact. On being searched, five $20 gold pieces were found concealed on defendant. Held, that the facts warranted a verdict of guilty.

4. Where prosecuting witness in a trial for larceny testified that, when defendant pulled his hand out of witness' pocket, he grabbed him, and, on seeing him pass something to a co-defendant, grabbed him also, and shouted to a friend, "They are robbing me," such statement was a part of the res gestæ, and hence admissible.

5. Where prosecuting witness, on being robbed, grabbed defendants, the testimony of a bystander to statements made by such prosecuting witness, while defendants were still in his grasp, was admissible, as spoken in the presence of defendants.

6. Where a purse claimed to have been stolen on a car was found on the car platform, it was admissible as part of the res gestæ in a prosecution for larceny.

7. Where it was shown that five $20 gold pieces were found in defendant's stockings a short time after the larceny, such coins were properly admitted in evidence, it appearing that coins of similar denomination and number had been stolen from prosecuting witness.

8. Where defendant testified that he had placed $100 in his stockings the morning of the larceny, and on cross-examination stated that he always carried his money there, it was not error for the prosecution in rebuttal to show that defendant was not in the habit of carrying money in his stockings, since defendant's evidence as to his habit of carrying money was material to the issue.

9. Where defendant testified that he had placed $100 in his stockings the morning of the larceny, and on cross-examination stated that he always carried his money there, testimony of police detectives that they had searched defendant many times, and had found money on his person but none in his stockings, though they had examined them, was proper in rebuttal, though by such evidence it incidentally appeared that defendant had been previously arrested.

10. Where defendant brought out, on cross-examination of witnesses, the fact that he had been previously arrested, the admission of other testimony, tending to show such arrests, was not prejudicial.

11. Where, in a prosecution for larceny, the state presented sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in rendering a verdict of guilty, it was not error to refuse defendant's request for an instruction that there was no evidence that defendant, and not another, either took or carried away money or other property from the person of the prosecuting witness, and without that evidence they could not find defendant guilty.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

John Piggott was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George D. Collins, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

He insists the indictment is fatally defective. It alleges: "The said John Piggott and Cal Childs, on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1899, at the said city and county of San Francisco, did * * * steal, take, and carry away from the person and immediate possession of Gregoire Henriouille one hundred and thirty dollars, gold coin of the United States, lawful money of the United States, * * * the same being the money and property of said Gregoire Henriouille; and two money purses, of the value of fifty cents each in lawful money of the United States, said purses being the personal property of said Gregoire Henriouille." It is now insisted that there is no allegation in the pleading alleging the money stolen to have been the property of Henriouille at the time it was stolen. It will be observed that the indictment says, "being the money and property of said Gregoire Henriouille." It is now claimed that the word "being" refers to the time of the filing of the indictment, and not to the time of the commission of the larceny, and therefore the allegation is that the money and property was the money and property of Henriouille at the time of the filing of the indictment, and this would be the allegation of a fact of no materiality to the legal sufficiency of the pleading. Some ancient English authority is cited to support the contention here disclosed, but, even conceding the soundness of the reasoning upon which the conclusion is rested in those cases, still in this day, under the code procedure, we are satisfied such a holding would be sticking in the bark. Our statute says that the indictment must be so framed that a person of common understanding may know what is intended. While this pleading would have been better if the words "then and there" had been inserted before the word "being," still we are satisfied that their absence does not render it void. Any person, even of the commonest understanding, would know from the allegations here stated that he was charged with stealing the money and property of Henriouille, and that it was Henriouille's money and property at the time it was stolen. If he is charged with stealing Henriouille's money and property, it certainly must have been his at the time it was stolen. This is the only reasonable and fair construction of the pleading. It is not possible that the defendant could have been misled by these allegations. He understood them perfectly well, and must have understood that it was Henriouille's money and property that he was charged with having stolen. In the reports of this state we find many indictments and informations for larceny framed in this respect as the one at bar, and, while their legal sufficiency has been attacked upon many grounds, they have been upheld. The particular objection here presented possibly has never been raised, presumably, we think, because it has never been deemed of substantial merit. But, however that may be, we are convinced the defect in this pleading does not go to its substance, and therefore hold that the point made is not well taken.

The remaining objection to the indictment goes to the effect that the allegation of ownership is not made by positive declaration, but is a mere matter of recital. There is no great substance in this objection. Such style of pleading is not the best and is not favored. At the same time, it has been held sufficient by this court, and in various cases declared ample upon which to support a verdict and judgment.

The prosecuting witness was standing upon the rear platform of a crowded electric car, when it is claimed that his pocket was picked of two purses, containing $30 and $100, respectively. At the very moment that he claims to have been robbed he grasped the defendant Piggott, and immediately thereafter also grasped the co-defendant, Childs, they being in his immediate presence at the time. He testified at the trial that he felt a hand withdrawn from his pocket; that he saw it was Piggott's hand, and thereupon he took hold of him. He further testified that about the same time he saw Piggott pass some article to his co-defendant, Childs. There was other evidence to the effect that the co-defendant dropped the article passed to him by Piggott upon the car platform, and it, having been picked up, was found to be the purse of the prosecuting witness containing the $30. Upon being searched at the city prison, five $20 gold pieces were found concealed in the stockings of defendant. The remaining purse of the prosecuting witness contained five $20 gold pieces. The evidence is reasonably certain that both purses, with the money contained therein, were taken from the pocket of the prosecuting witness. This recital of evidence is made as indicating defendant's guilt, and we are clear that it is ample to support the verdict. It may be conceded that other evidence was offered tending to contradict, explain away, and neutralize the evidence contained in the foregoing recital; but the credibility and sufficiency of all of this evidence was essentially a matter for the jury to pass upon, and not a matter for this court.

The prosecuting witness, referring to defendant, testified: "When he pulled his hand out of my pocket, I grabbed him. That was the defendant Piggott's hand. I saw him then pass something to the other man, and I grabbed them two,—the two of them. I grabbed the other fellow, too, and I hallooed out to my friend, 'They are robbing me!'" This friend, the witness Flinn, testified that Henriouille said: "These two men robbed him." Those statements of Henriouille were admitted in evidence under objection, and error in such ruling is now insisted upon. The first statement is clearly part of the res gestæ. If the other statement was one different from the first, it was made in the immediate presence and hearing of the defendant, and for that reason was admissible. It is idle to contend that the record does not disclose it to have been made in his immediate presence and hearing, for the record does disclose that at the time the statement was made the prosecuting witness had the defendant in his grasp. Again, at this identical time it is testified to by defendant himself that "the prosecuting witness told me I had his pocketbook, and I replied, 'How dare you insult me?' or 'I ain't got your pocketbook.'" Again, the prosecuting witness testified at the trial that the defendant was the man who stole his money; and in the face of this testimony it is impossible to see how his statement made at the time of the larceny, to the same effect, could possibly have injured defendant's case. There is no error in the ruling of the court upon this question demanding a new trial.

It was clearly proper to admit in evidence the purse containing $30 which was found upon the car platform. There is some evidence that defendant passed it to his co-defendant, and that the co-defendant dropped it upon the platform. Under any circumstances, it was the purse of Henriouille, declared by him to have been stolen, and therefore clearly admissible as part of the res gestæ. Again, the five $20 pieces found in defendant's stockings were admissible in evidence. One of the purses which was stolen contained five $20 pieces only, and the coincidence of finding five $20 pieces in defendant's stockings a very short time after the commission of the offense was a matter which might well be placed before the jury. Any objection made to the admission of these facts and of this money before the jury necessarily went to the weight of the evidence rather than to its competency.

Defendant testified that he placed the $100 in his stockings the morning of the larceny. Upon cross-examination, he was asked if he was in the habit of carrying his money in those places. He answered that he always did it. In rebuttal, the prosecution, under objection, introduced evidence tending to show that defendant was not in the habit of carrying money in his stockings. It is now insisted that this ruling of the trial court was erroneous, upon the ground that the cross-examination of the defendant as to this matter was collateral to the issue on trial, and that his evidence upon the point could not be attacked by other evidence. Defendant's declaration that he always carried his money in his stockings was not evidence as to a collateral matter. It was direct and material evidence upon an issue in the case. The prosecution would have been entitled to show, in the first instance, that it was not the practice of defendant to so carry his money. Such evidence would have strengthened their case. If this evidence could have been introduced in chief by the prosecution, it was not collateral to the issue of guilt or innocence.

The police detectives testified that they had searched the defendant many times, and had found money upon his person, but never had found any in his stockings, although they had examined them. This evidence tended to contradict the statements of defendant upon the foregoing point, and the fact that by such evidence it may have incidentally appeared to the jury that defendant had been previously arrested upon many occasions did not furnish ground for rejecting it. Possibly it was unfortunate for defendant that such evidence came before the jury, but it was his misfortune simply. Again, it appeared upon the cross-examination of these witnesses and others by defendant that previously to this affair he had been arrested 13 or 20 times upon criminal charges. For this reason the incidental reference to that unfortunate fact by other witnesses could not possibly have prejudiced his case.

Defendant's counsel complains of the action of the court in refusing his request to give various instructions to the jury. We see no merit in these contentions. As, for example, the following instruction was asked: "You are instructed there is no evidence in this case to justify the conclusion that defendant Piggott, and not somebody else, either took or carried away money or other property from the person of the prosecuting witness, and without that evidence you cannot find the defendant guilty." Considerable space in defendant's brief is devoted to an attempt to show that the refusal to give this instruction was error. When we consider that this instruction, in substance, told the jury to acquit the defendant, it may readily be seen why it was refused. In view of what we have already said, it certainly was properly refused. We see no substantial merit as to the claims made by defendant's counsel upon the refusal of the court to give the other instructions asked. We have carefully examined the charge given to the jury, and find no substantial error therein. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MOLINA. (Cr. 496.)

CRIMINAL LAW—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—APPEAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS.

1. It is not error for the district attorney to state in his opening argument that, in a former prosecution against defendant for an assault to commit murder, he consented to allow him to plead guilty of assault with a deadly weapon, "owing to the fact that it is sometimes very difficult, in these little troubles between that class of people, to have them come up and prosecute," where the fact of such plea of guilty and consent was proved.

2. A district attorney's argument, stating that the county had been free from crime for 15 years subsequent to 1877, and that it was unnecessary for him to say why crime exists in the community, or why arguments are being bandied back and forth in the state as to whether the jury system is a failure, is not so prejudicially erroneous as to justify a reversal of a conviction, where the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict, and the jury were instructed to disregard all matters outside the record.

3. It will be presumed that the jury were instructed to disregard statements of counsel outside the record, where such statements were made, and the record on appeal does not contain the instructions.

4. Where the evidence supports the verdict, and proper instructions were given, and no exceptions were taken to the admission of evidence, error in procedure must be plainly shown to have been prejudicial, to justify a reversal of the judgment or the order denying a new trial.

Temple, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Ysabel Molina was convicted of murder, and he appeals from the judgment and an order denying a motion for new trial. Affirmed.

J. W. Wiley and S. M. Reed, for appellant.
Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was charged by the information with having on the 2d day of December, 1897, willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought killed and murdered one A. Ramos in the county of Kern. He pleaded not guilty, and, after trial, was convicted by the jury of the offense charged, without recommendation. He made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and he was thereupon sentenced to be taken to the state's prison at San Quentin, and hanged by the neck until dead. This appeal is from the judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Defendant has not brought here the evidence, nor the instructions given to the jury. In his brief he states that there was evidence to sustain the verdict, and that the instructions contain no error justifying a reversal. The sole and only point on which it is claimed the judgment and order should be reversed is by reason of the remarks of the district attorney in his argument to the jury before the final submission of the cause. The defendant was charged in the information with a prior conviction in the superior court of Kern county on the 3d day of September, 1896, of the crime of an assault with a deadly weapon, and to the charge he pleaded not guilty. In his opening argument to the jury the district attorney said: "No longer ago, gentlemen, than the 3d day of September, 1896, as was shown by the judgment roll in the case of the people of the state of California against Molina (No. 394) in this court, this defendant was convicted, or pleaded guilty, rather, to the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, having been informed against upon a charge of assault to commit murder; the plea having been allowed to be entered by my consent for the lesser offense, owing to the fact that it is sometimes very difficult, in these little troubles that arise between that class of people, to have them come up and prosecute when it comes into a court of justice." The defendant excepted to the remarks, but made no motion to have them corrected, or the jury instructed to disregard them. It is now claimed that the remarks were prejudicial error. As the defendant had entered his plea of not guilty to the charge of a prior conviction, it became necessary for the district attorney to introduce proof in support of such charge, or abandon it. He did accordingly introduce the judgment roll of such prior conviction, showing the facts as stated, and showing the fact that by consent of the district attorney the defendant was allowed to plead guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon, after having been informed against upon a charge of assault with intent to commit murder. The remarks of the district attorney were therefore in accordance with the evidence, and were pertinent to an issue before the jury.

In his closing argument to the jury, the district attorney said: "I will now say again, and say it for a fact: From the period of 1877, for fifteen years, nearly, in Kern county, Kern county had a cessation of crime, practically. The laws were obeyed, and the laws were enforced. But I tell you, gentlemen, it does not need me to tell you why those things exist in any portion of the community. It does not need me to tell you of arguments being bandied back and forth in the state, from one end of the state to the other, as to whether the jury system is a failure or not." The defendant excepted to these remarks, but made no motion to have them corrected, or the jury instructed to disregard them. The instructions are not in the record, and we must presume that the court correctly instructed the jury, and that they were told to disregard all matters and statements outside the record. In a case where the evidence supports the verdict, and where the court properly instructs the jury, and where no exceptions are taken to the admission of evidence, error in procedure would have to appear to us plainly to have been prejudicial, before we would feel justified in reversing the judgment or the order denying a new trial. The rule is well settled that it is error sufficient to reverse a judgment for counsel, against objection, to state facts pertinent to the issue, and not in evidence, or to assume in argument to the jury such facts to be in the case, when they are not. People v. Mitchell, 62 Cal. 412, and cases cited. In this case, even with no evidence in the record, where the life of a fellow creature is at stake, we would have no hesitation in reversing the case if the remarks were erroneous when measured by the above rule, but they are not. There is no statement of any fact, pertinent to the issue, not in evidence. There is no charge against the character of defendant or his good name. There is no charge that he has been guilty of any offense or offenses other than charged in the information. The district attorney may have drawn upon his imagination as to the cessation of crime in Kern county after 1877, and as to the jury system being claimed by many to be a failure, but we cannot see how the remarks could have injured the defendant. The matters spoken of were probably as well known to the jury as to the district attorney before he made the statement. It does not appear to us whether they were in the record or not. In the leading case of Tucker v. Henniker, 41 N. H. 323, it is said: "The right of discussing the merits of the cause, both as to the law and facts, is unabridged. The range of discussion is wide. He may be heard in argument upon every question of law. In his addresses to the jury, it is his privilege to descant upon the facts proved or admitted in the pleadings; to arraign the conduct of parties; impugn, excuse, justify, or condemn motives, as far as they are developed in the evidence; assail the credibility of witnesses, when it is impeached by direct evidence, or by the inconsistency or incoherence of their testimony, their manner of testifying, their appearance on the stand, or by circumstances. His illustrations may be as various as the resources of his genius; his argumentation as full and profound as his learning can make it; and he may, if he will, give play to his wit, or wings to his imagination." In 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 975a, it is said: "Matters of common knowledge—being things not special to the case in hearing—may, like the language itself, be parcel of the woven argument which the advocate lays before the jury. Thus, historical facts may be referred to, and it was not improper for counsel to draw an illustration from the Guiteau Case. It may be stated that crime is on the increase; hence, that juries should do their duty. Well-known riots may be cited as resulting from a lax administration of justice." In accordance with the rule above laid down, it was held not to be error, where during the argument the district attorney addressed the defendant personally, advanced towards him, and pointed his finger at him, saying: "You sought this trouble with him [referring to the prosecuting witness], and made a cowardly attack upon him." People v. Wheeler, 65 Cal. 77, 2 Pac. 892. So, where in the closing argument the district attorney challenged the attorney for defendant to explain the facts and circumstances of the case upon any other hypothesis except that of guilt, and said, "There is no theory on the face of the earth, the possession of all this property, and trying to escape from these officers, that he can advance or has advanced," it was held that the remarks had reference to the testimony and inferences to be drawn therefrom, and that the remarks were proper. People v. Hall, 94 Cal. 599, 30 Pac. 7. In this case the record is entirely silent as to what action the court took in regard to the remarks, and as to any instructions to the jury in regard to them. If the remarks were objectionable, and the record fails to show whether or not the court corrected the statement, it will be presumed here that the statements were corrected, and the jury instructed to disregard them. Fredericks v. Judah, 73 Cal. 604, 15 Pac. 305. The judgment and order are affirmed.

MACKENZIE v. HODGKIN. (S. F. 903.)
HODGKIN v. WILLIAMS et al.¹

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 8, 1899.)

PLEADING—CROSS COMPLAINT—PARTIES—REVIEW—EVIDENCE—NEWSPAPER MARKET REPORTS—FACTORS—SALE—FACTORS' DILIGENCE.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 442, permitting a defendant seeking affirmative relief against a party, relating to the transaction sued on, to file a cross complaint with his answer, one sued by an assignee of factors' claim for advancements exceeding the value of property consigned to them for sale by defendant was entitled to file a cross complaint against such factors for breach of their contract.

2. Where, in an action by an assignee of factors' claim for excess advancements, defendant claimed damages for breach of the factors' contract, such factors may be made parties to the suit; they being necessary to a complete determination of the controversy.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 442, provides that a defendant's cross complaint, asking affirmative relief relating to the transaction sued on, must be served on the parties affected thereby. Held that, where none of the rights of one of the parties were prejudiced by defendant's omission to serve a copy of a cross complaint on him, such failure was not ground for reversal.

4. Where factors contracted to sell raisins according to a schedule of prices of a fruit-growers' association, and sold below the schedule without defendant's consent, error in admitting a newspaper report of such prices, under objection that it was not the best evidence, in an action for the factors' breach of contract, was cured by subsequent evidence, unobjected to, that such prices were the prices fixed by the association.

5. Where factors agreed to sell raisins consigned to them, and use their best ability to obtain the highest market price, and not to sell below the price fixed by a fruit-growers' association at the place where the raisins were to be delivered, without consulting their principal, evidence of the prevailing prices of raisins at such place was admissible on the question of the factors' diligence in making sales, though the raisins were in fact sold in other markets, since by the agreement the factors were not required to sell in any particular market.

6. Where defendant executed a written contract to cure and deliver all his raisins to certain factors for sale on commission, and he delivered to them all his raisins, including a lot of dipped raisins, called "Valencias," he cannot thereafter claim that such raisins were delivered under the factors' subsequent parol contract to purchase such raisins, in the absence of evidence that the factors ever paid anything on such alleged purchase, under Civ. Code, § 1698, permitting evidence of a subsequent executed parol agreement to vary a written contract, since defendant was bound by the written contract to deliver such raisins, and the subsequent oral agreement, if made, was wholly executory.

7. Where factors agreed not to sell raisins below prices fixed by a fruit-growers' association, without defendant's consent, and two months after the contract was made the association abandoned its schedule of prices, and did not fix further prices, the factors were not thereby entitled to sell for less than the association's prices at the time of the contract, without defendant's consent.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by one Mackenzie against one Hodgkin, in which said Hodgkin filed a cross complaint against Williams, Brown & Co. From a judgment for defendant, Williams, Brown & Co. appeal. Reversed.

L. L. Cory, for appellants. H. H. Welsh and Frank H. Short, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Williams and others were partners, under the firm name of Williams, Brown & Co., in the business of commission merchants at the city of Fresno, in this state. On August 31, 1893, they made a contract in writing with Hodgkin, whereby the latter agreed to pick, cure, and deliver to them at Fresno all the grapes and raisins to be produced that season on a certain vineyard in that vicinity owned by him (said Hodgkin), and Williams, Brown & Co., on their part, agreed to pack all the raisins so delivered, and sell the same for Hodgkin; they to charge specified rates of compensation for their services, and to make certain advances of cash to him on delivery of the crop at their packing house. At various times from September 29 to November 22, 1893, inclusive, Hodgkin delivered to said Williams, Brown & Co. at Fresno above 460,000 pounds of raisins. They made advances to him on account thereof to an amount which proved to be greater than the proceeds of sales of the entire crop, by the sum of $2,665.75. They assigned their demand for such balance to Mackenzie, who was a bookkeeper in their employ, and he brought this action to recover the same from Hodgkin. The complaint is virtually a count for money loaned to Hodgkin by plaintiff's assignors. The defendant answered such complaint, and also filed a cross complaint, not against Mackenzie, the plaintiff, but against said Williams, Brown & Co. In both the answer and the cross complaint he set up in various forms his transactions with Williams, Brown & Co. concerning the marketing and sale of his said crop, and alleged sundry derelictions in that behalf against them, as the result whereof he prayed in his answer that plaintiff take nothing, and in his cross complaint for judgment against Williams, Brown & Co. for the sum of $5,555.92 above the amount of their advances to him. In each count of the cross complaint, as also in the answer, it is alleged that the assignment on which plaintiff sues was made to him by his employers without consideration, and merely for the purpose of qualifying him to sue on their demand; that his cause of action arose out of the contract of defendant with Williams, Brown & Co. relating to said crop of raisins, and the delivery, sale, and disposition thereof. The cross complaint was not served on the plaintiff, nor did he answer.

thereto. It was, however, answered by Williams, Brown & Co. The trial was by jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment that plaintiff take nothing, and that Hodgkin recover of Williams, Brown & Co. the sum of $100.

1. Appellants argue that the court erred in allowing the cross complaint to be filed. "Whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought, * * * he may, in addition to his answer, file * * * a cross-complaint." Code Civ. Proc. § 442. It is said that the cross complaint here proceeds on a cause of action independent of, and not germane to, the matters alleged in the complaint of plaintiff. This objection is clearly unfounded. The plaintiff sues to recover money loaned. Defendant admits that he had the money of plaintiff's assignors, but avers, in effect, that he received it as part performance of their contract with him, and that they are liable to him for failure to perform the same fully. These averments, if proved, show that the relief sought by defendant "relates to or depends upon the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought," within the meaning of that language in the statute above quoted. The further objection that Williams, Brown & Co. could not properly be made parties defendant in the cross complaint, because they were not originally parties to the action, is also untenable. A complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without bringing in parties to the contract or transaction who have not been named as parties to the action in the original complaint. Winter v. McMillan, 87 Cal. 256, 25 Pac. 407; City of Eureka v. Gates, 120 Cal. 54, 52 Pac. 125; Water Co. v. Raynor, 57 Cal. 592, 593; Chalmers v. Trent, 11 Utah, 88, 39 Pac. 488, and cases cited. It is also contended that the omission to serve the cross complaint on Mackenzie, the plaintiff, was a fatal irregularity. It was, no doubt, negligent practice. Said section 442 provides that the cross complaint "must be served on the parties affected thereby." But in this instance no right of the plaintiff has been at all prejudiced by such omission, and the judgment cannot be reversed because of it. For all the matters of substance charged in the cross complaint were pleaded affirmatively in defendants' answer, which was served on the plaintiff, so that the latter met in the prosecution of his own action every issue which would have been tendered to him had he been served also with the cross complaint; and, further, it was proved at the trial, by his own testimony, and without conflict, that plaintiff took by the assignment no interest beneficial to himself in the demand he sued on, and that, if he had recovered, the whole proceeds of his recovery would have been paid to Williams, Brown & Co., who made full defense against the defendant's alleged cause of action.

2. In the contract of August 31, 1893, Williams, Brown & Co. promised that they would not sell the raisins "below prices named by the association," without consulting Hodgkin; and one of the breaches alleged in the cross complaint is that they did sell at prices less than those "named by the association," without consulting him or obtaining his consent. There was evidence at the trial that the prices so referred to in the contract were a list agreed upon by a number of raisin growers and packers at a meeting held by them on August 22, 1893, as the prices at which raisins were to be held for sale that season. In order to show the schedule so established, defendant offered in evidence printed matter purporting to be a copy thereof in a certain newspaper published at Fresno on August 23, 1893; and, in connection with the offer, Hodgkin testified that the parties to the contract had such published prices in mind when they signed the instrument of August 31st. Plaintiff and Williams, Brown & Co. objected that the newspaper report was not the best evidence, and the objection was overruled. If there was any error in this,—which we do not decide,—it was cured by evidence, subsequently admitted without objection and without contradiction, that the prices of raisins shown in the publication received in evidence were the said prices fixed by the association on August 22d.

3. By another clause of the contract, Williams, Brown & Co. agreed that they would endeavor, to the best of their ability, to obtain the highest market price for defendant's raisins; and in one count of the cross complaint they are charged with negligence in the performance of this covenant, whereby, it is claimed, they failed to obtain the full value of the goods. Upon the questions thus arising the defendant was permitted to introduce evidence of the market price of raisins at Fresno during the months of October and November, 1893, the period of the delivery of defendant's product to Williams, Brown & Co. Appellants contend that evidence of this nature should have been confined to the market value of the raisins at points in the Eastern states where they were actually sold by Williams, Brown & Co. They rely on the decision in Pugh v. Porter Bros. Co., 118 Cal. 628, 50 Pac. 772, to support this point. We think, however, the present case is materially different. In the case cited it appeared that the goods were delivered to the commission merchant for the purpose of shipment from the place of delivery, and to be sold in a foreign market. Accordingly it was held that the factor's duty was to obtain the value in the foreign market, and that evidence of the state of the market at the place where he received the goods was inadmissible. But here it does not appear that the raisins were necessarily to be sent away from Fresno for purposes of sale. The contract was prefaced with a recital that Williams, Brown & Co. are "engaged, among other things, in the packing and selling of raisins in the city of Fresno." They agreed that they would "endeavor to obtain the highest market price for the grade of goods sold, and in every way endeavor to realize upon all goods sold at the earliest moment, and for the highest price." They further promised, as has been seen, that they would not sell "below prices named by the association," without consulting defendant; the association was a body local to this state, and not shown to have had any influence in determining prices at the East. From these provisions of the contract, and others not necessary to state, we think Williams, Brown & Co. were at liberty to sell defendant's raisins at Fresno or elsewhere. Consequently, on the question whether they used reasonable diligence to obtain the best market prices, it was as pertinent to show what prices prevailed at Fresno as in any other readily accessible market. Of course, this is not saying that they were negligent in not selling at Fresno. On the contrary, it may have been that the usual course of business, or other condition affecting their conduct, was such that ordinary prudence allowed or required them to ship the raisins to the East. That matter is not for decision now.

4. In the fifth count of the cross complaint, defendant alleged that he sold and delivered to Williams, Brown & Co. "eighty-six thousand eight hundred and forty-four pounds of Valencia raisins," at the price of three and one-half cents per pound, and that they yet owe him for the same a balance of \$1,243.03. At the trial these allegations were strongly contested. Defendant was allowed to testify that about October 1, 1893, Williams, Brown & Co. agreed with him orally to buy the said Valencia raisins at the price alleged; appellants objecting that the effect of the evidence is to vary by parol the terms of the written contract of August 31st. At the outset of his testimony, defendant stated that "under the contract"—referring to the instrument of August 31st—he delivered to Williams, Brown & Co. all his raisins, including the Valencias; and although, when he came to testify concerning the alleged oral agreement of October 1st, he said that the "written contract referred to ordinary raisins; the oral one to dipped raisins, called 'Valencias,'"—yet it is clear that the Valencia raisins were made from the grapes which were the subject of the writing. The instrument required defendant to cure and deliver to Williams, Brown & Co., on the terms stated therein, "all grapes and raisins" grown and produced during that season on his vineyard. Defendant stated, in effect, that he made and delivered the Valencia raisins to Williams, Brown & Co. on their oral promise to pay $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound for five carloads of them. His counsel argue that this is "an executed parol agreement," and therefore that evidence thereof is admissible to alter the previous writing. Civ. Code, § 1698. We do not think so. We find no evidence that Williams, Brown & Co. ever paid anything as on a purchase by them of the Valencias; and, as concerns Hodgkin, so far as appears, he did nothing under the alleged oral agreement which he was not bound to do in the proper fulfillment of the written contract. There was no evidence that curing raisins by the Valencia process, and delivering the same when cured, was not the due and reasonable performance of his prior written promise to "cure and deliver" his entire crop. Obviously, the executed oral agreement, which may be proved for the purpose of altering a previous written contract, must consist in the doing or the suffering of something not required to be done or suffered by the terms of the writing. See Civ. Code, §§ 1661, 1595, 1605; Pol. Cont. pp. 161, 162; Vanderbilt v. Schreyer, 91 N. Y. 392. True, the defendant here testified that he sold the Valencia raisins, but the alleged sale rests in mere spoken words, which in themselves could not be allowed to alter the writing. His acts towards the execution of any contract were only such, so far as proved, as the original agreement required him to perform. A written instrument would afford but slight protection to the parties in such cases, if it could be varied in this manner. A bailment could be converted into a sale, or a sale into a bailment, according as the interests of either party, after delivery of the goods, might lead him to the belief, real or feigned, that the delivery had not been pursuant to the original writing, but under a subsequent oral arrangement.

5. There was evidence that about October 1, 1893, the said association of growers and packers abandoned their agreed schedule of prices, the members selling thereafter at what rates they pleased; and appellants requested the court to charge the jury that if, before any sale of defendant's raisins by Williams, Brown & Co., the prices had been changed by the association, and the association had no fixed prices at the time of any of such sales, then Williams, Brown & Co. were "relieved from any obligation to sell for any association prices which were fixed at the time of the entering into the contract." The instruction was rightly refused. If the association had, in the course of the season, fixed prices different from those first agreed on, it may be that such modification should have been read into the clause of the contract referred to in the instruction. But no other prices were subsequently fixed. The members of the association simply abandoned the rates first agreed on, and we think their action in that particular did not release Williams, Brown & Co. from their promise to obtain the rates which had been fixed, or, as the alternative, to consult defendant before accepting lower prices. The collapse of the association would seem to furnish a reason why defendant should have desired to be consulted regarding prices of subsequent sales, for the natural tendency of that event was to increase the degree of caution necessary to be exercised by individual sellers. There is in the record, moreover, evidence tending in some measure to show that Williams, Brown & Co. did not regard this clause of the contract as nullified by the failure of the association to maintain the agreed prices. Thus, on October 26, 1893, they wrote to Hodgkin, saying that up to that time they had "had no difficulty whatsoever in getting the prices fixed by the combination"; and as late as April, 1894, they wrote to him, inquiring whether they should accept a specified offer for certain of his raisins they had then in New York,—an offer apparently less than the original association price.

No material error is brought to our attention, except the admission of evidence touching the alleged sale of Valencia raisins to Williams, Brown & Co.; but because of that the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

GRANGER v. RICHARDS et al. (Sac. 515.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 10, 1899.)

APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

Appeal will be dismissed, it purporting to be from judgment entered after nonsuit as to some of the defendants, and no judgment appearing in the transcript, and the certificate to the judgment roll, which disclosed no judgment, reciting that the foregoing is a true copy of the order granting nonsuit, and that the foregoing papers constitute the judgment roll.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Action by Samuel Granger against W. G. Richards and others. There was a nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Dismissed.

A. D. Mason, for appellant. C. W. Kitts, J. M. Walling, and P. F. Simonds, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a purported appeal from the judgment entered after nonsuit granted in favor of certain of the defendants. The notice of appeal states that the appeal is taken from the judgment of nonsuit entered "on the first day of December, 1897, rendered on the 29th day of November, 1897," etc. But nowhere in the transcript does such or any judgment appear. Even the judgment roll as made up by the clerk discloses no judgment, although it is his duty to make up the judgment roll only after judgment entered. The clerk's certificate to the judgment roll is to the effect that he certifies "the foregoing to be a true copy of the order granting motion for a nonsuit entered in the above-entitled action, and recorded in minute and order book 10 of said court at page 340; and I further certify that the foregoing papers hereto annexed constitute the judgment roll in said action." As this appeal can be prosecuted only from the judgment, and as it is not made to appear that any judgment has been given and entered in the action, it follows that this court is without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, and it is therefore dismissed.

WHITE v. HAYDEN. (L. A. 460.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 9, 1899.)
COUNTY SUPERVISORS—COMPENSATION AS ROAD COMMISSIONERS—DUTY OF AUDITOR.

1. There being no requirement that the board of county supervisors should designate the particular fund out of which a claim allowed and certified by it should be paid, such a designation by it will not affect any duty of the county auditor, under County Government Act, § 121, and Pol. Code, § 4223, to so designate.

2. A member of the county board of supervisors, who, as ex officio road commissioner, performs his duties within his road district, under the direction and supervision of the board, which, as a body, has general supervision of all the roads in the county (Pol. Code, §§ 2643, 2645), is in such respect a county officer, not a road-district officer, and performs services "required of him by law" as a county officer, and his compensation is a "salary" to be paid out of the county salary fund; County Government Act

March 24, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 346) § 216, providing the salaries and fees provided by the act shall be in full compensation for all services rendered by the officers named, as officers or "ex officio" officers; section 197 providing, in counties of the thirty-fifth class, the county officers shall receive as compensation "for the services required of them by law" certain amounts, "super-visors $6 per day for each day while in service of the county, and 30 cents per mile for traveling"; and other sections providing the compensation in other counties for services rendered as road commissioner; section 220 declaring that, for the purpose of paying the "salaries" provided for by the act, all fees directed to be paid into the county treasury shall be set apart as a separate fund, to be known as the "Salary Fund," to be applied to the payment of "said salaries"; section 221 providing the salaries of such officers named in the act as are entitled to salaries shall be paid monthly out of the county treasury on the warrant of the auditor, and the treasurer shall pay the warrants out of the salary fund; section 25, subd. 12, making it the duty of the board to examine and allow all legal claims against the county, "except salaries of officers," and order warrants to be drawn on the county treasurer therefor; and section 51 providing that all claims against the county presented by members of the board of supervisors for per diem or mileage, or other services rendered by them, must be itemized, and before allowance must be presented to the district attorney, who must indorse thereon his opinion as to their legality.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Action by John W. White against B. A. Hayden. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Cannon & Freeman and J. W. Ahern, for appellants. J. E. Patton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause and L. A. 461 (59 Pac. 1113), between the same parties, present the same question. Plaintiff is a member of the board of supervisors for Kern county. He rendered services as supervisor and ex officio road commissioner, for which he was allowed by the board the sum of $1,803.50, and on July 18, 1896, payment was ordered to be made out of the salary fund of the county, and a warrant was ordered drawn on the treasury for the amount. The auditor refused to draw his warrant, whereupon this action was brought to compel him to do so. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and judgment of dismissal entered. The appeal is from this judgment. Thereafter, to wit, on December 7, 1896, the board passed a resolution vacating so much of their order of allowance as required payment of the claim out of the salary fund, and ordered the same to be paid out of the road-district fund of the Fourth road district. This order was duly certified to the auditor and treasurer, and on December 8th plaintiff demanded of the auditor a warrant on the treasurer, which was refused, and thereupon the second action (L. A. No. 461) was brought to compel the auditor to draw his warrant. A general demurrer to the petition was sustained as before, and the appeal in that case is from the judgment. Respondent contends that the claim could not be paid out of the salary fund nor yet out of the road fund, and that the auditor could not designate the fund out of which it could be paid. It is hence claimed that it could not be paid at all.

Appellant contends (1) that the compensation of the road commissioner is a "salary," within the meaning of subdivision 20, § 25, of the county government acts of 1891 and 1893, and payable out of the salary fund; (2) if not, it is a charge against the road-district fund, and payable out of that fund; and, (3) if not payable out of either of these funds, it was the duty of the auditor to draw his warrant upon the proper fund. It is alleged that there was sufficient money in the treasury, and also in the designated funds, to pay the claim.

1. It is conceded that the claim was just and legal, and that it was duly allowed and certified. In all respects (leaving out of view for the moment the fact that the allowance designated the fund out of which the claim should be paid) it was a claim, coming to the auditor as it did, such as devolved upon him the duty to issue his warrant therefor. St. 1893, p. 484, § 197, subd. 16; St. 1891, p. 402; Ellis v. Tulare Co. (Cal.) 44 Pac. 575; McFarland v. McCowen, 98 Cal. 330, 33 Pac. 113; Sehorn v. Williams, 110 Cal. 621, 43 Pac. 8; Lamberson v. Jefferds, 116 Cal. 492, 48 Pac. 485.

2. It was held in Babcock v. Goodrich, 47 Cal. 509, where the order of the board did not specify the fund on which the warrant was drawn, that the statute (Pol. Code, § 4046) "did not impose on the supervisors the necessity of specifying in each order the fund on which the order is drawn. The auditor is sufficiently informed on what fund to draw when the order of the board specifies the liability for which it is drawn." The Code at present is substantially the same as when that case was decided, and there is now no requirement that the board should designate the particular fund out of which a claim is to be paid. It is not entirely clear that the law makes it the duty of the auditor to designate the fund out of which all warrants drawn by him are to be paid, or that the treasurer would be bound by the auditor's designation of the fund, although section 121 of the county government act, and section 4223, Pol. Code, would seem to imply that he should make the designation, and it is proper that he should do so. However this may be, if it be the auditor's duty to designate the fund, and as no such duty is imposed upon the board, we do not see that the auditor would be bound by the act of the board, but that it would rather be his duty to draw the warrant on the proper fund, whether the board had designated the fund or not. The board has performed its legal function when it has allowed and certified the claim, and if it has made a mistake in indicating the fund, or has gone beyond its powers to designate the fund, the duty of the auditor remains to draw his warrant as the law in the particular case would authorize.

3. It seems to us that the claim should be paid from the salary fund. Supervisors have been ex officio road commissioners since the Codes were adopted, if not before, but, as the section stood up to a recent date, they were to receive no compensation for services as commissioners. Pol. Code, § 2641. The supervisors were empowered to appoint road overseers for each road district, and if none were appointed the road commissioners, within their respective districts, were to perform the duties of road overseers. Id. §§ 2642, 2645. The road overseer when appointed was to be paid from money in the treasury belonging to his road district, but when the road commissioner performed the duties he received no pay except his pay as a supervisor. Sections 2641, 2645. The act of March 9, 1887 (St. 1887, p. 77), provided for the election of the road overseer, who was to perform his duties under the direction of the road commissioner (Pol. Code, § 2642). That act made no provision for the pay of the road overseer, nor did it prescribe his duties, but this was done by the act of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 339); and it was there provided that he should be paid from his road-district fund (Pol. Code, § 2645). By the act of March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 474), the office of road overseer was abolished from and after the Monday following the first Monday in 1893. By an amendment to section 2645, Pol. Code, the act devolved certain duties upon the road commissioner, "under the direction and pursuant to the orders of the board of supervisors," and declared what that compensation should be, as follows: "(5) When not otherwise provided by law, he shall receive for his services as such road commissioner twenty cents per mile one way, for all distances traveled by him in the performance of his duties: provided, that he shall not in any one year receive more than three hundred dollars." But the act did not provide from what fund this payment was to be made. This section was amended by act of March 9, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 113), omitting all its provisions after paragraph 3; and section 2641, Pol. Code, was amended as to the road commissioner by allowing him 20 cents per mile one way when traveling in the performance of his duties as road commissioner, not to exceed $300 in any one year. But so far as the compensation of the road commissioner is in this act provided for, the provision is superseded by the county government act of March 24, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 346). Section 216 provides: "The salaries and fees provided in this act shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers therein named, either as officers or ex officio officers, their deputies and assistants, unless in this act otherwise provided. * * *" Section 197 provides: "In counties of the thirty-fifth class [to which Kern county belongs] the county officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law the following salaries, to wit: * * * (16) Supervisors, six dollars per day for each day while in service of the county, and thirty cents per mile for traveling from residence to county seat." Other sections of the act fix different compensation in different counties for services rendered as road commissioner, and in still others making similar provision to that for Kern county. Subdivision 20, § 25, of the act gives the board the power "to establish a salary fund, and also such other county funds as they may deem necessary for the proper transaction of the business of the county, and to transfer moneys from one fund to another, as the public interest may require." Section 220 (St. 1893, p. 509) provides: "For the purpose of paying the salaries provided for in this act, all fees directed to be paid into the county treasury shall be set apart therein as a separate fund, to be known as the salary fund, to be applied to the payment of said salaries," and provides for a transfer of funds to this fund "as may be necessary to pay said salaries as they become due." The only difficulty in giving construction to the above provisions, as to the fund from which the road commissioner is to be paid, arises from the following section 221: "The salaries of such officers named in this act as are entitled to salaries shall be paid monthly out of the county treasury; and it shall be the duty of the auditor, on the first Monday of each and every month, to draw his warrant upon the county treasurer in favor of each of said officers for the amount of salary due him under the provisions of this act for the preceding month;" and the treasurer is directed to pay the warrants out of the salary fund. Now subdivision 12, § 25 (St. 1893, p. 353), makes it the duty of the board "to examine, settle and allow all accounts legally chargeable against the county, except salaries of officers, and order warrants to be drawn on the county treasurer therefor"; and section 51 (St. 1893, p. 365) provides: "All claims against the county presented by members of the board of supervisors for per diem or mileage, or other service rendered by them, must be itemized, * * * and before allowance must be presented to the district attorney, who must indorse thereon, in writing, his opinion as to the legality thereof," etc. It is urged by respondent that the word "salary," as used in the act, is used in a limited sense, and refers only to officers whose compensation is a sum fixed by law, which may be paid without being allowed by the board. In section 197 the compensation is denominated a "salary," but, in the nature of the case, the amount must be ascertained by the board, for it is variable, and the act, therefore, devolves upon the board the duty of ascertaining and allowing the amount before it can be paid. The compensation, however, is none the less salary because the board must ascertain its amount. We think it was the intention of the legislature, by section 220, to provide for the payment of all county officers out of the salary fund, and to include supervisors as county officers, whose compensation must first be determined by the board, as well as those officers whose compensation is definitely fixed by the act itself. The supervisor, in acting as road commissioner, is none the less a county officer, and his duties as such commissioner are performed by virtue of his office as supervisor. The board, as a body, has general supervision of all the roads in the county (Pol. Code, § 2643); and the road commissioner, although one of the board, acts as a supervisor under the direction and supervision of the board in its collective capacity (Id. § 2645). The road commissioner is not a road-district officer. He is a supervisor charged with duties relating to the road district, but his identity as supervisor is not lost or changed. We can find no authority for making his compensation a charge upon the road-district fund, while we do find, what seems reasonably clear, that the law contemplates that he should be paid out of the salary fund.

Whether the duties are performed in his legislative or judicial capacity, while sitting with the board or whether acting ex officio as road commissioner, he is performing duties devolved upon him by law as a supervisor. As he is a county officer, and as there is a salary fund created out of which county officers are to be paid, we see no reason why he should not be paid his entire compensation allowed by law as supervisor out of that fund. "Salary" and "wages" are synonymous. Both mean a sum of money periodically paid for services rendered (And. Law Dict.), and it is immaterial how the value of the services is ascertained. Much of this ground was traveled over in the case of Ellis v. Tulare Co. (Cal.) 44 Pac. 575, and the provisions of the county government act of 1891, which are similar to those above referred to in the act of 1893, were considered. The conclusion was there reached that, in a county of a class such as Kern, the supervisor, while acting as road commissioner, is performing services "required of him by law," and is entitled to the compensation which the statute provided a supervisor should receive in such case. The question as to the fund from which he should be paid did not there arise. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment solely because it is a necessary conclusion from the point decided in Ellis v. Tulare Co., 44 Pac. 575. That case was decided in department, but a petition for a rehearing in bank was denied, and the decision, therefore, became the decision of the whole court. I thought at the time, and still think, the statutory provisions relating to the compensation of supervisors, when acting as road commissioners, were misconstrued in that case, but when acting as a member of a department of the court I am bound by the decision of the court in bank.

HAMMOND et al. v. BORGWARDT et al.
(L. A. 579.)

ATTACHMENT—PROPERTY SUBJECT—OWNER—SHIP—PARTNERSHIP.

Attachment of a stock of goods as the property of H. is good, as against his parents, though he had previously executed to his wife a conveyance of an interest therein, there being no change in possession or management thereof, and though he testified that he located a mine in the name of himself, his father, and P., and that they traded the mine for the store business, and in making the trade were equal partners therein, and that he bought the interest of P.; there being no evidence that the father had anything to do with locating the mine or trading it for the business, or that he ever took any part in the business or knew anything thereof, and application of the word "partner" being a mere legal conclusion.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Action by Edmund Hammond, Sr., and another against H. L. Borgwardt, Jr., and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. Linkenback, for appellants. Bledsoe & Bledsoe and S. N. Reed, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover possession of 200 pairs of shoes seized by the defendants, as sheriff and deputy sheriff, as the property of Edmund Hammond, Jr. The court below granted judgment for defendants, and the plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

The shoes in question were part of a stock of goods in a store in which a mercantile business was carried on under the name of Hammond & Co., and the attachment was levied on the 21st day of June, 1897; and the court found that from the 10th day of December, 1896, until the said 21st day of June, the said Hammond, Jr., was the owner of, and in possession of, the store and the stock of goods, including those described in the complaint. It is contended by appellants that this finding was not warranted by the evidence, but the contention cannot be maintained.

As to the plaintiff Winnie Hammond, who is the wife of Edmund Hammond, Jr., the court found that on the 28th day of January, 1887, Hammond, Jr., executed to the plaintiff Winnie an instrument by which he purported to sell and convey to her an undivided two-thirds of certain land upon which the store stood, together with an undivided two-thirds of the stock of goods therein, and that on the 15th day of June, 1887, he executed to her another deed, by which he conveyed the interest above stated, and also the same interest in a wagon and certain horses, and in certain book accounts owing to the firm of Hammond & Co., but that there was no change of possession of any of said property, or any change in the management thereof; and this finding is amply sustained by the evidence.

As to the plaintiff Edmund Hammond, Sr., it is contended by appellants that the court should have found that he was at least a partner in the firm, and that therefore no particular part of the goods belonging to the firm could be taken on attachment as the property of Hammond, Jr., and that all that could have been attached as the property of Hammond, Jr., was his interest in all the property of the partnership. But the court was not called upon by the evidence to find that Hammond, Sr., was a partner, and it did not err in not so finding. The only evidence of any facts tending to show the partnership is to be found in the following testimony of Hammond, Jr., who is the son of Hammond, Sr., while on the witness stand: "I was in possession of a stock of goods, wares, and merchandise in Randsburg from some time in December, 1896, to January, 1897. I located a mining claim, known as the 'Winnie,' which location was made in the name of myself, my father, and a gentleman named Prosser. We traded the mine for the store, and in making the trade for the store we were all equal partners in the same,—each owning one-third. I bought Mr. Prosser out in December, 1896." If, in this testimony, the word "store" means merely the house in which the business was conducted, it has no significance in consideration of the question of partnership in the business. But, in any event, the mere use of the word "partners" by the witness would not be sufficient in this case to compel the court to find the fact of partnership. Partnership is a relation which grows out of a contract, either express or implied; and there is no evidence in this case that Hammond, Sr., ever entered into such a contract. There is no evidence that he ever had anything to do with the locating of the mine or the trading of it for the store, or that he ever took any part in the business that was conducted in the store, or that he ever knew of any of these things or took any part in them. He was never at the store, he always lived in another state, and there is no evidence that he was ever in the state of California. No evidence was introduced of any of his acts by which he showed any consent to be a member of this partnership, or by which he participated in it in any way. He made no appearance and cuts no figure in any of the transactions. His first appearance on the scene is when his name was used as a party plaintiff to this action. The business was conducted by Hammond, Jr., down to the time of the levy of the attachment. Considering all these facts, we think the court was warranted in not finding that Hammond, Sr., was a partner, although Hammond, Jr., and one other witness applied to him the word "partner," which is, at best, a mere legal conclusion.

With respect to appellants' technical objection to the sufficiency of the certificate of the justice of the peace to the judgment roll in the case in his court against Hammond, Jr., in which the attachment was issued, and to the proof of the writ under which the defendants acted, it is enough to say that we think such certificate and proof were sufficient. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BARBOUR et al. v. FLICK. (L. A. 580.)

DECEIT—DAMAGES—RECOURPMENT—PAROL EVIDENCE—FINDINGS—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

1. Finding that the property traded by defendant to plaintiffs would have been worth $30,000 if his representations had been true is not inconsistent with the admission of the answer that it would have been worth $48,000 if the representations alleged in the complaint had been true; one of these, that its market value was $48,000, not being found to have been made, and, if made, not being a representation of fact.

2. Plaintiffs, having tried the case on the theory that an issue as to value of property was raised, cannot for the first time on appeal contend that there was no such issue to try.

3. When, in an action for false representations as to land traded by defendant to plaintiffs, defendant seeks to recoup by showing that the land traded by plaintiffs was worth less than represented, and the court finds for both parties on their several contentions, plaintiffs are properly awarded the difference between the market value of the property traded to them and the market value of the land traded by them.

4. Where property standing in the name of the wife was traded for other property, title to which was taken in her name, it may, in an action by her and her husband for false representations in regard to the land received, be shown by parol that the wife held the legal titles for the joint use of both, and that he was an equal owner with her.

5. It is not an attempt to rescind in part a trade of land, where, in an action for false representations in regard thereto, plaintiffs ask that the note and mortgage given by them, in addition to their land, be canceled, as part of their recovery of damages.

6. Where a note given in exchange for land is decreed to be canceled for fraud, the party holding the same is not entitled to interest up to the time of cancellation.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by S. A. Barbour and another against Warren J. Flick. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Affirmed.

Puterbaugh & Puterbaugh, for plaintiffs. Patterson Sprigg and McDonald & McDonald, for defendant.

VAN DYKE, J. This action is based upon fraud and deceit alleged to have been perpetrated by the defendant in effecting an exchange of his property for that of the plaintiffs. In August, 1896, the plaintiffs were residents of, and owned property in, the city of Chicago; and the defendant owned a ranch known as the "Edgehill Ranch," located near Escondido, in San Diego county. The court below found that the false and fraudulent statements were made by the defendant as alleged in the plaintiffs' complaint, and that none of the representations and statements so made, either in writing, or by his agent in that behalf, were true; that said statements and representations were made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiffs to make the exchange of the properties upon the terms and conditions set forth and admitted in the pleadings, without personally examining said property of defendant, and were not given as opinions, or expressions of opinion, but, on the contrary, were made and given as existing facts, and that plaintiffs, without having an opportunity to examine said defendant's property, accepted them as such, and believed them to be true, and thereupon made the exchange of the properties, and executed and delivered their deed to the Chicago property, and their note and mortgage on such Edgehill ranch, as set forth and admitted in the pleadings; that the net market value of plaintiffs' said Chicago property (that is, its value over and above all incumbrances) at the time the said exchange of properties was consummated was the sum of $15,000; that the defendant took said property subject to all the liens thereon, aggregating between $39,000 and $40,000, and did not loan to the plaintiffs, or either of them, the sum of $4,000, or any sum or amount whatever, as a part of the transaction of exchanging said properties, and did not give to plaintiffs any consideration whatever for their said Chicago property, save and except said Edgehill ranch and the personal property thereon situated at the time of said trade, described in the pleadings; that the only consideration for the $13,000 note and mortgage executed by the plaintiffs to the defendant at the time of said trade was the supposed difference in value between plaintiffs' said Chicago property, incumbered as above stated, and the defendant's said Edgehill ranch and the personal property thereon situated; that the defendant's said Edgehill ranch and said personal property thereon situated were at the time of the exchange of said properties of the market value of $15,000, but that, if defendant's said ranch had actually been as represented by defendant to plaintiffs, the market value at the time of said exchange of properties would have been $30,000. And as a conclusion of law the court finds that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendant the difference between the actual value of said Edgehill ranch and said personal property thereon at the time of said exchange of properties, and the value thereof if the same had been in all respects as was stated and represented to them by the defendant, but plaintiffs are entitled, as part of their recovery and remedy in this action, to have their note and mortgage to the defendant for $13,000 canceled and delivered up to the clerk to be filed as part of the record of the cause, and to have judgment against the defendant for the sum of $2,000 and their costs. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and thereupon appeals from the judgment entered upon the findings, and also from the order denying a new trial; and the plaintiffs appeal from that part of the judgment which gave them a money judgment for $2,000 and costs only.

1. The ground of plaintiffs' appeal is that the superior court has found that the value of the Edgehill ranch and personal property would have been only $30,000 if the representations of defendant had been true, contrary to the admissions of the answer that, if such representations had been true, their value would have been $48,000. They contend that this finding must be disregarded, and the admission of the answer taken as the true value if the representations had been true. The answer to this position is that the defendant denied having made the representations charged, and upon this issue the finding of the court is partially in his favor. One allegation of the complaint is that the defendant represented the Edgehill property to be of the market value of $48,000. And it was the statement of a mere truism in the complaint to say that, if this representation had been true, the property would have been worth $48,000. The defendant denies that he made this representation, and the court does not find that he personally did make it. It seems to be found that Ensign expressed an opinion to that effect at Chicago, but the court evidently did not treat this as a representation of a fact, for otherwise it could not possibly have made its finding that, if the facts had been as represented, the property would have been worth only $30,000. Indeed, such a statement cannot be regarded as giving any ground for an action for deceit. It is obviously and necessarily a mere expression of opinion, upon which the vendee has no right to rely, and so the superior court must have regarded it. This view of the matter disposes of the contention of plaintiffs in support of their appeal. If the representations alleged by plaintiffs had all been matters of fact, and had all been found to have been made, then the failure of the answer to deny that the property would have been worth $48,000, if such representations had been true, would have been conclusive. But since one of said representations, to wit, that the market value was $48,000, was not found to have been made, or, if made, was not a representation of fact, the finding that the property would have been worth only $30,000 if the representations had been true is not inconsistent with the admission of the answer. The trial court, and the parties themselves, treated the value of the Edgehill ranch as being in issue. The plaintiffs themselves put in a large amount of evidence as to the value of the Edgehill ranch, and the defendant in consequence introduced an equally large amount of evidence bearing upon the same subject; and the court from this conflicting testimony makes a finding as already shown. The plaintiffs, having gone to trial and tried the cause on the theory that there was an issue raised in reference to the value of the Edgell ranch, cannot in this court, for the first time, raise the question that there was no such issue to be tried. Ortega v. Cordero, 88 Cal. 221, 26 Pac. 80; Murdock v. Clarke, 90 Cal. 427, 27 Pac. 275; Klopper v. Levy, 98 Cal. 525, 33 Pac. 444; Water Co. v. Gage, 108 Cal. 240, 41 Pac. 299; Rudel v. Los Angeles Co., 118 Cal. 281, 50 Pac. 400. The defendant in this case seeks to recoup by showing that the Chicago property was worth less than represented by the plaintiffs, and the finding of the court is accordingly, and awards to the plaintiffs the difference between the market value of the San Diego property and the net market value of the Chicago property; that is, the value over the liens and incumbrances. This rule is sustained by authority. Grinnell, Deceit, p. 143, § 193; Carey v. Guillow, 105 Mass. 18.

2. On the appeal by the defendant it is claimed, as one of his grounds, that the Chicago property having stood in the name of the plaintiff Georgia Barbour, and the title to the Edgell property having also been taken in her name, it could not be shown by parol that the wife held the titles for the joint use and benefit of herself and husband, or that they were in fact joint owners. It is admitted that the husband was a proper party to the action, but it is claimed that "it does not necessarily follow that the judgment for damages should have been rendered in their favor." The evidence, however, shows that the defendant dealt with Barbour as the owner or part owner of the Chicago property. Besides, it is competent to show by parol that the wife held the legal title to the properties in question for the joint use of herself and husband, and that her husband was in fact an equal owner with herself. It is always competent to prove such a trust in land by parol testimony (Smith v. Moynigan, 44 Cal. 54-64; Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 374, 39 Pac. 797); but, if it were otherwise, it does not appear how the defendant could be injured, whether the husband were or were not, as a fact, jointly interested with the wife in the properties in question.

The defendant devotes a considerable portion of his brief to a consideration of the proposition that one cannot rescind in part, and contends that the action by the plaintiffs is an attempt to rescind in part; but this is a mistake. The plaintiffs merely ask that the note and mortgage be canceled, as a part of their recovery of damages against the defendant. If an action had been brought by the defendant to foreclose the mortgage, the plaintiffs would have been entitled to a cancellation of the mortgage and note upon the same showing, as a defense, as appears in their favor in the present action. There is in this state but one form of civil actions for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress or prevention of private wrongs. Code Civ. Proc. § 307. And the facts constituting the cause of action are required to be stated in ordinary and concise language. Code Civ. Proc. § 426. It was said by Lord Redesdale: "The distinction between strict law and equity is never in any country a permanent distinction. Law and equity are in continual progression, and the former is constantly gaining ground upon the latter. A great part of what is now strict law was formerly considered as equity, and the equitable decisions of this age will unavoidably be ranked under the strict law of the next. Pom. Code Rem. §§ 76, 81; Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 442, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137; Hurlbutt v. Saw Co., 93 Cal. 57, 28 Pac. 795; Johnson v. Polhemus, 99 Cal. 241, 33 Pac. 908; Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 528, 24 Pac. 172, and 25 Pac. 64. The court finds that plaintiffs did not misrepresent the Chicago property, in size of lot or otherwise, and further finds that defendant, "before closing said trade, caused said property and every part thereof to be carefully examined." This furnishes a complete answer to the contention of defendant in this particular.

Exceptions of the defendant to the rulings of the trial court are very numerous, and his counsel occupy considerable space in their brief to a consideration of the same. Without noticing them separately and in detail, it is sufficient to say that, from a careful examination of the record, we find no error committed by the court in such rulings which would justify a reversal. The most that can be said in favor of the contention of the defendant that the findings are not supported by the evidence in the particulars noted is that such evidence is conflicting; but there is sufficient evidence, if believed by the trial court to be true, to support such finding, and the trial court, having the witnesses before it, and noting their demeanor, is in a much better position to give proper weight to such evidence than this court. Hence the well-established rule in such cases that the findings must be allowed to stand.

The contention of defendant that interest should have been computed on the note and mortgage from date, making $14,600, instead of $13,000, the sum to be deducted from the amount of damages found by the trial court, cannot be sustained. According to the findings, the note and mortgage were obtained by defendant through his fraud and deceit, and without consideration, and should be treated as never having been given, and consequently not entitled to draw interest.

Pending the appeals the plaintiffs and defendant, respectively, moved to dismiss the appeal taken by the adverse party. Having, however, disposed of said appeals on their merits, it is unnecessary to consider either of said motions. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HARRISON, J.

PECK v. AGNEW et al. (S. F. 1,928.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 9, 1899.)

DISMISSAL—ABATEMENT—NOTICE OF APPEAL.

1. Where, in an action, no summons is served, and part of the defendants appear by demurrer, the court has no jurisdiction, under section 581, Code Civ. Proc., providing that, if appearance has been made by defendants within three years, such action may be prosecuted as if summons had been issued and served, to dismiss such action, on motion of defendants, as to those defendants who demurred.

2. While the issue whether certain lands belonged to the estate of plaintiff's intestate is pending and undetermined, the action does not abate by reason of the revocation of the special letters of administration granted to the plaintiff.

3. Where plaintiff, as special administratrix, was served with a motion to dismiss the action, she has the right to appeal from the judgment against her on such motion, although her special letters had been revoked prior to taking the appeal.

4. Service of a copy of the notice of appeal, instead of the original notice, is sufficient.

5. It is not necessary to serve a notice of appeal upon defendants, who were not served with summons and who did not appear.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

Action by M. Elizabeth Peck, as special administratrix, against H. Agnew and others. From an order allowing defendants' motion to dismiss the action, plaintiff appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied. Modified.

J. F. Utter, J. J. Scrivner, and A. H. Cohen, for appellant. Jeter & McKinney and Chas. B. Younger, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. This action was commenced in the superior court, December 12, 1895, against a number of defendants, by the plaintiff, as special administratrix of the estate of Martina Castro Depeaux, deceased, for the purpose of having it declared that they have no interest in or title to the land described in the complaint, and that it belonged to the estate of her intestate, and that she recover possession thereof. It does not appear from the record, except inferentially, whether a summons was ever issued upon the complaint, or that it was ever served upon either of the defendants, but within 10 days after the commencement of the action a demurrer was filed on behalf of several of the defendants. It does not appear that any action has been taken by the court upon this demurrer. December 19, 1898, a motion was made on behalf of seven of the defendants named in the complaint who had not demurred thereto to set aside the summons and the service thereof, and to dismiss the action, upon the ground, among others, that the summons had not been returned within three years from the commencement of the action. At the hearing the court granted their motion and dismissed the action, and the plaintiff has appealed therefrom.

The appellant does not controvert the right of the persons who made the motion to have the action dismissed as to them, nor does she object to the action of the court, so far as it may be limited to them. At the time the motion was granted she excepted thereto "upon the ground that said court had no jurisdiction to dismiss said action, except as to the defendants who had not or who did not appear in said action by the demurrers," and she now contends that to the extent that the dismissal purports to embrace those who had appeared in the action it was erroneous, and that in this respect the judgment should be modified.

With this contention of the appellant we agree. The failure of the plaintiff to return the summons did not affect her right to continue the action against those defendants who had demurred to the complaint. It is declared in the concluding sentence of section 581, Code Civ. Proc., that "all such actions may be prosecuted if appearance has been made by the defendant or defendants within said three years, in the same manner as if summons had been issued and served." This provision does not prevent a dismissal, when some of the defendants have appeared, as to those who have not appeared, nor does it require an appearance by all of the defendants in order to deprive the court of all power of dismissal, but it is to be construed as authorizing a dismissal as to those defendants who have not appeared, and a prosecution of the action against those who have made such appearance whenever the court would be authorized to render a judgment against them in the absence of the other defendants. The defendants who demurred were entitled to have the issue presented by their demurrer passed upon by the court, and had chosen attorneys for that purpose, as well as to represent them in all proceedings that might be had in the action. It was not competent for the court to dismiss them out of the action upon the motion of other defendants, with whom they were in no wise connected. Nor did the fact that the motion was made by the same attorneys that represented them in the demurrer affect their rights. The motion was made on behalf only of defendants who had not demurred,—seven in number,—and without any notice to the demurrants.

Whether the property described in the complaint belonged to the estate of the decedent was an issue to be tried in the case, and could not be determined upon a motion to dismiss the action. While this issue was pending and undetermined, the action did not abate by reason of the revocation of the special letters that had been granted to the appellant.

A motion to dismiss the appeal was made herein upon the ground that at the time of taking the appeal the appellant had ceased to be the special administratrix of the estate, and her powers as such had been revoked, and she was therefore not authorized to take an appeal. It is a sufficient answer to this motion to say that the respondents recognized her right to represent the estate by serving their motion for a dismissal of the action upon her. The orders which they now invoke as a reason why she had no right of appeal were made long prior to such service, and no change has taken place in her relation to the estate since the action of the court upon their motion. If the superior court was authorized to entertain their motion and render judgment against her, she is authorized to seek a reversal of that judgment in this court.

The further ground urged for a dismissal of the appeal, viz. that the notice of appeal has not been served upon the respondents, is contradicted by the transcript, in which there is printed a copy of an affidavit of this service. The correctness of the affidavit, as printed in the transcript, is not disputed, and, from the nature of the act, proof of such service would not be a part of the judgment roll. The objection to the statement therein that a "copy" of the notice of appeal, rather than the original, was served upon the respondents, is without merit.

It was not necessary to serve the notice of appeal upon the defendants who had not appeared. They were not parties to the proceedings in the superior court, and their interest in the action will not be injuriously affected by a modification of the judgment as asked by the appellant. Clarke v. Mohr (Cal.) 58 Pac. 176. The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied. The superior court is directed to modify its judgment in accordance with the views herein.

GARDNER v. JONES, Judge. (S. F. 1,764.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 9, 1899.)

INSANE PERSONS—DISCHARGE FROM CUSTODY—HABEAS CORPUS—POWERS OF JUDGE.

1. Under Act March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 311) art. 3, § 13, declaring that "any one in custody as an insane person" is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus on application to "the superior judge of the county in which the hospital is located," and that on return of the writ the fact of his insanity shall be inquired into; and section 14, providing that a patient committed to a hospital, under Pen. Code, pt. 2, tit. 10, c. 6, "shall, on the certificate of the superintendent that such person has recovered, approved by the superior judge of the county from which the patient was committed," be redelivered to the sheriff of such county, and dealt with as provided for by said chapter 6,—where one, pending trial for a crime, is committed to an insane asylum, under the Revised Code, and the medical superintendent refuses to act under said section 14, there can be hearing on habeas corpus, under section 13, and the judge not only can adjudge that the person has recovered his sanity, but can order his return to the sheriff.

2. Under Act March 31, 1897, art. 3, § 13, declaring that any one in custody as an insane person is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus on application to "the superior judge of the county" in which the hospital is located, and that on return of the writ the fact of his insanity shall be inquired into, the hearing may be had before a judge called in; Code Civ. Proc. § 71, providing that a judge of any superior court may hold the superior court in any county at the request of the judge thereof, and such judge "shall have the same power as a judge thereof."

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 71, providing that a judge of a superior court holding the superior court in any county at the request of the judge thereof "shall have the same power as the judge thereof," does not enlarge the powers given by, and therefore does not contravene, Const. art. 6, § 8, providing that "a judge of any superior court may hold a superior court in any county."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Application by A. M. Gardner, medical superintendent of the Napa state hospital, for writ of prohibition to Joseph P. Jones, judge of the superior court of Contra Costa county. Denied.

W. H. Anderson, E. J. Livernash, and John T. York, for plaintiff. E. L. Webber and Dinkelspell & Gesford, for defendant.

CHIPMAN, C. Application for a writ to prohibit defendant from entertaining jurisdiction in a certain habeas corpus case. One Buchanan was duly committed to the Napa state hospital for the insane by the superior court of Yuba county pending his trial upon the charge of murder. A friend of Buchanan, one Muller, presented his petition to the Honorable E. D. Ham, judge of the superior court of Napa county, setting forth, among other things, that Buchanan has recovered his sanity, and is entitled to be discharged from the state hospital, and redelivered to the sheriff of said Yuba county, to be dealt with as provided by chapter 6 of the Penal Code, and that his detention in said hospital as an insane patient has become and now is illegal. Judge Ham issued the writ, returnable "before the acting judge of said superior court," in the court room of the superior court of Napa county. At the request of Judge Ham, defendant, who was then judge of the superior court of Contra Costa county, proceeded to hold the superior court of Napa county, and while so doing assumed jurisdiction in this habeas corpus case. The petitioner in this present proceeding, the medical superintendent of the Napa state hospital, made return to the writ showing the legal commitment of Buchanan to the asylum, and alleging that he has not recovered his sanity. He claims that Buchanan cannot be delivered to the sheriff of Yuba county except upon the certificate of plaintiff that Buchanan has recovered his sanity, approved by the judge of the superior court of that county, and that the superior court of Napa county is without jurisdiction or authority to order plaintiff to so redeliver Buchanan.

1. It is contended that section 13, art. 3, of the insanity law, approved March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 311), does not apply to insane persons of Buchanan's class. The question is an important one, inasmuch as it involves the right of an inmate of a state hospital, who happens at the time to be resting under a criminal charge and is committed pending trial for his crime, to have his alleged insanity made the subject of judicial inquiry by the writ of habeas corpus. It is claimed that "the medical superintendent is the only person or tribunal vested by law with authority to determine whether or not an insane patient of this class has recovered." Section 13, art. 3, of the insanity law, provides as follows: "Any one in custody as an insane person is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus upon a proper application made by a relative or some friends in his behalf to the superior judge of the county in which the hospital is located. Upon the return of such writ the fact of his insanity shall be inquired into and determined. The medical history of the patient, as it appears in the clinical records, shall be given in evidence, and the superintendent in charge of the state hospital wherein such person is held in custody, and any other persons, shall be sworn touching the mental condition of such person." That part of section 14, Id., relied upon, reads as follows: "A patient committed to a hospital under the provisions of chapter six, title ten, part two, of the Penal Code of this state, shall, upon the certificate of the superintendent that such person has recovered, approved by the superior judge of the county from which the patient was committed, be redelivered to the sheriff of such county and dealt with as provided for by said chapter six of the Penal Code." The provisions of the Penal Code regulating the commitment of persons charged with crime are found in sections 1367 to 1373. No question arises as to the regularity of Buchanan's commitment under these provisions. Section 1372 provides as follows: "If the defendant is received into the asylum, he must be detained there until he becomes sane. When he becomes sane, the superintendent must give notice of that fact to the sheriff and district attorney of the county. The sheriff must thereupon, without delay, bring the defendant from the asylum and place him in proper custody until he is brought to trial or judgment, as the case may be, or is legally discharged." Section 1473 of the Penal Code provides as follows: "Every person unlawfully imprisoned or restrained of his liberty, under any pretense whatever, may prosecute a writ of habeas corpus to inquire into the cause of such imprisonment or restraint." Section 5, art. 1, of the constitution reads: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require its suspension."

We find in the statutes no authority for making two classes of insane,—one civil and the other criminal,—and by any such classification to take the latter out of the operation of the statute as to the right of habeas corpus. Section 13, art. 3, of the insanity law makes no such distinction. But plaintiff contends that section 14, Id., in terms confers authority upon the medical superintendent to determine when the patient of the criminal class is restored to sanity, and, as the authority is not conferred upon any other person or tribunal, it is necessarily exclusive, and also proves that the law recognizes the two mentioned classes of insane. We cannot believe that the legislature intended to enact a law so entirely out of harmony with the spirit and letter of the constitution and the statutes to which attention has been called. It is our duty to harmonize sections 13 and 14, art. 3, of the insanity law so as to conform to the constitution and to the statutes quoted, if we can, rather than resort to the more extreme necessity of holding section 14 to be unconstitutional, as defendant claims it to be, if given the construction placed upon it by plaintiff. We think it was intended by section 14 to provide means by which a patient of Buchanan's class, whose reason has become restored, could be at once remanded to the sheriff of the proper county for trial; but it was not intended that the arbitrary power should rest with the medical superintendent to deprive the patient of the right to be so returned, nor was it intended that the medical superintendent should be the exclusive judge of the patient's restoration. The commitment is made under section 1370, Pen. Code, which provides "that upon his becoming sane he be redelivered to the sheriff"; and section 1372 provides that "if the defendant is received into the asylum he must be detained there until he becomes sane. When he becomes sane, the superintendent must give notice of that fact to the sheriff and district attorney of the county. The sheriff must thereupon, without delay, bring the defendant from the asylum and place him in proper custody until he is brought to trial or judgment, as the case may be, or is legally discharged." The law does not justify the detention (1) if there be not a legal commitment, and (2) if the patient has recovered his sanity. If there be no legal commitment, or if the patient has become restored to sanity, there is lack of authority to detain him, and the question may be inquired into by habeas corpus. A fair construction of all the provisions of the statutes on the subject leads to the conclusion that, in a case like this, the superintendent of the state hospital may discharge the patient, and, if he fails or refuses to act, the inmate may institute the inquiry into his sanity by the process of habeas corpus. Defendant contends that the superior court can, upon inquiry by the writ, go no further than to adjudge the inmate to be sane, and cannot discharge him or grant the relief asked; and hence it was the plain duty of the court to discharge the writ, and remand the petitioner forthwith. We are cited to section 382b, Church, Hab. Corp. The author is there dealing with an attempt by the writ to review the proceedings by which the person was declared to be insane. Here there is no such attempt. The legality of the commitment is not questioned. The question here is not whether Buchanan was insane when committed, but whether he has since become sane,—a question not at all involved in the original proceeding. The question of Buchanan's recovery, in our opinion, is jurisdictional, and may be examined upon habeas corpus.

We can see no more authority for detaining an inmate of a state hospital against his will, after he has become restored to reason, than for detaining a prisoner upon conviction of crime after he has served out his sentence, or for detaining a person upon a criminal charge for an act to which the law attaches no criminality, and in this latter case the prisoner would be entitled to his discharge for lack of jurisdiction to hold him. Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 212. If Buchanan has recovered his reason, the commitment under which he is held will not justify his further detention, for it operates only so long as the inmate is insane.

Counsel for plaintiff say in their brief that the learned judge (defendant) held at the hearing that he had the power to inquire into and adjudge the question of Buchanan's sanity, but had not the power to discharge him or order him returned to the sheriff of Yuba county; that the judge could only send him back to the hospital, and leave the enforcement of his rights to some other appropriate proceedings. It is hence argued that this is a misconception of the functions of the writ, and concedes the duty of the judge to remand Buchanan. It is true that section 14, art. 3, of the insanity law, provides that the patient shall, upon the certificate of the superintendent that he has recovered, approved by the judge of the county from which the patient was committed, be redelivered to the sheriff of such county, and dealt with as provided by chapter 6 of the Penal Code; but that is where the superintendent acts. Where he refuses to act, and resort is had to the court, we think the judge has the power, not only to adjudge the patient to be sane, but to order him redelivered to the sheriff, to be dealt with under the Penal Code. Section 1484 of that Code declares that the court or judge "shall dispose of such party as the justice of the case may require." Section 1493 provides: "In cases where any party is held under illegal restraint or custody, or any other person is entitled to the restraint or custody of such party, the judge or court may order such party to be committed to the restraint or custody of such person as is by law entitled thereto." In his petition Buchanan does not ask to be restored to his freedom. He asks to be redelivered to the sheriff of Yuba county, to be there put upon trial under the charge resting against him. We can see no reason why the court or judge should not have the power by an order to direct that Buchanan be redelivered to the sheriff as prayed for by him, should he be found to be sane. Why should he be remanded to the custody of the superintendent, who would no longer have authority to detain him? Or why should he be required to resort to some other proceeding in order to obtain the relief which he may have in the habeas corpus proceeding?

2. Defendant makes the point that the judge of the superior court of Napa county alone has jurisdiction, since the language of section 13, art. 3, of the insanity law provides that the application authorized by it is to be made "to the superior judge of the county in which the hospital is located." The section also provides as follows: "Upon the return of such writ the fact of his insanity shall be inquired into and determined." The act does not require the hearing to be before the judge-elect of the superior court of the county. He may be disqualified to act by reason of relationship to the petitioner or for other cause. Section 71, Code Civ. Proc., provides that "a judge of any superior court may hold the superior court in any county, at the request of the judge * * * of the superior court thereof; * * *" and such judge "shall have the same power as a judge thereof." In re Newman, 75 Cal. 213, 16 Pac. 887. Defendant claims that if this Code section supports plaintiff, which we think it does, it must be held to be in violation of section 8, art. 6, of the constitution, which reads: "A judge of any superior court may hold a superior court in any county," etc. The argument is that this provision expressly limits the jurisdiction of the judge requested to act for another to holding a superior court of the county to which he is called, and that in section 71, Code Civ. Proc., the legislature has, without authority, added: "In either case the judge holding the court shall have the same power as a judge thereof." So far as I am aware, the constitutionality of this section of the Code has never before been questioned, although cases have come here for review where the question might have been raised. I believe the universal practice throughout the state has been, where a judge of one county has been called by the judge of another county to hold the court of the latter, or where the governor has requested him to do so, to accord to the judge thus called all the powers of the judge of the court to which he is called. I do not think the Code has enlarged the powers given by the constitution. In the absence of the clause in section 71, added to section 8, art. 6, of the constitution, we would hold the power to exist. Any other construction would make the provision of little value, would defeat the manifest intention of the constitution, and would disturb many judgments of our courts in numerous classes of cases which have been rendered upon the hitherto unquestioned belief that the judge for the time possesses all the powers of the judge whom he represents. We advise that the writ be denied.

We concur: COOPER, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the writ is denied.

McFARLAND, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment because I see no way to hold otherwise consistently with the sacred right of the citizen to invoke the remedy of the writ of habeas corpus. Some slight impairment of the efficiency and discipline of insane asylums may possibly follow; but it is not to be assumed that a judge of the superior court will declare a man to be sane contrary to the judgment of the superintendent of the asylum, except in a very clear and strong case.

VIZELICH v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(Sac. 528.)¹

INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—PROXIMATE CAUSE—FELLOW SERVANTS.

The proximate cause of the injury is the negligence of a fellow servant, thus preventing recovery, where a collision of a switch engine with a train was caused by negligence of the brakeman in manipulating the switch, and the water tank of the engine, insufficiently secured to withstand the shock of the collision, was thereby thrown forward onto a brakeman riding on the engine.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Harry G. Vizelich, an infant, by his guardian ad litem, against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

Dudley & Buck, for appellant. Rodgers & Patterson and R. B. Terry, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff while in the employ of the defendant. The cause was tried before a jury, which rendered a verdict for plaintiff. From the judgment in his favor which followed, and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, these appeals are prosecuted.

Plaintiff averred that he was in the employ of the defendant at the time of the accident. He was employed as a brakeman and an extra switchman in the railroad yards at Stockton. At the time of the accident he was riding in the cab of a switch engine. This engine collided with a train standing upon the side track. The water tank of the switch engine moved forward, and crushed the leg of plaintiff, necessitating amputation. It is charged that the cause of the accident was the negligence of the defendant in improperly maintaining its track and switch at the place of the accident, and also, in a separate count, the imperfect and defective condition of the water tank upon the switch engine, which was negligently and insecurely fastened. Upon the trial it was made to appear without conflict in the evidence that the switch engine had been used in and about the yard for some time, and that in its ordinary use no injury had ever resulted from the alleged insecure fastening of the water tank. It was also made to appear without dispute that the collision was caused by the negligence of a brakeman in manipulating the switch.

Of the many propositions urged by appellant, the following is the only one which need receive attention, for it is determinative of the controversy: In this discussion it will be assumed that the plaintiff satisfactorily established his relationship to the company as its employé, and it will further be assumed that the evidence was sufficient to show that the water tank of the engine was insecurely fastened. As to the allegation of the negligent condition of the track and switch, we think it clear that the evidence would not support a finding in plaintiff's favor upon that ground. The trial judge was of the same opinion, and little point is made of this matter in the briefs. The case, then, is one where an employé seeks to recover for personal injuries sustained by him by reason of the defective condition of the appliances furnished to him by the employer. In such cases he can recover only when the defective machinery or appliance was the proximate cause of the injury. Ordinarily this question is one of fact for the jury, under proper instructions; but, where the facts are not in dispute, it may become a question of law for the court. If the question is debatable,—one upon which reasonable minds may take opposing views,—it should, of course, be submitted to the jury; but, where it is clear and unmistakable that the proximate cause is one other than that upon which the cause of action rests, it is for the court so to declare. In this case it appears without conflict that the proximate cause of the injury was the negligence of the fellow employé who misplaced the switch and caused the collision. The case is paralleled by that of Trewatha v. Milling Co., 96 Cal. 494, 28 Pac. 571, and 31 Pac. 561. There an employé of a mining company, being hoisted from the mine in a bucket, was hurled against the sheave and injured. He charged the company with negligence in failing to furnish necessary and proper hoisting appliances. It was shown that the engineer hoisted the plaintiff from the mine with dangerous speed. This court said: "We do not think the verdict and judgment can be sustained, even if it be admitted that the appliances complained of were as defective as it is claimed they were. The immediate and proximate cause of the injury sustained by plaintiff was very clearly shown to have been the negligence of his co-employé. * * * Nothing but carelessness can account for the fact that the engineer allowed the bucket to be hurled against the sheave, twenty-three feet above the upper platform, whether he supposed he was hoisting a man or something else. But the rule is that, where the promoting cause of the injury is the negligence of a fellow servant, no recovery can be had, even though the machinery or appliances be defective. This was so declared in Kevern v. Mining Co., 70 Cal. 394, 11 Pac. 741, where the court said: 'The proximate cause of the injury is the object of inquiry, and, when discovered, must be regarded and relied on.' Hayes v. Railroad Corp., 3 Cush. 274. Even where machinery is defective, so that otherwise a recovery might be had for an injury received, yet, if the promoting cause of the injury is the negligence of a fellow servant, no recovery can be had. Wood, Mast. & Serv. 812. The same rule must apply where the appliances for doing work are defective." It is well settled that if injury has resulted in consequence of a certain unlawful act or omission, but only through or by means of some intervening cause, from which last cause the injury followed as a direct and immediate consequence, the law will refer the damage to the last or proximate cause, and refuse to trace it to that which was more remote. Cooley, Torts (2d Ed.) p. 73. It is here too plain to admit of discussion that the proximate cause was the negligence of the fellow employé who caused the collision. We leave the realm of certainty, and enter upon that of conjecture, when we seek to go behind the proximate cause, and to inquire, as would become necessary in this case, whether the company should have secured the water tank so as to withstand a collision; whether, if fastened with ordinary security, it would have withstood the shock of this particular collision; and other questions of like uncertainty which readily present themselves. Yet, notwithstanding that it so convincingly appears that the proximate cause was the negligence of the switchman, and notwithstanding the further fact that the utmost to which plaintiff could contend that he was entitled by way of instruction to the jury upon this question would be a charge to the effect that as they determined the proximate cause of the injury to be through the negligence of a fellow employé, or the defective appliance, so should their verdict be either for defendant or plaintiff, the court in fact went much further than this, and positively instructed the jury that, if they found that the defendant failed to provide a suitable roadbed, and an engine properly equipped with a tank securely fastened, and if this failure was the cause of the injury to plaintiff, they must find in plaintiff's favor, "notwithstanding the fact that the brakeman, a fellow servant, was guilty of negligence in leaving the switch described as 'Switch B' open." By this instruction the jury was, in effect, charged that, if injury resulted by reason of the defective appliance, the defective appliance itself, as matter of law, became the proximate cause. But, as has above been shown, it is clear, under the evidence in this case, that the proximate cause was the negligence of the fellow employé. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF SANTA ANA v. PRITCHARD et al. (L. A. 695.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASES FOR YEARS—REGISTRATION—ASSIGNMENT—MORTGAGE—FIXTURES.

1. A lease of land for a term of years is a conveyance of real estate, within Civ. Code, §§ 1214, 1215, providing that every conveyance of real property, other than a lease for one year, is void as against a subsequent purchaser whose conveyance is first recorded, and that the term "conveyance" shall embrace every instrument by which any estate or interest in real property is created, except wills.

2. Under Civ. Code, § 2924, providing that every transfer of an interest in property, other than in trust as security, is to be deemed a mortgage, an assignment of a lease of land as security for the payment of a debt is a mortgage.

3. Under Civ. Code, §§ 658, 660, providing that real property consists of land and that which is affixed to it, and that a thing is deemed to be affixed when it permanently rests thereon, a warehouse, with concrete foundation, built by a lessee on land held under a lease for a term of years, providing that he may remove it before the expiration of the term, is real estate, as between the holder of a mortgage on the lessee's interest in the land and a subsequent purchaser of the warehouse.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Orange county.

Action by the Commercial Bank of Santa Ana against B. F. Pritchard and others. From a judgment for defendant C. S. McKelvey, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. E. Keech, for appellant. McKelvey & Bowe, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Action for foreclosure of mortgage. Judgment for defendant McKelvey. Motion for a new trial denied, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment and order.

The facts of this case are substantially as follows: On May 25, 1895, the Southern California Railway Company leased a small parcel of land, described by metes and bounds, to one Pritchard, for the term of five years from the date of said lease, at the nominal rent of one dollar per year, for the exclusive purpose of a warehouse site. The lease provided that it might be terminated by either party upon 30 days' notice in writing, that upon its termination the said Pritchard should have the privilege of removing all improvements placed by him thereon, and that at its expiration the said Pritchard should have the privilege of removal for a like period, and upon like terms. After the execution of the lease, and prior to the 12th day of August, 1895, said Pritchard built upon the land so leased a grain warehouse, with concrete foundation, 40 feet wide by 100 feet long; the same being a frame building, with shingle roof. On said last-named date the said Pritchard borrowed from appellant $600, giving his promissory note therefor, due one year after date, and, to secure the said note, gave a mortgage upon "all that certain personal property situate and described as follows, to wit: One grain warehouse, with concrete foundation, shingle roof, and frame structure, size forty wide and one hundred feet long, situated at Northam station, in Orange county, California, on the following described lands, to wit." Then follows a description of the lot so leased by Pritchard, by metes and bounds. The mortgage was verified by the mortgagor and mortgagee as a mortgage of personal property and was properly acknowledged. It was by appellant filed for record, and was recorded in volume 2 of Chattel Mortgages of Orange County. Thereafter, on October 9, 1896, the said Pritchard, to further secure the said note, transferred and assigned to appellant the said lease. On June 3, 1897, the appellant filed the said mortgage for record as a real-estate mortgage, and it was recorded in book 13 of Real-Estate Mortgages of said county. The promissory note was not paid, and appellant was the owner and holder of it at the time of the trial. All the above facts were found by the court below, and the court also made the following finding: "That the defendant Charles S. McKelvey is the owner and in possession of said warehouse, and at all times since the 27th day of May, A. D. 1897, has been, and now is, the owner and in possession of said warehouse; and said defendant entered into possession of said warehouse, and became the owner thereof, for a good and valuable consideration, and took the same without any notice whatever of any claim by the plaintiff, or any lien held by the plaintiff against said warehouse. That the said defendant became the purchaser of, and entered into the possession of, said warehouse, without any notice, constructive or otherwise, of plaintiff's lien." By reason of the finding just quoted, the learned judge of the court below refused to grant appellant a decree of foreclosure, and found that respondent was entitled to a judgment against appellant; that he was the owner of the warehouse and lease, and entitled to the control and possession thereof free and clear of any lien of the appellant. In this we think the court erred. The decision was evidently given upon the theory that the warehouse and lease were personal property.

Counsel for appellant says in his brief that the decision of this case depends upon whether or not the warehouse is personal property, and counsel for respondent say in their brief, "The only question to be decided is, is the warehouse chattel or real property?" This case does not depend upon the principle that the lessee, as against his lessor, upon the termination of the lease would have the right to remove the warehouse from the real estate described in the lease. It does not appear that the lease has ever been terminated, and no attempt has ever been made to remove the warehouse. Neither the lessor nor the lessee appears to have any interest in this controversy. The lessor was not made a party, and the lessee does not appear from the record to have made any defense or contest. It is therefore not necessary to discuss the rule as to the character of the warehouse in case this were a contest between the lessor and lessee. The lease made by the railway company to Pritchard was a conveyance of real estate. Civ. Code, § 1215; Garber v. Gianella, 98 Cal. 529, 33 Pac. 458. Pritchard was, therefore, by virtue of the conveyance, the owner of the estate thereby conveyed, and of all the improvements placed by him upon the premises therein described, and of the covenant for a renewal of his estate as therein provided. Being so the owner of the property, he could convey it by deed absolute, by way of mortgage, or by an assignment of his lease. He did so convey it by way of mortgage to appellant, and afterwards by a transfer of the lease; and this long before the time respondent claims to have purchased the warehouse as personal property. The court finds that Pritchard, in writing, and to secure the said note, assigned and transferred the lease to appellant October 9, 1896. The mortgage and assignment of the lease both being made to appellant prior to the attempted transfer to respondent, and both being so made as security for the note of $600, it will not be necessary to discuss the mortgage separately. This being the case, it must follow that on the 27th day of May, 1897, the attempted transfer to respondent conveyed nothing, or, at most, only conveyed the property subject to the lien of appellant thereon. Not only this, but the attempted transfer as set forth in the finding quoted only mentioned the warehouse, and not the lease. The transfer of the warehouse, if personal property, would not transfer the lease, which the court found had been transferred to appellant. The court, after so finding that the lease had been transferred and assigned to appellant as security, finds that, by a sale of the warehouse made long after the transfer of the lease to appellant, respondent became the owner and entitled to the lease, free and clear of any lien or claim of appellant. We cannot understand by what process of reasoning the court could find that the lease was transferred and assigned to appellant October 9, 1896; that the warehouse on the leased premises was conveyed to respondent May 27, 1897; and that from these facts alone the respondent became the owner of the lease, free of any lien or claim of appellant. The court evidently treated the respondent as an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice. Pritchard certainly was guilty of the utmost bad faith towards appellant, in selling respondent the warehouse without letting him know anything about the mortgage or lien of appellant. The respondent, in his testimony, says: "I had no knowledge or information given me at any time of the existence of any mortgage or lien upon this property between Mr. Pritchard and the plaintiff. I knew nothing of the record. Had no personal knowledge of anything. Mr. Pritchard did not tell me about the mortgage to the bank. I did not ask him. Made no in quiry. Did not make any search of the records."

The court found that respondent was a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice. It has been shown that the lease was a conveyance; that it had been assigned to appellant as security for the note of Pritchard. It was therefore incumbent upon respondent to show, not only that he was a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration, but that his conveyance was first duly recorded. Civ. Code, §§ 1107, 1214; Thomas v. Vanlieu, 28 Cal. 617; Warnock v. Harlow, 96 Cal. 306, 31 Pac. 166. It nowhere appears, either from the evidence or the finding, that respondent ever recorded his conveyance. It is provided by the Code of this state that every transfer of an interest in property, other than in trust, made as security for the performance of another act, is to be deemed a mortgage, except when, in the case of personal property, it is accompanied by actual change of possession, in which case it is deemed a pledge. Civ. Code, § 2924. The court having found that Pritchard assigned the lease to appellant as security for the payment of the $600, it was clearly a mortgage, within the definition just quoted. There is no law in this state requiring conveyances to be recorded. Bank of Ukiah v. Petaluma Sav. Bank, 100 Cal. 590, 35 Pac. 170. A mortgage is a lien upon everything that would pass by a grant of the property. Civ. Code, § 2926. Therefore Pritchard, by the assignment of the lease as security, conveyed to appellant everything that would have passed by a grant of the property. A grant of the property made by Pritchard would have conveyed all his interest in the leased premises, including the warehouse. In determining whether the warehouse is real or personal property, we must apply the same rule that would be applied if Pritchard had made a deed of grant of the property to appellant. Real property consists of land and that which is affixed to it. Id. § 658. A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings. Id. § 660. The warehouse, 100 feet by 40 feet, with concrete foundation, would ordinarily permanently rest upon the land. In this case there is nothing to show that the building and concrete foundation did not rest upon the land, and it will be presumed that it did; and hence, under the definitions given, it is real estate. In the case of McNally v. Connolly, 70 Cal. 3, 11 Pac. 320, this court held that an engine, boiler, and machinery in a flouring mill erected by a lessee upon the leased premises, and securely attached thereto by bolts and screws, were fixtures, as between the lessee and his attaching creditors. In Lavenson v. Soap Co., 80 Cal. 245, 22 Pac. 184, it was held that a gun-metal digester, soap kettles, boiler, and candle machines, put into and attached to a building with the intention of using them for making soap and candles, were fixtures, and part of the realty, and would not pass, against a mortgagee, by bill of sale. In Breweries v.

Schurtz, 104 Cal. 427, 38 Pac. 92, it was held that fixtures attached by a lessee to leased property became a part of the realty, and remain so until they are severed, and, while so attached, a mortgage of the leasehold interest covers the fixtures. To the same effect are Ewell, Fixt. pp. 276, 277, and note 1, p. 277; Jones, Mortg. §§ 428, 435. In Griffin v. Marine Co., 52 Ill. 130, a lessee of a lot of ground erected a building thereon, under an agreement with the lessor that the former might remove all the improvements placed by him on the premises, or the lessor should pay for them at their appraised value. The lessee and owner of the improvements executed a mortgage upon his interest in the premises, including the improvements; and it was held that the property mortgaged was an actual interest in real estate, and became immovable,—possessing none of those attributes as personal property which have shaped the law in regard to mortgaging such property. In the case of Knapp v. Jones (Ill. Sup.) 32 N. E. 382, it was held that a grain elevator built by a lessee on ground held under a lease which provided that the lessor might terminate the lease on 60 days' notice, and that the lessee might remove his buildings at any time before the expiration of the lease, was, together with the leasehold estate, to be classed as real estate, so that the holder of a recorded mortgage thereon had priority over a subsequent execution creditor. It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, with directions to the lower court to enter judgment for appellant in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, with directions to the lower court to enter judgment for appellant in accordance with the views herein expressed.

McFARLAND, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment; but the opinion of the commissioner might perhaps be construed as holding, generally, that an estate for years in land is real property, which, of course, is not so. An estate for years is, in its nature, personal property,—a chattel real; and it is subject, for most purposes, to the law which applies to personal property. See Jeffers v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 113 Cal. 345, 45 Pac. 680, where the subject is discussed, and our Code division of property into real and personal is shown to be substantially that of the common law. But by sections 1214 and 1215 of the Civil Code a lease of land for a term exceeding one year is expressly made subject to the law concerning the recordation of conveyances of real property, and, as it is subject to that law, the reasoning of the commissioner applies to the case at bar. In my opinion, the question whether or not the warehouse was so fixed to the soil as to be a part of the land, and thus belong to the owner of the fee, is not important. The owner of the fee is not claiming it, and the questions involved pertain to the leasehold interest, as between the present appellant and respondent.

ODELL v. BUTTRICK et al. (Sac. 556.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 6, 1899.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—PLEADING.

1. A complaint in unlawful detainer by a tenant after expiration of his term is not defective, because not stating the amount of the rent to be paid, where it avers a lease for a certain yearly rent, which was paid by defendant.

2. A finding in unlawful detainer against a tenant, after the expiration of his term, that defendant is still a tenant, is proper, as, though the term has terminated, the relation exists until the tenant surrenders possession.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Mary Odell against Charles Buttrick and L. Buttrick. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. G. Swinnerton and Budd & Thompson, for appellants. Louttit & Middlecoff, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action for an unlawful detainer by a tenant after the expiration of his term. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from a refusal of a new trial. The court overruled a demurrer to the complaint, and it is charged that the ruling was erroneous. The demurrer was for want of facts, for uncertainty, for ambiguity, and that the complaint is unintelligible. It is now contended that the complaint is defective, because it does not state the amount of the rent to be paid. It is averred that it was for a certain yearly rent which was paid by defendants. As the cause of action is for unlawfully holding over after expiration of the term, no further statement upon the subject was called for, or would have been material if made.

It is said that the findings do not support the judgment.

1. There must have been the conventional relation of landlord and tenant. This is clearly shown by the allegations of the complaint, and by the findings.

2. It is said that the relation must have terminated, and the court finds that the defendants are still tenants. It was necessary that the term should have ended, but the relation still continues until the tenant surrenders possession. See section 325, Code Civ. Proc. Therefore finding 3 does not contradict finding 2.

3. The evidence is very clear that the lease was entered into, and this is really not controverted by the testimony of Charles Buttrick. The judgment and order are affirmed.

CITY OF SANTA ANA v. BALLARD, Judge.
(L. A. 825.)

STATEMENT—SETTLEMENT BY JUDGE—MANDAMUS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 659, it is the duty of the judge to settle a bill of exceptions or statement, when properly presented, and, if it contains redundant or useless matter, to strike it out, or order it stricken out, and to make the statement truly present the case; so that, petitioner having presented for settlement a statement on motion for new trial, and it being objected to merely because it contained the entire transcript of the reporter's notes, and the judge having refused leave to petitioner to amend it in the particular mentioned, or in any other particular in which it might be informal, deficient, or inaccurate, and having refused to settle the statement, mandamus will issue to him to take proper steps to have the statement amended, and, on its being amended, to settle it.

McFarland, J., dissenting.

In bank. Application by the city of Santa Ana for mandamus to J. W. Ballard, judge. Writ granted.

W. F. Heathman, for petitioner.

VAN DYKE, J. Mandamus to compel the respondent, a judge of the superior court of the county of Orange, to settle a statement on motion for a new trial. The application is made on notice for a peremptory writ. The petitioner is plaintiff in an action in said court of the county of Orange, brought by said city against D. Gildmacher et al. to condemn a right of way for sewer purposes in said city of Santa Ana. At the close of the testimony on the trial of the cause the court, upon request of the defendants, instructed the jury to bring in a verdict for defendants, on the ground that there was no evidence to show the necessity for taking the land sought to be condemned for the purpose mentioned, and the jury thereupon brought in a verdict as instructed. When the proposed statement on motion for a new trial came up for settlement, the defendants objected to the settlement of said statement on the ground that said statement contained a literal transcript of the reporter's notes taken at the trial; but it was not objected that it did not contain a fair and correct statement of the case, or that it was not presented in due time. Thereupon attorney for plaintiff and petitioner asked leave of the judge to amend his statement in the particular mentioned, or in any other particular in which said statement might be informal, deficient, or inaccurate, or in which it did not comply with any law or rule of practice; but the said judge declined to allow plaintiff and petitioner to so amend the statement by condensing from questions and answers to a narrative form, and refused to allow plaintiff and petitioner to amend its statement in any respect, or at all, and refused to settle said statement, and retains the same in his hands, unallowed, unsettled, and unsigned.

It is the duty of the judge to settle a bill of exceptions or statement, when properly presented; and, if it contains redundant or useless matter, it is his duty to strike it out, or order it to be stricken out, whether the parties assent thereto or not, and to make the statement truly represent the case. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 659. The practice of embodying in the statement or bill of exceptions the reporter's notes of the trial in bulk is not justified by the law or good practice, and is reprehensible in the highest degree. The language of the Code is that the statement shall contain "so much of the evidence or other matter as is necessary to explain" the objections or points sought to be presented. And if attorneys, notwithstanding the frequent declarations of this court as to the proper practice, in order to save labor to themselves, or for other cause, continue to insert the reporter's notes, instead of condensing the same, the trial judge, in settling the statement, should apply the remedy by striking out, or causing to be stricken out, the redundant or useless matter. In San-some v. Myers, 80 Cal. 486, 22 Pac. 213, it is said: "It was not the duty of the judge to prepare a statement, but it was his duty to see that one was properly prepared, and then to sign it. If the attorney for the petitioner had omitted anything material, the judge should have directed and required him to insert it, or, if the matter was incorrectly stated, he should have required him to correct it."

* * * If the petitioner had refused or neglected to so correct the proposed statement as directed, the judge, no doubt, would have been justified in refusing to settle the same; but not otherwise." In that case the judge refused to settle the statement in the first instance, and the court say: "This we think he had no right to do. To so hold would place it in the power of the trial judge to deprive a litigant of his right of appeal by simply refusing to perform a plain duty." In Leach v. Pearce, 93 Cal. 618, 29 Pac. 236, in a mandamus proceeding, the same as the present, it was said: "Of course, the exercise of respondent's discretion cannot be controlled or reviewed in this proceeding. He cannot be compelled to settle any particular bill, or to insert or exclude any particular facts; but if the petitioner is entitled to move for a new trial, and has taken the proper steps within time, or if she has tendered a bill of exceptions to be used on appeal from the order within the time allowed by law, respondent cannot refuse to settle and sign a bill containing a record of the proceedings. It is an act which the law requires him to perform,—a duty resulting from his office." See, also, Winters v. Buck, 121 Cal. 279, 53 Pac. 799. In such case mandamus is the proper remedy. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086. In Kruse v. Chester, 66 Cal. 353, 5 Pac. 613, the court say: "The statement in question having been presented in due time, the law enjoined upon the referee the duty to settle it, and the writ of mandate will issue to compel the discharge of the duty." In Tibbets v. Banking Co., 97 Cal. 258, 32 Pac. 174, it is said the petitioner presented for settlement "quite a lengthy statement on motion for a new trial to the judge of the superior court, and that he refused to sign it, or any other bill of exceptions. In such case the judge can be compelled by mandamus to settle the bill or statement." From the facts stated in the petition in this case, which are not controverted, the petitioner should have been allowed to amend his statement as proposed, so as to avoid the objection raised, and then have said statement settled and allowed. A peremptory writ will therefore issue, directing the respondent to take such steps as in his judgment may be requisite for the purpose of striking out and omitting from the proposed statement all redundant and useless matter, and, upon the statement being amended and corrected, to settle and allow the same.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HARRISON, J.; TEMPLE, J.; HENSHAW, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. In my opinion, the respondent was not obliged to take any action whatever upon the document handed to him, and which is called a "proposed statement." It was not such a document as the law recognizes as the draft of a statement. The judge, in the exercise of his discretion, might have allowed appellant to amend by turning it into something presentable, or he might himself have taken up the task of preparing a statement, but he did not abuse his discretion by refusing to do either.

APPEAL—DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO SERVE NOTICE.

In an action to quiet certain water rights the complaint demanded judgment that the adverse claims of all the defendants be determined, and the plaintiffs adjudged the owners of all the water except a certain surplus. The judgment awarded to some of the defendants advantages over others, from which two of them appealed, but no notice of appeal was served on certain defendants against whom judgment was rendered by default. Held, that the omitted defendants were adverse parties, and hence the appeal should be dismissed for failure to serve notice on them.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by William Bowering and others against Frank P. Adams and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs the defendants Gerard and Fulton appeal. Dismissed.

J. W. Swanwick, for appellants. Frank W. Burnett, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This action was commenced by 38 plaintiffs against 100 defendants to quiet the right and title of plaintiffs to certain water to the extent of 70 inches, miners' measure. Many of the defendants defaulted, and, among them, the two appellants. In the decree the court determined that 73 of the parties to the action were the owners of all the water arising upon the land described, or which could be thereafter developed from the same, in the order and to the several amounts named in the decree. Of these parties 35 were plaintiffs and 38 were defendants, and the amount of water adjudged to belong to them is in the aggregate more than 120 inches. The judgment roll is not contained in the transcript, and we cannot tell whether, as to the defendants, the pleadings authorized a judgment in their favor. Plaintiffs, in their complaint, only asked that the defendants be enjoined from interfering with their claim to 70 inches flowing from the described tract, but admitted the right of the defendants to the surplus. Appellants contend that the decree is not sustained by the complaint in allowing a prior right to more than 70 inches of water, and in extending that priority to water which may hereafter be developed upon the described tract of land.

Motion is made by some of the respondents to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the notice of appeal was not served on all the adverse parties, to wit, upon 14 defendants named in the notice, who had been duly served with summons, and whose defaults had been entered, and against whom judgment had been rendered. The appellants admit the facts stated, except that they deny that the omitted parties are adverse parties, and that their interests will or can be injuriously affected by the appeal.

In the complaint it is alleged that in 1887 the San José Ranch Company acquired title to certain lands, and each of plaintiffs purchased from said company a specific portion thereof, and also certain water rights, which are specifically described in the complaint, and which have become and are appurtenant to the respective tracts of land owned by plaintiffs in severalty. It was also averred that, in addition to the water rights conveyed to plaintiffs, the company undertook to convey to other parties a right to water from sources undefined, such other parties being the defendants, who assert some right to the water adverse to plaintiffs; "that the claims of said defendants are without any right whatever except as to any surplus water there may be derived from said source over and above the amount belonging to the plaintiffs, as above set forth." Among other things, they demand that "all adverse claims of said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this court, and that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that said plaintiffs are the owners of the right to use all the water flowing from the source above described, except the surplus, if any, over and above an amount equal to a constant flow of seventy inches under four-inch pressure, miners' measurement," etc. The effect of the decree has been partly stated.

The record, which does not contain the judgment roll, does not show that cross complaints were interposed by any of the defendants, but, for aught we can know, such may have been the case. The judgment awards to 35 defendants advantages over the other defendants, and adds to the 70 inches of water which may be taken before any surplus can exist about as much more. The appellants, so far as the judgment discloses, are in the same position under the decree as the defendants not served with the notice, but the decree adjudges, in effect, that none of the defendants, except those named in the decree as possessing prior rights, can appropriate to their special use water from the described tract, save as sharers in the surplus. By the terms of the decree no defendants can acquire independent rights to the water, and diminish the surplus. Should they appropriate to their individual use any of the water disposed of by the decree, it would necessarily lessen the surplus to be divided among the defendants, and, of course, the share which would go to each defendant who was not served with the notice of appeal. It must be borne in mind, also, that if the appellants succeed in causing the decree to be modified, it can be modified only as to appellants. The appeal is taken from portions of the decree only, —formally from five different portions. The first four are, however, aimed at the same adjudication, to wit, giving to the favored parties the right to the undeveloped water, to the exclusion of the appellants. In the fifth they appeal from those portions of the decree which affect the right of the appellants to the developed waters in said tract of land.

It is obvious that, if appellants are entirely successful in their appeal, they will be at liberty to claim, and in fact to appropriate to their special use, to the exclusion of all other parties, the entire amount of water which is disposed of by the decree, and thus prevent the possibility of there being any surplus water to be divided among the defendants who, by the decree, are not given prior rights, and who were not served with the notice of appeal. It is also obvious that, to whatever extent they so succeed in modifying the decree, the effect will be to place them in a position to claim some portion of the water already developed, or to be hereafter developed, to the prejudice of the defendants not served. Indeed, it is difficult to see how they can be benefited by any modification of the judgment, except to the injury of such defendants. It is true, the decree does not settle the rights of the defendants not named in the schedule attached to the decree, as between themselves. Possibly the appellants may be entitled to all the surplus water as against the defendants not served, but the complaint puts all upon the same level, and, although it is not an adjudication of their rights with reference to each other, it must be so regarded on this motion. The appeal is dismissed.

WALTER v. MERCED ACADEMY ASS'N et al. (Sac. 559.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 8, 1899.)
CORPORATIONS—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—ENFORCEMENT—PARTIES—LIMITATION—DECREE.

1. It is not necessary, for one to subscribe to a subscription agreement, to become the owner of shares and the holder of original certificates of the first issue of a corporation's stock.

2. One who is the owner of stock of a corporation by receiving and paying for it cannot defeat liability to creditors of the corporation by showing a variance between the subscription agreement and the articles of incorporation as to the purposes of the incorporation.

3. Stockholders, after holding stock for six years, cannot, for the first time, to an action against them by creditors of the corporation, urge a variance between the subscription agreement and the articles of incorporation, as relieving them from liability.

4. The statute of limitations cannot be considered, not being pleaded in the answer, and the complaint not showing on its face that the claim is barred.

5. Actions by creditors of a corporation will lie against stockholders, remedy not being limited to sale of the stock.

6. Stockholders having paid 33⅓ per cent. of the par value of their stock cannot, in an action against them by creditors of the corporation to enforce liability to the extent of their unpaid subscriptions, be treated as holding their stock as a mere gratuity.

7. Right of creditors of a corporation to recover against stockholders to the extent of their unpaid subscriptions is not limited by other debts of the corporation.

8. Action may be maintained by creditors of a corporation against part of the stockholders only to enforce their liability to extent of their unpaid subscriptions.

9. Making and signing by the judge of the decision and decree in a county other than that of the trial is immaterial, they not being in force till filed by the clerk in the county of the trial.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Action by Doreth Walter against the Merced Academy Association, a corporation, and others, stockholders therein. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant stockholders appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Knox and T. C. Law, for appellants.
James F. Peck, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Heretofore the plaintiff had recovered judgment against the defendant corporation in a foreclosure suit, and, after sale of the premises involved, a deficiency judgment was duly docketed against said corporation for $5,587.25. Plaintiff prosecuted this action against the appellants to ascertain the amount due from each of them on said deficiency judgment as owners and holders of the stock of the said defendant corporation, and to obtain judgment and execution for the amount of her claim against each of them, not to exceed the amount that should be found due on their several subscriptions to the said stock of said corporation. The case was tried without a jury, and from a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial the defendant stockholders above named appeal.

It appears from the pleadings and evidence that the Merced Academy Association was incorporated in 1890, with a capital stock of $25,000, divided into 250 shares of the par value of $100 each. Its purposes, as stated in its articles of incorporation, were "to buy or acquire the Merced Academy property, * * * situated in the city of Merced, * * * together with the academy building and furniture and improvements connected therewith; and to own, use, improve, mortgage, lease, sell, and deal with said property, and to borrow money thereon, and to carry on a school or boarding house, or to lease the same for said purpose or any other purpose." All the appellants were named in the articles as stockholders, and Applegate, Lyons, Simonson, Law, and Landrum were mentioned as directors for the first year, and to the articles these five persons mentioned subscribed their names, and duly acknowledged the execution of the same. Some time prior to incorporation the appellants had signed a subscription agreement in which the objects of the proposed corporation were stated as follows: "To acquire the Merced Academy property by purchase or otherwise, and conduct thereon a school, or to use the said property for such other purpose or purposes as the stockholders of said corporation may determine." Soon after incorporation, certificates of stock were issued, and each of the appellants, excepting those who signed the articles, received one of these certificates representing a stated number of shares, and signed a receipt therefor, which receipt, after describing the certificate delivered, contained the following language: "Received the above certificate subject to the articles of incorporation and by-laws of the company." The appellants retained these certificates in their possession from 1890, when they received them, down to the time of the trial of this action, in 1897, holding themselves in readiness, as it is admitted, to share in the dividends of the concern, should any accrue. Appellants seek to avoid liability as stockholders, and contend that they are not stockholders in fact for the reason of variance in the purposes of incorporation as set forth in the subscription agreement and as declared in the articles of incorporation; and to sustain this position they cite Marysville Electric Light & Power Co. v. Johnson, 109 Cal. 193, 41 Pac. 1016, and many other cases. In none of these cases was the action against the defendant as an owner of shares or as an owner of stock in the corporation, but most of them are similar to the Marysville Electric Light Case, supra, and are based solely on the original subscription agreement, the defendants refusing to accept or pay for the stock of the corporation. In the case at bar, however, the complaint sets out, and the evidence shows, that appellants were at all the times mentioned in the complaint, and still are, the owners of shares in the corporation. To become the owners of shares and the holders of original certificates of the first issue, it was not necessary that appellants should have subscribed to any subscription agreement at all. "It would be a mockery of justice to permit such an objection to prevail." Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 23 L. Ed. 220. "Merely accepting and holding a certificate of stock is sufficient to constitute one a shareholder." Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 52; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. Ed. 203. It becomes unnecessary to determine whether there was a material variance between the subscription agreement and the articles as to the purposes of the corporation, because we may admit that there was such variance, and that appellants never signed any subscription paper for stock in the corporation which was in fact incorporated; and yet they are owners of such stock by virtue of receiving and paying for the same. Another answer to appellants' objections is that it would have been perfectly proper for appellants to have informed themselves as to the contents of the articles of incorporation when they received their stock, and they will certainly not be heard after six years to urge for the first time an objection of the character made here in a suit by one who, no doubt, credited the corporation on the faith of the appellants being, as the books showed them to be, stockholders of the corporation. Thomp. Liab. Stockh. §§ 150, 151, 125. It seems to be admitted, or at least not denied, that the five appellants who subscribed the articles of incorporation are to be treated as stockholders in the amounts set out in such articles. No statute of limitations being pleaded in the answer, and the complaint not showing on its face that the claim of plaintiff is barred by any statute, it is therefore not necessary to further notice any objection based on the statute of limitations.

On the evidence presented, the court properly found that $33⅓ per share, and no more, had been paid, and that $66⅔ per share had not been paid, and was due and unpaid. It was also alleged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, that "upon the shares owned by each of said defendants the sum of thirty-three and one-third dollars per share, and no more," had been paid. Hence appellants' contention that their stock was fully paid for is not supported by the record.

Many of the minor points made by appellants are disposed of by the position we assume in holding the liability of appellants to arise out of the fact of their being stockholders and owners as shown by the record on appeal, and it will be unnecessary to notice such points in detail.

Appellants are mistaken in supposing that the stockholders are not liable for debts of the corporation until all the stock is subscribed. When one-fourth of the capital stock is subscribed, their liability begins. Civ. Code, § 331.

The contention that an action will not lie against the stockholders personally, and that the remedy is by sale of the stock, is disposed of in Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 582, 27 Pac. 674, and 30 Pac. 776.

The amount of plaintiff's recovery is expressly limited by the judgment to the amount found to be due from the stockholders.

As we have already seen, the record shows that appellants had paid 33⅓ per cent. of the par value of their stock. They cannot, therefore, be treated as holding their stock as a mere gratuity.

Plaintiff's right to recover does not depend upon, nor is it limited in any way by, the other debts of the corporation, and an accounting was entirely unnecessary. Neither was it necessary that all the stockholders should be made parties defendant. Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205, 25 L. Ed. 885; Baines v. Babcock, supra.

The testimony of Simonson shows that the directors had no meeting, and that no assessment was levied to pay plaintiff's claim. This action is not barred by the provisions of section 726, Code Civ. Proc. Baines v. Babcock, supra; Blumberg v. Birch, 99 Cal. 416, 34 Pac. 102.

The findings cover the material issues. The decision, therefore, is not against law. There was no irregularity in the trial judge making and signing the decision and decree in Stanislaus county. Until the decision and decree were filed by the clerk in Merced county, they were not in force. Comstock Quicksilver Min. Co. v. Superior Court of Santa Cruz Co., 57 Cal. 625.

There was no material error in the rulings of the court on objections to the introduction of evidence. The judgment and order are affirmed.

GREENAWALT v. MUELLER. (L. A. 578.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 10, 1899.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—TRANSFER TO WIFE—CONSIDERATION.

Civ. Code, § 3442, provides that a transfer of property voluntarily by a party while insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency shall be fraudulent as to existing creditors. A wife bought with her own means a lot, and, as a part of the consideration, assumed an incumbrance thereon. Before the conveyance was executed, her husband agreed that, if the deed made him a co-grantee with his wife, he would pay the incumbrance. The deed was so made, but he failed to pay the incumbrance, and the wife paid it. Four days before he filed a petition in insolvency he executed a deed of the premises to his wife. Held that, when the wife paid the incumbrance, it created an implied obligation on her husband's part to pay her the amount thereof, and his deed to her was given in discharge thereof, and was not void as being without a valuable consideration.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Henry Greenawalt, assignee in insolvency, against Mary Mueller, to set aside a conveyance of real estate. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. Dunnigan, for appellant. Murphy & Gottschalk, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to have a certain conveyance of real property to defendant declared to be void, and for a decree adjudging the property to belong to the insolvent estate of defendant's husband. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and it found the following facts: That on December 6, 1893, defendant purchased with her own means lot 108 in Brook's addition to the city of Los Angeles for the sum of $500, "and as part of the consideration undertook and promised to pay off an incumbrance of two hundred and fifty dollars then resting on said lot"; that the deed, when first drawn, made her the sole grantee, but before delivery her husband requested that he be made one of the grantees, to which defendant consented, "upon his promise to pay off said incumbrance of two hundred and fifty dollars, whereupon his name was inserted and the deed delivered"; that he failed to pay said mortgage, and defendant thereupon paid the same "with means furnished to the defendant by a son of defendant, who gave his earnings to said defendant for the purpose of paying off said incumbrance, and thereby acquire an unincumbered home"; that defendant's husband never paid any part of the consideration for said lot; that defendant frequently requested him to execute a deed to her, for the reason that he had failed to keep his promise to pay off the mortgage, and because he had only a nominal interest in the lot, and that on January 14, 1896, he did execute to her a deed for said lot, conveying his interest therein, "the consideration named in said deed being ten dollars and love and affection"; that said deed was made within one month prior to the filing of petition in insolvency by Mueller, and after he had become insolvent, but at the time of said transfer "defendant did not know, or have any reasonable cause to believe, that her husband was insolvent, or was about to file his petition in insolvency, or that such conveyance to her was made with the view to prevent his property from coming to his assignees in insolvency," or to in any way hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or to evade any of the provisions of the insolvency laws of this state. The court gave judgment for defendant, from which, and from an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals.

The evidence is meager. Plaintiff's evidence consists of the deed of 1893 from defendant's grantor, and the testimony of the insolvent, Mueller, that he filed his petition in insolvency January 18, 1896, at which time, and when he conveyed to his wife, he had no property, and owed four hundred or five hundred dollars debts; that he knew when he made the deed that he could not pay these debts. This is all the evidence of plaintiff. The deed from Mueller to his wife is not given in the transcript. The evidence of defendant consists of the testimony of herself and her son, from which it appears that the findings of facts are amply supported; and, unless they fail to sustain the conclusion of law, the judgment and order must be affirmed.

Appellant claims that the deed of Mueller to his wife was absolutely void, and no testimony was necessary to establish that fact; citing Cook v. Cockins, 117 Cal. 140, 48 Pac. 1025. As the court found that Mueller was insolvent when he made the deed, and that he made it within one month of filing his petition in insolvency, the conveyance is void as to the then existing creditors if "made or given voluntarily, or without a valuable consideration" (section 3442, Civ. Code), or the transfer was made with a view to give a preference to Mrs. Mueller, and she had reasonable cause to believe that her husband was insolvent at the time, and that he made the transfer with a view to prevent his property from coming to his assignee in insolvency, or to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, and the transfer was made within one month before the filing of his petition in insolvency (Insolvent Act, § 59; St. 1895, p. 131). The evidence shows that defendant paid no money to her husband when he made the deed, and the recital of the deed is that the consideration was $10 and love and affection. But the evidence also shows that Mrs. Mueller originally bought the property, in 1893, with her own means, the consideration being $525, and the deed was made out to her as grantee. At the time of the purchase there was a mortgage indebtedness resting on the property, which she testified she assumed when she bought the property. Before the deed was delivered, her husband promised that, if he was made co-grantee in the deed with his wife, he would pay the mortgage indebtedness, and accordingly it was drawn, making Mueller and wife grantees, and it contained the following clause: "This deed is made subject to a mortgage now on said lot, given by M. H. Pollard, to secure a note of two hundred and fifty dollars (being part of the purchase price of said lot), with accrued interest on said note." Mueller failed to pay this mortgage debt, and Mrs. Mueller paid it, and finally conveyed his interest in the property to his wife, four days before filing his petition in insolvency. She testified that she had no knowledge of his being in debt, or that he was insolvent or contemplated insolvency, or had any intention to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors.

Respondent relies upon the cases involving the principles governing resulting trusts. It seems to us that the facts show that Mrs. Mueller was a creditor of her husband. When she paid the mortgage debt, there arose an implied obligation on his part to pay her the amount of that obligation. When he conveyed his interest in the property to her, it was in discharge of this obligation; and this was a valuable consideration for the deed (Saunderson v. Broadwell, 82 Cal. 132, 23 Pac. 36), and takes the case out of the operation of section 3442, supra. The evidence is, and the court found, that defendant had no knowledge of her husband's insolvency, and had no reasonable cause of believing him to be insolvent, or that he made the deed with intent to defraud his creditors. The case is thus taken out of the operation of the insolvent act. Saunderson v. Broadwell, supra; Bernheim v. Christal (Cal.) 18 Pac. 683; Haskin v. James, 96 Cal. 258, 31 Pac. 36. I advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

COUNTY BANK OF SAN LUIS OBISPO v.
GREENBERG et al. (L. A. 600.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 22, 1899.)

PLEADING—BANKS—OVERDRAFTS—BILLS AND NOTES—INSTRUCTIONS—JUDGMENT.

1. Where the amended complaint on a note given to secure an overdraft showed the existence of an overdraft in excess of the note at the time the action was brought, and that no part of either the note or the overdraft had been paid, a demurrer to such complaint was properly overruled.

2. Where a note was given to secure an overdraft, and when the note was sued on the overdraft exceeded the value of the note and interest, judgment should be rendered for the value of the note and interest only.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 447, providing that the due execution of a written instrument sued on is admitted unless the answer denying same is verified, it was not error, where a copy of a note was set out in the amended complaint, and the answer was not verified, to give an instruction that the answer admitted the execution of the note.

4. It was not error to refuse an instruction setting forth the rate of interest to be charged, in the absence of a special agreement, where the action was on a note given to secure an overdraft, and there was no question but that the amount of the overdraft and legal interest thereon exceeded the amount of the note.

5. Where an action was brought on a note given to secure an overdraft, the amount of which had varied from time to time, but which was treated by the parties as one obligation, it was not error to refuse instructions based on the theory that there were several obligations between the parties.

6. Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that there can be but one action on a mortgage debt, does not bar a suit on a note given to secure the payment of an overdraft, where a suit to foreclose a mortgage given as security for the original obligation by one of the depositors had been previously brought.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by the County Bank of San Luis Obispo against Meyer Greenberg and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant B. Schwartz appeals. Reversed, with conditions.

Graves & Graves, for appellant. Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for respondent.

GRAY, C. The defendant Schwartz appeals from a judgment in plaintiff's favor and from an order denying a new trial. The case was here on a former appeal (Bank v. Greenberg, 116 Cal. 467, 48 Pac. 386), wherein will be found a statement of the facts.

1. On the return of the case to the trial court the complaint was amended so as to make it show that Greenberg Bros., between the making and delivery of the note on which the suit is based and the time it was due, March 5, 1895, had overdrawn their account with plaintiff to an amount considerably in excess of the note, that said note was given to secure said overdraft, and that no part of said overdraft had been paid. This amendment cured the defect in the complaint for which the judgment was reversed on the former appeal. The complaint, as thus amended, showed the existence of the overdraft at the time the action was brought, that no part of either the note or overdraft had been paid, and clearly showed a liability of Schwartz to plaintiff for the full face value of the note. There is, therefore, no merit in the argument that the demurrer to the amended complaint should have been sustained.

2. The overdraft, with interest at the legal rate, after giving proper credit for the several payments thereon, exceeds the amount due on the note on the date of the rendition of the verdict, November 19, 1897. The note was dated March 5, 1894, and was given for $5,000, with interest at 10 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, and, if not so paid, to be added to the principal, and bear like interest. According to its terms, there was due on the note on November 19, 1897, $7,210.07, and the verdict should have been limited to this amount. The judgment is therefore $148.55 in excess of the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled at the date of its entry.

3. The refusal of the court to give instruction No. 8, setting forth the rate of interest to be charged in the absence of a special agreement, could not injure defendant in any way, for the reason that plaintiff's action was based on a written obligation, and he was entitled to recover the face value of the note, if the overdraft, with interest thereon, reached that amount; and there is no question on the evidence that it did reach that amount, even if we allow interest on the overdraft at no more than the legal rate. There is no specification in the record that the verdict is contrary to evidence for having allowed interest at the legal rate on the overdraft. Indeed, appellant seems to have proceeded at the trial on the theory that such interest was to be allowed. His eighth instruction and second specification of particulars indicate this, and render it unnecessary to decide the point made in the concluding paragraph of appellant's brief.

4. The instruction that the answer of the defendants admits the due execution by all of them of the note sued on was not error. A copy of the note was set out in the amended complaint, and the answer was not verified. The genuineness and due execution of the instrument are therefore deemed admitted. Code Civ. Proc. § 447.

5. Instructions 6 and 7 offered by appellant and refused by the court are inapplicable to the undisputed facts of the case. There were no "several obligations" from Greenberg Bros. to plaintiff, as is assumed in these instructions. Greenberg Bros. had but one obligation at the plaintiff's bank, and that was the overdraft that the note sued on was given to secure. All that was paid into the bank by the firm was paid on that overdraft, and all that was drawn out was added to it. The amount of the overdraft varied from time to time, no doubt, but the parties treated it as one concrete obligation, and so it should be treated on the trial of the case. It was held on the former appeal that the note was given "to secure whatever overdraft might exist on March 5, 1895, not exceeding the amount of the obligation and accrued interest thereon, * * * and contemplated continued transactions between them and the bank." The amount of the overdraft was the question for the jury to determine, and that was to be fixed by subtracting all that had been paid into the bank from all that had been drawn out, giving such credits on account of interest as the law or the agreement between the parties might indicate. These instructions, therefore, based on the theory of several obligations between the parties, could only confuse and mislead, and were properly refused.

6. The mortgage that was foreclosed at the suit of plaintiff herein against Meyer Greenberg was not given to secure the obligation upon which the present action is based. To quote from appellant's brief, "The makers of the note are sureties or guarantors for the payment of the overdraft," and the mortgage, by its terms, was limited to a security for the performance of the original obligation of the Greenbergs to pay this overdraft, and in no sense was it a security for the performance of the collateral personal obligation of appellant on the note given to secure the same overdraft. Hence we say that the previous suit on the mortgage given to secure the overdraft was no bar to this suit on the note given as collateral security for the same overdraft. Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that "there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage," is inapplicable to the case in hand, and therefore instructions 4 and 5 were properly refused. These views find support in the following well-considered cases: Vandewater v. McRae, 27 Cal. 596; Bank v. Casaccia, 103 Cal. 641, 37 Pac. 648; Carver v. Steele, 116 Cal. 116, 47 Pac. 1007.

We advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to proceed to try the case anew, unless within 20 days after the filing of the remittitur in the court below the plaintiff shall file with the clerk of that court a written consent that the judgment be modified by striking out the amount therein awarded, and inserting in lieu thereof the sum of $7,210.07, and, on such consent being filed, it is ordered that the judgment be modified accordingly as of the date of the original judgment.

FRESNO MILLING CO. v. FRESNO CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. (S. F. 839.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 10, 1899.)
CONTRACTS—ACTION FOR BREACH—DAMAGES.

A canal company was to supply plaintiff with water from its canal, constructed on a public highway, but was not to be liable for damages for nondelivery of water if it was lawfully "restrained from such delivery." The county supervisors filed in the canal, which was never reconstructed. Plaintiff sued the company for damages for breach of its contract. Held that, as the company was to supply the water from the particular canal so long as it was permitted to do so, it was not liable.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by the Fresno Milling Company against the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. P. Ryan, for appellant. F. H. Short and Geo. E. Church, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff, as its name implies, is a milling corporation, engaged in the manufacture of flour in the city of Fresno. Defendant is a corporation engaged in the distribution and sale of water under the laws of the state. Plaintiff sues to recover damages for the breach of two certain contracts for the sale of water made by defendant with plaintiff's predecessors in interest. Appellant contends that the right to the water was appurtenant to the mill site, and passed to it by mesne conveyances from the original contracting parties. By the first of these contracts the defendant agreed, under certain limitations and restrictions, to furnish sufficient water to "carry three runs of stones." By the second contract, made with one Deming, and by Deming assigned to the plaintiff, the defendant, under similar limitations and restrictions, sold "all the water that may be required, not exceeding at any time eighty-three and one-third cubic feet per second, to be supplied by and through the canal known as the 'Mill Ditch,' on Fresno street, in the town of Fresno, county of Fresno, state of California." It is insisted by appellant that under these contracts it is entitled to $83\frac{1}{3}$ cubic feet of water per second, and so much more as might be necessary to carry three runs of stones, estimated to be about 52 cubic feet of water per second. By respondent it is maintained that the later agreement for $83\frac{1}{3}$ cubic feet provided for all the water to which, under any circumstances, the plaintiff was entitled. Regardless of the determination of the trial court upon this matter, we think its consideration unnecessary here, for the terms of the two contracts upon the question hereinafter to be considered are well-nigh identical. Plaintiff does not seek to have the water which the defendant for a long time admittedly has ceased to supply to the mill restored, but asks merely for damages for its failure to supply the water down to a given date. If, under the facts and under the terms of the contracts, plaintiff is not entitled to damages, the quantum of water ceases to be an important consideration.

Under the evidence, it appears that the defendant contracted to supply the water from an open canal constructed in part upon a county highway, and in part upon a public street of the city of Fresno; that in October, 1891, the road overseer of the county, acting under direction of the supervisors, went with men, teams, plows, and scrapers, and filled in the canal upon the county highway, and leveled the road to its grade. Thereafter that portion of the canal within the city was likewise filled, and its character as a canal destroyed. Cross actions for injunctions were brought by the canal company to restrain the overseer from destroying its canal, by the road overseer to restrain the canal company from its alleged unlawful use of the highway, and by the city against the canal and milling company to abate the canal as a nuisance per se. The destruction of the canal has never been repaired, and no water since the date of the destruction has been supplied to plaintiff's mill. The first contract contained the following covenant: "It is understood and agreed that the party of the first part [the Fresno Canal and Irrigation Company] shall be liable to no damage claimed by the party of the second part hereto for nondelivery of water as herein agreed, in case such first party shall be lawfully or forcibly restrained from such delivery." The second contract contained the following: "It is covenanted and agreed that said party of the first part [the Fresno Canal and Irrigation Company] shall not be responsible for deficiency of water caused by drought, insufficiency of water in the river, hostile diversion or obstruction, forcible entry, temporary damage by flood, or other accident, but shall use all due diligence in restoring and protecting the flow of water in said canal."

The court found "that since the execution of said contract the defendant had duly, faithfully, and fully performed each and every one of the terms, conditions, and provisions of the contract upon its part to be kept or performed, wherever the same could be done or performed by the defendant, and when not prevented by obstruction or force that could not be overcome by the use of due diligence and every possible diligence on the part of the defendant." This finding is assailed, and the appellant demands the application to these contracts of the rule declared in Klauber v. Car Co., 95 Cal. 353, 30 Pac. 555, where the sound principle is enunciated that if one has unconditionally contracted to do a particular thing, and seeks relief because of the impossibility of performance, the impossibility of performance must be shown to attach to the thing to be done, and not to him alone who has contracted to do it. It must be an impossibilitas rei, as distinguished from an impossibilitas facti. But in this case the defendant made no unconditional promise to supply the water, but hedged its liability with the covenants above quoted. That there was a hostile obstruction sufficient to prevent its supplying the water is shown, not only from the physical acts of the authorities and their abettors in filling the canal, but also by the injunctions under which both this plaintiff and defendant were placed. But to this appellant replies that it was the duty of the defendant to have maintained a suitable ditch or canal, and one which would not have interfered with the public's right upon the highways, and that, if it had so done, there would have been no interference with its use of the water. But it may be answered that, viewing the contract in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, and bearing in mind further that defendant's agreement went but to the supplying water from a given named canal, it is reasonable to conclude, as the trial court must have done, that defendant was to supply the water from this particular canal, so long as it was permitted to do so, and that it was not within the contemplation of the parties that the entire construction of the canal should be changed, as would have been necessary, to prevent either an anticipated interference with its use, or to enable it to continue to supply the water should such interference take place. Still further it appears that, after leaving the main canal of the company, the water used by the mill was conveyed by a smaller canal,—the mill ditch,—itself constructed upon the public highway by the plaintiff, and that, still upon the public highway, were constructed and maintained by plaintiff certain necessary head works to enable it to use the water. Plaintiff itself was under injunction restraining it from using the street for the indicated purposes, and its head works had been destroyed; and it is argued with much force that, if the defendant had succeeded in restoring the flow of water to its main canal, water would still have been unavailable to the plaintiff, by reason of the destruction of its works, and the disability of the injunction under which it labored, and that therefore it was suffering no damage, since it could not have used the water even if the defendant had supplied it.

As, under the uncontroverted facts applied to the contracts as thus construed, the plaintiff would not be entitled to a recovery, the other points made upon this appeal need not be considered. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HINES et al. v. MILLER et al. (Sac. 538.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 16, 1899.)
MECHANICS' LIENS—PERSONAL JUDGMENT—DEFICIENCY.

A judgment foreclosing mechanics' liens on a mine, which provides that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiffs in certain specified sums, and that the liens of plaintiffs be foreclosed against the defendants, and that the property be sold by the sheriff, and, if the proceeds be not sufficient to pay plaintiffs in full, then, on the coming in of the sheriff's return on such sale, the clerk shall docket the judgment for such deficiency against the defendants, is not a personal judgment except for such deficiency as might be shown by the sheriff's return on the sale; and is not in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1194, providing that whenever, in the sale of the property subject to the lien, there is a deficiency of proceeds, judgment may be docketed for the deficiency as in actions for the foreclosure of mortgages.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county.

Action by William Hines and others against Frank Miller and others to foreclose mechanics' liens. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. E. Rogers, for appellants. Otis & Street, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Judgment was rendered against the appellants herein upon their default for failure to answer the complaint, and they have appealed therefrom upon the judgment roll. An appeal from the same judgment, taken by certain other defendants who had answered the complaint, was considered by this court (122 Cal. 517, 55 Pac. 401), and the judgment was affirmed. In the opinion then given, the character of the action is sufficiently stated, and need not be here repeated. The present appeal is urged upon the ground that under the provisions of section 1194, Code Civ. Proc., the court was not authorized to render a personal judgment against the defendants except for such deficiency as might appear from the sheriff's return after his sale of the property charged with the lien. That section provides: "Whenever in the sale of the property subject to the lien there is a deficiency of proceeds, judgment may be docketed for the deficiency in like manner and with like effect as in actions for the foreclosure of mortgages." A proper construction of the judgment in the present case shows that it does not violate the provisions of this section. After declaring "that judgment be, and the same is hereby, entered in favor of plaintiffs and against defendants" in certain specified sums, and "that the liens of the plaintiffs upon the mining claim be, and the same are hereby, foreclosed against the defendants," it directs that said property be sold by the sheriff in the manner provided by law, and, "if the amount derived from the sale of said property be not sufficient to pay each of the plaintiffs in full, then, upon the coming in of the return of the sheriff of said county on the said sale, the clerk of the court docket the judgment for such deficiency against the defendants" (naming them). Under these provisions there could be no judgment docketed against them until after a sale by the sheriff and his return showing a deficiency of proceeds. The judgment itself was not enforceable as a personal judgment against the appellants, except for such deficiency as might be shown upon such return. Mill Co. v. Center, 107 Cal. 193, 40 Pac. 334. See, also, Painter v. Painter, 98 Cal. 625, 33 Pac. 483; Kreling v. Kreling, 116 Cal. 458, 48 Pac. 383. The judgment, as entered, is within the allegations of the complaint, and it does not appear that any execution has issued upon the judgment, or that any judgment has been docketed against the appellants. It was necessary that the court should ascertain and determine the amount for which the defendants were liable to the plaintiffs, in order that it might be seen, when the sheriff's return came in, whether there would be a deficiency in the proceeds of the sale. This determination by the court was its "judgment" upon the allegations of the plaintiffs in that respect, and, under section 668, Code Civ. Proc., was properly entered by the clerk in the "judgment book." Section 1194, Id., is silent upon the "entering" of judgment, but provides for "docketing" the judgment for whatever deficiency there may be in the proceeds of the sale. The court properly allowed to the plaintiffs interest upon their claims. Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 224, 39 Pac. 758; Macomber v. Bigelow (Cal.) 56 Pac. 449. The judgment is affirmed.

VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL — ACTIONS — CONSOLIDATION — EFFECT — DEPOSITIONS — REVIEW — OBJECTIONS — CREDITORS' SUIT — FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — HUSBAND AND WIFE — EVIDENCE.

1. An order vacating an order of dismissal, unappealed from, operates to annul the entry in the clerk's register showing dismissal, as well as the judgment of dismissal.

2. The entry of an order of voluntary dismissal by the clerk of the trial court in the form of a final judgment of dismissal, as directed by an order of plaintiff's counsel, is not judgment of dismissal, and is unauthorized.

3. Where two actions were consolidated by an order reciting that the parties beneficially interested therein were the same, to which no exception was taken, it was error to exclude a deposition taken in one of them on the trial of the issues involved in the other.

4. An order consolidating actions which the court had jurisdiction to make is binding on all the parties to the actions until vacated or reversed.

5. Objections to the competency of a deposition, not made in the trial court, cannot be considered on appeal.

6. The right to maintain a creditors' suit to subject moneys, alleged to have been fraudulently transferred by a debtor to his wife, to the payment of a judgment against him, does not depend on the validity of a lien attempted to be created by garnishment in aid of execution before the commencement of the action.

7. Where a judgment debtor's insolvency was admitted by the pleadings, and the evidence proved that he transferred money to his wife without valuable consideration, after an order of examination in supplemental proceedings had been served on him, a finding that the transfer was not fraudulent was erroneous.

In bank. Reversed.

For opinion in department, see 57 Pac. 73.

HARRISON, J. The appellants recovered a judgment in the superior court against the respondent Charles Rossi, June 19, 1894, for the sum of $1,643 and costs, and thereafter, under proceedings supplementary to execution thereon, an examination of the judgment debtor and of his wife, Lena Rossi, was had before a referee appointed therefor by the court. At this examination it was shown that about the 28th day of February, 1895, the judgment debtor had given to his wife moneys amounting to $1,652.19, which he transferred to her from the Bank of Central California, and that on March 1st she had deposited this money with the Farmers' Bank of Fresno, and received from it therefor its certificate of deposit, negotiable in form and payable to her order. The order for the examination was made February 23d, and an examination was had on February 28th, and again on March 2d. After the examination upon the latter date, the referee made his report to the court; and thereupon the court made an order authorizing the plaintiffs to bring an action against said Lena Rossi for the recovery of said sum of $1,652.19, and at the same time prohibited and restrained her and the Farmers' Bank of Fresno from making any transfer or disposition of the money until its further order in the premises. In pursuance of this order of the court, the present action was brought against Lena Rossi and her husband and the Farmers' Bank of Fresno. Rossi and his wife answered the complaint, claiming that the certificate of deposit and the money represented thereby was the property of Lena, and denying that it was the property of Charles, or subject to be applied upon the plaintiffs' judgment, and also alleging that immediately upon its issuance and delivery to Lena it had been transferred and delivered by her, and that they had neither of them any knowledge whatever as to its ownership or possession. No answer to the complaint appears to have been made by the bank. July 11, 1895, William Rigby, Jr., commenced an action against the Farmers' Bank of Fresno to recover the amount of the above certificate of deposit, and alleged in his complaint its indorsement in blank by Lena Rossi, and delivery to one Scott, and subsequent indorsement by Scott to the order of M. Ehrman & Co., and by Ehrman & Co. to the order of Rigby, the latter indorsement being "without recourse." Upon motion of the defendant in this action, the court made an order, November 7, 1895, under which the bank deposited in court the moneys represented by the certificate of deposit, and directed that the plaintiffs in the action of Wolters against Rossi be substituted as defendants for and in the place of the bank, and discharging the bank from all liability to them for and on account of said certificate of deposit. The plaintiffs in the original action thereupon answered the complaint in Rigby's action. The action of Rigby against the substituted defendants was brought on for trial January 23, 1896, and when nearly completed was continued for further hearing until January 29th. January 27th Rigby filed with the clerk an order entitled, "W. Rigby, Jr., vs. Farmers' Bank of Fresno (a Corporation)," as follows: "The clerk of said court is hereby authorized and directed to dismiss the above-entitled action, and to enter in the judgment docket the said judgment of dismissal." Thereupon the clerk made the following entry in his register: "In accordance with dismissal filed herein by counsel for plaintiff, I, T. G. Hart, clerk of said superior court, do hereby order, adjudge, and decree that said action be, and the same is hereby, dismissed." A document containing the same language was also indorsed, "Filed January 27, 1896. T. G. Hart, Clerk, by E. T. Wolcott, Deputy Clerk." Afterwards the substituted defendants moved the court to set aside and vacate this dismissal, and, after hearing the proofs upon this motion, the court made an order, March 23d, vacating and setting the same aside. March 25th these substituted defendants moved the court that this action be consolidated with the one brought by them against Rossi et al., and at the same time Rigby made a cross motion for the dismissal of his action. The motions were heard together, and on March 28th the court made an order in which, after reciting that it "finds the facts to be that the parties to, and beneficially interested in, the above-entitled action, are one and the same, and might have been joined," it denied the motion of Rigby to dismiss his action, and ordered that the motion of Wolters and others to consolidate said actions "be, and the same is hereby, granted, and said actions are accordingly hereby consolidated." The actions thus consolidated came on for trial May 17th, at which time Rigby objected to any further hearing or proceeding in the case brought by him, "for the reason that the case has been, at the request of the plaintiff, by written stipulation and order of the clerk, dismissed," and objected to the court taking any further proceedings in the case, of any kind, character, or description. The court sustained this objection, to which ruling the substituted defendants excepted, and thereupon the court proceeded to the hearing of the case of Wolters against Rossi and others. Upon the conclusion of the trial the court found that the certificate of deposit, from the date of its issue and delivery until the commencement of the action, was not in the possession or control of the defendant Lena Rossi, or her husband, or either of them, and that the ownership had been transferred to other persons, and that at the time the action was commenced it was outstanding, duly indorsed by the defendant Lena. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the defendants, from which, and an order denying a new trial, the plaintiffs have appealed.

1. The action of the court in sustaining the objection of Rigby to any further hearing or proceeding in the case in which he was plaintiff was erroneous, and the ground upon which he placed his motion therefor was untenable. Whatever effect the act of the clerk upon Rigby's order for the dismissal might have had upon the action, if no order had been made in reference thereto, it was completely annulled by the subsequent order of the court vacating it. The action was still pending in the court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049), and, even if a judgment had been entered upon the plaintiffs' order, the court had jurisdiction to entertain the motion of the defendant, and to make an order setting aside the order of the clerk. "Such an order, however erroneous, is not void. It is an order after judgment, is made in the exercise of the general jurisdiction of the court, and, if not appealed from, the order operates permanently to vacate and annul the entry in the clerk's register as well as the judgment." Page v. Superior Court, 76 Cal. 375, 18 Pac. 385. In Page v. Page, 77 Cal. 83, 19 Pac. 183, it was said: "The dismissal is not complete, in the sense that the control of the court over the cause is terminated, until the judgment is entered." In that case, as in this, there had been an entry of dismissal in the clerk's register, but no judgment had been entered thereon. The only entry of dismissal herein is that made by the clerk in his register, which was also filed by him on the same day. The clerk had no authority to "order, adjudge, and decree that said action be, and the same is hereby, dismissed," and this entry by him in his register was not an entry of judgment. The "register" is what its name purports,—“a book in which the clerk is to enter the title of the action, with brief notes under it, from time to time, of all papers filed and proceedings had therein” (Code Civ. Proc. § 1052); but judgments must be entered in the “judgment book” (Code Civ. Proc. § 668). The judgment to be entered upon the order of dismissal is a judgment of the court, although it is to be entered by the clerk.

In the present case the parties appeared before the court at the hearing of the motion, and upon the evidence offered in its support the court made an order vacating the dismissal. No appeal was taken from this order, but two days afterwards Rigby, in apparent recognition of its force, moved in open court for an order to dismiss his action, and the court, after a hearing thereon, made a further order denying his motion. When the cause came on for trial, and Rigby made the above objection, both of these orders were in full force, and the defendants were entitled to a trial and determination of the issues presented in the case. The court, therefore, erred in refusing to proceed with such trial.

This error was made the basis of another error at a subsequent stage of the proceedings. At the same time that the court denied the motion of Rigby for a dismissal of his action it made an order, as before stated, consolidating that action with the action brought by the appellants herein against Rossi and others. Upon the trial the appellants offered in evidence a deposition of Rigby, and also one of Ehrman, to which objection was made on the ground that they were taken in the action brought by Rigby, and not in the action brought by the appellants. Upon this objection the court excluded the deposition. The materiality of the evidence therein is not questioned, since it tended to sustain the allegation of the appellants that the certificate of deposit in question was at all times under the control of the defendant Lena. The order consolidating the actions had, however, the effect to destroy the force of the above objection, and the court should have received the depositions in evidence. By making this order, the court determined that the actions were “upon causes of action which might have been joined” (Code Civ. Proc. § 1048), and after the consolidation had been made it was immaterial in which action the depositions had been originally taken. In the order itself the court “finds the facts to be that the parties to, and beneficially interested in, the above-entitled action, are one and the same, and might have been joined.” Whether the court was justified in making this order, or whether it erred therein, could not be considered at the trial of the action, nor is the question open to review here. The order was one which the court had jurisdiction to make, and, until it was vacated or set aside, was binding upon all the parties to the two actions. No exception was taken to it, nor was any motion made to set it aside, and the court should have recognized its effect, and admitted the depositions when offered.

The objections made by the respondents in their brief herein, that there was no preliminary proof of the facts entitling the depositions to be received instead of oral testimony of the witnesses, and that no opportunity had been given to the Rossis to cross-examine the witnesses, were not made before the superior court, and are not before us for consideration. If in fact the parties to, and beneficially interested in, the actions are one and the same, as found by the court in its order, this objection was without merit. See Briggs v. Briggs, 80 Cal. 253, 22 Pac. 334.

2. February 28, 1895, the plaintiffs caused a second execution to be issued upon their judgment against Rossi, and on March 2d, by virtue of this writ, all the money then belonging to Charles Rossi in the possession or under the control of the Farmers' Bank of Fresno was attached under process of garnishment. It is urged by the respondents that, as the court found that at the time of the service of this garnishment upon the bank the certificate of deposit was not in the possession or under the control of the defendant Lena, but had been indorsed by her and was outstanding, and the ownership thereof had been transferred to other persons, the plaintiffs acquired no lien upon the moneys represented thereby. This finding, however, is made without reference to the evidence contained in the depositions which were excluded. Such excluded evidence would tend to show that the certificate was under the control of the defendant Lena at all times prior to the commencement of the plaintiffs' action, and we cannot assume what the finding of the court would have been had this evidence been admitted. There is, moreover, an uncertainty in the findings of the court upon this point. In paragraph 10 of the complaint, it is alleged that the certificate of deposit from the date of its issue and delivery until the commencement of this action was in the possession and control of the defendants Lena and Charles, and the ownership thereof not transferred by them, or either of them, to any other person. The court finds that all the allegations contained in paragraph 10 of the complaint are true, but it also finds directly contrary to the above allegation in this paragraph. The plaintiffs' action is in the nature of a creditors' bill, for the purpose of subjecting the moneys claimed to have been given by their judgment debtor to his wife, in fraud of his creditors, to the payment of their judgment, and their right of action does not depend upon the validity of a lien created by the above garnishment. Moreover, any objection to the validity of the lien created by the garnishment of this money in the possession of the bank would more naturally come from the bank than from the payee of the certificate, especially in view of the allegation in her answer that the certificate was, immediately upon its issue and delivery to her, transferred and delivered by her, and that she has no knowledge whatever as to its ownership or possession. The bank, however, has paid the money into court, and an order has been made discharging it from all liability thereon to the holder of the certificate or to the appellants herein.

3. The finding of the court that the transfer of the money to Lena from her husband was not in fraud of the rights of any of his creditors, or with any intent on the part of Charles to hinder, delay, or defraud any of his creditors, was not justified by the evidence. The allegations in the complaint of the insolvency of Charles, and of his indebtedness to the plaintiffs at the time of this transfer, were not denied in the answer. The complaint also alleged that the money was voluntarily given by Charles to his wife, Lena, "without any consideration, legal and valid, as against his creditors, but as a gift pure and simple." In their answer the defendants deny "that the money represented by said certificate of deposit was given by said C. Rossi for a valuable consideration to said Lena Rossi, and deny that said money was in any manner given by the said C. Rossi to the said Lena Rossi without any consideration therefor, or as a gift pure and simple, or otherwise." The court finds "that the money represented by said certificate of deposit was transferred and given to Lena Rossi by C. Rossi," but does not find the consideration upon which the transfer was made, or whether it was made upon any consideration, or was voluntary. The denial of the defendants that the transfer was for a "valuable" consideration, coupled with their denial that the money was given "without any consideration," left the court at liberty to find that there was a valid consideration for the transfer. The testimony did not authorize the court to find that the money was given by the husband to the wife upon any other consideration than that of his love and affection for her, and this testimony, taken with the admission of insolvency and indebtedness, was insufficient to authorize the court to find that the transfer was without any intent to defraud his creditors. The declaration in section 3442, Civ. Code, that the question of fraudulent intent is one of fact, and not of law, is subordinate to the rule that a finding of the fact must be supported by the testimony in the case; and the further provision in the section, as it stood at that time, that the transfer cannot be adjudged fraudulent solely on the ground that it was not made for a valuable consideration, is a negative, rather than a positive, provision. It has never been held in this state under this provision that a fraudulent intent should not be inferred from the absence of a valuable consideration, when coupled with other circumstances suggestive of fraud. In Judson v. Lyford, 84 Cal. 505, 24 Pac. 286, it appeared that, while the grantor was heavily indebted to the plaintiff, he made a voluntary conveyance of his property for the benefit of his children, and that he had at that time no other property. The superior court found that there was no fraudulent intent, but this court reversed that finding upon the ground that, under these facts, the inference was irresistible that he intended to place the property beyond the reach of the plaintiff's judgment. This case was referred to in Windhaus v. Bootz, 92 Cal. 617, 28 Pac. 557, and was distinguished from that upon the ground that "two all-controlling facts" appeared therein, viz. "defendant conveyed away all his property, and at the same time was practically insolvent." In Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 286, 26 Pac. 873, 13 L. R. A. 576, the superior court found that at the time of the conveyance Bray was ignorant of the fact that he was insolvent, but made no finding upon the question of intent, and for this reason granted a new trial. This order was affirmed here upon the ground that there was no irresistible inference that his intent was fraudulent under the finding that he did not know that he was insolvent at the time he made the conveyance. When the same transaction again came before the court in Knox v. Moses, 104 Cal. 502, 38 Pac. 318, the circumstances attending the transaction were held to fully support the finding of a want of fraudulent intent.

In view of these admissions in the pleadings and findings of the court, and the further showing that the transfer was made after the order of examination had been served upon the judgment debtor, it must be held that the inference is irresistible that the transfer to Lena was with the intent to hinder and delay the plaintiffs in the collection of their judgment. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

OPTION—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—MUTUALITY OF REMEDY—UNCERTAINTY—CONTINUED SUPERVISION—THIRD PARTY'S RIGHTS.

1. Defendants, owning, with another, certain mines, agreed that plaintiff should have 30 days' option on a half interest therein; that the option should be void if plaintiff should fail to exercise it within the time, and, in case he accepted, he should spend $10,000 in opening or developing the properties and in building a stamp quartz mill, and should have the right to form as many corporations as he should deem proper, the profits from stock of which or money received to be equally divided between the parties; that, if plaintiff should fail to begin active operations within 30 days, the contract should be void, and, in case plaintiff failed to fully carry out the contract, all money expended by him should be forfeited, and the properties returned to defendants. Within 30 days plaintiff spent $2,000 on said properties, and notified defendants that he elected to carry out said contract, but defendants refused to allow him to do so, and refused to perform their portion of the contract. Held, that since plaintiff was not bound to do anything under the option, and hence specific performance could not be decreed against him, he was not entitled to specific performance against defendants, there being no mutuality of the remedy.

2. It being uncertain as to which of the properties was to be opened or developed, as to which the stamp mill was to be erected on, and the limit within which the $10,000 should be expended in developing mines or within which the mills should be erected, specific performance could not be decreed, for uncertainty of the contract.

3. Specific performance will not be decreed where it involves a continuous and long series of acts of supervision requiring special knowledge, skill, and repeated examinations and new directions.

4. Where each of three parties owns an undivided one-third interest in mining properties, and only two of them agree to convey a half interest in such mines to another, he cannot enforce specific performance, since that remedy would unwarrantably interfere with the rights of the third owner, not a party to the contract.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Action by O. B. Stanton against John Singleton and another. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Rothchild & Ach and J. W. Ahrens, for appellant. J. A. Haralson and Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and gave judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The action is brought to compel the specific performance by the two defendants named of a certain alleged contract, a copy of which is annexed to the complaint, marked "Exhibit A," and made a part thereof. The contract is as follows: "Agreement made and entered into this 22d day of June, 1895, between John Singleton, F. M. Mooers, and C. A. Burcham, of Kern county, state of California, parties of the first part, and O. B. Stanton, of Bakersfield, state of California, party of the second part. Whereas, the parties of the first part are owners by location of a certain mineral tract located in the Summit mining district, Kern county, California, and designated and described as follows: [Here follows a description of the property, which consists of 13 different quartz and placer claims.] And being desirous of obtaining capital to work the same, hereby agree with party of second part that for and in consideration of one dollar in hand to them paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, agree to give party of second part thirty days' option of a one-half interest of the above-enumerated claims, now owned by them, in consideration of the party of the second part agreeing to spend—First, ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00) in opening and developing said property; second, in erecting a ten-stamp quartz mill, modern in every particular, the stamps to weigh not less than seven hundred pounds, or the equivalent, as may be found the most desirous to work the ores. The parties of the first part hereby agree that, this contract having been entered into in good faith, any locations that they may make or cause to be made in the said district shall be made for the joint benefit of both parties. The party of the second part shall have the privilege to incorporate as many companies as he may deem fit: provided, always, that any money, stock, or other consideration that he may obtain as profit shall be divided equally between the parties hereto. The parties of the first part hereby agree that the party of the second part shall have the privilege any time within six months from the date of this instrument to purchase the aforesaid property for the sum of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000.00). The essence of this contract being time, it is mutually agreed that, should the party of the second part not commence active operations within thirty days, this contract shall be null and void. The party of the second part hereby agrees that all stock delivered to parties of the first part shall be free and nonassessable, and, further, if he should fail to fully carry out this contract, that all moneys paid or expended by him shall be forfeited, and the full properties returned to the parties of the first part. [Signed] John Singleton, Party of the First Part. Frederick M. Mooers, Party of the First Part. O. B. Stanton, Party of the Second Part."

It will be observed that this contract, although purporting to be signed by the two respondents and C. A. Burcham, was not signed by the latter; and at the hearing in department (54 Pac. 587), while other points were briefly noticed by counsel for respondents, the stress of their argument was on the point that the contract was void because not signed by Burcham, and in the opinion of the court then rendered that point was alone considered. But at the hearing in bank, while that point was also urged, it was elaborately argued by counsel for respondents that, even if it be held that the contract was sufficiently executed without the signature of Burcham, still it was in its nature a contract which a court of equity will not decree to be specifically performed; and we think that this contention must be sustained. The action is based upon the contract, which was made a part of the complaint; and, of course, the meaning which appears on its face cannot be changed by any mere matter of averment in the pleading. There is one provision in the contract to the effect that the party of the second part shall have the privilege within six months "to purchase the aforesaid property" for $500,000, but whether the "aforesaid property" means the whole of the mining property described or only an undivided half thereof, we do not understand that this clause of the contract is particularly involved in this action. The contract gives to the appellant "thirty days' option of a one-half interest of the above-enumerated claims" upon the consideration—First, that he shall spend $10,000 in opening and developing the property; and, second, shall erect a 10-stamp quartz mill, "modern in every particular, the stamps to weigh not less than seven hundred pounds, or the equivalent, as may be found the most desirous to work the ores." If this means anything it means that he should have 30 days in which to determine whether he would spend the $10,000 and erect a mill, and thereby become entitled to an undivided one-half of the property. It is averred in the complaint that appellant notified the respondents within the 30 days that he elected to perform his part of the contract, "and to thereby acquire the undivided one-half interest"; that he then and there proceeded to expend and did expend $2,000 in pursuance of the contract; and that afterwards, on or about the 9th day of July, A. D. 1895, the defendants informed him that they would not be bound by the contract, and repudiated it, and have ever since refused, and do now refuse, to be bound by the terms thereof, or to permit plaintiff to continue the performance of labor on the property, or to expend the remainder of the $10,000, or to erect a mill, and refuse to allow the appellant to enter upon the claims, or to do work thereon, and have refused to execute to him a deed to the one-half interest. The prayer of the complaint is that the respondents be let into possession of the premises for the purpose of performing the work under the contract, and for the purpose of erecting the mill, and of otherwise performing and carrying out the covenants of the contract, and that defendants be restrained from interfering with the work of plaintiff, "and that upon the completion of said labor and the expenditure of said money and the erection of said 10-stamp quartz mill the plaintiff be decreed to be the owner of one-half interest in and to the premises set forth in said complaint," and that defendants execute a conveyance to him of an undivided one-half interest, etc. Nothing is said about the tender under the $500,000 clause, nor is any relief asked under it; so that the only asserted right to a decree of specific performance is that based on the $10,000 and quartz mill clause. Of course, there is, on the face of the instrument, no mutuality of contract, for appellant does not promise in it to do anything. It is contended, however, that afterwards his notice to respondents of his election to proceed under the contract made it mutual, under the principle announced in Sayward v. Houghton, 119 Cal. 545, 51 Pac. 853, and 52 Pac. 44, and some other cases cited; but, with our views of the case, it is not necessary to discuss the applicability of that principle here. Neither is it necessary to consider the point (which is certainly not without merit) that the contract itself is void for all purposes on account of its ambiguity and uncertainty. In our opinion, the contract is one which does not allow a mutuality of the remedy of a decree of specific performance, and is not, in its nature, a contract which a court of equity would undertake to enforce specifically at the suit of respondents; and it is settled law that a contract will not be specifically enforced unless its character be such that either party to it could have it specifically enforced as against the other. Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 404, and cases there cited; Wakeham v. Barker, 82 Cal. 46, 22 Pac. 1131; Anson v. Townsend, 73 Cal. 418, 15 Pac. 49; King v. Gildersleeve, 79 Cal. 504, 21 Pac. 961; Banbury v. Arnold, 91 Cal. 608, 27 Pac. 934; Pom. Cont. (2d Ed.) § 162. In Cooper v. Pena, supra, the court states the principle in this language: "The remedy must be mutual as well as the obligation, and, where the contract is of such a nature that it cannot be specifically enforced as to one of the parties, equity will not enforce it against the other." Therefore, waiving all other questions, if the obligations of appellant as a party to the contract (assuming that he incurred any) are not such as would be specifically enforced by a court of equity at the suit of respondents, then, under the principle and authorities above stated and referred to, this action cannot be maintained. And it is quite clear that his obligations were of that character.

Appellant contends that Cooper v. Pena, supra, which is a leading case on the general subject, and has been frequently cited, should not be taken as authority here, because the obligation of plaintiff there was for expressly designated personal services. But Cooper v. Pena is cited mainly to the point that there must be "a mutuality of remedy"; and, if there be not such mutuality,—no matter from what cause,—the principle declared in that case applies. Moreover, it is difficult to see any difference in kind between the obligation of the appellant here and that which was held not specifically enforceable in Cooper v. Pena; for "opening and developing" a mine, and "erecting" such a quartz mill as is described in the contract, certainly involved to some degree personal skilled services, knowledge, judgment, and skill, and a repose of confidence. But, apart from the foregoing consideration, the remedy of specific performance would not lie against appellant in the case at bar for want of certainty and exactness in the contract. A contract expressed in very general terms might not be void for uncertainty, and might be the basis of an action for damages for its breach, while it would be entirely too loose and inexact to warrant a decree for specific performance. In Pom. Cont. (2d Ed.) § 159, it is said: "A greater amount or degree of certainty is required in the terms of an agreement which is to be specifically executed in equity than is necessary in a contract which is to be the basis of an action at law for damages. An action at law is founded upon mere nonperformance by a defendant, and this negative conclusion can often be established without determining all the terms of the agreement with exactness. The suit in equity is wholly an affirmative proceeding. The mere fact of nonperformance is not enough. Its object is to procure a performance by the defendant, and this demands a clear, definite, and precise understanding of all the terms. They must be exactly ascertained before their performance can be enforced." Now, in the case at bar the property to which the contract relates consists of a large number of mining claims of different kinds,—quartz and placer; and a provision for "opening and developing said property" is certainly too general and indefinite to be specifically enforced by an equity decree. Moreover, the provision for "erecting a ten-stamp quartz mill," etc., does not provide where it is to be erected,—not even that it shall be on "said property"; but, assuming its meaning to be that the mill shall be on some part of one of the large number of mining claims described in the contract, still, with that meaning, it is widely uncertain and indefinite as to the place where it was to be erected; and the place of the location of the mill would probably be a matter of very great importance. Again, there is no provision as to the limit within which the $10,000 should be expended in developing the mine, or within which the mill should be erected. The only provision touching that subject is that the appellant should "commence active operations"—whatever that may mean—within 30 days. In all these respects the contract is too loose and vague to justify a decree of specific performance.

Moreover, a court will not undertake to frame a decree of specific performance where it involves a continuous and long series of acts of supervision requiring special knowledge and skill, and repeated examinations and new directions. In Pom. Cont. (2d Ed.) § 312, the author states the law on this point—and he cites a multitude of authorities to sustain the text—as follows: "Finally, contracts which, by their terms, stipulate for a succession of acts, whose performance cannot be consummated by one transaction, but will be continuous, and require protracted supervision and direction, with the exercise of special knowledge, skill, or judgment in such oversight,—such as agreements to repair or to build, to construct works, to build or carry on railways, mines, quarries, and other analogous undertakings,—are not, as a general rule, specifically enforced." The rule is aptly stated, and authorities cited, in Clarno v. Grayson, 30 Or. 144, 46 Pac. 426, which, in its leading features, is much like the case at bar. In that case the plaintiff claimed under an option to purchase a mine, with the right to work it until a certain time, and then buy it at a certain price. He was ousted by the other party before the expiration of the time.
